Domestic and Foreign

Boston Symphony Orchestra

For the program of his second pair of concerts (Jan. 22-23) as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dimitri Mitropoulos chose his own transcription of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Schumann's C major Symphony, Malipiero's Piano Concerto and Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole." In the concerto, which had its first American performance yesterday the conductor once more acted as soloist while directing the orchestra.

Again the occasion was rather sensational. It was not merely that Mr. Mitropoulos appeared as conductor, transcriber and pianist; it was more what happened to the music under his direction. His transcription of Bach seemed unexceptionable, but the playing of it was quite un-Bachian. This was a romantic Bach, who sounded more like Wagner.

The symphony, similarly, took on some of the aspects of Gounod and even of Berlioz. Mr. Mitropoulos apparently wished to make clear to us that when Schumann wrote this work he was suffering from a severe mental struggle. In order to do this he played it spasmodically, with extraordinary distortions of tempi, phrasing and dynamics. One had to refer to the program to make sure this was the Schumann C major he was presenting.

The concerto served to reveal once more the varied accomplishments of Mr. Mitropoulos. His knowledge of the music he undertakes and his technical ability to make it sound as he wants it to sound, even while he is playing a solo piano part, can hardly be questioned. What does raise a question is the quality of the results he seeks and obtains. We hope to discuss this question in more detail later.

As for Malipiero's music, it need not detain us long. Its material is undistinguished, and there is nothing in the handling of it that makes us feel that the composition of the work was inevitable.

The orchestra played throughout with the utmost of virtuosity.

L. A. S.

Symphony Concert Series

By WILLIAM T. CHASE, JR.

For his final appearance at the regular Friday series of concerts, Dimitri Mitropoulos, noted guest conductor, led the Boston Symphony orchestra through an unusually testing program in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. It included the first performance in the United States of Malipiero's concerto for piano and orchestra, with Mr. Mitropoulos as both conductor and soloist. Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B minor for organ as transcribed for orchestra by Mitropoulos, Schumann's Symphony No. 2 in C major, opus 61, and Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole." Again the afternoon belonged to the magnetic and exciting leader from Athens and there were fresh indications, applause of audience and orchestra alike, that another visit by Mitropoulos would be welcome next year.

First in importance in the way of news, surely, was the new concerto by G. Francesco Malipiero, composed in 1934 and dedicated to Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, sometime patron saint of American chamber music. Short almost to the point of abruptness, its three movements proved to be capably, often cleverly written. Frequent dialogue between the piano and the orchestra seemed the rule rather than the exception. The piano was thus used as the solo instrument instead of as part of the orchestra. In the third movement came an elaborate cadenza, brilliantly played by Mr. Mitropoulos.

In fact the entire concerto was excellently designed in virtuoso style. For the first time it permitted Boston audiences to really hear the conductor as a pianist. Last week the very nature of the Respighi Toccata made this impossible. Yesterday Mr. Mitropoulos played with the taste and technical mastery we had expected from a man of his stature in the conducting field. And between him and the orchestra was a perfect feeling of unity, as if every entrance was exactly made and the various instrumental choirs always in the proper balance. The presentation was received with considerable enthusiasm, although nothing compared to that following the Respighi a week ago.

The Mitropoulos transcription of the Bach Prelude and Fugue in B minor was disappointing. Admirably orchestrated as it was, the conductor's version nevertheless took certain unnecessary liberties with the original. The deliberate and steady development of a crescendo in the Fugue might be cited as an example. On the other hand the Schumann Second Symphony in C major was read in extraordinary fashion. The delightful Scherzo and the lovely Adagio espressivo that followed it apparently took on new significance under the conductor's guiding hand. True, there were moments when the symphony sounded more like Brahms than Schumann, but that was Mr. Mitropoulos's way with the score—a method that certainly achieved the desired effect. Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole" brought the concert to an enjoyable close. The program will be repeated tonight.

HEIFETZ WITH ORCHESTRA

At the next pair of Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Jan. 29 and 30, Serge Koussevitzky will resume his direction of the orchestra after two weeks' absence. Jascha Heifetz is then to appear with the orchestra as soloist. The famous violinist will be heard in the Concerte of Mendelssohn. Serge Koussevitzky will open the program with an entr'acte from "Oresteia," the only opera of Serge Tane[illegible], the Russian composer whose symphony was revived at these concerts last season.

Mitropoulos' Visit at End

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

CONCLUDING his two weeks' engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dimitri Mitropoulos presented, at the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, a program of strange contrasts and conflicting ideas.

The very apparent enthusiasm of the audiences which filled Symphony Hall at each performance, was, one felt, an expression of recognition of the past achievements of the conductor during his visits here this season and last rather than a direct response to the music performed.

Though Mr. Mitropoulos' contributions to the program were again in the threefold capacity of transcriber, soloist, and conductor, one felt him to be nevertheless restricted. Certainly it would have been difficult for anyone hearing a concert under his direction for the first time, to estimate what we, at any rate, judge to be his true musical personality.

* * *

THE opening work of the concert, Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B minor for Organ, as transcribed for Orchestra by Mr. Mitropoulos stood out not only as a remarkable performance on the part of the orchestra and Mr. Mitropoulos, both as conductor and arranger, but was the most rewarding musically to those who listened.

That this work, composed during the late years of Bach's life, endures, is not alone because of the greatness of its architectonic structure, but also it endures because of the immeasurable significance of its every syllable.

It is a pure example of greatness of thought expressed through artistic maturity. In his transcription of the work for orchestra Mr. Mitropoulos' acute sensitivity for instrumental color is apparent, as is his perception of the music itself, the import of which is not altered, but intensified through the medium of the modern orchestra.

In the performance a meditative quality was sustained throughout. Listening, one was admitted to profound mystery.

* * *

THE SCHUMANN SYMPHONY, numbered the second, though the fourth in the order of composition, is yet another matter. While the Adagio contains the very essence of Schumann's lyricism, and the Scherzo is definitely a nice piece of writing—spontaneous, if not entirely gay—the whole, one feels, lacks the sustained force of true inspiration. The first movement sounds a little tired to our ears. It seems to betray not only a lack of original inventiveness but the lack also of any strong basic idea. The finale likewise, though energetic, lacks vitality.

It is not, in short, Schumann at his best. This of course is understandable when one considers that its composition was interrupted by nervous disorders which so affected him that he complained of not being able to remember the themes which occurred to him.

We cannot accept the view held by some that this as a whole is a fine piece of creative work, and suspect that if its authorship were other than Schumann's its performance would be still more rare.

* * *

THE MALIPIERO Concerta for Piano and Orchestra, in which the conductor played the piano part, was given its first performance in the United States in this program.

A comparatively recent work, it was composed in June, 1934, and is dedicated to Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

In contrast to the Schumann, the Concerto displays an abundance of verve—a brilliance that fairly crackles. It exudes originality, there is a profusion of harmonic and rhythmic ideas.

Mr. Mitropoulos, never more dynamic than when conducting at the piano, conducted and played with enervating vitality. The orchestra performed with magnificent precision.

This review, it must be noted, is based on the performance of Friday afternoon.

Mitropoulos in Farewell Concert at Symphony

By RUTH MARSTERS

Dimitri Mitropoulos presented the last programs of his two-week engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, again contributing to the performance in the three-fold capacity of transcriber, soloist and conductor.

The enthusiasm of the audience throughout indicated the high regard in which the distinguished Athenian is held. His distinctive achievements during his visits here this season, and last, more than justify this enthusiasm.

It is not for the concluding program, however, that Mr. Mitropoulos will be remembered in Boston. It is difficult in fact to identify the conductor of yesterday's performance of Schumann's Second Symphony, and the Ravel Rapsodie Espagnole with that of the Purcell, Beethoven, Respighi, Casella and Castognone music heard at last week's concerts.

His personality seemed on this occasion to be somewhat restricted by the music at hand. The fault was in the program largely—though at another time the performance might have gone quite differently.

* * *

The Bach Prelude and Fugue in B minor for Organ which opened the program, being performed in the conductor's orchestral transcription, left, however, nothing to be desired.

This sublime work of the master's artistic maturity, vast in scale, as in import, was unfolded in all its profound mystery and simplicity. Nothing of Bach's inventive genius was lost in the clarity with which the interweaving voices of the designs were traced, while the greater tonal palette of the orchestra further enriched the expression of Bach's original thought.

The Schumann, not of course to be compared with the work which preceded it, was nevertheless not given as satisfactory a performance.

While the Adagio is genuinely beautiful, the Scherzo nice, we cannot find this work engrossing. In it Schumann's lyricism seems to be displaced (except in the Adagio) by a nervous energy. The thoughts in the first and last movements seem abstruse, unconvincing.

The Malipiero Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, performed for the first time in America with the conductor as soloist, brought a decided contrast—in contrast of humor.

Its buoyancy, and harmonic originality are perhaps its distinguishing characteristics. The work was admirably performed, the conductor achieving the desired ensemble through the immense rhythmic vitality of his playing.

Ravel's Rhapsodie Espagnole brought the program to a brilliant and colorful close.

s' End
s 24/37

s' engagement on Symphony presented, at and Saturday contrasts and of the audiat each per-ion of recogni-conductor dur-t rather than a ned.

butions to the ld capacity of felt him to be ould have been t under his dis what we, at cal personality.

rt, Bach's Pre-as transcribed
d out not only e part of the as conductor ding musically

the late years
e because of structure, but immeasurable

as of thought
In his tran-Mitropoulos'
r is apparent, lf, the import ified through quality was was admitted numbered the r of composi-e Adagio conlyricism, and of writing—

e whole, one
e inspiration.
d to our ears.
f original in-strong basic ergetic, lacks is best. This andable when its composi-

d by nervous affected him of not being the themes him.
he view held s a whole is ve work, and authorship humann's its be still more

Concerta tra, in which d the piano first pered States in ecent work,

June, 1934,
Elizabeth

Schumann, an abun-lliance that xudes origirofusion of nic ideas.
ever more conducting ucted and ng vitality.
rmed with be noted, is nce of Fri-

NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Post Jan 24/37

More Opera for Local Music Lovers

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Admittedly program-notes are an important, even an essential part of a season of Symphony Concerts. A few years ago the New York Philharmonic in a burst of unwise economy attempted to dispense with those of Lawrence Gilman, and there was an immediate howl of protest. But the moot question with program-notes is whether they shall be read before, during or after the concert. Obviously, save in the case of very detailed program-music, the answer is, before the concert, but that has not always been too practicable. It is now possible for a great many Bostonians, however, thanks to the new policy of the Friends of the Symphony Orchestra of mailing to its members a copy of the program-book a few days in advance of each regular pair of concerts. Possibly some who had not already done so are now becoming fully aware of the all-round excellence of the notes of John N. Burk. When faced with the retirement of Philip Hale, Symphony Hall might have looked far and wide without finding so capable an annotator as this scholarly and modest member of its own staff.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 13th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dimitri Mitropoulos conducting was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Bach
Prelude and Fugue in B minor for organ, transcribed for orchestra by Mr. Mitropoulos
Schumann
Symphony No. 2 in C major Op. 61
Malipiero. Concerto for piano and orchestra
(Mr. Mitropoulos playing the piano part)
Ravel. ....Rapsodie Espagnole

If the enthusiastic applause yesterday meant anything it was that Mr. Mitropoulos, by his great talents as a musician, has won the warm affection and respect of the Boston Symphony public. His programs have not been calculated to bring down the house, if we except the conductor's appearance in them as soloist. Even in this practice he has not chosen concertos which the public knows, but difficult modern works. Rather, the sincerity and intensity of feeling and his ability to obtain just the effects that he wants from the orchestra have earned him his reputation here and transported the public.

Naturally, much as we admire Mr. Mitropoulos, it is still possible to disagree on occasion with him. We found ourselves in this position with regard to the transcription of the Bach Prelude and Fugue. The subject is a tricky one on which there is violent difference of opinion among musicians. Albert Schweitzer, in discussing the performance of the organ works of Bach, writes: "It is quite wrong to give out a fugal theme piano or pianissimo and let each voice take it up more loudly. The theme, whether joyous or sad, must always be given out with a certain fullness of tone." He states further that some organists on the modern instrument delight to make the fugue one long crescendo, which is not in accordance with its architecture. Now, this is just what Mr. Mitropoulos has done, and, brilliant as the transcription may have been in itself, it seemed to us that he did not properly serve Bach's own conception.

The second symphony of Schumann has never enjoyed the popularity or the approval by commentators of the other three. Yet surely it is a finer work than the Rhenish symphony, and the scherzo and the adagio are Schumann at his best. A recent discussion of Schumann's symphonies in France brought out the point that these works, so frequently abused for clumsiness, can be made effective if only the conductor is discerning in and sympathetic to their qualities. Mr. Mitropoulos was such a conductor yesterday. The performance may have been a personal interpretation, even to the extent of lightening the effect of Schumann's orchestration. But the result was justified. The symphony sounded with eloquence and became a work of dignity, a document of emotion set forth in music with the utmost sincerity.

Malipiero's concerto, the first performance in America, is an extraordinarily interesting and invigorating work. If the same composer's violin concerto, played here two seasons ago, gave an impression of an intellectual withdrawal from the world, this piano concerto is at once clear in its form and does not forsake the brilliance of display. A lovely and contemplative andante separates two short movements in that brisk and rather hard vigor of style towards which many modern composers incline. Malipiero does not overdo its use. Oddly enough, he brings the andante to a loud climax and then ends the concerto quietly. The performance seemed especially good and exact, perhaps because Mr. Mitropoulos had such perfect control both over his own part and the orchestra. Ravel's masterpiece of orchestration, the Rapsodie Espagnole, is a work of subtlety in the expression of exotic moods. It brought the concert and our guest-conductor's visit to a splendid conclusion.

There is an interesting exhibition of musical prints on display, lent by Mr. Donald B. Willson, which should not be missed. The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Dr. Koussevitzky will return to conduct Taneiev's Entr'acte from "Oresteia," Brahms' 3d symphony, Mendelssohn's violin concerto (Jascha Heifetz, soloist) and Strauss's Dance of the Seven Veils from "Salome."

MUSIC

Globe Jan 23

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Dimitri Mitropoulos ends his second visit as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the concerts of yesterday afternoon and this evening. He came here unknown last season, but departed bearing the seal of general favor. This year he has confirmed original impressions; he has exhibited his skill as pianist in modern music; he has offered programs novel and interesting, and he has proved anew that he is among the elect of the younger symphonic leaders.

His final program again presents him in two additional capacities: transcriber for orchestra of an organ Prelude and Fugue in B minor by J. S. Bach, and as soloist in the first United States performances of the Piano Concerto by Malipiero. The list is completed with the Second Symphony by Schumann, and the "Spanish Rhapsody" of Ravel.

Every so often the concert-going public is blessed with what seems to be a revelation of beauty when a fine conductor applies his gifts as if necromantically, to some score of the standard repertory. Dr Koussevitzky has done it several times. Of the guest conductors, Adrian Boult wrought this species of miracle by a simple reading of Schubert's C major Symphony. Now Mr Mitropoulos has revivified the Second Symphony of Schumann, in all the supernal beauty which must have sounded in the brain of the composer. This was not an "interpretation" by a highly spiced personality; it was just an unadorned, sensitive, musicianly performance in the best of taste and style, conditioned by meticulous care for detail, and the virtuoso quality of the orchestra.

Mr Mitropoulos' transcription of the Bach Prelude and Fugue shares the principal traits of his conducting: straightforwardness and clarity. He uses the contrasting sonorities, the dynamic resources of the modern orchestra in a manner free from theatricality. There are no effects of color for its own sake, no false touches of percussion, no swollen tissue of sound. Nor has he sought to imitate the organ. He might have gone even further, in the prelude, to secure a varied texture, for here is a passing suggestion of monotony. Otherwise his transcription is a great success.

The Piano Concerto of Malipiero was written in 1934 and was dedicated to Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. A first hearing reemphasized the unpredictable nature of the composer. Malipiero goes his own way with admirable independence. If he is unaffected by his contemporaries, he has found in music of the past the disparate elements of his style. In the music of Malipiero with which this reviewer is familiar, there is no dominant feature to proclaim a strong individuality.

The Piano Concerto is a showy trifle, by turn acidly dissonant and impressionistic, of no perceptible depth Its value lies in the brilliant patterns for the solo piano. There are three brief movements, two fast and the middle one slow. The great vigor of the performance was more rewarding than the work itself.

Mr Mitropoulos made a final triumph with the glittering gem of Ravel, a performance transparent, exhilarating, if not extremely subtle. At the end the audience cheered him. Let us hope that his departure this time is merely au revoir.

There is an exhibition of prints in the first balcony gallery on the Huntington-av side of Symphony Hall. The prints include rare likenesses of great musicians, and are decidedly worth arriving early at Symphony Hall for leisurely examination. They have been loaned by Mr Donald B. Willson and will remain through the concerts of Feb 5 and 6.

Dr Koussevitzky returns as conductor next week. The program will be as follows: Taneiev: Entr'acte from "Oresteia"; Brahms: Third Symphony, Mendelssohn, Violin Concerto (Jascha Heifetz, soloist); Strauss: "Dance of the Seven Veils" from "Salome." C. W. D.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS.
NEWS

JAN 20 1937

In the opinion of many critics, the Boston Symphony orchestra on its recent trips over to New York, has, in both brilliancy and popularity, beaten the New York Philharmonic orchestra on its home grounds.

DAY, JANUARY 23,

BACH FUGUE OFFERED BY SYMPHONY

Grecian Conductor Given Storm of Applause

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

At the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon it was again demonstrated that Dimitri Mitropoulos possesses the Midas-touch which turns everything which he conducts into a potential popular success. Last week he was having an audience first spellbound, then stormily applausive, with the most formidable of the string quartets of Beethoven. Yesterday the same thing happened with the gravest of the organ fugues of Bach, that in B minor, and with what is now supposed to be the least viable of the symphonies of Schumann, that in C major, sometimes represented on present-day programmes by its middle movements only.

STORM OF APPLAUSE

To say that Mr. Mitropoulos carried all before him with the Symphony as a whole is to put it but mildly, yet that he made the most striking impression with the brilliant, volatile Scherzo and with the deeply expressive Adagio may not be denied. When the ensuing tumult had died down, there were some protests that what had just been heard, since it sounded so much better than Schumann usually sounds, was not Schumann at all.

In point of fact, Schumann was the least articulate of all the great symphonic composers. Each of his symphonies needs help from every conductor. The C major, intrinsically the least Schumannesque of them all, merely happened to receive yesterday a degree of assistance seldom furnished to any composition.

At the concerts of a week ago, Mr. Mitropoulos assigned the first half to music for strings, the second to pieces for full orchestra, both by modern Italians. A somewhat similar division occurred yesterday: at the beginning came the two Teutons, the two classics; and after the intermission again two contemporary Latins, Malipiero and Ravel, the former represented by his Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, in which Mr. Mitropoulos was both soloist and conductor, the latter by his familiar Spanish Rhapsody. The programme was shrewdly contrived; after the itensities of this last of the Bach organ fugues, reverently and effectively transcribed by Mr. Mitropoulos, and of the symphony which we are again tempted to call Schumann's greatest, the cool, liquid, detached, slightly acid, although by no means unattractive music of Malipiero provided excellent foil and contrast, and the music of Ravel ended the concert on a note of rhythmic excitement and emotional exuberance.

Conducts Again Tonight

Those who believe that all music should be confined to its original medium can find little fault with Mr. Mitropoulos for bringing to the wider public of symphony concerts such things as the excerpt from Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas," the afore-mentioned C-sharp minor Quartet of Beethoven and the mystical and exalted Fugue of Bach heard yesterday. And if any felt a week ago that Mr. Mitropoulos' simultaneous performing and conducting of Respighi's Toccata was in the nature of a stunt, there was less reason to feel that reaction in the case of the more temperate music of Malipiero which, incidentally, was heard yesterday for the first time in this country. The Concerto, now nearly three years old, would seem to form a valuable addition to a branch of musical literature sadly in need of new material.

During the rehearsals, in order to convey to the orchestra his conception of Ravel's Rhapsody, or rather of the last three dance-like divisions, Mr. Mitropoulos became for the moment a rival of La Argentina. Yesterday in the concert, the conductor's bodily motions were far more restrained, but his graphic illustrations had had their effect upon the players. A performance more intoxicatingly rhythmic could scarcely be imagined, and the introductory "Prelude to the Night" received a degree of atmospheric suggestion which made it come almost as a new page. And so ended another memorable concert from the visiting Athenian who after the concert of this evening takes his leave.

128

MITROPOULOS GIVES BACH NEW AND SECULAR INTREPRETATION

Symphony Audience Enthusiastically Applauds Greek Conductor's Musicianship and Versatility

Trans Jan 23

By Redfern Mason

A healthy crop of detractors is absolutely necessary for any critic, if he is to retain his self-respect; so I propose to make a few, beginning with today.

For, emerging from Symphony Hall with a warm admiration for Dimitri Mitropoulos, I was at the same time conscious of a sense of indignation against him for taking the good Pietist, John Sebastian Bach, of the organ prelude and fuge in B minor and making a pagan of him.

For if there ever was music that speaks of Christian recollection; if ever a composition meditated on the Seven Last Things, it is this Prelude and Fugue. Yet, going with the Stokowskis to secularize sacred music, Mr. Mitropoulos seems to have thought of the nymphs which, so legend has it, still lurk in the glades of Cithaeron and tempt frail believers as Venus tempted Tannhauser. If the Christian mythos comes into the mind of the arranger, it is only to reflect that some of the Roman emperors put the Christ into the Pantheon with the Olympians and the country folk of Hellas confused the Deity of Christianity with the god Pan.

The thing is so devilishly clever, that it is impossible not to admire it; but the old Puritans of New England would have probably hanged Mr. Mitropoulos as a wizard.

So it was well that he turned to the C major Symphony of Schumann before an atavistic onrush of penitence led the audience to expiate their enjoyment by making a sacrifice of the conductor.

The Schumann has a curiously old ring, infinitely more so than the symphonies of Mozart, which indeed, especially in the immortal three headed by the "Jupiter," often sound more modern than, for instance, the Beethoven of the "Pastoral."

Mitropoulos has the knack of throwing himself into a composition with such enthusiasm that he infects orchestra and audience alike. So the rich, if somewhat siropy melodies, exercised much of their old magic. The Boston Symphony men do not condescend to an old master; they are too good musicians for that. Not for nothing have they poetized with Nikisch and experienced the classic restraint of Karl Muck. Today they vibrate with the Slavic ardor of Koussevitzky. So the Teutonized Hellenism of Mitropoulos could not lead them far astray.

And he knows his Schumann; he is well aware that this symphony is "aegri somnia," the longing dream of a sick man, who is battling with fate and superior gods. There are glorious moments in the work, brazen ecstasies and yearning suspiration of strings.

Yet the Malipiero Concerto for piano and orchestra, which was given its first American performance, not only sounded more contemporary, but more vitally sincere. Schumann saw life through the rose-colored glasses of Jean Paul; Malipiero is more of a realist, albeit a gay and exuberant one.

Mitropoulos was both director and soloist and splendidly authoritative in both capacities. Personally, I enjoyed the work immensely and the applause showed that others did

The concert concluded with Ravel's "Rapsodie espagnole," which is not "l'Andalou du palais Royale," but authentic Spain, with its honey and its vitriol. A gorgeous succession of tone pictures.

Mitropoulos took his leave amid salvos of applause. The women folk of Boston will burn incense on their altars for the return of Daphnis.

CONCERT POSTPONED

The concert of the Boston String Quartet, announced twice previously for dates which circumstances necessarily changed, is definitely scheduled for Wednesday evening, Feb. 24, in Jordan Hall. Messrs. Keller, Fedorovsky, Fourel, and A. Zighera will be assisted by Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, in Ernest Bloch's Quintet. Other items of the program will be Haydn's C major quartet, and Brahm's C minor.

JASCHA HEIFETZ
Soloist in the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto at the Symphony Concerts Next Friday Afternoon and Saturday Evening

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JAN 24 1937

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is planning an all-Wagner program for the next Boston Symphony concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday night, Feb. 11, it was learned yesterday. The detailed program will be announced on Dr. Koussevitzky's return from a mid-season vacation in Florida.

CLEVELAND, O.
NEWS

JAN 2 1937

The Boston Symphony orchestra is engaged upon one of the longest seasons ever played by an American orchestra. It has played every month since September, 1935, and will continue the record until August, 1937.

HEIFETZ WITH ORCHESTRA

At the next pair of Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, January 29 and 30, Serge Koussevitzky will resume his direction of the orchestra after two weeks' absence. Jascha Heifetz is then to appear with the orchestra as soloist. The famous violinist will be heard in the Concerto of Mendelssohn. Serge Koussevitzky will open the programme with an entr'acte from "Oresteia", the only opera of Serge Taneiev, the Russian composer whose symphony was revived at these concerts last season. Taneiev based his opera upon three plays of Aeschylus, and it is from the third of these, "The Furies", that the entr-acte is taken. The programme will also include the Third Symphony of Brahms in F major, and the Dance of the Seven Veils from Richard Strauss' "Salome".

NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

More Opera for Local Music Lovers

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Admittedly program-notes are an important, even an essential part of a season of Symphony Concerts. A few years ago the New York Philharmonic in a burst of unwise economy attempted to dispense with those of Lawrence Gilman, and there was an immediate howl of protest. But the moot question with program-notes is whether they shall be read before, during or after the concert. Obviously, save in the case of very detailed program-music, the answer is, before the concert, but that has not always been too practicable. It is now possible for a great many Bostonians, however, thanks to the new policy of the Friends of the Symphony Orchestra of mailing to its members a copy of the program-book a few days in advance of each regular pair of concerts. Possibly some who had not already done so are now becoming fully aware of the all-round excellence of the notes of John N. Burk. When faced with the retirement of Philip Hale, Symphony Hall might have looked far and wide without finding so capable an annotator as this scholarly and modest member of its own staff.

MUSIC

[illegible]/37

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 13th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dimitri Mitropoulos conducting was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Bach
Prelude and Fugue in B minor for organ, transcribed for orchestra by Mr. Mitropoulos
Schumann
Symphony No. 2 in C major Op. 61
Malipiero..Concerto for piano and orchestra (Mr. Mitropoulos playing the piano part)
Ravel.................Rapsodie Espagnole

If the enthusiastic applause yesterday meant anything it was that Mr. Mitropoulos, by his great talents as a musician, has won the warm affection and respect of the Boston Symphony public. His programs have not been calculated to bring down the house, if we except the conductor's appearance in them as soloist. Even in this practice he has not chosen concertos which the public knows, but difficult modern works. Rather, the sincerity and intensity of feeling and his ability to obtain just the effects that he wants from the orchestra have earned him his reputation here and transported the public.

Naturally, much as we admire Mr. Mitropoulos, it is still possible to disagree on occasion with him. We found ourselves in this position with regard to the transcription of the Bach Prelude and Fugue. The subject is a tricky one. on which there is violent difference of opinion among musicians. Albert Schweitzer, in discussing the performance of the organ works of Bach, writes: "It is quite wrong to give out a fugal theme piano or pianissimo and let each voice take it up more loudly. The theme, whether joyous or sad, must always be given out with a certain fullness of tone." He states further that some organists on the modern instrument delight to make the fugue one long crescendo, which is not in accordance with its architecture. Now, this is just what Mr. Mitropoulos has done, and, brilliant as the transcription may have been in itself, it seemed to us that he did not properly serve Bach's own conception.

The second symphony of Schumann has never enjoyed the popularity or the approval by commentators of the other three. Yet surely it is a finer work than the Rhenish symphony, and the scherzo and the adagio are Schumann at his best. A recent discussion of Schumann's symphonics in France brought out the point that these works, so frequently abused for clumsiness, can be made effective if only the conductor is discerning in and sympathetic to their qualities. Mr. Mitropoulos was such a conductor yesterday. The performance may have been a personal interpretation, even to the extent of lightening the effect of Schumann's orchestration. But the result was justified. The symphony sounded with eloquence and became a work of dignity, a document of emotion set forth in music with the utmost sincerity.

Malipiero's concerto, the first performance in America, is an extraordinarily interesting and invigorating work. If the same composer's violin concerto, played here two seasons ago, gave an impression of an intellectual withdrawal from the world, this piano concerto is at once clear in its form and does not forsake the brilliance of display. A ely and contemplative andante separates two short movements in that brisk and rather hard vigor of style towards which many modern composers incline. Malipiero does not overdo its use. Oddly enough, he brings the andante to a loud climax and then ends the concerto quietly. The performance seemed especially good and exact, perhaps because Mr. Mitropoulos had such perfect control both over his own part and the orchestra. Ravel's masterpiece of orchestration, the Rapsodie Espagnole, is a work of subtlety in the expression of exotic moods. It brought the concert and our guest-conductor's visit to a splendid conclusion.

There is an interesting exhibition of musical prints on display, lent by Mr. Donald B. Willson, which should not be missed. The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Dr. Koussevitzky will return to conduct Taneiev's Entr'acte from "Oresteia," Brahms' 3d symphony, Mendelssohn's violin concerto (Jascha Heifetz, soloist) and Strauss's Dance of the Seven Veils from "Salome."

MUSIC

Globe Jan 23

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Dimitri Mitropoulos ends his second visit as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the concerts of yesterday afternoon and this evening. He came here unknown last season, but departed bearing the seal of general favor. This year he has confirmed original impressions; he has exhibited his skill as pianist in modern music; he has offered programs novel and interesting, and he has proved anew that he is among the elect of the younger symphonic leaders.

His final program again presents him in two additional capacities: transcriber for orchestra of an organ Prelude and Fugue in B minor by J. S. Bach, and as soloist in the first United States performances of the Piano Concerto by Malipiero. The list is completed with the Second Symphony by Schumann, and the "Spanish Rhapsody" of Ravel.

Every so often the concert-going public is blessed with what seems to be a revelation of beauty when a fine conductor applies his gifts as if necromantically, to some score of the standard repertory. Dr Koussevitzky has done it several times. Of the guest conductors, Adrian Boult wrought this species of miracle by a simple reading of Schubert's C major Symphony. Now Mr Mitropoulos has revivified the Second Symphony of Schumann, in all the supernal beauty which must have sounded in the brain of the composer. This was not an "interpretation" by a highly spiced personality; it was just an unadorned, sensitive, musicianly performance in the best of taste and style, conditioned by meticulous care for detail, and the virtuoso quality of the orchestra.

Mr Mitropoulos' transcription of the Bach Prelude and Fugue shares the principal traits of his conducting: straightforwardness and clarity. He uses the contrasting sonorities, the dynamic resources of the modern orchestra in a manner free from theatricality. There are no effects of color for its own sake, no false touches of percussion, no swollen tissue of sound. Nor has he sought to imitate the organ. He might have gone even further, in the prelude, to secure a varied texture, for here is a passing suggestion of monotony. Otherwise his transcription is a great success.

The Piano Concerto of Malipiero was written in 1934 and was dedicated to Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. A first hearing reemphasized the unpredictable nature of the composer. Malipiero goes his own way with admirable independence. If he is unaffected by his contemporaries, he has found in music of the past the disparate elements of his style. In the music of Malipiero with which this reviewer is familiar, there is no dominant feature to proclaim a strong individuality.

The Piano Concerto is a showy trifle, by turn acidly dissonant and impressionistic, of no perceptible depth Its value lies in the brilliant patterns for the solo piano. There are three brief movements, two fast and the middle one slow. The great vigor of the performance was more rewarding than the work itself.

Mr Mitropoulos made a final triumph with the glittering gem of Ravel, a performance transparent, exhilarating, if not extremely subtle. At the end the audience cheered him. Let us hope that his departure this time is merely au revoir.

There is an exhibition of prints in the first balcony gallery on the Huntington-av side of Symphony Hall. The prints include rare likenesses of great musicians, and are decidedly worth arriving early at Symphony Hall for leisurely examination. They have been loaned by Mr Donald B. Willson and will remain through the concerts of Feb 5 and 6.

Dr Koussevitzky returns as conductor next week. The program will be as follows: Taneiev: Entr'acte from "Oresteia"; Brahms: Third Symphony, Mendelssohn, Violin Concerto (Jascha Heifetz, soloist); Strauss: "Dance of the Seven Veils" from "Salome." C. W. D.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS.
NEWS

JAN 20 1937

In the opinion of many critics, the Boston Symphony orchestra on its recent trips over to New York, has, in both brilliancy and popularity, beaten the New York Philharmonic orchestra on its home grounds.

BACH FUGUE OFFERED BY SYMPHONY

Grecian Conductor Given Storm of Applause

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

At the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon it was again demonstrated that Dimitri Mitropoulos possesses the Midas-touch which turns everything which he conducts into a potential popular success. Last week he was having an audience first spellbound, then stormily applausive, with the most formidable of the string quartets of Beethoven. Yesterday the same thing happened with the gravest of the organ fugues of Bach, that in B minor, and with what is now supposed to be the least viable of the symphonies of Schumann, that in C major, sometimes represented on present-day programmes by its middle movements only.

STORM OF APPLAUSE

To say that Mr. Mitropoulos carried all before him with the Symphony as a whole is to put it but mildly, yet that he made the most striking impression with the brilliant, volatile Scherzo and with the deeply expressive Adagio may not be denied. When the ensuing tumult had died down, there were some protests that what had just been heard, since it sounded so much better than Schumann usually sounds, was not Schumann at all.

In point of fact, Schumann was the least articulate of all the great symphonic composers. Each of his symphonies needs help from every conductor. The C major, intrinsically the least Schumannesque of them all, merely happened to receive yesterday a degree of assistance seldom furnished to any composition.

At the concerts of a week ago, Mr. Mitropoulos assigned the first half to music for strings, the second to pieces for full orchestra, both by modern Italians. A somewhat similar division occurred yesterday: at the beginning came the two Teutons, the two classics; and after the intermission again two contemporary Latins, Malipiero and Ravel, the former represented by his Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, in which Mr. Mitropoulos was both soloist and conductor, the latter by his familiar Spanish Rhapsody. The programme was shrewdly contrived; after the itensities of this last of the Bach organ fugues, reverently and effectively transcribed by Mr. Mitropoulos, and of the symphony which we are again tempted to call Schumann's greatest, the cool, liquid, detached, slightly acid, although by no means unattractive music of Malipiero provided excellent foil and contrast, and the music of Ravel ended the concert on a note of rhythmic excitement and emotional exuberance.

Conducts Again Tonight

Those who believe that all music should be confined to its original medium can find little fault with Mr. Mitropoulos for bringing to the wider public of symphony concerts such things as the excerpt from Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas," the afore-mentioned C-sharp minor Quartet of Beethoven and the mystical and exalted Fugue of Bach heard yesterday. And if any felt a week ago that Mr. Mitropoulos' simultaneous performing and conducting of Respighi's Toccata was in the nature of a stunt, there was less reason to feel that reaction in the case of the more temperate music of Malipiero which, incidentally, was heard yesterday for the first time in this country. The Concerto, now nearly three years old, would seem to form a valuable addition to a branch of musical literature sadly in need of new material.

During the rehearsals, in order to convey to the orchestra his conception of Ravel's Rhapsody, or rather of the last three dance-like divisions, Mr. Mitropoulos became for the moment a rival of La Argentina. Yesterday in the concert, the conductor's bodily motions were far more restrained, but his graphic illustrations had had their effect upon the players. A performance more intoxicatingly rhythmic could scarcely be imagined, and the introductory "Prelude to the Night" received a degree of atmospheric suggestion which made it come almost as a new page. And so ended another memorable concert from the visiting Athenian who after the concert of this evening takes his leave.

MITROPOULOS GIVES BACH NEW AND SECULAR INTREPRETATION

Symphony Audience Enthusiastically Applauds Greek Conductor's Musicianship and Versatility

Trans Jan 24

By Redfern Mason

A healthy crop of detractors is absolutely necessary for any critic, if he is to retain his self-respect; so I propose to make a few, beginning with today.

For, emerging from Symphony Hall with a warm admiration for Dimitri Mitropoulos, I was at the same time conscious of a sense of indignation against him for taking the good Pietist, John Sebastian Bach, of the organ prelude and fuge in B minor and making a pagan of him.

For if there ever was music that speaks of Christian recollection; if ever a composition meditated on the Seven Last Things, it is this Prelude and Fugue. Yet, going with the Stokowskis to secularize sacred music, Mr. Mitropoulos seems to have thought of the nymphs which, so legend has it, still lurk in the glades of Cithaeron and tempt frail believers as Venus tempted Tannhauser. If the Christian mythos comes into the mind of the arranger, it is only to reflect that some of the Roman emperors put the Christ into the Pantheon with the Olympians and the country folk of Hellas confused the Deity of Christianity with the god Pan.

The thing is so devilishly clever, that it is impossible not to admire it; but the old Puritans of New England would have probably hanged Mr. Mitropoulos as a wizard.

So it was well that he turned to the C major Symphony of Schumann before an atavistic onrush of penitence led the audience to expiate their enjoyment by making a sacrifice of the conductor.

The Schumann has a curiously old ring, infinitely more so than the symphonies of Mozart, which indeed, especially in the immortal three headed by the "Jupiter," often sound more modern than, for instance, the Beethoven of the "Pastoral."

Mitropoulos has the knack of throwing himself into a composition with such enthusiasm that he infects orchestra and audience alike. So the rich, if somewhat siropy melodies, exercised much of their old magic. The Boston Symphony men do not condescend to an old master; they are too good musicians for that. Not for nothing have they poetized with Nikisch and experienced the classic restraint of Karl Muck. Today they vibrate with the Slavic ardor of Koussevitzky. So the Teutonized Hellenism of Mitropoulos could not lead them far astray.

And he knows his Schumann; he is well aware that this symphony is "aegri somnia," the longing dream of a sick man, who is battling with fate and superior gods. There are glorious moments in the work, brazen ecstasies and yearning suspiration of strings.

Yet the Malipiero Concerto for piano and orchestra, which was given its first American performance, not only sounded more contemporary, but more vitally sincere. Schumann saw life through the rose-colored glasses of Jean Paul; Malipiero is more of a realist, albeit a gay and exuberant one.

Mitropoulos was both director and soloist and splendidly authoritative in both capacities. Personally, I enjoyed the work immensely and the applause showed that others did

The concert concluded with Ravel's "Rapsodie espagnole," which is not "l'Andalou du palais Royale," but authentic Spain, with its honey and its vitriol. A gorgeous succession of tone pictures.

Mitropoulos took his leave amid salvos of applause. The women folk of Boston will burn incense on their altars for the return of Daphnis.

CONCERT POSTPONED

The concert of the Boston String Quartet, announced twice previously for dates which circumstances necessarily changed, is definitely scheduled for Wednesday evening, Feb. 24, in Jordan Hall. Messrs. Keller, Fedorovsky, Fourel, and A. Zighera will be assisted by Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, in Ernest Bloch's Quintet. Other items of the program will be Haydn's C major quartet, and Brahm's C minor.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

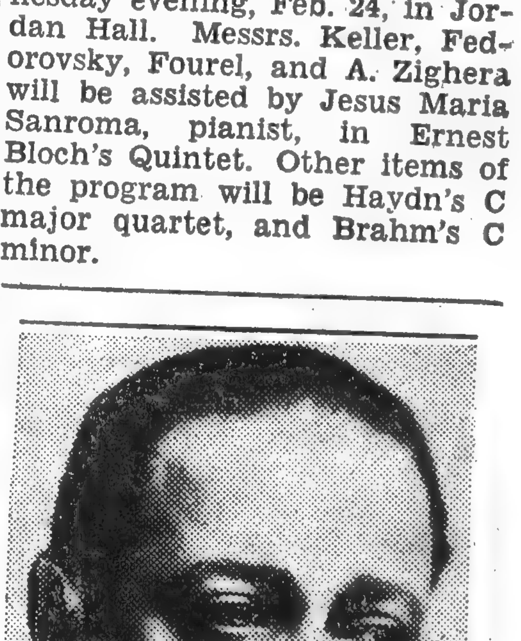
JAN 24 1937

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is planning an all-Wagner program for the next Boston Symphony concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday night, Feb. 11, it was learned yesterday. The detailed program will be announced on Dr. Koussevitzky's return from a mid-season vacation in Florida.

CLEVELAND, O.
NEWS

JAN 2 1937

The Boston Symphony orchestra is engaged upon one of the longest seasons ever played by an American orchestra. It has played every month since September, 1935, and will continue the record until August, 1937.



JASCHA HEIFETZ

Soloist in the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto at the Symphony Concerts Next Friday Afternoon and Saturday Evening

---

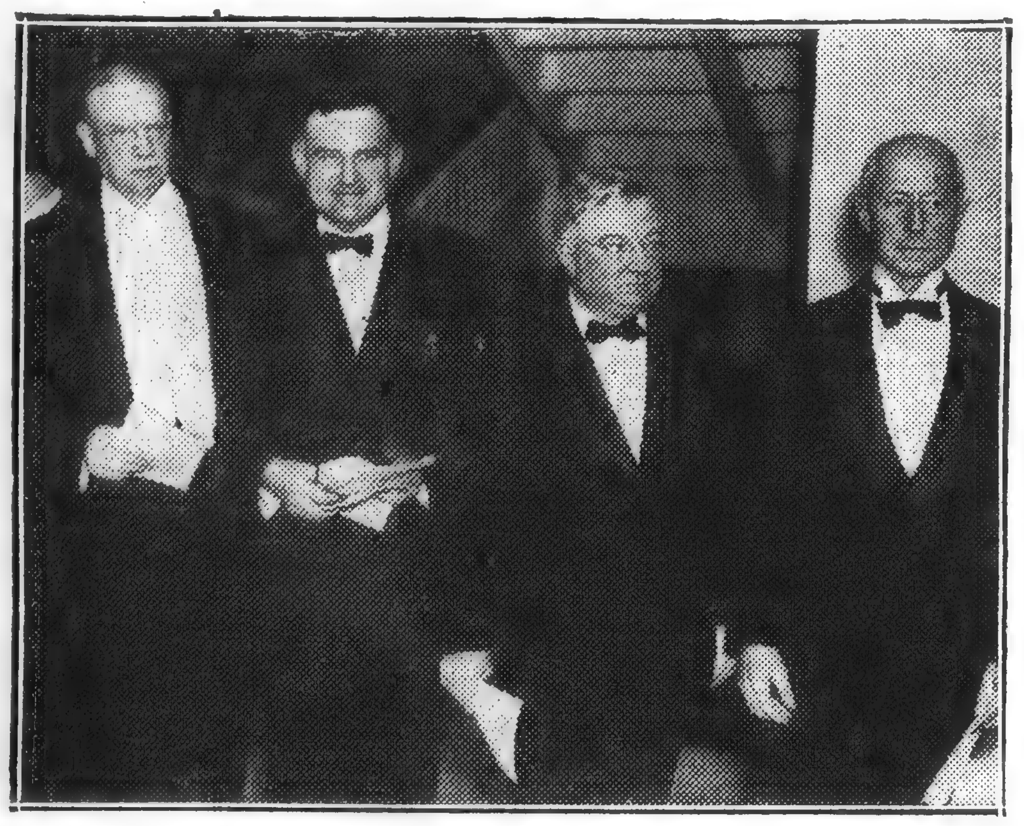
HEIFETZ WITH ORCHESTRA

At the next pair of Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, January 29 and 30, Serge Koussevitzky, will resume his direction of the orchestra after two weeks' absence. Jascha Heifetz is then to appear with the orchestra as soloist. The famous violinist will be heard in the Concerto of Mendelssohn. Serge Koussevitzky will open the programme with an entr'acte from "Oresteia", the only opera of Serge Taneiev, the Russian composer whose symphony was revived at these concerts last season. Taneiev based his opera upon three plays of Aeschylus, and it is from the third of these, "The Furies',, that the entr-acte is taken. The programme will also include the Third Symphony of Brahms in F major, and the Dance of the Seven Veils from Richard Strauss' "Salome".

15-DAY DRIVE FOR $4,160,000 IS LAUNCHED

Jan 26

Great Meeting at Symphony Hall Hears Pleas of Leaders for Relief of Human Needs



PROMINENT AT COMMUNITY FUND MEETING
At Symphony Hall last night. Left to right, Mayor Mansfield, Genera Chairman Robert Cutler, W. J. Cameron and Charles Francis Adams.

With the goal set at $4,160,000 to be raised in 15 days Greater Boston's 1937 community fund campaign was launched last night at Symphony Hall at a gathering of 2000 workers, including many prominent citizens.

The task set for 15,000 voluteer workers, which involves the continuation and life of 104 agencies serving human needs in the greater city, was stated with the utmost simplicity by three speakers, Charles Francis Adams, former Secretary of the Navy, who is president of the Community Federation of Boston; W. J. Cameron of the Ford Motor Company, whose voice on the Sunday night programme of the automobile company is familiar to millions, and Robert Cutler, general chairman of the 1937 community fund campaign.

Continued on Page 10—First Col.

Globe ran story and picture on front page Jan. 26/37

Great Drive Opened for Community Fund

Continued From First Page

Public spirited and philanthropic citizens of the whole metropolis, captains of industry, great merchants and every strata of society of the teeming area of Greater Boston, rubbed shoulders at Symphony Hall last night as the drive started in which it is hoped to surpass the record of last year, in which Boston astounded the country by oversubscribing its fund in 17 days, while Philadelphia, with the next largest fund, took 65 days to wind up the campaign and then fell short of the goal.

Something more than civic pride was involved in the enthusiastic meeting at which, with a concert contributed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the fund was launched.

Around the walls of Symphony Hall were hung shields bearing the names of the 104 agencies engaged in relieving distress and suffering among the underprivileged. It was driven home that those agencies would benefit from every penny contributed to the fund and that the money would be spent on social aids of proved worth.

The speaking programme was broadcast to the thousands of workers and prospective donors to the fund who were unable to get seats at Symphony Hall.

Notables Represented

All the great fortunes with a stake in Greater Boston, its people and its welfare, were represented last night at the Symphony Hall meeting. Men seldom seen outside of the sheltered calm of exclusive clubs, of directors' rooms, of trustees meetings, joined in the launching of the drive. Mayor Mansfield was present in his capacity both as Mayor and as a member of the federation. Governor Hurley, reported ill with a cold, was represented by Commissioner of Public Safety Paul G. Kirk.

As general chairman of the Community Federation of Boston, the permanent organization of public-spirited citizens in charge of raising the money each year for the Greater Boston Community Fund, Robert Cutler introduced Charles Francis Adams and W. J. Cameron as speakers. Mr. Adams had to take a plane from New York yesterday afternoon to reach Boston in time for the meeting, and Mr. Cameron reached Boston in time for the meeting only because railroad officials in Detroit held a train an hour after his broadcast Sunday night.

"We shall not reach our goal by working only when it pleases us," said Mr. Adams. "Nor will the fund be completed by giving the pennies that are to spare after we have satisfied our own selfish pleasures.

"This has been the land of liberty. Our ancestors paid the price and won that blessing for us. Shall we now, through neglect, take that blessing away from the many thousands this fund will aid to a better understanding of liberty. This is our city. How shall we save it from the hatreds and jealousies and greed? Not by shirking our share in this work."

Cameron Makes Plea

As speaker for the evening Mr. Cameron, widely known commentator, who was loaned by Edsel Ford for the meeting last night, set forth the aspirations of the campaign.

"When we speak of helpfulness today it signifies something more than we meant 20 or 30 years ago," said Mr. Cameron. Not that all we know is new, but it is more truly known and more applied than before. To help, once meant giving a meal to the hungry who would be hungry again tomorrow, a dole to those who would be penniless again next day—binding up social wounds in a way that left them almost certain to open again.

"It was the only help we knew how to give; it was a noble and precious outpouring of human sympathhy, and the world had been a drearier place without it. But we know that it did not cure the sources of distress and to that extent it failed of being the truest charity.

"Yet, even then in and around Boston were men and women of equal kindness but of greater social penetration, who not only alleviated distress but sought its causes that they might prevent its recurrence. All of us know of human missteps that formerly brought a life of ruin in their wake—so hopeless and helpless did they leave their victims—missteps that now, though not in any wise condoned, are atoned for and healed by a mercy that has wisdom written on her forehead.

"A way is built up that not only prevents their repetition, but even transforms them into stepping stones towards useful lives, and more than that, changes the whole stream of personal tendency and the pressure of environment so that innocent ones need never come into that danger.

The Newer Helpfulness

"We no longer talk of environment. We tackle it. Men and women of skill in this great art approach understandingly the most unpromising conditions, and pierce them through with the light of a skillful, redemptive, friendly interest. They open the doors of neglected minds and rouse latent character to breath and growth. They lead the young from thoughtless conduct that spawns all sorts of crime, to more satisfying and constructive interests; help disheartened mothers to restore the dignity of the home. They teach the untaught hand the ways of self-support, restoring the beaten soul, bringing back life!—life that afterward lives of itself and becomes a life-giving center to others. All this, and more besides, is what we mean by restorative and preventive helpfulness.

"There always have been persons in and around Boston who knew how to meet the various causes and conditions of distress and disability. We of the Middle West can testify to that because in many places we follow the methods they developed.

"Also, in former days, there were always in Greater Boston men and women of great means and small who supported these services. For at first they were necessarily local. Each neighborhood as it were, each community, could do a little for itself. But as our cities grew and the pressure of population practically obliterated boundary lines, the task fell more and more as a united obligation upon the good people of all the related communities.

"The services were set up and their benefits could not be limited by local boundaries. Thus, not only are various types of need more effectively dealt with, but a greater unity of support has come by including the whole humane community in this work, not by taxation, but by free gifts."

Concluding, he said: "And now you are going out on the last most pressing phase of your crusade—a crusade to conquer human need by skill and wisdom; a conquest that leaves no wounds, no bitter tears behind. Your return in triumph will be a civic victory for this whole region."

Wants Quota Over-Subscribed

Chairman Cutler stated at the beginning of his remarks that the drive had taken an added item of $60,000 at the last moment because of the sudden need of the Red Cross to aid flood sufferers in the Ohio River Valley with that amount, which is Boston's quota for the Red Cross flood relief fund.

"The object of the campaign is to

"The object of the campaign is to oversubscribe by a large margin the goal of $4,160,000, and to do this mighty task in 15 days," said Mr. Cutler. To accomplish this objective, the campaign leaders have been continuously at work for about five months, enrolling an army of volunteer workers and solicitors. At the present moment, 15,000 stand ready, straining to get forward with the campaign.

He cited 104 agencies serving human needs in direct service to 300,000 needy, sick, children, old people and handicapped. He said:

"All the thousands who live and work in Greater Boston have come slowly but surely to the understanding that the support of the great Federation agencies which served their communities is an essential obligation to be shared by everyone who lives or does business in the community. Giving to the Federation agencies is not merely a nice thing, a mere charitable handout, nor merely the generous act of a warm heart. It is a necessary thing to stabilize and protect society.

"No one would think of living in a city without a fire department, a police force, a sewage system. Is there one of us who could conceive of life in this community without its hospitals, its health agencies, its settlements, its services for youth. In and through them beats the pulse of the life blood of this community."

The ushers at Symphony Hall last night included the Misses Charlotte Rantoul, Jane Megrew, Barbara Eaton, Elizabeth Stephenson, Mary Louise Spaulding and Virginia Ellis, Mrs. Harwood Ellis, Miss Frances Holmes and Miss Colina Robbins.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert to the workers assembled for the opening of the 15 days' drive. The programme included the "Peer Gynt" Suite of Grieg, and Berlioz' overture to "The Roman Carnival," the prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and the overture to Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet."

Ford Loaned Cameron for Boston Drive

Express Train Held Hour to Get Him Here for Fund Meeting

Jan 26

Joshua commanded the sun and the moon to stand still and they obeyed him.

Robert Cutler, general chairman of the 1937 Community Fund Campaign, is Boston's Joshua.

Behind the appearance of W. J. Cameron, nationally known radio commentator, at the opening meeting for the drive to raise $4,160,000 for Greater Boston's social needs, there is a story, not previously told, in which the leading characters are Edsel Ford, the motor manufacturer, Mr. Cameron, Mr. Cutler and H. Shearer, vice president of the Michigan Central Railroad.

It goes back to early last fall when Robert Cutler, upon whose shoulders the repsonsibility for the success of the present $4,160,000 campaign rests, was in Washington planning the early stages of the drive. He asked Gerard Swope, president of General Electric Company, if he thought Henry Ford would lend Boston America's favorite radio commentator, who is heard from coast to coast on the Ford Sunday Evening Hour. Mr. Swope opined the request could not be granted.

Undaunted, Mr. Cutler sought an appointment with Edsel Ford in Dearborn and promptly at an appointed noon one day last October Mr. Cutler was ushered into Mr. Ford's offices. He told the story of Boston's need for someone who had the breadth of undertaking and the appeal to talk to the people and tell them why Boston must not fail when it started its drive for funds. "And that man," said Mr. Cutler, "is Mr. Cameron."

For a moment Mr. Ford was silent and then he said, "If Bos-

Continued on Page 3—Column 1

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

Cameron Loaned for Boston Fund

Continued from Page One

ton wants Mr. Cameron and he is willing to go then Boston shall have him."

The efficiency of the Ford organization was put into motion and a corps of secretaries were at Mr. Cutler's disposal to bring him and Mr. Cameron together. They talked and Mr. Cameron agreed to come. Before Mr. Cutler had returned to Detroit, on his way to Boston, difficulties arose and when he reached his hotel there was a call from Mr. Cameron.

There Had to Be Way Out

"I do so want to help Boston," said Mr. Cameron as Mr. Cutler listened on the telephone, "but," he added, "my broadcast over the Ford Sunday Evening Hour is not completed until 9.26 and the only train leaving Detroit on Sunday evening that will get me to Boston in time to speak at your opening meeting leaves at nine o'clock."

Mr. Cutler, as he tells it now, suggested that possibly Mr. Cameron might be willing to take an airplane. Yes, Mr. Cameron would fly, if there was no other way out of it, he told Mr. Cutler, but he preferred not to do so.

"But don't worry about it, Mr. Cutler," said Mr. Cameron. "There will be a way out of it."

But Mr. Cutler did worry. He felt the need of someone with the human understanding, who possessed the power to tell a stirring story of Boston's needs, was so vital to the success of the campaign that Mr. Cameron would have to be here for the opening meeting.

It was then that Mr. Cutler set about to disprove at least part of the story that time, tide and a railroad train wait for no man. Boston wanted radioman Cameron and if he must come by train then the Michigan Central Railroad must do its part to make Boston's Community Fund Drive a success.

Held Express an Hour

H. Shearer, operating vice president of the railroad, was appealed to, and when Mr. Cutler had finished it was promised that the Michigan Central Railroad would hold its fast express from Detroit to Boston for one hour that Mr. Cameron might be a passenger.

It was this series of events that brought Mr. Cameron to the rostrum of Symphony Hall last night to thrill Bostonians with the necessity of this year rallying more than before to the help of 104 social agencies of Greater Boston which need $4,160,000 in 1937 to carry on the work they are committed to do for the community good.

Simply, and with a conviction that brought home the importance of carrying through successfully the task at hand, Mr. Cameron outlined the plans laid out by the committee and the 15,000 volunteer workers who start today to raise the necessary funds. He told the story in a way that stirred the tremendous audience that filled Symphony Hall until they cheered him.

"He Ain't Heavy"

And wnen he had finished, Mr. Cutler spoke briefly of the need of successfully carrying through Greater Boston's social insurance against graver things. And as he finished Mr. Cutler epitomized the whole campaign by telling the story of a tiny, ragged lad, almost wasted from illness, carrying a younger crippled child across his shoulder. A stranger stopped him and the child looked up with wan face and said:

"He ain't heavy, mister, he's my brother."

"That," said Mr. Cutler, "is the spirit of the Community Fund Campaign in Greater Boston to raise $4,160,000 to care for the less fortunate."

Appealing as was the meeting in Symphony Hall, it was not without dramatic effect through the announcement that the music for the evening was generously given by the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They were directed, of course, by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and both the director and the entire orchestra contributed their talents to make the opening meeting of the drive a further success. Dr. Koussevitzky directed four numbers: "Peer Gynt" Suite, by Grieg; Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Berlioz; Prelude to "Lohengrin," Wagner, and overture "Romeo and Juliet," Tchaikovsky.

Charles Francis Adams, president of the Community Federation of Boston, presided.

To Turn Over Funds at Once

The $60,000 Red Cross flood emergency quota of the Community Fund will be turned over to the Boston Metropolitan Chapter of the American Red Cross as fast as the money is received at campaign headquarters because of the urgency of the flood relief work. It will come from undesignated subscriptions to the general fund.

First reports on the progress of the campaign will be made tomorrow at a luncheon in the Boston City Club. Subsequent report luncheons will be held Thursday and Friday this week, Monday, Wednesday and Friday next week and Monday, Feb. 8, just prior to the campaign's final day, which will be marked in the evening by a Victory dinner.

ATLANTA, GA.
AMERICAN

1937

Irving Walker, patron of music, is having a "magnificent vacation" in New York, judging from a couple of bundles of programs he has sent me.

In these are copies of the programs of the concerts of the Philadelphia, the Boston, New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society, symphony orchestras, the Gordon String Quartet, Martha Graham in dance recital, the "Met" performances of "Faust," "Tristan und Isolde," "La Traviata," "Der Fliegende Hollander," "Die Walkure," "Lakme," "Les Contes d'Hoffman," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Lohengrin," "Samson et Dalila," "Carmen" and a Sunday Night Grand Concert."

His marginal notes are highly illuminating. Concerts seem to be quite satisfying. The Metropolitan Opera performances are not so brilliant or "up to the standards of former years." He was greatly impressed by the beauty of the singing of Kerstin Thorborg, Vina Bovy and Kirsten Flagstad.

The programs of the "Met" are picturing the artists and telling the stories of the operas, giving more than the usual simple listing of the cast. Much of the information can not be found in printed form elsewhere. This is something new and am wondering why it was not thought of long years ago. Thank you, Mr. Walker, for this valuable collection.

* * *

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
JEWISH EXAMINER
JAN 15 1937

Zion Grove to Honor Ossip Gabrilowitsch

Mailamm Plans Carnegie Concert on Feb. 24 to Further Project in Memory of Great Composer

A grove of eucalyptus and pine trees is to be planted on Jewish National Fund land in Palestine as a memorial to Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the famous composer and conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, who died recently, according to a plan formulated by Mailamm, the American Palestine Music Association, of which Leopold Godowsky is honorary president, and Mischa Elman and Bronislaw Huberman are honorary vice-presidents.

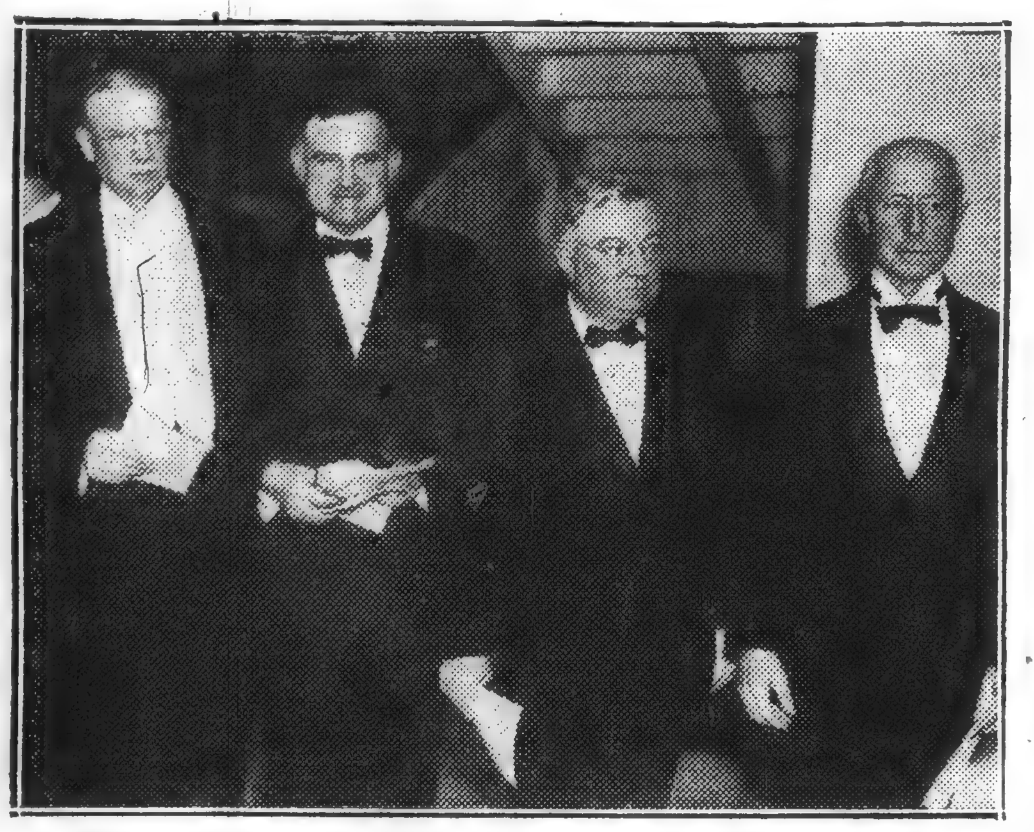
To raise the fund necessary for the planting of the Gabrilowitsch grove, a Gabrilowitsch memorial concert has been arranged, under the auspices of Mailamm and will be held Wednesday evening, Feb. 24, in Carnegie Hall, Mailamm announced. Albert Spalding, violinist, and Harold Bauer, pianist, will be the soloists in the program.

The project has gained wide support in musical and in music-loving circles. The program is being arranged by a musicians' committee of which Artur Bodanzky and Serge Koussevitzky are chairmen. Mrs. Israel Goldstein is chairman of the committee of prominent men and women, including I. A. Hirschman and Dr. J. F. Neuberger (of the U. S. Navy) which is sponsoring this enterprise, together with the New York Chapter of Mailamm of which Rabbi Ira Eisenstein is chairman.

15-DAY DRIVE FOR $4,160,000 IS LAUNCHED

Jan 26

Great Meeting at Symphony Hall Hears Pleas of Leaders for Relief of Human Needs



PROMINENT AT COMMUNITY FUND MEETING

At Symphony Hall last night. Left to right, Mayor Mansfield, Genera Chairman Robert Cutler, W. J. Cameron and Charles Francis Adams.

With the goal set at $4,160,000 to be raised in 15 days Greater Boston's 1937 community fund campaign was launched last night at Symphony Hall at a gathering of 2000 workers, including many prominent citizens.

The task set for 15,000 voluteer workers, which involves the continuation and life of 104 agencies serving human needs in the greater city, was stated with the utmost simplicity by three speakers, Charles Francis Adams, former Secretary of the Navy, who is president of the Community Federation of Boston; W. J. Cameron of the Ford Motor Company, whose voice on the Sunday night programme of the automobile company is familiar to millions, and Robert Cutler, general chairman of the 1937 community fund campaign.

Continued on Page 10—First Col.

Globe sque story and picture on front page Jan. 26/37

Great Drive Opened for Community Fund

Continued From First Page

Public spirited and philanthropic citizens of the whole metropolis, captains of industry, great merchants and every strata of society of the teeming area of Greater Boston, rubbed shoulders at Symphony Hall last night as the drive started in which it is hoped to surpass the record of last year, in which Boston astounded the country by oversubscribing its fund in 17 days, while Philadelphia, with the next largest fund, took 65 days to wind up the campaign and then fell short of the goal.

Something more than civic pride was involved in the enthusiastic meeting at which, with a concert contributed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the fund was launched.

Around the walls of Symphony Hall were hung shields bearing the names of the 104 agencies engaged in relieving distress and suffering among the underprivileged. It was driven home that those agencies would benefit from every penny contributed to the fund and that the money would be spent on social aids of proved worth.

The speaking programme was broadcast to the thousands of workers and prospective donors to the fund who were unable to get seats at Symphony Hall.

Notables Represented

All the great fortunes with a stake in Greater Boston, its people and its welfare, were represented last night at the Symphony Hall meeting. Men seldom seen outside of the sheltered calm of exclusive clubs, of directors' rooms, of trustees meetings, joined in the launching of the drive. Mayor Mansfield was present in his capacity both as Mayor and as a member of the federation. Governor Hurley, reported ill with a cold, was represented by Commissioner of Public Safety Paul G. Kirk.

As general chairman of the Community Federation of Boston, the permanent organization of public-spirited citizens in charge of raising the money each year for the Greater Boston Community Fund, Robert Cutler introduced Charles Francis Adams and W. J. Cameron as speakers. Mr. Adams had to take a plane from New York yesterday afternoon to reach Boston in time for the meeting, and Mr. Cameron reached Boston in time for the meeting only because railroad officials in Detroit held a train an hour after his broadcast Sunday night.

"We shall not reach our goal by working only when it pleases us," said Mr. Adams. "Nor will the fund be completed by giving the pennies that are to spare after we have satisfied our own selfish pleasures.

"This has been the land of liberty. Our ancestors paid the price and won that blessing for us. Shall we now, through neglect, take that blessing away from the many thousands this fund will aid to a better understanding of liberty. This is our city. How shall we save it from the hatreds and jealousies and greed? Not by shirking our share in this work."

Cameron Makes Plea

As speaker for the evening Mr. Cameron, widely known commentator, who was loaned by Edsel Ford for the meeting last night, set forth the aspirations of the campaign.

"When we speak of helpfulness today it signifies something more than we meant 20 or 30 years ago," said Mr. Cameron. Not that all we know is new, but it is more truly known and more applied than before. To help, once meant giving a meal to the hungry who would be hungry again tomorrow, a dole to those who would be penniless again next day—binding up social wounds in a way that left them almost certain to open again.

"It was the only help we knew how to give; it was a noble and precious outpouring of human sympathhy, and the world had been a drearier place without it. But we know that it did not cure the sources of distress and to that extent it failed of being the truest charity.

"Yet, even then in and around Boston were men and women of equal kindness but of greater social penetration, who not only alleviated distress but sought its causes that they might prevent its recurrence. All of us know of human missteps that formerly brought a life of ruin in their wake—so hopeless and helpless did they leave their victims—missteps that now, though not in any wise condoned, are atoned for and healed by a mercy that has wisdom written on her forehead.

"A way is built up that not only prevents their repetition, but even transforms them into stepping stones towards useful lives, and more than that, changes the whole stream of personal tendency and the pressure of environment so that innocent ones need never come into that danger.

The Newer Helpfulness

"We no longer talk of environment. We tackle it. Men and women of skill in this great art approach understandingly the most unpromising conditions, and pierce them through with the light of a skillful, redemptive, friendly interest. They open the doors of neglected minds and rouse latent character to breath and growth. They lead the young from thoughtless conduct that spawns all sorts of crime, to more satisfying and constructive interests; help disheartened mothers to restore the dignity of the home. They teach the untaught hand the ways of self-support, restoring the beaten soul, bringing back life!—life that afterward lives of itself and becomes a life-giving center to others. All this, and more besides, is what we mean by restorative and preventive helpfulness.

"There always have been persons in and around Boston who knew how to meet the various causes and conditions of distress and disability. We of the Middle West can testify to that because in many places we follow the methods they developed.

"Also, in former days, there were always in Greater Boston men and women of great means and small who supported these services. For at first they were necessarily local. Each neighborhood as it were, each community, could do a little for itself. But as our cities grew and the pressure of population practically obliterated boundary lines, the task fell more and more as a united obligation upon the good people of all the related communities.

"The services were set up and their benefits could not be limited by local boundaries. Thus, not only are various types of need more effectively dealt with, but a greater unity of support has come by including the whole humane community in this work, not by taxation, but by free gifts."

Concluding, he said: "And now you are going out on the last most pressing phase of your crusade—a crusade to conquer human need by skill and wisdom; a conquest that leaves no wounds, no bitter tears behind. Your return in triumph will be a civic victory for this whole region."

Wants Quota Over-Subscribed

Chairman Cutler stated at the beginning of his remarks that the drive had taken an added item of $60,000 at the last moment because of the sudden need of the Red Cross to aid flood sufferers in the Ohio River Valley with that amount, which is Boston's quota for the Red Cross flood relief fund.

"The object of the campaign is to

"The object of the campaign is to oversubscribe by a large margin the goal of $4,160,000, and to do this mighty task in 15 days," said Mr. Cutler. To accomplish this objective, the campaign leaders have been continuously at work for about five months, enrolling an army of volunteer workers and solicitors. At the present moment, 15,000 stand ready, straining to get forward with the campaign.

He cited 104 agencies serving human needs in direct service to 300,000 needy, sick, children, old people and handicapped. He said:

"All the thousands who live and work in Greater Boston have come slowly but surely to the understanding that the support of the great Federation agencies which served their communities is an essential obligation to be shared by everyone who lives or does business in the community. Giving to the Federation agencies is not merely a nice thing, a mere charitable handout, nor merely the generous act of a warm heart. It is a necessary thing to stabilize and protect society.

"No one would think of living in a city without a fire department, a police force, a sewage system. Is there one of us who could conceive of life in this community without its hospitals, its health agencies, its settlements, its services for youth. In and through them beats the pulse of the life blood of this community."

The ushers at Symphony Hall last night included the Misses Charlotte Rantoul, Jane Megrew, Barbara Eaton, Elizabeth Stephenson, Mary Louise Spaulding and Virginia Ellis, Mrs. Harwood Ellis, Miss Frances Holmes and Miss Colina Robbins.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert to the workers assembled for the opening of the 15 days' drive. The programme included the "Peer Gynt" Suite of Grieg, and Berlioz' overture to "The Roman Carnival," the prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and the overture to Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet."

ATLANTA, GA.
AMERICAN

1937

Irving Walker, patron of music, is having a "magnificent vacation" in New York, judging from a couple of bundles of programs he has sent me.

In these are copies of the programs of the concerts of the Philadelphia, the Boston, New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society, symphony orchestras, the Gordon String Quartet, Martha Graham in dance recital, the "Met" performances of "Faust," "Tristan und Isolde," "La Traviata," "Der Fliegende Hollander," "Die Walkure," "Lakme," "Les Contes d'Hoffman," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Lohengrin," "Samson et Dalila," "Carmen" and a Sunday Night Grand Concert."

His marginal notes are highly illuminating. Concerts seem to be quite satisfying. The Metropolitan Opera performances are not so brilliant or "up to the standards of former years." He was greatly impressed by the beauty of the singing of Kerstin Thorborg, Vina Bovy and Kirsten Flagstad.

The programs of the "Met" are picturing the artists and telling the stories of the operas, giving more than the usual simple listing of the cast. Much of the information can not be found in printed form elsewhere. This is something new and am wondering why it was not thought of long years ago. Thank you, Mr. Walker, for this valuable collection.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
JEWISH EXAMINER

JAN 15 1937

Zion Grove to Honor Ossip Gabrilowitsch

Mailamm Plans Carnegie Concert on Feb. 24 to Further Project in Memory of Great Composer

A grove of eucalyptus and pine trees is to be planted on Jewish National Fund land in Palestine as a memorial to Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the famous composer and conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, who died recently, according to a plan formulated by Mailamm, the American Palestine Music Association, of which Leopold Godowsky is honorary president, and Mischa Elman and Bronislaw Huberman are honorary vice-presidents.

To raise the fund necessary for the planting of the Gabrilowitsch grove, a Gabrilowitsch memorial concert has been arranged, under the auspices of Mailamm and will be held Wednesday evening, Feb. 24, in Carnegie Hall, Mailamm announced. Albert Spalding, violinist, and Harold Bauer, pianist, will be the soloists in the program.

The project has gained wide support in musical and in music-loving circles. The program is being arranged by a musicians' committee of which Artur Bodanzky and Serge Koussevitzky are chairmen. Mrs. Israel Goldstein is chairman of the committee of prominent men and women, including I. A. Hirschman and Dr. J. F. Neuberger (of the U. S. Navy) which is sponsoring this enterprise, together with the New York Chapter of Mailamm of which Rabbi Ira Eisenstein is chairman.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JAN 27 1937

Mr. and Mrs. Elisha C. Mowry had as dinner guests last night, Mr. Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and ~~Mr. Putnam~~ C. Aldrich.

Miss Peggy C. Mowry, a student at Wellesley College, returned home last evening to attend the Boston Symphony Concert at the Metropolitan Theatre.

Ford Loaned Cameron for Boston Drive

Jan 26

Express Train Held Hour to Get Him Here for Fund Meeting

Joshua commanded the sun and the moon to stand still and they obeyed him.

Robert Cutler, general chairman of the 1937 Community Fund Campaign, is Boston's Joshua.

Behind the appearance of W. J. Cameron, nationally known radio commentator, at the opening meeting for the drive to raise $4,160,000 for Greater Boston's social needs, there is a story, not previously told, in which the leading characters are Edsel Ford, the motor manufacturer, Mr. Cameron, Mr. Cutler and H. Shearer, vice president of the Michigan Central Railroad.

It goes back to early last fall when Robert Cutler, upon whose shoulders the repsonsibility for the success of the present $4,160,000 campaign rests, was in Washington planning the early stages of the drive. He asked Gerard Swope, president of General Electric Company, if he thought Henry Ford would lend Boston America's favorite radio commentator, who is heard from coast to coast on the Ford Sunday Evening Hour. Mr. Swope opined the request could not be granted.

Undaunted, Mr. Cutler sought an appointment with Edsel Ford in Dearborn and promptly at an appointed noon one day last October Mr. Cutler was ushered into Mr. Ford's offices. He told the story of Boston's need for someone who had the breadth of undertaking and the appeal to talk to the people and tell them why Boston must not fail when it started its drive for funds. "And that man," said Mr. Cutler, "is Mr. Cameron."

For a moment Mr. Ford was silent and then he said, "If Bos-

Continued on Page 3—Column 1

Ford Sunday Evening Hour is not completed until 9.26 and the only train leaving Detroit on Sunday evening that will get me to Boston in time to speak at your opening meeting leaves at nine o'clock."

Mr. Cutler, as he tells it now, suggested that possibly Mr. Cameron might be willing to take an airplane. Yes, Mr. Cameron would fly, if there was no other way out of it, he told Mr. Cutler, but he preferred not to do so.

"But don't worry about it, Mr. Cutler," said Mr. Cameron. "There will be a way out of it."

But Mr. Cutler did worry. He felt the need of someone with the human understanding, who possessed the power to tell a stirring story of Boston's needs, was so vital to the success of the campaign that Mr. Cameron would have to be here for the opening meeting.

It was then that Mr. Cutler set about to disprove at l

News. | " 9.30
| Charm Mirror 9.45
ama.. | Baritone and Organist .. 10.00
fe.... | Soprano and Tenor 10.15
...... | Marriage Clinic 10.30
...... | Francis J. Cronin 10.45
11.0
...... | Get Thin to Music 11.1
...... | 11.3
rming. | News 11.4
ience.. | Freudberg's Orchestra..
st .... | The Journal of Living 12
...... | 12
...... | La Rosa Program 12
ice .... | 12
...... | Women's Club News...
...... | Farm News ....
ama ... | Mid-Day Service ....
t ...... |
...... | Ubeldo Guidi............
...... | Walter Pritchard Eaton of Yale...... ..
...... | Black and White Studies
g ...... | Molly of the Movies.....
...... | Racing Results ....

the work they are committed to do for the community good.

Simply, and with a conviction that brought home the importance of carrying through successfully the task at hand, Mr. Cameron outlined the plans laid out by the committee and the 15,000 volunteer workers who start today to raise the necessary funds. He told the story in a way that stirred the tremendous audience that filled Symphony Hall until they cheered him.

"He Ain't Heavy"

And when he had finished, Mr. Cutler spoke briefly of the need of successfully carrying through Greater Boston's social insurance against graver things. And as he finished Mr. Cutler epitomized the whole campaign by telling the story of a tiny, ragged lad, almost wasted from illness, carrying a younger crippled child across his shoulder. A stranger stopped him and the child looked up with wan face and said:

"He ain't heavy, mister, he's my brother."

"That," said Mr. Cutler, "is the spirit of the Community Fund Campaign in Greater Boston to raise $4,160,000 to care for the less fortunate."

Appealing as was the meeting in Symphony Hall, it was not without dramatic effect through the announcement that the music for the evening was generously given by the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They were directed, of course, by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and both the director and the entire orchestra contributed their talents to make the opening meeting of the drive a further success. Dr. Koussevitzky directed four numbers: "Peer Gynt" Suite, by Grieg; Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Berlioz; Prelude to "Lohengrin," Wagner, and overture "Romeo and Juliet," Tchaikovsky.

Charles Francis Adams, president of the Community Federation of Boston, presided.

To Turn Over Funds at Once

The $60,000 Red Cross flood emergency quota of the Community Fund will be turned over to the Boston Metropolitan Chapter of the American Red Cross as fast as the money is received at campaign headquarters because of the urgency of the flood relief work. It will come from undesignated subscriptions to the general fund.

First reports on the progress of the campaign will be made tomorrow at a luncheon in the Boston City Club. Subsequent report luncheons will be held Thursday and Friday this week, Monday, Wednesday and Friday next week and Monday, Feb. 8, just prior to the campaign's final day, which will be marked in the evening by a Victory dinner.

180

WACO, TEX.
TRIBUNE-HERALD

JAN 17 1937

Baylor Symphony Group to Feature Opera Star Feb. 1

Miss Phradie Wells, Formerly of Metropolitan, to Sing at Orchestra's Opening Concert

Miss Phradie Wells, for 12 years a member of the Metropolitan Opera company of New York, will be the soloist for the Baylor university symphony orchestra, James Thomson, conductor, in its opening concert on Monday evening, Feb. 1.

Important Roles

Miss Wells has had a career both in opera and on the concert platform. For 12 years she was a member of the Metropolitan Opera company of New York, where she sang a number of important roles. She was a pupil of William S. Brady and of Oscar Sanger, teachers of many noted singers in concert and opera. She has been soloist with various symphony orchestras, including the Boston symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, the Plattsburg, Springfield, Mass., and Reading, Pa., orchestras; she was recently soloist for the Amarillo symphony, and on Feb. 19 will be soloist for the Fort Worth symphony orchestra. The concert of the Baylor symphony will be her first presentation to a Waco audience. On that occasion she will sing the "Recitative and Aria of Lia," from "L'Enfant Prodigue," by Debussy, and a group of songs.

Program Includes:

Included in the program of the symphony will be works by Bach, Schubert, Bizet and Johann Strauss. This concert will be complimentary to members of the new Hollywood Musical Arts series and to members of the Baylor-Waco Civic Music association.

Heifetz at Symphony

(Bull. Jan. 30/37)

By RUTH MARSTERS

Rested from his mid-season vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky returned to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in yesterday afternoon's program in Symphony Hall.

The high enthusiasm of the audience as the conductor came upon the stage after a two-week absence from these concerts was more than rewarded in the course of the performance which followed.

Liadow's Symphonic Picture, Op. 66, "From the Apocalypse," which opened the program is descriptive writing of a high order.

The Russian composer's skill in orchestration was apparent in his earliest works. Here orchestral color is used to achieve remarkably significant effects in the depiction of the text taken from the tenth chapter of the Revelation of St. John the Divine.

The vission of the archangel ". . . his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire," is painted with utmost vividness—the colors intense, the proportions broad.

In Dr. Koussevitzky's dramatic interpretation of the score, he drew from the orchestra the utmost solidity of performance.

The appearance of Jascha Heifetz as soloist in the performance of Mendelssohn's Concerto for Violin in E minor, Op. 62, climaxed the occasion.

In Heifetz's playing musicianship and virtuosity were blended with superb results. The Andante has never appeared so exquisitely beautiful, so possessed of "innig." The superb quality of tone was a constant joy, while the brilliance and clarity of the bravura passages, the lightness and fleetness of the Allegro molto vivace, were exceptional to a degree.

The orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction provided the most senstiive of accompaniments.

The program, to be repeated at this evening's concert, was brought to a close with the exotic "Dance of t he Seven Veils" from Strauss' Opera, "Salome."

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

1937

Tuesday Music Menu Includes Brahms's Third, Not Played Here in Many Years by Boston Orchestra.—Dr. Koussevitzky Also to Play Taneiev, Wagner Items

A not-too-familiar symphony of Brahms and quite unfamiliar music by Taneiev, with some well-known Wagnerian excerpts, will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert Tuesday evening in Metropolitan Theatre. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

An entr'acte from "Oresteia," Taneiev's only opera, will open the program. Taneiev, a Russian, was born in 1856 and died in 1915. He is described as having been completely devoted to his music, caring nothing for fame, swindled by relatives, contemptuous of the machine age, saturated with Bach and Palestrina. He delved into riddle canons and such musical-mathematical pastimes, and was so self-critical a workman that many compositions, including symphonies and string quartets, did not seem to him to be worth mentioning even to his friends. A great quantity of work was discovered after his death. Wise men of music see his star ascending.

His opera bored the public of his time. It was criticised as much too long, but he would not consent to leave out so much as a grace-note.

The Brahms third symphony has not been played here by the Boston orchestra in many years.

Brahms finished it in 1883 when he was 50. It was performed first in Vienna, Dec. 2 of that year, at a Philharmonic concert. The audience received the symphony with great enthusiasm, although it is reported that members of the opposing musical party—the Wagner-Bruckner partisans—made a display against it.

Financial success likewise attended this symphony. The copyright sold for about $9000, and royalties on performances were paid to Brahms.

The significance-seekers have had a pleasant time with this symphony. Hero and Leander have been discovered in it, by Joachim, and so has Iago, and a certain statue of Germania. Another guess, by Clara Schumann, was that it was a "Forest Idyl." This seems to give anybody the privilege of finding anything he wants in it.

The first movement is marked allegro con brio, in F major. After broad opening chords, the main theme moves downward in the strings, while a contrasting figure rises in the woodwinds. Just before announcing the second theme, Brahms writes a phrase reminiscent of the Venusberg scene in "Tannhauser." This has led to still another guess by the learned—that the phrase is a tribute to Wagner, whose death occurred while this symphony was being composed.

The second theme is more gentle, in bassoon and clarinet, and the movement passes through a characteristically splendid Brahmian development to a characteristically powerful close.

The second movement is andante, in C major, with a hymn-like utterance by the woodwind as its main theme. Subtle contrasts of rhythm and skillful development of the main theme are noted.

In C minor, poco allegretto, the third movement opens with a song by the 'cellos, then by the violins, later by wood wind. There is interesting work, also, for the horn, a favorite instrument with Brahms and one for which he wrote with great felicity.

Vigor and orchestral color characterize the last movement, in F minor. Here the master produces his most magnificent effects and brings his work to a solemn close.

Of the Wagnerian music to be played, the "Waldweben," or "Forest Murmurs," is a concert piece arranged by Wagner from the second act of "Siegfried." It projects the mood dominating the last scene of the act. Siegfried, having slain the dragon Fafner, is lying in the woods listening to the familiar voices of the forest. A little bird begins to tell him things, among them that the warrior maiden Brunnhilde is lying asleep on a rocky crag, protected by a circle of fire, and that he, Siegfred, will penetrate the fire and win Brunnhilde as his bride.

In the "Tannhauser" overture, as Wagner explained, "the orchestra leads before us the Pilgrims' Chant alone: it nears, increases to a mighty outpour, passes away. Eventide; last echo of the chant. As night comes, magic sights and sounds appear, a rosy mist floats up, exultant shouts strike the ears, the whirlings of a voluptuous dance are seen." And so on to salvation and to the union of soul and senses, God and nature, "in the atoning kiss of hallowed Love."

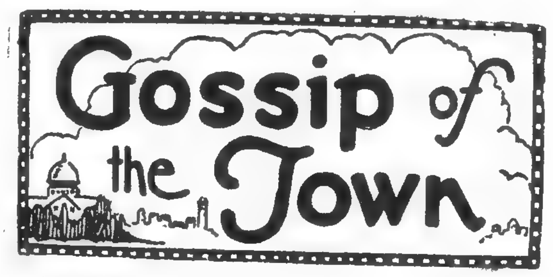
Of the overture to "Lohengrin," Wagner wrote: "The miraculous delivery of the Holy Grail, escorted by an angelic host, and the handing of it over into the custody of highly favored men, was selected by the author of 'Lohengrin,' a knight of the Grail, for the introduction of his drama, as the subject to be musically portrayed; just as here, for the sake of explanation, he may be permitted to bring it forward for the mental receptive power of the listeners."

G. Y. L.

Next Boston Programs

Hart Times Jan 31/37

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will begin its third New York visit of the season with a pension fund benefit concert at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday night, February 10, with Jascha Heifetz as soloist in the Mendelssohn violin concerto. Tchaikovsky's fourth and Mendelssohn's Italian symphonies will be the other numbers. The regular evening Carnegie Hall concert, on Friday, February 12, instead of the usual Thursday, will include Gustav Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde." The orchestra will also play at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, February 13, and at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday night, February 11.



GIRLS WILL SMOKE: Boston is still at sixes and sevens about women smoking. There are insurance offices downtown where to be caught smoking is on a par with being caught picking the boss's pocket. And there are banks where the stenographer puffs away with one hand and takes shorthand with the other. Employment offices advise girls not to smoke during office hours "EVEN IF THE RULES ALLOW IT." The New England girl colleges have a variety of rules forbidding smoking on the campus, but permitting it in one's own dormitory room, or forbidding it in rooms, but allowing it in the general rooms, or setting apart hours when smoking may be permitted anywhere.

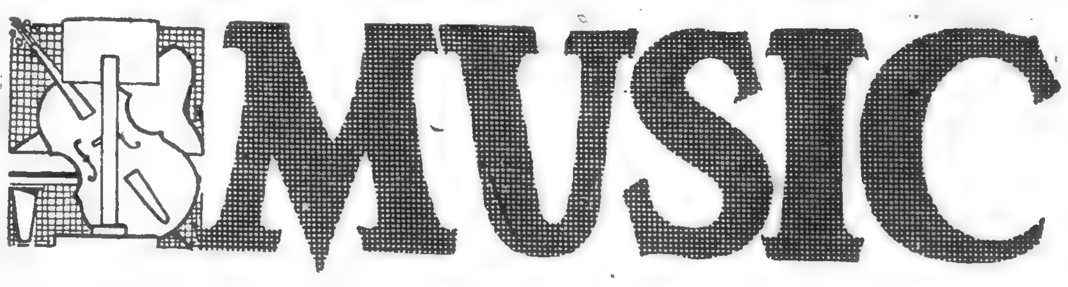
* * * *

IT'S MUTUAL RESPECT: There are no people who greet each other with the enthusiasm and ectsacy characteristic of the great international musicians. They run across the symphony hall green room at each other with "Jascha!" "Vladimir!" There is an embrace, conversation in three languages all very explosive, and a lot of back-slapping, hand-clasping, secondary embraces, a mutual sizing up: "Well! Well! Let me see how you look." And: "What kind of a season have you had?" "Oh, so, yes, one gets along."

There is another note. It is the note of men who are very lonely and who have to travel the ends of the earth to meet up with each other, finding in their mutual society a kinship, the kinship of the artist, which they cannot seem to find in contacts outside their own realm.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JAN 23 1937



Brahms's Third, Not Played Here in Many Years, on Boston Orchestra's Program for Tuesday.

Taneiev and Wagner Represented

A not-too-familiar symphony of Brahms and quite unfamiliar music by Taneiev, with some well-known Wagnerian excerpts, will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert Tuesday evening in Metropolitan Theatre. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

An entr'acte from "Oresteia," Taneiev's only opera, will open the program. Taneiev, a Russian, was born in 1856 and died in 1915. He is described as having been completely devoted to his music, caring nothing for fame, swindled by relatives, contemptuous of the machine age, saturated with Bach and Palestrina. He delved into riddle canons and such musical-mathematical pastimes, and was so self-critical a workman that many compositions, including symphonies and string quartets, did not seem to him to be worth mentioning even to his friends. A great quantity of work was discovered after his death. Wise men of music see his star ascending.

His opera bored the public of his time. It was criticised as much too long, but he would not consent to leave out so much as a grace-note.

The Brahms third symphony has not been played here by the Boston orchestra in many years.

Brahms finished it in 1883 when he was 50. It was performed first in Vienna, Dec. 2 of that year, at a Philharmonic concert. The audience received the symphony with great enthusiasm, although it is reported that members of the opposing musical party—the Wagner-Bruckner partisans—made a display against it.

Financial success likewise attended this symphony. The copyright sold for about $9000, and royalties on performances were paid to Brahms.

The significance-seekers have had a pleasant time with this symphony. Hero and Leander have been discovered in it, by Joachim, and so has Iago, and a certain statue of Germania. Another guess, by Clara Schumann, was that it was a "Forest Idyl." This seems to give anybody the privilege of finding anything he wants in it.

The first movement is marked allegro con brio, in F major. After broad opening chords, the main theme moves downward in the strings, while a contrasting figure rises in the woodwinds. Just before announcing the second theme, Brahms writes a phrase reminiscent of the Venusberg scene in "Tannhauser." This has led to still another guess by the learned—that the phrase is a tribute to Wagner, whose death occurred while this symphony was being composed.

The second theme is more gentle, in bassoon and clarinet, and the movement passes through a characteristically splendid Brahmian development to a characteristically powerful close.

The second movement is andante, in C major, with a hymn-like utterance by the woodwind as its main theme. Subtle contrasts of rhythm and skillful development of the main theme are noted.

In C minor, poco allegretto, the third movement opens with a song by the 'cellos, then by the violins, later by wood wind. There is interesting work, also, for the horn, a favorite instrument with Brahms and one for which he wrote with great felicity.

Vigor and orchestral color characterize the last movement, in F minor. Here the master produces his most magnificent effects and brings his work to a solemn close.

Of the Wagnerian music to be played, the "Waldweben," or "Forest Murmurs," is a concert piece arranged by Wagner from the second act of "Siegfried." It projects the mood dominating the last scene of the act. Siegfried, having slain the dragon Fafner, is lying in the woods listening to the familiar voices of the forest. A little bird begins to tell him things, among them that the warrior maiden Brunnhilde is lying asleep on a rocky crag, protected by a circle of fire, and that he, Siegfred, will penetrate the fire and win Brunnhilde as his bride.

In the "Tannhauser" overture, as Wagner explained, "the orchestra leads before us the Pilgrims' Chant alone: it nears, increases to a mighty outpour, passes away. Eventide; last echo of the chant. As night comes, magic sights and sounds appear, a rosy mist floats up, exultant shouts strike the ears, the whirlings of a voluptuous dance are seen." And so on to salvation and to the union of soul and senses, God and nature, "in the atoning kiss of hallowed Love."

Of the overture to "Lohengrin," Wagner wrote: "The miraculous delivery of the Holy Grail, escorted by an angelic host, and the handing of it over into the custody of highly favored men, was selected by the author of 'Lohengrin,' a knight of the Grail, for the introduction of his drama, as the subject to be musically portrayed; just as here, for the sake of explanation, he may be permitted to bring it forward for the mental receptive power of the listeners."

G. Y. L.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

Publishers Offer Prizes for Letters

A mass of new material, important as musical history and as personal revelation, will be published for the first time on February 1st in the book, "Beloved Friends": The Story of Tchaikowsky and Nadejda von Meck, by Catherine Drinker Bowen and Barbara von Meck. The strange romance between the Russian composer and his wealthy patroness with whom he corresponded passionately for fourteen years but whom he never met is a puzzling and fascinating tale.

The publishers of "Beloved Friend" are sponsoring a contest for the best letters of not more than 300 words on any one of the following three questions:

What is the psychological explanation of Mme. von Meck's abrupt ending of her romantic relations with Tchaikowsky, and is there any clue to her decision in the revelations given as to her personality?

Was Mme. von Meck's infatuation solely with Tchaikowsky's music, as she thought, or was she really in love with him, in spite of the fact that she was careful never to speak to him or meet him?

Did Mme. von Meck's patronage of Tchaikowsky have, on the whole, a beneficial or a harmful effect upon the quality of his music?

All entries must be submitted by April 15 1937, and should be addressed to Contest Department, Random House, Inc., 20 East 57th Street, New York, N. Y. The committee of judges consists of four distinguished figures in the musical world—Jascha Heifetz, John Barbirolli Lawrence Gilman and Deems Taylor, and Robert K. Haas, vicepresident of Random House.

The first prize for the best letter on any of the three subjects will be a Steinway grand piano. The second prize will be the recordings of Tchaikowsky's Fourth Symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, his Fifth Symphony under the direction of Leopold Stokowski, his Sixth "Pathetique" Symphony under the baton of Eugene Ormandy, the "Andante Cantabile" played by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, and the "Nutcracker Suite" played by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski. The third prize will be the recordings of the Tchaikowsky Violin Concerto played by Mischa Elman and of the Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor with Arthur Rubinstein as soloist and John Barbirolli as conductor.

WACO, TEX.
TRIBUNE-HERALD

JAN 17 1937

Baylor Symphony Group to Feature Opera Star Feb. 1

Miss Phradie Wells, Formerly of Metropolitan, to Sing at Orchestra's Opening Concert

[illegible] Phradie Wells, for 12 years [illegible] of the Metropolitan Opera [illegible] of New York, will be the [illegible] the Baylor university [illegible] orchestra, James Thom[illegible]ductor, in its opening con[illegible] Monday evening, Feb. 1.

Important Roles

[illegible] has had a career both [illegible] and on the concert platform. For 12 years she was a member of the Metropolitan Opera company [illegible] New York, where she sang [illegible] of important roles. She [illegible] pupil of William S. Brady and [illegible] Sanger, teachers of many [illegible] singers in concert and opera. [illegible] soloist with various [illegible] orchestras, including the [illegible] symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, the Plattsburg, Springfield, Mass., and Reading, Pa., orchestras; she was recently soloist for the Amarillo symphony, and on Feb. 19 will be soloist for the Fort Worth symphony orchestra. The concert of the Baylor symphony will be her first presentation to a Waco audience. On that occasion she will sing the "Recitative and Aria of Lia," from "L'Enfant Prodigue," by Debussy, and a group of songs.

Program Includes:

Included in the program of the symphony will be works by Bach, Schubert, Bizet and Johann Strauss. This concert will be complimentary to members of the new Hollywood Musical Arts series and to members of the Baylor-Waco Civic Music association.

Heifetz at Symphony

By RUTH MARSTERS

Rested from his mid-season vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky returned to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in yesterday afternoon's program in Symphony Hall.

The high enthusiasm of the audience as the conductor came upon the stage after a two-week absence from these concerts was more than rewarded in the course of the performance which followed.

Liadow's Symphonic Picture, Op. 66, "From the Apocalypse," which opened the program is descriptive writing of a high order.

The Russian composer's skill in orchestration was apparent in his earliest works. Here orchestral color is used to achieve remarkably significant effects in the depiction of the text taken from the tenth chapter of the Revelation of St. John the Divine.

The vission of the archangel ". . . his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire," is painted with utmost vividness—the colors intense, the proportions broad.

In Dr. Koussevitzky's dramatic interpretation of the score, he drew from the orchestra the utmost solidity of performance.

The appearance of Jascha Heifetz as soloist in the performance of Mendelssohn's Concerto for Violin in E minor, Op. 62, climaxed the occasion.

In Heifetz's playing musicianship and virtuosity were blended with superb results. The Andante has never appeared so exquisitely beautiful, so possessed of "innig." The superb quality of tone was a constant joy, while the brilliance and clarity of the bravura passages, the lightness and fleetness of the Allegro molto vivace, were exceptional to a degree.

The orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction provided the most senstiive of accompaniments.

The program, to be repeated at this evening's concert, was brought to a close with the exotic "Dance of the Seven Veils" from Strauss' Opera, "Salome."

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

Music

Tuesday Music Menu Includes Brahms's Third, Not Played Here in Many Years by Boston Orchestra.—Dr. Koussevitzky Also to Play Taneiev, Wagner Items

A not-too-familiar symphony of Brahms and quite unfamiliar music by Taneiev, with some well-known Wagnerian excerpts, will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert Tuesday evening in Metropolitan Theatre. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

An entr'acte from "Oresteia," Taneiev's only opera, will open the program. Taneiev, a Russian, was born in 1856 and died in 1915. He is described as having been completely devoted to his music, caring nothing for fame, swindled by relatives, contemptuous of the machine age, saturated with Bach and Palestrina. He delved into riddle canons and such musical-mathematical pastimes, and was so self-critical a workman that many compositions, including symphonies and string quartets, did not seem to him to be worth mentioning even to his friends. A great quantity of work was discovered after his death. Wise men of music see his star ascending.

His opera bored the public of his time. It was criticised as much too long, but he would not consent to leave out so much as a grace-note.

The Brahms third symphony has not been played here by the Boston orchestra in many years.

Brahms finished it in 1883 when he was 50. It was performed first in Vienna, Dec. 2 of that year, at a Philharmonic concert. The audience received the symphony with great enthusiasm, although it is reported that members of the opposing musical party—the Wagner-Bruckner partisans—made a display against it.

Financial success likewise attended this symphony. The copyright sold for about $9000, and royalties on performances were paid to Brahms.

The significance-seekers have had a pleasant time with this symphony. Hero and Leander have been discovered in it, by Joachim, and so has Iago, and a certain statue of Germania. Another guess, by Clara Schumann, was that it was a "Forest Idyl." This seems to give anybody the privilege of finding anything he wants in it.

The first movement is marked allegro con brio, in F major. After broad opening chords, the main theme moves downward in the strings, while a contrasting figure rises in the woodwinds. Just before announcing the second theme, Brahms writes a phrase reminiscent of the Venusberg scene in "Tannhauser." This has led to still another guess by the learned—that the phrase is a tribute to Wagner, whose death occurred while this symphony was being composed.

The second theme is more gentle, in bassoon and clarinet, and the movement passes through a characteristically splendid Brahmian development to a characteristically powerful close.

The second movement is andante, in C major, with a hymn-like utterance by the woodwind as its main theme. Subtle contrasts of rhythm and skillful development of the main theme are noted.

In C minor, poco allegretto, the third movement opens with a song by the 'cellos, then by the violins, later by wood wind. There is interesting work, also, for the horn, a favorite instrument with Brahms and one for which he wrote with great felicity.

Vigor and orchestral color characterize the last movement, in F minor. Here the master produces his most magnificent effects and brings his work to a solemn close.

Of the Wagnerian music to be played, the "Waldweben," or "Forest Murmurs," is a concert piece arranged by Wagner from the second act of "Siegfried." It projects the mood dominating the last scene of the act. Siegfried, having slain the dragon Fafner, is lying in the woods listening to the familiar voices of the forest. A little bird begins to tell him things, among them that the warrior maiden Brunnhilde is lying asleep on a rocky crag, protected by a circle of fire, and that he, Siegfred, will penetrate the fire and win Brunnhilde as his bride.

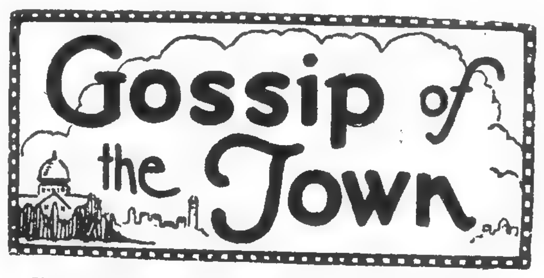
In the "Tannhauser" overture, as Wagner explained, "the orchestra leads before us the Pilgrims' Chant alone; it nears, increases to a mighty outpour, passes away. Eventide; last echo of the chant. As night comes, magic sights and sounds appear, a rosy mist floats up, exultant shouts strike the ears, the whirlings of a voluptuous dance are seen." And so on to salvation and to the union of soul and senses, God and nature, "in the atoning kiss of hallowed Love."

Of the overture to "Lohengrin," Wagner wrote: "The miraculous delivery of the Holy Grail, escorted by an angelic host, and the handing of it over into the custody of highly favored men, was selected by the author of 'Lohengrin,' a knight of the Grail, for the introduction of his drama, as the subject to be musically portrayed; just as here, for the sake of explanation, he may be permitted to bring it forward for the mental receptive power of the listeners."

G. Y. L.

Next Boston Programs

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will begin its third New York visit of the season with a pension fund benefit concert at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday night, February 10, with Jascha Heifetz as soloist in the Mendelssohn violin concerto. Tchaikovsky's fourth and Mendelssohn's Italian symphonies will be the other numbers. The regular evening Carnegie Hall concert, on Friday, February 12, instead of the usual Thursday, will include Gustav Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde." The orchestra will also play at Carnegie Hall, Saturday afternoon, February 13, and at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday night, February 11.



Gossip of the Town

GIRLS WILL SMOKE: Boston is still at sixes and sevens about women smoking. There are insurance offices downtown where to be caught smoking is on a par with being caught picking the boss's pocket. And there are banks where the stenographer puffs away with one hand and takes shorthand with the other. Employment offices advise girls not to smoke during office hours "EVEN IF THE RULES ALLOW IT." The New England girl colleges have a variety of rules forbidding smoking on the campus, but permitting it in one's own dormitory room, or forbidding it in rooms, but allowing it in the general rooms, or setting apart hours when smoking may be permitted anywhere.

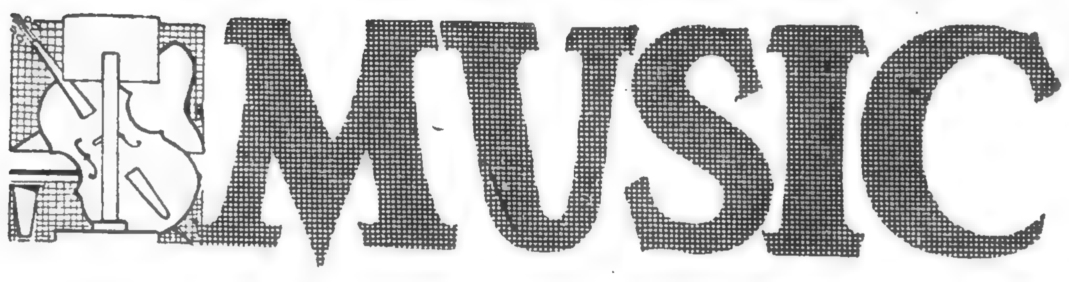
* * * *

IT'S MUTUAL RESPECT: There are no people who greet each other with the enthusiasm and ectsacy characteristic of the great international musicians. They run across the symphony hall green room at each other with "Jascha!" "Vladimir!" There is an embrace, conversation in three languages all very explosive, and a lot of back-slapping, hand-clasping, secondary embraces, a mutual sizing up: "Well! Well! Let me see how you look." And: "What kind of a season have you had?" "Oh, so, yes, one gets along."

There is another note. It is the note of men who are very lonely and who have to travel the ends of the earth to meet up with each other, finding in their mutual society a kinship, the kinship of the artist, which they cannot seem to find in contacts outside their own realm.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

180



MUSIC

Brahms's Third, Not Played Here in Many Years, on Boston Orchestra's Program for Tuesday.

Taneiev and Wagner Represented

A not-too-familiar symphony of Brahms and quite unfamiliar music by Taneiev, with some well-known Wagnerian excerpts, will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert Tuesday evening in Metropolitan Theatre. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

An entr'acte from "Oresteia," Taneiev's only opera, will open the program. Taneiev, a Russian, was born in 1856 and died in 1915. He is described as having been completely devoted to his music, caring nothing for fame, swindled by relatives, contemptuous of the machine age, saturated with Bach and Palestrina. He delved into riddle canons and such musical-mathematical pastimes, and was so self-critical a workman that many compositions, including symphonies and string quartets, did not seem to him to be worth mentioning even to his friends. A great quantity of work was discovered after his death. Wise men of music see his star ascending.

His opera bored the public of his time. It was criticised as much too long, but he would not consent to leave out so much as a grace-note.

The Brahms third symphony has not been played here by the Boston orchestra in many years.

Brahms finished it in 1883 when he was 50. It was performed first in Vienna, Dec. 2 of that year, at a Philharmonic concert. The audience received the symphony with great enthusiasm, although it is reported that members of the opposing musical party—the Wagner-Bruckner partisans—made a display against it.

Financial success likewise attended this symphony. The copyright sold for about $9000, and royalties on performances were paid to Brahms.

The significance-seekers have had a pleasant time with this symphony. Hero and Leander have been discovered in it, by Joachim, and so has Iago, and a certain statue of Germania. Another guess, by Clara Schumann, was that it was a "Forest Idyl." This seems to give anybody the privilege of finding anything he wants in it.

The first movement is marked allegro con brio, in F major. After broad opening chords, the main theme moves downward in the strings, while a contrasting figure rises in the woodwinds. Just before announcing the second theme, Brahms writes a phrase reminiscent of the Venusberg scene in "Tannhauser." This has led to still another guess by the learned—that the phrase is a tribute to Wagner, whose death occurred while this symphony was being composed.

The second theme is more gentle, in bassoon and clarinet, and the movement passes through a characteristically splendid Brahmian development to a characteristically powerful close.

The second movement is andante, in C major, with a hymn-like utterance by the woodwind as its main theme. Subtle contrasts of rhythm and skillful development of the main theme are noted.

In C minor, poco allegretto, the third movement opens with a song by the 'cellos, then by the violins, later by wood wind. There is interesting work, also, for the horn, a favorite instrument with Brahms and one for which he wrote with great felicity.

Vigor and orchestral color characterize the last movement, in F minor. Here the master produces his most magnificent effects and brings his work to a solemn close.

Of the Wagnerian music to be played, the "Waldweben," or "Forest Murmurs," is a concert piece arranged by Wagner from the second act of "Siegfried." It projects the mood dominating the last scene of the act. Siegfried, having slain the dragon Fafner, is lying in the woods listening to the familiar voices of the forest. A little bird begins to tell him things, among them that the warrior maiden Brunnhilde is lying asleep on a rocky crag, protected by a circle of fire, and that he, Siegfred, will penetrate the fire and win Brunnhilde as his bride.

In the "Tannhauser" overture, as Wagner explained, "the orchestra leads before us the Pilgrims' Chant alone; it nears, increases to a mighty outpour, passes away. Eventide; last echo of the chant. As night comes, magic sights and sounds appear, a rosy mist floats up, exultant shouts strike the ears, the whirlings of a voluptuous dance are seen." And so on to salvation and to the union of soul and senses, God and nature, "in the atoning kiss of hallowed Love."

Of the overture to "Lohengrin," Wagner wrote: "The miraculous delivery of the Holy Grail, escorted by an angelic host, and the handing of it over into the custody of highly favored men, was selected by the author of 'Lohengrin,' a knight of the Grail, for the introduction of his drama, as the subject to be musically portrayed; just as here, for the sake of explanation, he may be permitted to bring it forward for the mental receptive power of the listeners."

G. Y. L.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

Publishers Offer Prizes for Letters

A mass of new material, important as musical history and as personal revelation, will be published for the first time on February 1st in the book, "Beloved Friends": The Story of Tchaikowsky and Nadejda von Meck, by Catherine Drinker Bowen and Barbara von Meck. The strange romance between the Russian composer and his wealthy patroness with whom he corresponded passionately for fourteen years but whom he never met is a puzzling and fascinating tale.

The publishers of "Beloved Friend" are sponsoring a contest for the best letters of not more than 300 words on any one of the following three questions:

What is the psychological explanation of Mme. von Meck's abrupt ending of her romantic relations with Tchaikowsky, and is there any clue to her decision in the revelations given as to her personality?

Was Mme. von Meck's infatuation solely with Tchaikowsky's music, as she thought, or was she really in love with him, in spite of the fact that she was careful never to speak to him or meet him?

Did Mme. von Meck's patronage of Tchaikowsky have, on the whole, a beneficial or a harmful effect upon the quality of his music?

All entries must be submitted by April 15 1937, and should be addressed to Contest Department, Random House, Inc., 20 East 57th Street, New York, N. Y. The committee of judges consists of four distinguished figures in the musical world—Jascha Heifetz, John Barbirolli Lawrence Gilman and Deems Taylor, and Robert K. Haas, vicepresident of Random House.

The first prize for the best letter on any of the three subjects will be a Steinway grand piano. The second prize will be the recordings of Tchaikowsky's Fourth Symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, his Fifth Symphony under the direction of Leopold Stokowski, his Sixth "Pathetique" Symphony under the baton of Eugene Ormandy, the "Andante Cantabile" played by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, and the "Nutcracker Suite" played by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski. The third prize will be the recordings of the Tchaikowsky Violin Concerto played by Mischa Elman and of the Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor with Arthur Rubinstein as soloist and John Barbirolli as conductor.

77

HEIFETZ IS THE HERO AT SYMPHONY

Some Concert Numbers Not Especially Thrilling

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Wise Mr. Mitropoulos in his recent appearance here was both conductor and soloist, and so earned all the applause. Dr. Koussevitzky, who returned to the Symphony Concerts yesterday afternoon, shares this particular pair of performances with Jascha Heifetz, and yesterday's audience, as audiences will, elected to make the violinist the hero of the occasion.

PROGRAMME'S POOR START

As a matter of fact, Dr. Koussevitzky's part of the concert got off to a poor start. In place of the originally announced excerpt from Taneiev's "Orestes," which would have had at least the interest of novelty, there came as opening number Liadov's Symphonic Picture, "From the Apocalypse," Lisztian grandiosity, 1913 model. And the piece, hollow and trumpery, fell as flat as it deserved to fall, although the performance was one of tonal magnificence.

To Liadov succeeded Brahms, of the Third Symphony, of late played here less than the other three. Passionate Brahmsites have placed this symphony above its companions, above all other symphonies, even above all other music. But the years are the best critics and they express their verdict, when it is ready for delivery, through audiences. That of yesterday did not particularly warm to this F major Symphony, nor, in spite of a fine performance, did it seem for the moment as though there were any special reason why it should.

Symphony Analyzed

This symphony may be, as Mr. Burk's programme notes argued, more truly Brahmsian than its predecessors, but just the same it is fuller of other men's thematic ideas. Quotations, more or less literal, abound: Schumann and Wagner in the first movement, Herold in the second, Schumann again in the third, and Beethoven in the fourth.

And again to interpret the audience's relative coolness to the usually all-potent combination of Dr. Koussevitzky and Brahms, in the Finle of this symphony storm and stress are followed by quiet and resignation. And for a final thought: the keynote of this symphony is mellowness, a quality which fits not at all our own time-spirit. Actually we have more in common with the Schumann of a week ago than with the Brahms of yesterday.

For his piece Mr. Heifetz chose the Concerto of Mendelssohn. His fluent, polished, scintillant, tonally beautiful and letter-perfect performance of a work that makes relatively slight emotional and musical demands was a foregone conclusion. The extreme cordiality with which he was received has already been indicated.

From Mendelssohn to Strauss. The end came in the "Dance of the Seven Veils," from the latter's "Salome," one of the less successful portions of a remarkable opera that Boston has little likelihood of knowing in the only way it should be known—in the theatre. Again a brilliant performance

---

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

JAN 27 1937

Mr. and Mrs. Elisha C. Mowry entertained at dinner last evening for Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Putnam C. Aldrich. Miss Peggy G. Mowry, returned from Wellesley College to attend the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Metropolitan Theatre.

78

Keith Me

MUSIC

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 14th regular concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Jascha Heifetz, violinist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

"From the Apocalypse," Symphonic Picture .... Liadov
Symphony in F major Op. 90 ...... Brahms
Concerto for Violin in E minor Op. 64 .... Mendelssohn
Dance of the Seven Veils from "Salome" .... Strauss

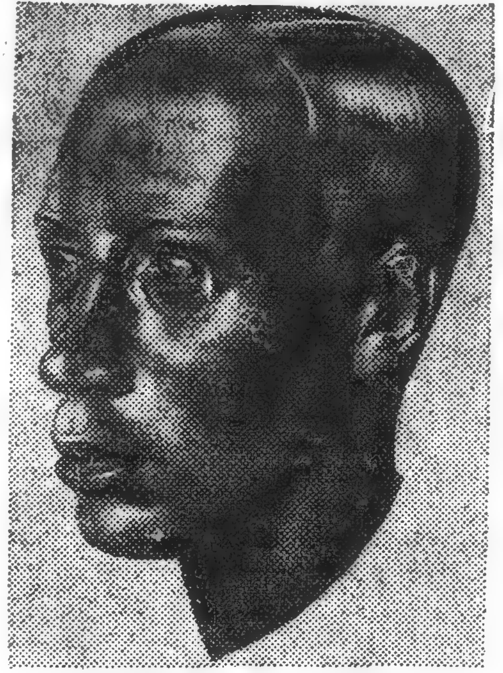
Some 200 people were disappointed in the effort to obtain "rush" seats for yesterday's concert, and presumably the reason for this was the presence of Jascha Heifetz as soloist. He is one of the great violinists, with that effortlessness which the term implies. He has, as well, the finest purity of tone and phrasing so that perfection is the one word that comes to mind when he plays. No doubt there were many who would have preferred to hear him in some other concerto than the Mendelssohn. In recitals, with piano accompaniment, the work is certainly hackneyed; but with the orchestra it becomes different music altogether. Moreover, although it was played here last season with Mr. Milstein as soloist, it has actually been seldom given at the Boston Symphony concerts.

Yesterday Mr. Heifetz played in capital form. In the finale he played much too fast, but then that is always done nowadays in that particular movement. It is said that Mendelssohn as a conductor liked to take music faster than was customary; but he might not have been reconciled to the breathless pace which was adopted yesterday. Even Mr. Heifetz's technique and intonation could not let us hear the music at that speed. The andante, on the other hand, was interpreted with just the right warmth and lyric feeling and never fell from that into the least hint of sentimentality. Dr. Koussevitzky, returning from his holiday, led the orchestra in perfect sympathy with the soloist.

Liadov's "From the Apocalypse" is honest program music at its best. He set out to paint a tone picture of a mystical state of feeling as set forth in the Book of Revelation. The music is not literally descriptive in the manner of some of Strauss or of the 18th century attempts in this genre. Just as the Book of Revelation is so different from the rest of the New Testament and has affinity with 17th century and later mystical literature in which there has been so much interest in our time, so too Liadov's music looks forward. For example, it is surprisingly unlike the descriptive music of a Rimsky-Korsakov. "From the Apocalypse" is a work of singular fascination and power. If Liadov must be considered a minor composer, his music has a great deal to say to an audience of today.

There are some who maintain that the Third is the greatest of Brahms's Symphonies. Philip Hale, who was not noted for a whole-hearted admiration of Brahms, apparently so considered it. Certainly the first movement is one of the finest openings to a symphony that Brahms ever conceived. The andante has always seemed to us to have a Protestant-church-like character in the main theme that is not a happy invention for a symphony. Sir Donald Tovey calls that movement pastoral, but surely it is music of the indoors? The Symphony received a fine performance, although the andante seemed unusually deliberate. Strauss's exotic music from "Salome" brought the concert to a brilliant end.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Prokofieff will be the soloist in his Third Piano Concerto. Dr. Koussevitzky will also conduct other works of Prokofieff and Mozart's "Prague" Symphony.



SERGE PROKOFIEV

Pianist-Composer at the Symphony Concerts Next Friday Afternoon and Saturday Evening

---

Koussevitzky and Heifetz Share Afternoon at Symphony Hall

Notable Combination Contribute to Delights of Memorable Occasion

By Redfern Mason

When Serge Koussevitzky had responded to the welcome of the audience, he turned to the orchestra, contemplated the players for a moment, and his attitude seemed to say: "Gentlemen, let us make some of the most beautiful music in the world." And we of the audience felt that he also appealed to us, as attentive listeners, to co-operate in the aesthetic conspiracy.

Straightway the instruments began to play the symphonic tone poem of Liadov, "From the Apocalypse." It is a Russian interpretation of the vision of St. John when, on the island of Patmos, he had the heart-shaking vision which is recorded in the Book of Revelations.

You could hear the rumble of the thunder and the roar of the symbolic lions; there were brazen splendors; there was cherubic hymning. Liadov's interpretation is full of monastic reminiscences; his music proves once more that, when we picture Heaven, we always fall back on what we learned in childhood and, in the Russian's case, the chanting of monks and the seraphic voices of nuns is never far off.

The orchestra lent itself gloriously to the director's fancy and the effect produced on the hearer was akin to what the eyes experience in looking at Albert Durer's "Sanctus" in his "Great Passion." Yet, inspiring music though Liadov has written, it pales before the utterances of Bach in the "Sanctus" of the B minor Mass. Nevertheless, it is a noble page of music and Koussevitzky and his aides clothed it with glowing colors.

After this music of the hereafter we had the Symphony in F of Brahms, his "Eroica," as Hans Richter called it, and I could not help thinking that, in view of its storm and stress, it might with greater propriety have preceded the work of Liadov rather than followed it. For the suffering, the ache and the longing of Brahms might naturally lead to such a musical sublimation as the Slav has portrayed in his "Apocalypse."

It was a noble reading of Brahms' score that Koussevitzky gave us, and the faint suspicion I had that the director would veil it in shades of Russian mysticism was not realized. He gave us an inspiring, but indubitably orthodox performance, one that throbbed with Germanic earnestness. In the opening Allegro it pierced depths of gloom and rose to heights of grandeur, a veritable series of confessions of depression and elation. The confidences between clarinets and strings in the slow movement, the gentle suspiration of the violins in that idyllic Allegretto, and the dramatic finale, likened by Joachim, without contradiction from the composer, to the tale of Hero and Leander, were beautifully done.

And then a soloist, the violinist, Jascha Heifetz, well known to Boston Symphony audiences. He and the orchestra gave us the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, one of the most melodious and grateful of all concertos. Heifetz has emerged from the wistful spirituality of his earlier days and has put on the raiment of a fine masculinity. His violin made a rapturous discourse, to which the orchestra supplied an atmosphere of radiant and interpretative tone.

Heifetz does not insist on too masterful a domination of the tonal atmosphere; he vies with his fellow musicians; he is a leader among musical partners, all of whom have something important to say. Virtuosity he has, but he does not obtrude it; he plays like a master, but a master among colleagues to whom he is glad to defer. He successfully resists the temptation to make the Mendelssohn too feminine. It was a notable performance for soloist, orchestra and director.

The concert concluded with the frank and fascinating sensualism of the "Dance of the Seven Veils" from the "Salome" of Richard Strauss, in which the oriental seductiveness of the score was brought out bewitchingly. Here is a canvas on which the composer has painted a picture as "dangerous and dallying" as the poem which inspired it. It was done with a subtle bizarrerie and sent the audience home with a thrill that they will not soon forget.

Socialites Throng

Koussevitzky and Heifetz Win Overwhelming Applause

By ELEANOR FREEMAN

THE THRONGS OF socialites who flock to Symphony Hall every Friday afternoon needed no encouragement to attend yesterday's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Special attractions at the weekly program were the return to Boston of the orchestra's beloved conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky following a fortnight's trip South.... and the appearance of Jascha Heifetz, world-renowned violinist, as soloist. The acclaim which greeted Dr. Koussevitzky's entrance to the packed auditorium....and the overwhelming applause which Heifetz received following Mendelssohn's "Concerto for Violin in E minor"....was really thrilling.

Yesterday's concert was definitely one of the major musical attractions of the year so far. Never have we seen such a distinguished and appreciative gathering! Though most of the grand ladies are still wearing costumes of the somber, winter type . . . . black or brown for colors, and a predominance of rich furs, we noticed several touches of the spring season, now only two months away.

Mrs. Ronald Lyman had pinned a couple of huge gardenias on her smart black costume . . . . powder blue ostrich tips curling around her black hat. Also in black . . . . with a gardenia pinned to her Persian lamb collar was Mrs. Louis Agassiz Shaw. Mrs. William Dexter and Mrs. S. Eliot Guild, Jr., were anxious to be on time, and hurried in together . . . . both wearing green costumes trimmed with black fur, Mrs. Guild's being of a vivid green shade. In a distinguished threesome were Mrs. Robert Stevenson, her niece, Mrs. Malcolm Bradlee and Mrs. Joshua Holden, whose taupe coat had a fluffy fox collar.

Wearing sables with her black caracul coat was Mrs. Philip Stockton, and others we noted were Mrs. George Putnam, Mrs. Roger B. Merriman, who topped her blue ensemble with a swagger gray caracul coat, Mrs. Harrison Reynolds with Mrs. Henry K. White, Mrs. Barrett Wendell, Mrs. James Dean, Mrs. Wallace Goodrich, Mrs. Robert T. Paine, Mrs. Francis G. Shaw, and Mrs. Richard Saltonstall who brought her young daughter, Polly.

Lucile Swift had knotted a gay printed scarf at the neck of her blue frock to match the attractive band on her chic turban. Another who chose this fashionable type of hat was Mrs. Edwin H. B. Pratt. Hers was of fuchsia and purple contrasting with her brown fur wrap. Kitty Talbot's antelope toque was of beet red matching the frock beneath her brown fur coat.

Smart costumes also were those of Mrs. Lawrence Coolidge . . . . who topped her mink coat with a brown velvet turban . . . . and Mrs. William C. Cox . . . . combining bright green with her mink wrap...The latter's mother, Mrs. Hugh Bancroft was another with Mrs. Howard Turner, Mrs. Philip Wrenn, Jr., Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Ben Ames Williams and Mrs. Benjamin A. G. Thorndike.

Symphony Hall for Brilliant Concert Series

Serge Prokofieff, Russian composer and pianist, who will be the soloist when the Boston Symphony Orchestra offers his Third Concerto at Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening this week.

77

HEIFETZ IS THE HERO AT SYMPHONY

Post Jan. 30/37

Some Concert Numbers Not Especially Thrilling

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Wise Mr. Mitropoulos in his recent appearance here was both conductor and soloist, and so earned all the applause. Dr. Koussevitzky, who returned to the Symphony Concerts yesterday afternoon, shares this particular pair of performances with Jascha Heifetz, and yesterday's audience, as audiences will, elected to make the violinist the hero of the occasion.

PROGRAMME'S POOR START

As a matter of fact, Dr. Koussevitzky's part of the concert got off to a poor start. In place of the originally announced excerpt from Taneiev's "Orestes," which would have had at least the interest of novelty, there came as opening number Liadov's Symphonic Picture, "From the Apocalypse," Lisztian grandiosity, 1913 model. And the piece, hollow and trumpery, fell as flat as it deserved to fall, although the performance was one of tonal magnificence.

To Liadov succeeded Brahms, of the Third Symphony, of late played here less than the other three. Passionate Brahmsites have placed this symphony above its companions, above all other symphonies, even above all other music. But the years are the best critics and they express their verdict, when it is ready for delivery, through audiences. That of yesterday did not particularly warm to this F major Symphony, nor, in spite of a fine performance, did it seem for the moment as though there were any special reason why it should.

Symphony Analyzed

This symphony may be, as Mr. Burk's programme notes argued, more truly Brahmsian than its predecessors, but just the same it is fuller of other men's thematic ideas. Quotations, more or less literal, abound: Schumann and Wagner in the first movement, Herold in the second, Schumann again in the third, and Beethoven in the fourth.

And again to interpret the audience's relative coolness to the usually all-potent combination of Dr. Koussevitzky and Brahms, in the Finle of this symphony storm and stress are followed by quiet and resignation. And for a final thought: the keynote of this symphony is mellowness, a quality which fits not at all our own time-spirit. Actually we have more in common with the Schumann of a week ago than with the Brahms of yesterday.

For his piece Mr. Heifetz chose the Concerto of Mendelssohn. His fluent, polished, scintillant, tonally beautiful and letter-perfect performance of a work that makes relatively slight emotional and musical demands was a foregone conclusion. The extreme cordiality with which he was received has already been indicated.

From Mendelssohn to Strauss. The end came in the "Dance of the Seven Veils," from the latter's "Salome," one of the less successful portions of a remarkable opera that Boston has little likelihood of knowing in the only way it should be known—in the theatre. Again a brilliant performance

---

Herald 1/30/37 78

Keith Me

MUSIC

SYMPHONY CONCERT

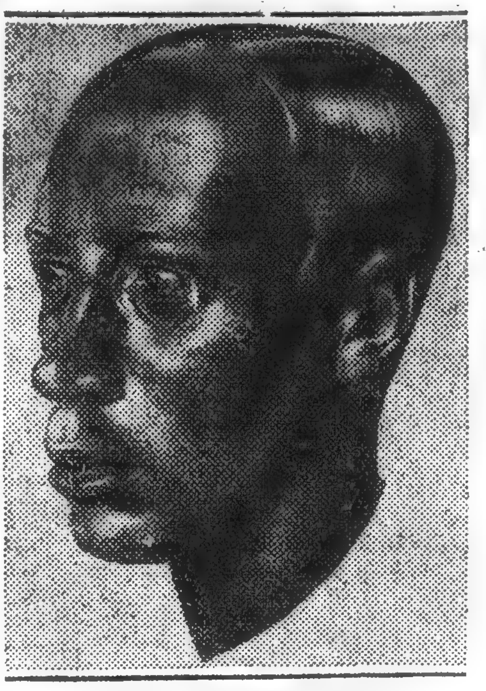
By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 14th regular concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Jascha Heifetz, violinist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

"From the Apocalypse," Symphonic Picture .... Liadov
Symphony in F major Op. 90 ...... Brahms
Concerto for Violin in E minor Op. 64 Mendelssohn
Dance of the Seven Veils from "Salome" Strauss

Some 200 people were disappointed in the effort to obtain "rush" seats for yesterday's concert, and presumably the reason for this was the presence of Jascha Heifetz as soloist. He is one of the great violinists, with that effortlessness which the term implies. He has, as well, the finest purity of tone and phrasing so that perfection is the one word that comes to mind when he plays. No doubt there were many who would have preferred to hear him in some other concerto than the Mendelssohn. In recitals, with piano accompaniment, the work is certainly hackneyed; but with the orchestra it becomes different music altogether. Moreover, although it was played here last season with Mr. Milstein as soloist, it has actually been seldom given at the Boston Symphony concerts.

Yesterday Mr. Heifetz played in capital form. In the finale he played much too fast, but then that is always done nowadays in that particular movement. It is said that Mendelssohn as a conductor liked to take music faster than was customary; but he might not have been reconciled to the breathless pace which was adopted yesterday. Even Mr. Heifetz's technique and intonation could not let us hear the music at that speed. The andante, on the other hand, was interpreted with just the right warmth and lyric feeling and never fell from that into the least hint of sentimentality. Dr. Koussevitzky, returning from his holiday, led the orchestra in perfect sympathy with the soloist.



SERGE PROKOFIEV
Pianist-Composer at the Symphony Concerts Next Friday Afternoon and Saturday Evening

Liadov's "From the Apocalypse" is honest program music at its best. He set out to paint a tone picture of a mystical state of feeling as set forth in the Book of Revelation. The music is not literally descriptive in the manner of some of Strauss or of the 18th century attempts in this genre. Just as the Book of Revelation is so different from the rest of the New Testament and has affinity with 17th century and later mystical literature in which there has been so much interest in our time, so too Liadov's music looks forward. For example, it is surprisingly unlike the descriptive music of a Rimsky-Korsakov. "From the Apocalypse" is a work of singular fascination and power. If Liadov must be considered a minor composer, his music has a great deal to say to an audience of today.

There are some who maintain that the Third is the greatest of Brahms's Symphonies. Philip Hale, who was not noted for a whole-hearted admiration of Brahms, apparently so considered it. Certainly the first movement is one of the finest openings to a symphony that Brahms ever conceived. The andante has always seemed to us to have a Protestant-church-like character in the main theme that is not a happy invention for a symphony. Sir Donald Tovey calls that movement pastoral, but surely it is music of the indoors? The Symphony received a fine performance, although the andante seemed unusually deliberate. Strauss's exotic music from "Salome" brought the concert to a brilliant end.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Prokofieff will be the soloist in his Third Piano Concerto. Dr. Koussevitzky will also conduct other works of Prokofieff and Mozart's "Prague" Symphony.

Koussevitzky and Heifetz Share Afternoon at Symphony Hall

Jan. 30/37

Notable Combination Contribute to Delights of Memorable Occasion

By Redfern Mason

When Serge Koussevitzky had responded to the welcome of the audience, he turned to the orchestra, contemplated the players for a moment, and his attitude seemed to say: "Gentlemen, let us make some of the most beautiful music in the world." And we of the audience felt that he also appealed to us, as attentive listeners, to co-operate in the aesthetic conspiracy.

Straightway the instruments began to play the symphonic tone poem of Liadov, "From the Apocalypse." It is a Russian interpretation of the vision of St. John when, on the island of Patmos, he had the heart-shaking vision which is recorded in the Book of Revelations.

You could hear the rumble of the thunder and the roar of the symbolic lions; there were brazen splendors; there was cherubic hymning. Liadov's interpretation is full of monastic reminiscences; his music proves once more that, when we picture Heaven, we always fall back on what we learned in childhood and, in the Russian's case, the chanting of monks and the seraphic voices of nuns is never far off.

The orchestra lent itself gloriously to the director's fancy and the effect produced on the hearer was akin to what the eyes experience in looking at Albert Durer's "Sanctus" in his "Great Passion." Yet, inspiring music though Liadov has written, it pales before the utterances of Bach in the "Sanctus" of the B minor Mass. Nevertheless, it is a noble page of music and Koussevitzky and his aides clothed it with glowing colors.

After this music of the hereafter we had the Symphony in F of Brahms, his "Eroica," as Hans Richter called it, and I could not help thinking that, in view of its storm and stress, it might with greater propriety have preceded the work of Liadov rather than followed it. For the suffering, the ache and the longing of Brahms might naturally lead to such a musical sublimation as the Slav has portrayed in his "Apocalypse."

It was a noble reading of Brahms' score that Koussevitzky gave us, and the faint suspicion I had that the director would veil it in shades of Russian mysticism was not realized. He gave us an inspiring, but indubitably orthodox performance, one that throbbed with Germanic earnestness. In the opening Allegro it pierced depths of gloom and rose to heights of grandeur, a veritable series of confessions of depression and elation. The confidences between clarinets and strings in the slow movement, the gentle suspiration of the violins in that idyllic Allegretto, and the dramatic finale, likened by Joachim, without contradiction from the composer, to the tale of Hero and Leander, were beautifully done.

And then a soloist, the violinist, Jascha Heifetz, well known to Boston Symphony audiences. He and the orchestra gave us the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, one of the most melodious and grateful of all concertos. Heifetz has emerged from the wistful spirituality of his earlier days and has put on the raiment of a fine masculinity. His violin made a rapturous discourse, to which the orchestra supplied an atmosphere of radiant and interpretative tone.

Heifetz does not insist on too masterful a domination of the tonal atmosphere; he vies with his fellow musicians; he is a leader among musical partners, all of whom have something important to say. Virtuosity he has, but he does not obtrude it; he plays like a master, but a master among colleagues to whom he is glad to defer. He successfully resists the temptation to make the Mendelssohn too feminine. It was a notable performance for soloist, orchestra and director.

The concert concluded with the frank and fascinating sensualism of the "Dance of the Seven Veils" from the "Salome" of Richard Strauss, in which the oriental seductiveness of the score was brought out bewitchingly. Here is a canvas on which the composer has painted a picture as "dangerous and dallying" as the poem which inspired it. It was done with a subtle bizarrerie and sent the audience home with a thrill that they will not soon forget.

Socialites Throng

Koussevitzky and Heifetz Win Overwhelming Applause

By ELEANOR FREEMAN

THE THRONGS OF socialites who flock to Symphony Hall every Friday afternoon needed no encouragement to attend yesterday's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Special attractions at the weekly program were the return to Boston of the orchestra's beloved conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky following a fortnight's trip South.... and the appearance of Jascha Heifetz, world-renowned violinist, as soloist. The acclaim which greeted Dr. Koussevitzky's entrance to the packed auditorium....and the overwhelming applause which Heifetz received following Mendelssohn's "Concerto for Violin in E minor"....was really thrilling.

Yesterday's concert was definitely one of the major musical attractions of the year so far. Never have we seen such a distinguished and appreciative gathering! Though most of the grand ladies are still wearing costumes of the somber, winter type . . . . black or brown for colors, and a predominance of rich furs, we noticed several touches of the spring season, now only two months away.

Mrs. Ronald Lyman had pinned a couple of huge gardenias on her smart black costume . . . . powder blue ostrich tips curling around her black hat. Also in black . . . . with a gardenia pinned to her Persian lamb collar was Mrs. Louis Agassiz Shaw. Mrs. William Dexter and Mrs. S. Eliot Guild, Jr., were anxious to be on time, and hurried in together . . . . both wearing green costumes trimmed with black fur, Mrs. Guild's being of a vivid green shade. In a distinguished threesome were Mrs. Robert Stevenson, her niece, Mrs. Malcolm Bradlee and Mrs. Joshua Holden, whose taupe coat had a fluffy fox collar.

Wearing sables with her black caracul coat was Mrs. Philip Stockton, and others we noted were Mrs. George Putnam, Mrs. Roger B. Merriman, who topped her blue ensemble with a swagger gray caracul coat, Mrs. Harrison Reynolds with Mrs. Henry K. White, Mrs. Barrett Wendell, Mrs. James Dean, Mrs. Wallace Goodrich, Mrs. Robert T. Paine, Mrs. Francis G. Shaw, and Mrs. Richard Saltonstall who brought her young daughter, Polly.

Lucile Swift had knotted a gay printed scarf at the neck of her blue frock to match the attractive band on her chic turban. Another who chose this fashionable type of hat was Mrs. Edwin H. B. Pratt. Hers was of fuchsia and purple contrasting with her brown fur wrap. Kitty Talbot's antelope toque was of beet red matching the frock beneath her brown fur coat.

Smart costumes also were those of Mrs. Lawrence Coolidge . . . . who topped her mink coat with a brown velvet turban . . . . and Mrs. William C. Cox . . . . combining bright green with her mink wrap . . . The latter's mother, Mrs. Hugh Bancroft, was another with Mrs. Howard Turner, Mrs. Philip Wrenn, Jr., Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Ben Ames Williams and Mrs. Benjamin A. G. Thorndike.

Symphony Hall for Brilliant Concert Series

Serge Prokofieff, Russian composer and pianist, who will be the soloist when the Boston Symphony Orchestra offers his Third Concerto at Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening this week.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

JAN 27 1937

Mr. and Mrs. Elisha C. Mowry entertained at dinner last evening for Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Putnam C. Aldrich. Miss Peggy G. Mowry, returned from Wellesley College to attend the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Metropolitan Theatre.

78

182

Welcome for Koussevitzky

Am. Jan. 30/37

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

THE AUDIENCES that gathered in Symphony Hall for the Boston Symphony concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening evidenced the keenest enthusiasm at Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's return to conduct the orchestra after an absence of two weeks.

The program opened with an intensely dramatic performance of the Symphonic Picture from Liadov's "The Apocalypse." The exceptional talents of this Russian composer, perhaps never resulted in descriptive musical composition of a more vivid character than in his portrayal of the text from the Revelation of St. John, "And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven . . . and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire . . . And he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth, and cried with a loud voice, and when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices."

The orchestration is magnificent—especially striking and significant the use of the brass.

* * *

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY first announced the work to Boston in 1925, and performed it again in 1927. On this occasion the conductor's reading was of noble proportions.

If further proof of Dr. Koussevitzky's eclectism were necessary, the enlightened interpretation brought to the performance of the Brahms Third Symphony, which followed, would be sufficient for all time.

The orchestra responded with the utmost sensitiveness and beauty of tone throughout both.

The veiled tone of Brahms' Third Symphony sets it apart from any other of his works. Brahms the "Terrible" the "Austere" does not enter here. Neither is the "cerebral sensuousness" of which Philip Hale spoke the keynote.

A meditative joyousness, and quiet serenity pervade the whole. The various movements lack contrast, to be sure, but one feels finallly that nothing is lost because of it. At fifty Brahms was less stern in his philosophy, more sure in his faith.

* * *

FOLLOWING the intermission Jascha Heifetz appeared to join the orchestra in a performance of Mendelssohn's Concerto for Violin in E minor, Op. 64, which must have been rare in the history of the work.

The translucency of Mr. Heifetz's playing in the Andante, will be remembered through many other performances of the work. The quiet, unforced, yet tenuous tenderness of its performance was such as to make us believe this movement to be the most beautiful of all Mendelssohn's writings.

Here, as throughout, beauty of tone and exquisiteness of phrasing were signal characteristics of the performance, while the briliancy of the cadenza passages in the first movement, the fleetness and accuracy of the last, evidenced singular virtuosity.

The orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, provided accompaniment of the utmost sensitiveness. The balance between the solo instrument and orchestra, appearing to us quite perfect throughout.

* * *

STRAUSS' Dance of the Seven Veils, from the opera, "Salome," concluded the program, providing color if not climax.

As Dr. Koussevitzky poured all the warmth of his imagination into this work, one could not be but conscious of the fact that musically it failed both the orchestra and him.

Hardly one of Strauss' most vital works, it proved inadequate both as a conclusion to an exceptional program and as a vehicle for the conductor's mood of inspiration.

Globe Jan. 30/37

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Symphony concert yesterday afternoon brought the return from vacation of Dr Serge Koussevitzky, and the presence of the fabulous Jascha Heifetz as soloist in the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto. Dr Koussevitzky, who appeared to have benefitted by his customary respite of a fortnight, had selected one of his typically unconventional programs, which began with a little-known piece by Liadov, the symphonic picture, Op 66, "From the Apocalypse." Though the list contained no music literally new here, it was arranged with that keen sense of contrast which is among the conductor's most viable traits. The Third Symphony of Brahms was played by this orchestra for the first time in more than three years, rather too long a silence for this manifestation of Autumnal beauty. The afternoon ended with the "Dance of the Seven Veils" from the opera "Salome," by Richard Strauss.

Time was when Jascha Heifetz gave the impression of technical perfection unwarmed by the sun of emotion. Those days are past, and though he has retained every iota of the phenomenal dexterity of hand which entitles him to the adjective "fabulous," Mr Heifetz now plays with irresistible fire.

The word "irresistible" is deliberate, because the Mendelssohn Concerto is not an indispensable item of the violinist's repertory. While it offers gracious melody and the facture of a refined and skillful musician, as indeed the elegant Felix was, this work has no claim to Olympian immortality. The absolute accuracy of Mr Heifetz, his corruscating tone, irreproachable style did, however, lend a magnetism the Concerto does not really possess. The soloist was excellently accompanied, and frenetically applauded.

St John's magnificent vision of Revelation inspired Liadov to write a tonal depiction of the angel who descended upon feet of fire and spake as with a lion's voice. This would have been a formidable, perhaps vain, task for a greater artist than Liadov, who strove to utter his conception by sonorous chords from the brass, portentous phrases for strings, and mighty strokes upon the kettledrums. But the angel seemed to have descended not from Heaven but from Walhalla, and his proclamation was echoed by Nibelungen thunders.

A clear, polished reading of Brahms' Symphony testified to the serenity, the poise which have increased in Dr Koussevitzky's conducting the past several years. One could regard the Symphony from two points of view, of which one would emphasize the power of first and last movements; the other would dwell upon the suggestion of Autumnal repose from a composer whose middle years had inevitably tempered his thought by depth, touched his expression with restraint. The latter is perhaps the more valid way of thinking, and Dr Koussevitzky's interpretation seems now cast in that vein.

Salome's orgiastic writhings imposed a mood far different from that which governed most of the afternoon. Yet once the inexorable rhythm of Strauss had been established, there was no questioning the uncanny illusion with which he depicted the wanton dance before feverish Herod, under a blood red moon.

Serge Prokofieff will be soloist next week in his own Third Piano Concerto. Two other of his compositions will be played, the "Scythian Suite" and excerpts from "The Love of Three Oranges." The "Prague" Symphony of Mozart will begin the concerts. C. W. D.

CAPACITY SYMPHONY AUDIENCE GIVES OVATION TO KOUSSEVITZKY

Globe Jan. 30/37

Cambridge Social Dramatic Club Plans Second Play —Mr and Mrs Reginald Foster to Sail on Scythia

A concert long to be remembered, even in this year of memorable concerts, was the 14th Friday afternoon symphony of this season, conducted yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall by Koussevitzky, with Jascha Heifetz as soloist. The usual distinguished audience filled every seat and since yesterday's concert marked Dr Koussevitzky's return to Boston after a tour of several weeks, an ovation greeted his appearance at the left stage entrance, accompanied him across to the conductor's stand, and kept him facing the packed house for several minutes before he lifted his baton for the opening notes of Liadov's magnificent symphonic picture, "From the Apocalypse."

In their accustomed places in the great hall as the Liadov became Brahms, Brahms a Mendelssohn unforgetably illumined by Mr Heifetz, and finally Strauss and the strange exultant music of the Dance of the Seven Veils from the opera "Salome," were Mrs George Putnam, a flat collar of black Persian on her flaring black wool coat; Mrs Philip Stockton, a deep red dress under her mink coat; Mrs Ronald T. Lyman, blue feathers curling over the brim of her black hat above a severe black coat; Rev William F. A. Stride, with one slim fair-haired young daughter, Mrs Stride with the other, all four joining the children's grandmother, Mrs A. Wilder Pollard, after the concert, Mrs Stride in simple good looking black; Miss Nancy Cochrane and her cousin, Miss Cynthia Forbes, who have not missed a concert of their debutante season; Mrs Neal Rantoul and her daughter, Mrs Richard King Thorndike Jr, the former Lucy Saltonstall Rantoul, wearing a little square brown pillbox with her mink coat; Mrs Augustus Rantoul, a dark red dress under her mink coat, to match her brimmed dark red hat, strolling at intermission with Miss Josephine Murray, whose bright yellow sweater accented a coat and skirt of Bermuda green tweeds. Also attending were Mrs John Bottomley and Miss Ellen Bottomley, the latter wearing a round collar of exquisite creamy lace on her plain black dress; Miss Eleanor Williams and Mrs Moses Williams Jr, the former Anstiss Boyden, in severe chic black; Miss Jane Megrew hurrying in from a campaign luncheon; Miss Sylvia Benson, Miss Phyllis Motley and Miss Rebecca Ames, Miss Amy Lang, a scarf of Persian print on her black dress, red streamers on her small black hat; Miss Ernestine Hills, wearing a little Scotch cap above a Scotch plaid skirt and dark sweater; Mrs Robert Steinert, wearing a fascinating shah's turban of the new print with her mink coat; Mrs W. Davies Sohier Jr in green tweeds.

Also part of that great throng: Miss Kate-Alden Gandy, over from Radcliffe, her fair head bare above a furred green coat; Mrs Nicholas Danforth (Nancy Wellington), in a trousseau dress of smart greige wool, embroidered with clusters of fringe, strolling with Miss Constance Matless; Mrs William W. Dunnell (Ellen Frothingham), Mrs Howard Slayman (Margaret Dellinger Barney), a touch of green at the throat of her black dress; Miss Olga Monks and Mrs Nelson Lee, both in slim tailored black; Mrs L. Cabot Briggs, a narrow collar of gray velvet relieving her black frock, her oxford gray hat banded in black; Mrs Charles F. Ayer, her small black pillbox tasseled above a suave coat Chinese lamb; Miss Kitty Talbot, earing an Aiken suit of red suede der her brown furs, a matching sored hat of the suede tipped over r blonde hair; Miss Dorothy Macusland, Mrs Eliot Wadsworth, Mrs rthur Bell, in becoming sherry rown; Mrs George Lewis, wrapped mink; Mrs Francis Bird, wearing silver fox-trimmed jacket of black aracul with her dark suit; Miss eggy Capper, Mrs John Lavalle, in coat of coppery nutria and twisted rown turban; Mrs S. Eliot Guild, rs Robert H. Stevenson, Mrs Amor ollingsworth Jr, Miss Frances owell, wearing a Parisian Homburg of shiny brown satin with her bright red dress; Miss Olivia Osborne, Mr and Mrs Hobart Spalding, Miss Mary Pentecost and Miss Constance Turner, Miss Cornelia Pentecost, the latter immeasurably chic in forest green, white fressia pinned to her purple tweeds; Mrs Hugh Bancroft and Mrs William Cox, Mrs Franklin W. Hobbs and Mrs Alvan T. Fuller and Mrs Charles S. French, all going on afterwards to a party in honor of Miss Rebekah Hobbs' birthday; Mrs William Dana Orcutt, Miss Louise Harding, in green velveteen; Miss Ruth Talbot, Miss Peggy Blake, Miss Charlotte Hutchins, Miss Bar-

---

Traveler, Feb. 1.

Soloist

Serge Prokofieff, who will appear as composer-soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

PROKOFIEFF SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Serge Prokofieff will be the composer-soloist at the next regular pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The third concert of the Tuesday afternoon series will be given next Tuesday.

Serge Koussevitzky will begin the program of Friday and Saturday with the Symphony of Mozart in D major (K. 504), known as the "Prague" Symphony. This symphony has not been performed by the orchestra for a number of years. Serge Prokofieff will appear as soloist in his Third Concerto for Pianoforte and orchestra. The famous Russian composer will also be represented by the March and Scherzo from his opera, "The Love For Three Oranges," and by his "Scythian Suite"—music which chooses for its subject a legendary primitive people of Russia.

The program for the Tuesday afternoon concert will be divided between music of Mendelssohn and Tchaikovsky. Mendelssohn's Overture, "Fingal's Cave," and the same composer's "Italian" Symphony will be played. Koussevitsky will complete the concert with the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikovsky.

DAY, FEBRUARY 3,

19TH CENTURY MUSIC PLAYED

Symphony Gives Mendelssohn and Tchaikovsky

Proceeding with music composed in the 19th century, this season's programme-scheme for the Tuesday afternoon series, the Symphony Concert of yesterday arrived at Mendelssohn and Tchaikovsky. From the German Dr. Koussevitzky chose the overture "Fingal's Cave" and the "Italian" Symphony; from the Russian, the Symphony in F minor that is Number Four.

Off hand it is not easy to think of any two composers born into the same half-century that have so little in common as these of yesterday. Almost the only point of resemblance is found in their common mastery of orchestra, though naturally the suave, polished almost over-refined Mendelssohn avoids the dynamic extravagance that is characteristic of Tchaikovsky's music in general and of this symphony in particular.

A conductor might try to put some Tchaikovskian fire into the music of Mendelssohn or to infuse a little Mendelssohnian restraint into the music of Tchaikovsky, but Dr. Koussevitzky is too much the artist for that. Yesterday each composer was allowed to speak with his own voice, and the large audience seemed well pleased with the result.

ESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1937

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

oston Symphony Orchestra

Mendelssohn and Tchaikovsky hared the program of the third Tues- y concert by the Boston Sym- hony Orchestra yesterday after- oon. Dr Serge Koussevitzky con- ucted. The audience was large.

With his proverbial flair for con- rast, Dr Koussevitzky cleverly as- mbled this program. Mendelssohn as in all respects as different from chaikovsky as day from midnight arkness. One was the son of a ealthy banker, nicely brought up, refined in his tastes and his music, never permitting tempestuous emotions—if he had any—to run away with him. Tchaikovsky, on the other hand, had to struggle with his own contradictory disposition, at one moment buoyant upon the crest of a wave of good spirits, at the next oppressed by black despair that shadowed much of his life.

The two compositions of Mendelssohn with which the program began are, to one listener, of his finest—the "Fingal's Cave" Overture and the "Italian" Symphony. They were most enjoyably played, and in the case of the repetitive symphony, brilliance relieved the considerable length at which Mendelssohn wrote his sparkling music.

To dwell upon Dr Koussevitzky's readings of Tchaikovsky would be simply to repeat a number of superlative expressions that have been spoken and written these past several years. Evidently there is no one who can equal his success. Yet he made of the last movement a tour de force which exceeded his usual treatment.

Of the three Tchaikovsky symphonies now in the orchestral repertory, the fourth is perhaps the first to succumb to pressure of familiarity. But a performance such as the finale received yesterday can restore spontaneity and freshness which the music really possesses.

The next concert in this series will occur March 16. C. W. D.

77 Herald, 2/3/37

MUSIC

TUESDAY SYMPHONY

The third concert in the Tuesday series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Mendelssohn......Overture, "The Hebrides," Op. 26.
Mendelssohn......Symphony in A major, "Italian," Op. 90.
Tchaikovsky......Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36.

Recently we have seen, and many of us have been reading, the definitive edition of Boswell's "Tour of Scotland and the Hebrides with Samuel Johnson." It is interesting to compare this visit with that of the young Mendelssohn some 60 years later. Mendelssohn was a charming letter-writer and had considerable skill with his pencil so that he could sketch the scenes that took his fancy. Dr. Johnson admired the prospect of his own more solemn fashion and discussed theology with the local intellectuals and big-wigs. Mendelssohn's was a romantic journey, undertaken with the enthusiasm of youth. Yet he was not without a sense of humor, as the description of his visit to Abbotsford shows.

One of his most charming works was the direct result of that visit, the Fingal's Cave Overture. Unfortunately, nowadays, the films have taken it up. No sooner is a sea sequence flashed on the screen than the haunting strains of Mendelssohn's music begins. Sibelius' Seventh Symphony did service for the film of the Mt. Everest expedition; and it is difficult for one who has seen that picture to disassociate his music from the great heights and snowy peaks. Similarly one sees in the mind's eye the Russian ballet-dancers cavorting whenever Brahms' Fourth Symphony is played. Nevertheless a good orchestral performance of Fingal's Cave is still a joy to hear. Visual associations need only be fleeting and is perhaps not unpleasant when the music is so vitally presented as it was yesterday by the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky.

Both Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Fourth have been recorded by the Boston Symphony. Dr. Koussevitzky's affinity for the music of Tchaikovsky is well known; and the performance of the Fourth Symphony yesterday was superbly eloquent. More recently he has demonstrated his skill as an interpreter in bringing life and brilliance to Mendelssohn's best symphony. The "Italian" is a delightful work in itself, but it can be played so that its qualities are not vividly recreated. Yesterday was not such an instance; and the work of the conductor was excellent.

A. W. W.

183

Prokofieff Wa

The Art of Serge Prokofieff As Pianist and Composer

By ALEXANDER W. WILLIAMS

One of the most vital of modern composers is Serge Prokofieff. He has had his share of abuse for musical daring and more than the average modernist's share of popularity. This is not at all odd. Ernest Newman has shown that while Wagner was being most heartily reviled his music was enjoying wider and wider popularity. Stravinsky, of course, is a good parallel case, although his work has been the subject of much more heated and constant discussion. People have been content to listen to Prokofieff's music and to take considerable pleasure in it without bothering to defend their opinions. Consequently there must be easily three times the amount of material on Stravinsky than on his celebrated contemporary.

Nevertheless there are one or two points of similarity. Both composers have written a number of ballets, and a great deal of the music of both is attached to some kind of program or at least a descriptive title. Neither composer has allowed the question of consistency of style to trouble him. Yet there is an individuality that emerges in the music of each. Different as are "Le Sacre du Printemps" and the Symphony of Psalms, it is not hard to perceive that they are by the same composer. Similarly the Classical Symphony and the Scythian Suite are poles apart in some respects and yet manifestly alike through the personality of Prokofieff.

On the other hand there are certain sharp dissimilarities. Stravinsky is more international and his influence has been strong in France, where he lives. Prokofieff has always been Russian and even oriental in his music; and he has now returned to work successfully and apparently on cordial terms in the country from which he escaped at the outbreak of the revolution. Furthermore his music is more original and more sturdily independent. Stravinsky has borrowed and adapted with perfect equanimity and often with success, which is one artistic way to pursue. Prokofieff has taken the other road.

AN ASTONISHING PIANIST

Boston, like most other musical centers, has often heard Mr. Prokofieff as a pianist. He allows other men to conduct his works; but in his piano concertos his own commanding personality takes a vigorous part. He is really one of the most amazing pianists in the world. It is a unique experience, and one that should not be missed, to listen to him. We have never heard him in other music than his own, though that hardly matters. After hearing him it is hard to imagine any other pianist, least of all one of a contrary personality, as soloist in his music. That strange impassivity, which seems to hide such elemental fire,—how could that be reproduced by another? As he towers over the keyboard and delivers a complicated series of notes with the same unconcern that experts sort a city's mail, how can one imagine another doing the same task as effectively?

Some composers are such remarkable interpreters of their own work that one is positive no one else could play it in the same way that is, somehow, uniquely right. Those who have heard Debussy play the piano declare that no other artist, even specialists in Debussy such as George Copeland or Ricardo Vinez, can quite measure up to the interpretation that the composer himself achieved. Yet other composers are signally poor musicians where their own works are concerned. Delius had such long, tapering fingers that he was little use on the piano. We once heard Ravel in France try to accompany a singer in some of his own songs and only succeed in botching the job technically. Prokofieff is emphatically one of the former class. His last appearance here was in his Fifth Piano Concerto, a work of huge difficulty and the most effervescent wit; and we shall not soon forget with what incomparable verve he tossed it off.

Prokofieff has always been noted as a composer of considerable wit. Some of his ballets and his opera, "The Love for Three Oranges," testify to this vein in his writing. His music is full of high spirits and is usually easily appreciated. Indeed it is hard not to like it. Philip Hale liked the Scythian Suite and admired its splendid barbarity, which was at the same time so skillfully organized by the composer. His criticism and program note of the Scythian Suite is in his book of collected writings. It would do no harm to read it before the concerts of next Friday and Saturday. The Third Piano Concerto and the march and scherzo from "The Love for Three Oranges," also on the program, are available on gramophone records and are among Prokofieff's best known works.

A rather alarming bulletin was sent out to music editors in the cities of Mr. Prokofieff's 1937 tour. It was stated to be authorized by the composer. We can only hope that his recent music, incidental to plays in connection with the Pushkin centenary and a ballet to "Romeo and Juliet," is not too seriously affected by it. For, this bulletin takes occasion to observe, Mr. Prokofieff has regretted that his music was ever considered "smart" in his youth (the Scythian Suite is a youthful work) and now affirms that he has had a change of heart and has "gone down into the deeper realms of music." Is this a result of residence in the serious moral atmosphere of the Soviet? Let us hope that some Orpheus—perhaps the influence of the flesh-pots of America—will arrive in time to lead him back from those "deeper realms." Too many composers are solemn and are quite sure that they have penetrated to the deeper realms which, they say, are much to be preferred to the open air of wit and fancy. Even to gain his soul, must Mr. Prokofieff throw his sense of humor overboard?

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

JAN 23 1937

Boston Symphony Plays Third Concert Here Tuesday Night

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Program Will Feature Third Symphony of Brahms in F Major

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present its third concert of the season in Providence, Tuesday night, at the Metropolitan theatre, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The program will feature the Third Symphony of Brahms in F major, one of the finest achievements of this composer, a work which has not been performed by the Boston Symphony in Providence for a number of years.

The opening number will be an entr'acte from "Oresteia," the only opera of Serge Taneiev, Russian composer. Other selection will include excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner. The Prelude to "Lohengrin" will be played, also "Forest Murmurs" from the second act of "Siegfried" and the Overture to "Tannhauser."

Monitor – Feb 3/37

Tuesday Symphony

Works by Mendelssohn and Tchaikovsky occupied Dr. Koussevitzky at the third concert of the Tuesday afternoon series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program contained the Overture, "Fingal's Cave," the "Italian" Symphony and the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4.

Once again those who seek relaxation as well as enjoyment from these Tuesday afternoon programs have reason to be grateful to Dr. Koussevitzky, although it must be admitted that on paper the names of the two composers seemed oddly bracketed. Probably no orchestral work by Mendelssohn is more universally refreshing than that of "Fingal's Cave." Dr. Koussevitzky wisely refrained from any overt attempt at adornment. It was a graceful and sometimes elegant performance, despite some slight difficulty encountered by the brass section.

In the present day of tonal stress, the simplicity of the "Italian" Symphony is often deceptive. Such music seems so easy to write—but just try it. The young Mendelssohn possessed a flair for utilizing the colorful resources of the orchestra. With the brass once more in good form, the symphony had a polished performance.

There were moments during the Tchaikovsky when one wished that Dr. Koussevitzky were a little less ardent in his devotion to this symphony, and a little more given to understatement, although the third movement was as near perfection as one may hope to hear. And since this Tuesday series is devoted to the works of nineteenth-century composers, would it not be an opportune time to revive the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 3? The program yesterday roused enthusiasm with an ovation for orchestra and conductor at the conclusion.

G. M. S.

Copley Society

The photography of André Snow, now on view at the gallery of the Copley Society, is the more enjoyable for the fact that there have been so few photographic exhibitions this season.

Mr. Snow's particular gift seems to lie in personal portraiture; not the conventional variety, but the portrayal of such interesting sitters as Dr. Charles Lanman, reading, or Architect Maginnis absorbed in a plan. Such photographs give the spectator an idea of the model in a natural pose.

Another portrait, a profile of a mulatto woman, is a handsome study. Mr. Snow is to be commended for subduing effects of light, for refraining from complex effects of illumination, which often deprive the model of natural appearance.

Symphony Hall

An interesting exhibition of drawings and prints is to be seen in the foyer of Symphony Hall. It consists of portraits of great composers from the Willson Collection of musical subjects.

One finds that each era has its fashion in composer types as it has its special style in music. The earlier composers had the serious aspect of philosophers, the composers of the nineteenth century were visualized as romantics.

This visitor always feels amused at the tortuous portrayals of Beethoven. Sculptors, engravers, etchers try to subject him pictorially to all the heightened emotions expressed in music. Generally the result is painful in its attempt at forced dramatization.

The Iacovleff red-crayon portrayals of Rachmaninoff and Prokofief are included in this exhibition.

D. A.

LYNCHBURG, VA.
ADVANCE

JAN 23 1937

ORCHESTRA LEADER BUNDLE OF NERVES

Dimitri Mitropoulos Was First Greek To Lead Major American Symphony

Boston (AP)—A Greek bundle of nerves named Dimitri Mitropoulos is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for the second successive year—and therein lies a tale of achievement that rivals that of another new youngster, John Barbirolli, Briton who at 36 recently signed a three-year contract to lead the New York Philharmonic.

When the bald-headed 40-year old bachelor from Athens took the podium here last year, he was the first of his nationality ever to lead a major symphony in this country.

His colorful mannerisms—he literally dances and skips in rhythm with the orchestra, which he conducts without score or baton—and his able musicianship quickly caught the [illegible] of Boston concert goers.

[illegible] here Mitropoulos goes west [illegible] guest conductor of the Minn[illegible] Symphony.

[illegible] asked to return to the Hub [illegible] year for another two weeks, he [illegible] the first guest conductor in the orchestra's 56 years to be in[illegible] back within a year of his debut.

When he played the solo part of Respighi's Toccata for piano and orchestra at the concerts yesterday and [illegible] he became too the first man in the orchestra's history ever to con[illegible] playing.

[illegible] achievements do not [illegible]. He will be [illegible] also in a third capacity [illegible] composer.

The [illegible] is an able linguist [illegible] Greek, English, French, [illegible] German and Dutch in addition [illegible].

The [illegible] during [illegible] to elucidate a [illegible] English to one of the [illegible] picked up the musicians.

[illegible]

[illegible] played.

Brimming with energy and [illegible] humor, Mitropoulos [illegible] an exacting [illegible] three hours [illegible] he drilled the Boston [illegible] rated by many as the finest in [illegible] world in [illegible] sentation [illegible] the Boston [illegible] minor. And the [illegible] back with three [illegible] on the second [illegible].

The rehearsal [illegible] Mitropoulos settled before a piano to [illegible] self for the Respighi Concerto.

Hours later a watchman at Symphony Hall reported finding him [illegible] there bringing to the music [illegible] stern realization he had had no [illegible] and was an hour overdue for [illegible] ner.

SCRANTON, PA.
TRIBUNE

JAN 29 1937

Morgan Rees Plays for Welsh Club

Juniors Celebrate Fifth Anniversary; 100 in Attendance

Morgan Rees, Kingston, recognized as an outstanding concert pianist, was guest soloist last night at the fifth anniversary celebration of the Junior Branch, Welsh Women's Society, held in the ballroom, Hotel Jermyn, and attended by more than 100 members of the club.

The program was preceded by a short business session at which Mrs. Lincoln H. Williams Jr. presided, and was presented by Mrs. Philip Cruttenden, chairman of the Progrem Committee.

Mr. Rees was graduated from the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, Mass., and had his master lessons from Joseph Adler, New York City. He is a member of a string trio whose violinist and cellist are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is also assistant accompanist for Charlotte Symons, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company. His selections included Mendelssohn's "Rondo Cappricio," "Liebstraum" by Liszt; Chopin's "Revolutionary Etude," Brahm's Waltz, and by request he played his own arrangement with variations on an old and familiar Welsh Hymn.

Mrs. William Pritchard, president of the Senior Welsh Women's Club, Mrs. George W. Wettling, honorary president of the Juniors, and Miss Catharine Phillips, advisor, gave short talks. Mrs. Florence Morgan Harris offered several soprano selections and was accompanied at the piano by the guest artist.

Recognition was given Miss Jessie Davis who served as second president of the society. Mrs. William H. Howell, first president, was unable to attend the celebration.

The tables were attractively decorated with Spring flowers in low bowls and nile green flower flames.

Mrs. Cruttenden was assisted by the following members of her committee: Mrs. Frank Caswell, Mrs. Arthur Fermer, Mrs. David Gray, Mrs. Matthew Mackie, Mrs. Arthur Williams and Mrs. Raymond MacGregor.

EV

Men

Program

By

It was su and beautif
the heart
music love vitzky gave noon, and it hugely.
It began
"Hebrides"
the same
symphony,
Tschaikovsk
phony, an a one which sin of cond
ing the list ing him ju leave with little more.
The "He
the "Fingal
some prefe
title is acc delssohn at scene paint
is a remem that beat a like basalt
And touche are to be work, nota
lone oboe, that resou
gesting th
mew.
Yet it w
Atlantic th
of Thule th us. I wond not spent h or some ot
ern Russia
"wine dark rather tha ous main ings to rap
But, if curate, th gave us w take keen the great hearing th
preted by ferent idea
we listene surges an with what

77 Herald, Feb 3.37

MUSIC

TUESDAY SYMPHONY

The third concert in the Tuesday series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Mendelssohn......Overture, "The Hebrides," Op. 26.
Mendelssohn......Symphony in A major, "Italian," Op. 90.
Tchaikovsky......Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36.

Recently we have seen, and many of us have been reading, the definitive edition of Boswell's "Tour of Scotland and the Hebrides with Samuel Johnson." It is interesting to compare this visit with that of the young Mendelssohn some 60 years later. Mendelssohn was a charming letter-writer and had considerable skill with his pencil so that he could sketch the scenes that took his fancy. Dr. Johnson admired the prospect of his own more solemn fashion and discussed theology with the local intellectuals and big-wigs. Mendelssohn's was a romantic journey, undertaken with the enthusiasm of youth. Yet he was not without a sense of humor, as the description of his visit to Abbotsford shows.

One of his most charming works was the direct result of that visit, the Fingal's Cave Overture. Unfortunately, nowadays, the films have taken it up. No sooner is a sea sequence flashed on the screen than the haunting strains of Mendelssohn's music begins. Sibelius' Seventh Symphony did service for the film of the Mt. Everest expedition; and it is difficult for one who has seen that picture to disassociate his music from the great heights and snowy peaks. Similarly one sees in the mind's eye the Russian ballet-dancers cavorting whenever Brahms' Fourth Symphony is played. Nevertheless a good orchestral performance of Fingal's Cave is still a joy to hear. Visual associations need only be fleeting and is perhaps not unpleasant when the music is so vitally presented as it was yesterday by the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky.

Both Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Fourth have been recorded by the Boston Symphony. Dr. Koussevitzky's affinity for the music of Tchaikovsky is well known; and the performance of the Fourth Symphony yesterday was superbly eloquent. More recently he has demonstrated his skill as an interpreter in bringing life and brilliance to Mendelssohn's best symphony. The "Italian" is a delightful work in itself, but it can be played so that its qualities are not vividly recreated. Yesterday was not such an instance; and the work of the conductor was excellent.

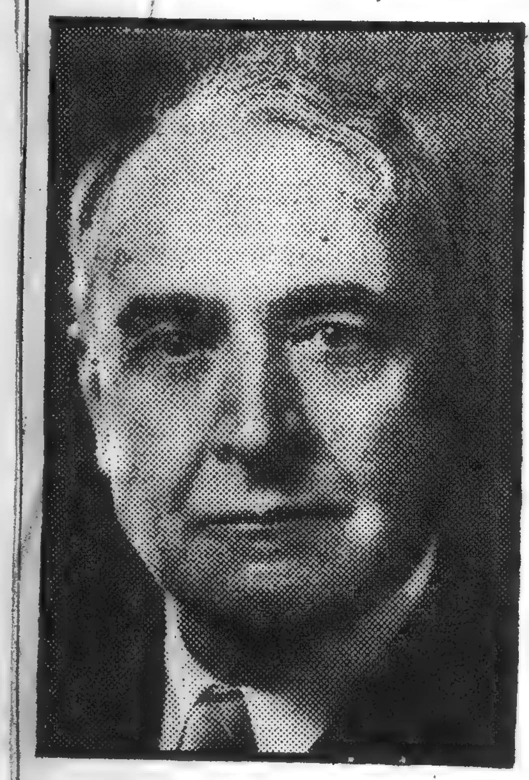
A. W. W.

183

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

JAN 23 1937

Boston Symphony Plays Third Concert Here Tuesday Night



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Program Will Feature Third Symphony of Brahms in F Major

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present its third concert of the season in Providence, Tuesday night, at the Metropolitan theatre, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The program will feature the Third Symphony of Brahms in F major, one of the finest achievements of this composer, a work which has not been performed by the Boston Symphony in Providence for a number of years.

The opening number will be an entr'acte from "Oresteia," the only opera of Serge Taneiev, Russian composer. Other selection will include excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner. The Prelude to "Lohengrin" will be played, also "Forest Murmurs" from the second act of "Siegfried" and the Overture to "Tannhauser."

Prokofieff Wo

The Art of Serge Prokofieff As Pianist and Composer

By ALEXANDER W. WILLIAMS

One of the most vital of modern composers is Serge Prokofieff. He has had his share of abuse for musical daring and more than the average modernist's share of popularity. This is not at all odd. Ernest Newman has shown that while Wagner was being most heartily reviled his music was enjoying wider and wider popularity. Stravinsky, of course, is a good parallel case, although his work has been the subject of much more heated and constant discussion. People have been content to listen to Prokofieff's music and to take considerable pleasure in it without bothering to defend their opinions. Consequently there must be easily three times the amount of material on Stravinsky than on his celebrated contemporary.

Nevertheless there are one or two points of similarity. Both composers have written a number of ballets, and a great deal of the music of both is attached to some kind of program or at least a descriptive title. Neither composer has allowed the question of consistency of style to trouble him. Yet there is an individuality that emerges in the music of each. Different as are "Le Sacre du Printemps" and the Symphony of Psalms, it is not hard to perceive that they are by the same composer. Similarly the Classical Symphony and the Scythian Suite are poles apart in some respects and yet manifestly alike through the personality of Prokofieff.

On the other hand there are certain sharp dissimilarities. Stravinsky is more international and his influence has been strong in France, where he lives. Prokofieff has always been Russian and even oriental in his music; and he has now returned to work successfully and apparently on cordial terms in the country from which he escaped at the outbreak of the revolution. Furthermore his music is more original and more sturdily independent. Stravinsky has borrowed and adapted with perfect equanimity and often with success, which is one artistic way to pursue. Prokofieff has taken the other road.

AN ASTONISHING PIANIST

Boston, like most other musical centers, has often heard Mr. Prokofieff as a pianist. He allows other men to conduct his works; but in his piano concertos his own commanding personality takes a vigorous part. He is really one of the most amazing pianists in the world. It is a unique experience, and one that should not be missed, to listen to him. We have never heard him in other music than his own, though that hardly matters. After hearing him it is hard to imagine any other pianist, least of all one of a contrary personality, as soloist in his music. That strange impassivity, which seems to hide such elemental fire,—how could that be reproduced by another? As he towers over the keyboard and delivers a complicated series of notes with the same unconcern that experts sort a city's mail, how can one imagine another doing the same task as effectively?

Some composers are such remarkable interpreters of their own work that one is positive no one else could play it in the same way that is, somehow, uniquely right. Those who have heard Debussy play the piano declare that no other artist, even specialists in Debussy such as George Copeland or Ricardo Vinez, can quite measure up to the interpretation that the composer himself achieved. Yet other composers are signally poor musicians where their own works are concerned. Delius had such long, tapering fingers that he was little use on the piano. We once heard Ravel in France try to accompany a singer in some of his own songs and only succeed in botching the job technically. Prokofieff is emphatically one of the former class. His last appearance here was in his Fifth Piano Concerto, a work of huge difficulty and the most effervescent wit; and we shall not soon forget with what incomparable verve he tossed it off.

Prokofieff has always been noted as a composer of considerable wit. Some of his ballets and his opera, "The Love for Three Oranges," testify to this vein in his writing. His music is full of high spirits and is usually easily appreciated. Indeed it is hard not to like it. Philip Hale liked the Scythian Suite and admired its splendid barbarity, which was at the same time so skillfully organized by the composer. His criticism and program note of the Scythian Suite is in his book of collected writings. It would do no harm to read it before the concerts of next Friday and Saturday. The Third Piano Concerto and the march and scherzo from "The Love for Three Oranges," also on the program, are available on gramophone records and are among Prokofieff's best known works.

A rather alarming bulletin was sent out to music editors in the cities of Mr. Prokofieff's 1937 tour. It was stated to be authorized by the composer. We can only hope that his recent music, incidental to plays in connection with the Pushkin centenary and a ballet to "Romeo and Juliet," is not too seriously affected by it. For, this bulletin takes occasion to observe, Mr. Prokofieff has regretted that his music was ever considered "smart" in his youth (the Scythian Suite is a youthful work) and now affirms that he has had a change of heart and has "gone down into the deeper realms of music." Is this a result of residence in the serious moral atmosphere of the Soviet? Let us hope that some Orpheus—perhaps the influence of the flesh-pots of America—will arrive in time to lead him back from those "deeper realms." Too many composers are solemn and are quite sure that they have penetrated to the deeper realms which, they say, are much to be preferred to the open air of wit and fancy. Even to gain his soul, must Mr. Prokofieff throw his sense of humor overboard?

Monitor — Feb 3/37

Tuesday Symphony

Works by Mendelssohn and Tchaikovsky occupied Dr. Koussevitzky at the third concert of the Tuesday afternoon series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program contained the Overture, "Fingal's Cave," the "Italian" Symphony and the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4.

Once again those who seek relaxation as well as enjoyment from these Tuesday afternoon programs have reason to be grateful to Dr. Koussevitzky, although it must be admitted that on paper the names of the two composers seemed oddly bracketed. Probably no orchestral work by Mendelssohn is more universally refreshing than that of "Fingal's Cave." Dr. Koussevitzky wisely refrained from any overt attempt at adornment. It was a graceful and sometimes elegant performance, despite some slight difficulty encountered by the brass section.

In the present day of tonal stress, the simplicity of the "Italian" Symphony is often deceptive. Such music seems so easy to write—but just try it. The young Mendelssohn possessed a flair for utilizing the colorful resources of the orchestra. With the brass once more in good form, the symphony had a polished performance.

There were moments during the Tchaikovsky when one wished that Dr. Koussevitzky were a little less ardent in his devotion to this symphony, and a little more given to understatement, although the third movement was as near perfection as one may hope to hear. And since this Tuesday series is devoted to the works of nineteenth-century composers, would it not be an opportune time to revive the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 3? The program yesterday roused enthusiasm with an ovation for orchestra and conductor at the conclusion.

G. M. S.

Copley Society

The photography of André Snow, now on view at the gallery of the Copley Society, is the more enjoyable for the fact that there have been so few photographic exhibitions this season.

Mr. Snow's particular gift seems to lie in personal portraiture; not the conventional variety, but the portrayal of such interesting sitters as Dr. Charles Lanman, reading, or Architect Maginnis absorbed in a plan. Such photographs give the spectator an idea of the model in a natural pose.

Another portrait, a profile of a mulatto woman, is a handsome study. Mr. Snow is to be commended for subduing effects of light, for refraining from complex effects of illumination, which often deprive the model of natural appearance.

Symphony Hall

An interesting exhibition of drawings and prints is to be seen in the foyer of Symphony Hall. It consists of portraits of great composers from the Willson Collection of musical subjects.

One finds that each era has its fashion in composer types as it has its special style in music. The earlier composers had the serious aspect of philosophers, the composers of the nineteenth century were visualized as romantics.

This visitor always feels amused at the tortuous portrayals of Beethoven. Sculptors, engravers, etchers try to subject him pictorially to all the heightened emotions expressed in music. Generally the result is painful in its attempt at forced dramatization.

The Iacovleff red-crayon portrayals of Rachmaninoff and Prokofieff are included in this exhibition.

D. A.

SCRANTON, PA.
TRIBUNE

JAN 29 1937

Morgan Rees Plays for Welsh Club

Juniors Celebrate Fifth Anniversary; 100 in Attendance

Morgan Rees, Kingston, recognized as an outstanding concert pianist, was guest soloist last night at the fifth anniversary celebration of the Junior Branch, Welsh Women's Society, held in the ballroom, Hotel Jermyn, and attended by more than 100 members of the club.

The program was preceded by a short business session at which Mrs. Lincoln H. Williams Jr. presided, and was presented by Mrs. Philip Cruttenden, chairman of the Progrem Committee.

Mr. Rees was graduated from the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, Mass., and had his master lessons from Joseph Adler, New York City. He is a member of a string trio whose violinist and cellist are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is also assistant accompanist for Charlotte Symons, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company. His selections included Mendelssohn's "Rondo Cappricio," "Liebstraum" by Liszt; Chopin's "Revolutionary Etude," Brahm's Waltz, and by request he played his own arrangement with variations on an old and familiar Welsh Hymn.

Mrs. William Pritchard, president of the Senior Welsh Women's Club, Mrs. George W. Wettling, honorary president of the Juniors, and Miss Catharine Phillips, advisor, gave short talks. Mrs. Florence Morgan Harris offered several soprano selections and was accompanied at the piano by the guest artist.

Recognition was given Miss Jessie Davis who served as second president of the society. Mrs. William H. Howell, first president, was unable to attend the celebration.

The tables were attractively decorated with Spring flowers in low bowls and nile green flower flames.

Mrs. Cruttenden was assisted by the following members of her committee: Mrs. Frank Caswell, Mrs. Arthur Fermer, Mrs. David Gray, Mrs. Matthew Mackie, Mrs. Arthur Williams and Mrs. Raymond MacGregor.

LYNCHBURG, VA.
ADVANCE

JAN 23 1937

ORCHESTRA LEADER BUNDLE OF NERVES

Dimitri Mitropoulos Was First Greek To Lead Major American Symphony

Boston (AP)—A Greek bundle of nerves named Dimitri Mitropoulos is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for the second successive year—and therein lies a tale of achievement that rivals that of another new youngster, John Barbirolli, Briton, who at 36 recently signed a three-year contract to lead the New York Philharmonic.

When the bald-headed 40-year old bachelor from Athens took the podium here last year, he was the first of his nationality ever to lead a major symphony in this country.

His colorful mannerisms—he literally dances and skips in rhythm with the orchestra, which he conducts without score or baton—and his able musicianship quickly caught the fancy of Boston concert goers.

From here Mitropoulos goes west to be guest conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony.

When asked to return to the Hub this year for another two weeks, he became the first guest conductor in the orchestra's 56 years to be invited back within a year of his debut.

When he played the solo part of Respighi's Toccata for piano and orchestra at the concerts yesterday and tonight, he became, too, the first man in the orchetra's history ever to conduct while playing.

Mitropoulos' achievements do not stop there, however. He will be heard here also in a third capacity—that of composer.

The slender Athenian is an able linguist. He speaks English, French, Spanish, German and Dutch in addition to his Greek.

The Dutch came in handy during one rehearsal. Unable to elucidate a technical point in English to one of the horn players, he sized up the musician.

"You're Dutch, aren't you?" he asked.

"Yes," came the surprised answer, and in hat language the conductor explained how he wanted his music played.

Brimming with energy and good humor, Mitropoulos nevertheless is an exacting taskmaster. For precisely three hours at the first rehearsal, he drilled the Boston string section, rated by many as the finest in the world, in the first part of his presentation with string orchestra of the Beethoven quartet in C-sharp minor. And the next day he came back with three hours' more work on the second part.

The rehearsal over, Mitropoulos settled before a piano to drill himself for the Respighi Concerto.

Hours later a watchman at Symphony Hall reported finding him still there, bringing to the musician the stern realization he had had no lunch and was an hour overdue for dinner.

Progr

By

It was s and beaut
the heart
music love vitzky gave noon, and it hugely.
It began
"Hebrides"
the same
symphony,
Tschaikovsk
phony, an one which sin of cond
ing the list ing him ju leave with little more.
The "He
the "Finga
some prefe
title is acc
delssohn at scene paint
is a remem that beat like basalt
And touche
are to be work, nota
lone oboe,
that resou
gesting th
mew.
Yet it w
Atlantic th
of Thule th us. I wond
not spent h
or some ot
ern Russia
"wine dark rather than ous main ings to rap
But, if curate, th gave us w take keen the great hearing th
preted by ferent idea
we listene
surges and with what

184

80

EVENING TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1937 B

Mendelssohn, Tschaikovsky

Program Arranged by Koussevitsky Hugely Enjoyed by Symphony Audience

By Redfern Mason

It was such a program of old and beautiful things as rejoices the heart of an unsophisticated music lover that Serge Koussevitzky gave us yesterday afternoon, and the audience enjoyed it hugely.

It began with Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture, then came the same composer's "Italian" symphony, and the finale was Tschaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, an admirable choice, and one which avoided the besetting sin of conductors—that of gorging the listener, instead of giving him just enough to let him leave with an appetite for a little more.

The "Hebrides" overture, or the "Fingal's Cave" overture, as some prefer to call it—either title is accurate — shows Mendelssohn at his best as a tonal scene painter. The initial strain is a remembrance of the waves that beat against the cathedral like basalt columns of Staffa. And touches of the like realism are to be noted throughout the work, notably the calls of the lone oboe, clarinet and flute, that resound at intervals suggesting the voice of the sea mew.

Yet it was hardly the stern Atlantic that beats on the isles of Thule that Koussevitzky gave us. I wondered indeed if he had not spent his summers at Yaltah or some other resort in Southern Russia and got his from the "wine dark sea" of the ancients rather than from the tempestuous main that carried the vikings to rapine and piracy.

But, if geographically inaccurate, the marine picture he gave us was still something to take keen pleasure in. One of the great joys of music lies in hearing the same work interpreted by people who have different ideals of its meaning. So we listened to those Southern surges and were happy, noting with what happy intuition the director gave rhythmic depth to the billow like passages for the 'cellos, the deep sea wildness he drew from the reeds, and the climaxing crashes of the brass.

The orchestra liked playing the work. Of that I am sure, and it is the best sign in the world that the composition was being interpreted with a due measure of interpretative justice.

Listening to the "Italian" Symphony, I could not help asking myself whether Mendelssohn did not write it rather from a sense of obligation than from sheer aesthetic necessity. It is beautiful in many places; the melody always sings; but curiously enough, its "Italianity," to use an Italian word, is more casual than continuous. The opening movement is more notable for scholastic correctness than for inspiration; I doubt whether many would think that the folk-songish theme of the slow movement had anything Latin about it. Only in the Saltarello does the young composer of about twenty-one express himself in music that is definitely Italian in character.

Yet we enjoyed it much, and that, perhaps, is the most important consideration.

Last came the Slav Tschaikowsky facing black Fate and trying to forget his misery in dreams of happiness. When he was writing the Fourth Symphony, Peter Ilyich was miserably in the toils of the woman who had married him, literally against his will, to prevent her from committing suicide. He soon broke his fetters and the lady whom, perhaps, he might have married happily, Nadeshda von Meck, gloried in the fact that the symphony was "our" symphony But it wasn't. Nadeshda's ideal of music was purely of the senses; Tschaikowsky, on the other hand, was an idealist, and in this eloquent score, you feel the beating of his heart, now despairing, now angry, now tremulous with an imaginary happiness.

It is the work of a great composer, a true Russian, in spite of his self-imposed Teutonic fetters, and his personality comes out vividly, not only in the melodic fluency, but in the way in which he makes the instrumental choirs sing antiphonies, as if discussing "Fate, freewill, foreknowledge absolute."

There are adorable solos for oboe and clarinet; the emotional cries alternate; now it seems as if the composer had moments of pure joy; then comes unescapable Fate, in threatening sonorities.

Here, I think, we had the real Koussevitzky; there he was in his element, and he galvanized his forces to an impassioned magnificence of tone. There are people who pretend to decry Tschaikovsky; yet I cannot but feel that he is one of the great ones.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR

IN THIS CORNER

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Eyes Do It

MITROPOULOS, CURRENT Symphony conductor, says waving the hands to conduct an orchestra is largely baloney. It can be done entirely with the eyes if necessary. Mitropoulos is 40, bald, tall, homely till he smiles, is head of the King of Greece's Institute for restoring the glory that once was Athens'. Heretofore he has played in Boston only where he was the one man in 56 years of Boston's Symphony history to be invited back for a second period as guest conductor. Local orchestra members say his conducting is the easiest to follow of any they've ever had. Conducting without score or baton, Mitropoulos in rehearsals wears a dark black pull-over sweater that gives him the aspect of a prizefighter.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

J[illegible] 1937

-:- MUSIC -:-

A tribute to Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, late president of Brown University and a steadfast patron of music, was paid by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in their third concert of the season in Metropolitan theatre, last night. Dr. Koussevitzky received an honorary degree from Brown in 1926.

The musical memorial was "From the Apocalypse" by Liadov. It replaced Taneiev's Entr'act from "Oresteia" as the opening number, and the orchestra's reading of it made an impression not easily forgotten. Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians also presented Brahms' Third Symphony in F major and three Wagnerian selections, "Prelude to "Lohengrin," "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," Act. II; and the Overture to "Tannhauser."

The Brahms' symphony was a masterpiece of musicianship. The first three movements were carried largely by the strings and woodwinds, never going to extremes but always singing and, it seemed, building. The imitative passages in the second movement were distinguished for their phrasing and timing and the flute, oboe and, later the French horn work in the third movement was exceptional for warmth and beauty. The fourth movement, allegro, added a bright finish which gave a lustre to the other three.

The Wagnerian pieces were brilliant interpretations of operatic numbers. The pianissimo accompaniment for the first violin solo in the middle of the prelude came as soft and light as snow flakes. Exceedingly notable, too, were the opening passages of the overture to "Tannhauser" which were extraordinarily subdued fhile still retaining their massiveness.

W. W. JR.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

JAN 24 1937

This go[illegible] article [illegible]

Dimitri Metropoulous, the Athenian conductor who comes to Minneapolis this week to take temporary charge of the Symphony orchestra. He will make his first appearance next Friday evening in Northrop auditorium with an excellent program.

Boston Symphony

Its Ups and Downs Over 56 Years

By James Davies.

READING the article in the current number of Musical America on the Boston Symphony orchestra takes one back to the days when symphonic music in America was a rare thing, compared with what it is today with our fine symphony orchestras in many cities and more being organized up and down the country. The article deals with the history of the great orchestra in Boston and is one of a series being published by this journal on the various orchestras in America. It may be that ultimately our own organization will take its place in the series.

Ronald F. Eyer, the author of the article, has done a good piece of work, for he has worked into his sketch all the essentials in the history of the orchestra while giving considerable information about its founder, the conductors and the personnel. Everybody knows that Henry L. Higginson was the person whose idealism provided the country with one of the musical institutions of which it is most proud. It was fortunate that this gentleman combined in himself excellent qualities as a business man and as an accomplished musician. He had spent some years studying in Europe but an injury to his arm ruined whatever chance he may have had of becoming a concert performer.

This was a blessing in disguise, for he became a banker and amassed enough wealth to enable him to carry out his heart's desire of establishing an orchestra as good as those he had heard abroad. It took years of painful effort to build up the organization from the sixty men who composed the original personnel to the present number of over a hundred. Many and varied were the conductors who have contributed to the orchestra's upward progress; but each gave something that added together has produced one of the world's outstanding instrumental organizations.

* * *

ITS first conductor was Georg Henschel, one of the very finest musicians of his age, and it was an age of musical giants. Henschel by some happy chance was conducting at the final concert of the Harvard Musical association and there Higginson met him, realized the man's ability and immediately engaged him for the position which he held for three years, during which time the musical greatness of the orchestra began under the splendid leadership of a man who established ideals from which the long line of successors never departed.

Henschel was one of those peculiar individuals who preferred singing to conducting. That is a strange fact; all the musicians we know are firmly convinced they were born to be conductors. But not Henschel, who, as a baritone singer, had absolutely no superior in the interpretation of vocal music. He was a musician of the finest sensibilities, his voice was of rich, warm and very musical quality. He was an unsurpassed accompanist. Some of the most perfect recitals I have ever heard were given by Henschel and his wife.

Next in the series of conductors was Wilhelm Gericke who came from Vienna to take up the burden Henschel had laid down and this task master drilled and drilled, changed and added to the ensemble until it was as nearly perfect as the quality of the players permitted. But at the conclusion of his first year he was sent to Europe and engaged 20 players, among them men like Franz Kneisel, Fiedler, Zach and Moldauer, each of whom ranked with the best that Europe could produce.

It was during Gericke's five year tenure that the Pop concerts were inaugurated, also the first tour outside Boston was undertaken and a wider field realized that a splendid new addition to existing music makers had come into existence. It should be added that with the coming of Kneisel a new element entered into America's musical life, for this man founded the Kneisel string quartet and entered on a career as chamber music prophet and propagandist. The influence of his work is still felt wherever this branch of musical art is fostered.

Then came Nikisch whose term as conductor has been called "the romantic stage." That is possibly true, in part at least, but such a statement gives an entirely erroneous idea of the great Leipzig leader's versatility. I insist that Nikisch ranged through the whole gamut of emotions in his interpretations, equally great in all forms of music from the most romantic to the most passionately dramatic. There is not a conductor living who came under his spell who will not say, as several have done to me, that he was the greatest of them all.

* * *

HANS RICHTER was to have come to Boston but was forbidden by the emperor and Emil Pauer came in his stead. Pauer was typically German in his methods of conducting, conscientious, painstaking and forceful. He remained five years, kept up the standard of performances and taught his men the value of thoroughness. Gericke returned and remained until 1906. It was during this second period of Gericke that the new Symphony hall was built and the famous old Music hall went the way of all ancient buildings. Let us say in passing that for several years I heard some of the best concerts in this old hall that I have ever listened to.

Karl Muck followed Gericke and considerable difficulty was experienced in securing his services. To quote: "Gericke left the symphony orchestra a perfect instrument, Dr. Muck has given it a living voice." That conveys far more than can any eulogy of this really great conductor, whose final months in America during the war were months of bitterness and suffering. With the coming of Henri Rabuad and Monteux came changes in the personnel that had functioned so ably under German conductors. These French leaders brought a score or more French instrumentalists and perhaps they indirectly brought the trouble that for a time threatened to disrupt the orchestra.

Out of the struggle issued an orchestra having no affiliations with outside spheres of control. Many of the old players lost their positions and it became necessary to build up afresh. This has been done partly by the hard work of Monteux, more specifically under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky, the present conductor. Under this man the orchestra has regained all it had lost and stands today as one of the finest monuments to American idealism in existence.

Six years ago the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Boston orchestra was celebrated in a fitting manner and it will be the devout wish of all lovers of music that it will continue to add to the glorious roll of honor indefinitely.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JAN 3[illegible]

◆ ◆ ◆

A large and representative gathering of society greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Metropolitan Theatre. Tuesday evening.

Among the dinner parties which preceded the concert was one given by Mr. and Mrs. Elisha C. Mowry at their home on Freeman parkway. They had as their guests Mr. Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra, and Mr. John G. Aldrich.

Their daughter, Miss Peggy C. Mowry, a student at Wellesley College, came home to attend the concert.

81 185

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

JAN 27 1937

Symphony Pays Barbour Tribute

Koussevitsky Leads Boston Orchestra in Memorial to Brown President.

The Boston Symphony orchestra paid tribute to the memory of Dr. Clarence A. Barbour at the third concert of the series last evening at the Metropolitan Theatre. Several years ago Brown University conferred the honorary degree, doctor of music, upon Serge Koussevitsky and in memory of the recently deceased educator the eminent conductor presented "From the Apocalypse" by the Russia composer Liadov.

The composition was well chosen. It had a definite spiritual quality and was played with great insight into the beauties of the score. The strings announced a single sustained opening note which progressed in intensity and color through a series of slowly resolving seventh chords. Celesta and harp passages led up to a climax in the brass choir which seemed to resemble the triumph and accomplishment of a great life. Through a section written in the manner of Gregorian chant, an antiphonal effect was given as choir answered choir, until a restful pianissimo ended the music as the composition closed with an almost imperceptible roll of a muffled drum.

Symphony No. 3 in F major by Brahms was given an inspiring interpretation. The symphony, in four movement, contains some of the composer's loveliest melodies as well as some of his most intricate yet perfectly worked out designs. It is strong, happy music and its exhilaration is felt throughout. A bold motto-theme of three chords by reeds and brass opens the first movement, an allegro con brio. Soon the lovely second theme is given out by clarinets in the style of a slow dance. Cross rhythms and the inversion of the opening theme are interesting to note as the stormy climax is built. The second movement, andante, is in direct contrast. It has calm hymn-like simplicity, yet in the working out of the plan there are frequent suggestions of the motto-theme. The third movement, poco allegretto, is a sort of intermezzo, light in character. It affords a little rest before the grand and impressive fourth movement, an allegro. The depth of color in the orchestration of this part is noteworthy. Here the motive theme is given a chorale-like version and after skillful development with full orchestra it gradually reaches a serene conclusion.

Three Wagnerian favorites made the last group on the program. The prelude to "Lohengrin" is really, according to Wagner's own poetic interpretation, a vision of the angel-host revealing the wonder of the Holy Grail, which makes pure the heart of the beholder. The music has the ethereal texture to convey this mental picture to the listener, and the orchestra interpreted it beautifully to the last delicate phrase. Nowhere except in a virtuoso group can be found such perfect unity of tone and gradation of color. "Forest Murmurs," from "Siegfried," was, as the title suggests, descriptive of rustling leaves depicted by muted strings, and bird songs played by oboe and flute. This number was played with rare artistry. The overture to "Tannhauser" was the final number. This contains the main theme of the opera and is perhaps as well known as any Wagnerian number. It certainly is a favorite one and loses nothing in frequent hearing. The orchestra brought out everything in the score and reached a magnificent climax.

Mr. Koussevitsky was recalled many times, and the audience was thoroughly appreciative of its rare privilege of hearing this fine orchestra and its distinguished conductor as another successful concert was added to their already long Providence list.

R. F.

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

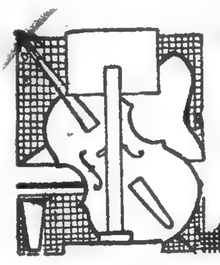
FEB 7 - 1937

Pier Tirindelli Dies; Violinist and Composer

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—(AP)—Friends in New York today received a telegram announcing the death today in Rome, Italy, of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, Italian violinist and composer, who was associated for many years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Death was due to a heart attack.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JAN 27 1937



MUSIC

Brilliant Performance of Brahms's Third and Wagner Items Marks Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.—Memory of Dr. Barbour Honored

By G. Y. Loveridge

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitzky, gave the third of its season's concerts here in Metropolitan Theatre last night, and proved again—what nobody had doubted—that it is one of the world's finest.

The large audience was very enthusiastic. In response to the applause, Dr. Koussevitzky several times motioned the orchestra to its feet, and he himself was recalled again and again.

In memory of Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, Brown University president, the orchestra played a selection by Anatol Liadov, "From the Apocalypse," Op. 66. This was a substitution for the Taneiev entr'acte from "Oresteia," which was to have opened the program. Liadov, who was born in St. Petersburg in 1855 and died in 1914, was one of the Russian group associated with Rimsky-Korsakov.

Dr. Koussevitzky, in 1926, received an honorary degree from Brown University, and at that time expressed his appreciation by a virtuoso performance on the double-bass. Last night, with solemn brass and drums and strings, he eloquently honored the departed leader of the institution that a decade ago had honored him.

This music is seldom heard. It is portentous and somber, laden with dark visions. Now it is lightened by a sweep of harp-strings, now closed about with the awesome, majestic utterance of trombones. The winds of heaven are in the violins, and the tympani call ominously to the mortal listener to think of those things that are not of time but of eternity. Dr. Koussevitzky set forth these things and many more, reading the music with reverent insight. At the conclusion, he did not seem to wish for the applause that was given him.

The program continued with the third symphony of Brahms, which has not been heard here in many years. This work has almost no physical excitement in it; but spiritually it is intensely exciting. It seems to portray a mood induced by calm introspection, to set down on a larger canvas the atmosphere and thought of certain of the chamber works. Now and then there is a subdued gaiety in the woodwind, but more often there comes the brooding voice of the horn curving above the strings, the dark pattern of violas.

This symphony, which could easily become tedious, the orchestra played with great brilliance and precision. Here there is no opportunity to bewilder the listener with displays of force and fire; it is delicacy of phrasing, sensitive nuance and play of tone color that create the spell. In this work, as always, when this orchestra plays, there were precision and balance, secure intonation and smooth articulation. But there was more than that. It might be said that the orchestra played not so much the notes as the music.

It was a virtuoso performance by both orchestra and leader. It testified again to the individual and collective excellence of these remarkable musicians, and to the power of Dr. Koussevitzky in searching out and revealing the beauties of symphonic literature.

The evening was notable further for a very fine reading of the "Lohengrin" prelude. Beautiful string tone, restrained to the most delicate pianissimo and enriched by delicate woodwind voices, created an atmosphere of unearthly splendor. For a few memorable minutes the everyday world vanished at the impact of these magical harmonies, and the thoughts that cling to making-a-living and buying-and-selling had time to venture into unwonted fields. It's too bad, but hardly anybody thinks of knighthood and the Holy Grail while listening to the clank of street cars and the squawk of automobile horns; one has to wait for such rare opportunities as last night brought.

In the overture to "Tannhauser," which ended the program, Dr. Koussevitzky built up a climax of stirring power. Brilliant brass and singing strings electrified an audience that had sat attentively through a program weighty enough to test the stamina of any concert-goer.

The program:

"From the Apocalypse" .... Liadov
Symphony No. 3 in F-major, op. 90 . Brahms
  I. Allegro con brio
  II. Andante
  III. Poco allegretto
  IV. Allegro
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
"Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried"
  (Act II) .... Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser" .... Wagner

QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

FEB 2 - 1937

AL MITCHELL IS NEW TEACHER AT CONSERVATORY HERE

The appointment of a new instructor for cornet and trumpet at the Quincy Conservatory of Music has been announced by John M. Lyons, the director of this well known school. The new teacher is Al Mitchell, who is well known as a trumpeter and teacher of the highest calibre.

Mr. Mitchell studied with Kurt Schmeisser who was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and also with ~~Louis~~ Kloepfel who was head of the brass instruction department of the New England Conservatory of Music. Mr. Mitchell has had a wealth of experience in both the concert and dance music fields. He has been featured trumpeter with a number of famous orchestras among whom are Ruby Newman's Society orchestra, Morey Pearl's, Joe Rines and Al Starita He was with Al Donahue's orchestra at Bermuda for two years. He has also been featured in the Metropolitan Theatre Orchestra under the baton of Fabian Sevitsky, and with Henri Taylor's concert orchestra at Belmont Manor at Bermuda.

Young people studying the trumpet today are interested in learning both the concert and dance style of playing which are quite different. Mr. Mitchell will teach both styles and pupils whoh ave learned the fundamentals of trumpet playing will be interested in studying the latest method of "hot" trumpet playing after the manner of Red Nickels, Louis Armstrong and others.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

FEB 6 - 1937

The Choir Loft

Verdi's 'Requiem' Will Be Given at St. Bartholomew's Church Next Wednesday —Many Oratorio and Festival Services Are Planned for Tomorrow.

By WILLARD IRVING NEVINS.

Recent Recordings.

Another admirable recording by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky is that of Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. IV in F minor, which will be found in Victor Album M-327. This symphony seems to be finding new favor with conductors who for a long time found the fifth and sixth ones the great favorites of their audiences. The recording in this album is excellent.

Faure's Sonata in A major, which Jascha Heifetz has featured in his recent concert appearances, comes to us in Victor Album M-328. Beautifully interpreted by Mr. Heifetz, with Emanuel Bay at the piano, this sonata provides delightful entertainment. It abounds in sparkling allegros and broad sustained melodic sections.

MEDFORD, ORE.
MAIL TRIBUNE

JAN 27 1937

Editorial Correspondence

PORTLAND, Jan. 25.—Not so wintry up here. Snow is melting fast, and sun is breaking through the clouds every now and then. Took a jaunt along the water front which is a dismal "NO MAN'S LAND". Not a sea-going ship in sight, the wharves deserted and covered with dirty slush. But picked up some great news if it's true. An old bridge tender declared the maritime strike will be ended this week,—he got a straight tip from San Francisco to that effect. As corroboration he said all the workers were preparing to resume work, here and in Seattle. We said we hoped he was right, which didn't seem to please him very much. He said he KNEW he was right. Well we shall see, what we shall see.

• • • • •

Too bad, in ONE way, this strike has been so peaceful and UNdramatic. Had there been at the outset, a few good riots, some head cracking and bloodshed,—perhaps a few fires and floods thrown in for good measure—the strike would have ended long ago. For then public opinion would have been aroused at once, and public opinion can do anything, if it is strong enough. Take these floods along the Ohio river, attended by costly fires, and large losses in lives and property. The people of Portland have already subscribed several thousands of dollars for relief. That shows public opinion has been aroused—the people can visualize the tragedy and suffering. Far greater losses in money and property have been caused by the maritime strike—some figure the total at half a billion dollars,—but it has been impossible for the people as a whole to visualize anything like that, and unless their own pocketbooks were directly affected, really sense it. So the strike has dragged on and on and promises to end with no decisive results on either side,—the poor suffering public as usual holding the sack.

• • • • •

Portland movie theatres pay no attention to the distinguished movie editor of the Medford Mail Tribune. He doesn't like these long two-feature programs, and has so stated. But here in the Rose City there is nothing else but. You can't see Deanna Durbin in "Three Smart Girls" without sitting through Edmund Lowe and Elissa Landi in "Mad Holiday"; and you can't have a look at "Three Men On a Horse" without also witnessing "Tarzan's Escape."

STRANGE—in all our wandering we have only discovered one person—a flip young undergraduate of 20 years—who admitted he liked double feature programs, and yet they not only continue, but judging by Portland, they are becoming practically universal. WHAT IS THE ANSWER? Probably this—when it comes to movie programs, the older boys and girls have nothing to say about it. However we still maintain that if some movie manager would advertise one good feature, one snappy news reel, and one or two high class comedies, there would be a fortune in it.

• • • • •

With the published announcement the Portland flu epidemic had its back broken, we decided to see Eddie Cantor's little gal in her premiere. Assuming no pesky flu bacilli selected us as their host, can truthfully say, by so doing we made a good investment. In fact Three Smart Girls, is swell entertainment, and we would like to put in a good word for Nan Grey and Barbara Read, Miss Durbin's older sisters, who can't sing like Galli-Curchi—used to—but can act. In fact in spite of such stiff professional competition as Alice Brady and Binne Barnes, these three sub debs stole the show. We will say nothing about Charles Winninger for we can't stand the man,—never could,—just a personal prejudice we admit, but personal prejudices are other factors the movie magnates should take into account! But we would like to hand a bouquet to Mischa Auer who takes the part of the inebriated nobleman—have seen him for years in minor roles,—his work in this should give him a salary raise and a lead, for when polite comedy is concerned he has what it takes,—intelligence and restraint.

• • • • •

All we can say for "Mad Holiday" is that it was well named. If you want to have a holiday from popular mystery crime films, enjoy a travesty on them, and then go entirely cuckoo in the bargain you will not be as bored by this waste of good material as we were. Probably it's all in the mood. But after the sweetness and delicacy and wholesome fun of Three Smart

Holiday was rather like enduring band, after enjoying the Boston
d quality of the Lowe-Landis opus, w what we mean. It was bogus.
ry thriller is all right, but to put was, leaves you nothing to chew ble bill problem again. Mad Holi-

-Lowe and Landi backed up by ize stooge, and a very competent lity of hooking it up with a little Like serving hash and a fried egg, hell and green turtle soup!

• • •

Portland has returned to normalcy at last. It's four p. m., dark as your hat, and the rain is coming down in buckets!

R. W. R.

81

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

JAN 27 1937

Symphony Pays Barbour Tribute

Koussevitsky Leads Boston Orchestra in Memorial to Brown President.

The Boston Symphony orchestra paid tribute to the memory of Dr. Clarence A. Barbour at the third concert of the series last evening at the Metropolitan Theatre. Several years ago Brown University conferred the honorary degree, doctor of music, upon Serge Koussevitsky and in memory of the recently deceased educator the eminent conductor presented "From the Apocalypse" by the Russia composer Liadov.

The composition was well chosen. It had a definite spiritual quality and was played with great insight into the beauties of the score. The strings announced a single sustained opening note which progressed in intensity and color through a series of slowly resolving seventh chords. Celesta and harp passages led up to a climax in the brass choir which seemed to resemble the triumph and accomplishment of a great life. Through a section written in the manner of Gregorian chant, an antiphonal effect was given as choir answered choir, until a restful pianissimo ended the music as the composition closed with an almost imperceptible roll of a muffled drum.

Symphony No. 3 in F major by Brahms was given an inspiring interpretation. The symphony, in four movement, contains some of the composer's loveliest melodies as well as some of his most intricate yet perfectly worked out designs. It is strong, happy music and its exhilaration is felt throughout. A bold motto-theme of three chords by reeds and brass opens the first movement, an allegro con brio. Soon the lovely second theme is given out by clarinets in the style of a slow dance. Cross rhythms and the inversion of the opening theme are interesting to note as the stormy climax is built. The second movement, andante, is in direct contrast. It has calm hymn-like simplicity, yet in the working out of the plan there are frequent suggestions of the motto-theme. The third movement, poco allegretto, is a sort of intermezzo, light in character. It affords a little rest before the grand and impressive fourth movement, an allegro. The depth of color in the orchestration of this part is noteworthy. Here the motive theme is given a chorale-like version and after skillful development with full orchestra it gradually reaches a serene conclusion.

Three Wagnerian favorites made the last group on the program. The prelude to "Lohengrin" is really, according to Wagner's own poetic interpretation, a vision of the angel-host revealing the wonder of the Holy Grail, which makes pure the heart of the beholder. The music has the ethereal texture to convey this mental picture to the listener, and the orchestra interpreted it beautifully to the last delicate phrase. Nowhere except in a virtuoso group can be found such perfect unity of tone and gradation of color. "Forest Murmurs," from "Siegfried," was, as the title suggests, descriptive of rustling leaves depicted by muted strings, and bird songs played by oboe and flute. This number was played with rare artistry. The overture to "Tannhauser" was the final number. This contains the main theme of the opera and is perhaps as well known as any Wagnerian number. It certainly is a favorite one and loses nothing in frequent hearing. The orchestra brought out everything in the score and reached a magnificent climax.

Mr. Koussevitsky was recalled many times, and the audience was thoroughly appreciative of its rare privilege of hearing this fine orchestra and its distinguished conductor as another successful concert was added to their already long Providence list. R. F.

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

FEB 7 - 1937

Pier Tirindelli Dies; Violinist and Composer

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—(AP)—Friends in New York today received a telegram announcing the death today in Rome, Italy, of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, Italian violinist and composer, who was associated for many years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Death was due to a heart attack.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JAN 27 1937

MUSIC

Brilliant Performance of Brahms's Third and Wagner Items Marks Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.—Memory of Dr. Barbour Honored

By G. Y. Loveridge

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitzky, gave the third of its season's concerts here in Metropolitan Theatre last night, and proved again—what nobody had doubted—that it is one of the world's finest.

The large audience was very enthusiastic. In response to the applause. Dr. Koussevitzky several times motioned the orchestra to its feet, and he himself was recalled again and again.

In memory of Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, Brown University president, the orchestra played a selection by Anatol Liadov, "From the Apocalypse," Op. 66. This was a substitution for the Taneiev entr'acte from "Oresteia," which was to have opened the program. Liadov, who was born in St. Petersburg in 1855 and died in 1914, was one of the Russian group associated with Rimsky-Korsakov.

Dr. Koussevitzky, in 1926, received an honorary degree from Brown University, and at that time expressed his appreciation by a virtuoso performance on the double-bass. Last night, with solemn brass and drums and strings, he eloquently honored the departed leader of the institution that a decade ago had honored him.

This music is seldom heard. It is portentous and somber, laden with dark visions. Now it is lightened by a sweep of harp-strings, now closed about with the awesome, majestic utterance of trombones. The winds of heaven are in the violins, and the tympani call ominously to the mortal listener to think of those things that are not of time but of eternity. Dr. Koussevitzky set forth these things and many more, reading the music with reverent insight. At the conclusion, he did not seem to wish for the applause that was given him.

The program continued with the third symphony of Brahms, which has not been heard here in many years. This work has almost no physical excitement in it; but spiritually it is intensely exciting. It seems to portray a mood induced by calm introspection, to set down on a larger canvas the atmosphere and thought of certain of the chamber works. Now and then there is a subdued gaiety in the woodwind, but more often there comes the brooding voice of the horn curving above the strings, the dark pattern of violas.

This symphony, which could easily become tedious, the orchestra played with great brilliance and precision. Here there is no opportunity to bewilder the listener with displays of force and fire; it is delicacy of phrasing, sensitive nuance and play of tone color that create the spell. In this work, as always, when this orchestra plays, there were precision and balance, secure intonation and smooth articulation. But there was more than that. It might be said that the orchestra played not so much the notes as the music.

It was a virtuoso performance by both orchestra and leader. It testified again to the individual and collective excellence of these remarkable musicians, and to the power of Dr. Koussevitzky in searching out and revealing the beauties of symphonic literature.

The evening was notable further for a very fine reading of the "Lohengrin" prelude. Beautiful string tone, restrained to the most delicate pianissimo and enriched by delicate woodwind voices, created an atmosphere of unearthly splendor. For a few memorable minutes the everyday world vanished at the impact of these magical harmonies, and the thoughts that cling to making-a-living and buying-and-selling had time to venture into unwonted fields. It's too bad, but hardly anybody thinks of knighthood and the Holy Grail while listening to the clank of street cars and the squawk of automobile horns; one has to wait for such rare opportunities as last night brought.

In the overture to "Tannhauser," which ended the program, Dr. Koussevitzky built up a climax of stirring power. Brilliant brass and singing strings electrified an audience that had sat attentively through a program weighty enough to test the stamina of any concert-goer.

The program:

"From the Apocalypse" .... Liadov
Symphony No. 3 in F-major, op. 90. Brahms
  I. Allegro con brio
  II. Andante
  III. Poco allegretto
  IV. Allegro
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
"Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried" (Act II) .... Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser" .... Wagner

QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

FEB 2 - 1937

AL MITCHELL IS NEW TEACHER AT CONSERVATORY HERE

The appointment of a new instructor for cornet and trumpet at the Quincy Conservatory of Music has been announced by John M. Lyons, the director of this well known school. The new teacher is Al Mitchell, who is well known as a trumpeter and teacher of the highest calibre.

Mr. Mitchell studied with Kurt Schmeisser who was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and also with Louis Kloepfel who was head of the brass instruction department of the New England Conservatory of Music. Mr. Mitchell has had a wealth of experience in both the concert and dance music fields. He has been featured trumpeter with a number of famous orchestras among whom are Ruby Newman's Society orchestra, Morey Pearl's, Joe Rines and Al Starita He was with Al Donahue's orchestra at Bermuda for two years. He has also been featured in the Metropolitan Theatre Orchestra under the baton of Fabian Sevitsky, and with Henri Taylor's concert orchestra at Belmont Manor at Bermuda.

Young people studying the trumpet today are interested in learning both the concert and dance style of playing which are quite different. Mr. Mitchell will teach both styles and pupils whoh ave learned the fundamentals of trumpet playing will be interested in studying the latest method of "hot" trumpet playing after the manner of Red Nickels, Louis Armstrong and others.

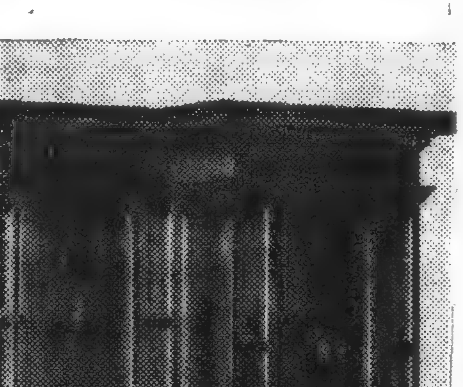
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

FEB 6 - 1937

T

Ver

Ba



Recent Recordings.

Another admirable recording by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky is that of Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. IV in F minor, which will be found in Victor Album M-327. This symphony seems to be finding new favor with conductors who for a long time found the fifth and sixth ones the great favorites of their audiences. The recording in this album is excellent.

Faure's Sonata in A major, which Jascha Heifetz has featured in his recent concert appearances, comes to us in Victor Album M-328. Beautifully interpreted by Mr. Heifetz, with Emanuel Bay at the piano, this sonata provides delightful entertainment. It abounds in sparkling allegros and broad sustained melodic sections.

MEDFORD, ORE.
MAIL TRIBUNE

JAN 27 1937

Editorial Correspondence

PORTLAND, Jan. 25.—Not so wintry up here. Snow is melting fast, and sun is breaking through the clouds every now and then. Took a jaunt along the water front which is a dismal "NO MAN'S LAND". Not a sea-going ship in sight, the wharves deserted and covered with dirty slush. But picked up some great news if it's true. An old bridge tender declared the maritime strike will be ended this week,—he got a straight tip from San Francisco to that effect. As corroboration he said all the workers were preparing to resume work, here and in Seattle. We said we hoped he was right, which didn't seem to please him very much. He said he KNEW he was right. Well we shall see, what we shall see.

• • • • •

Too bad, in ONE way, this strike has been so peaceful and UNdramatic. Had there been at the outset, a few good riots, some head cracking and bloodshed,—perhaps a few fires and floods thrown in for good measure—the strike would have ended long ago. For then public opinion would have been aroused at once, and public opinion can do anything, if it is strong enough. Take these floods along the Ohio river, attended by costly fires, and large losses in lives and property. The people of Portland have already subscribed several thousands of dollars for relief. That shows public opinion has been aroused—the people can visualize the tragedy and suffering. Far greater losses in money and property have been caused by the maritime strike—some figure the total at half a billion dollars,—but it has been impossible for the people as a whole to visualize anything like that, and unless their own pocketbooks were directly affected, really sense it. So the strike has dragged on and on and promises to end with no decisive results on either side,—the poor suffering public as usual holding the sack.

• • • • •

Portland movie theatres pay no attention to the distinguished movie editor of the Medford Mail Tribune. He doesn't like these long two-feature programs, and has so stated. But here in the Rose City there is nothing else but. You can't see Deanna Durbin in "Three Smart Girls" without sitting through Edmund Lowe and Elissa Landi in "Mad Holiday"; and you can't have a look at "Three Men On a Horse" without also witnessing "Tarzan's Escape."

STRANGE—in all our wandering we have only discovered one person—a flip young undergraduate of 20 years—who admitted he liked double feature programs, and yet they not only continue, but judging by Portland, they are becoming practically universal. WHAT IS THE ANSWER? Probably this—when it comes to movie programs, the older boys and girls have nothing to say about it. However we still maintain that if some movie manager would advertise one good feature, one snappy news reel, and one or two high class comedies, there would be a fortune in it.

• • • • •

With the published announcement the Portland flu epidemic had its back broken, we decided to see Eddie Cantor's little gal in her premiere. Assuming no pesky flu bacilli selected us as their host, can truthfully say, by so doing we made a good investment. In fact Three Smart Girls, is swell entertainment, and we would like to put in a good word for Nan Grey and Barbara Read, Miss Durbin's older sisters, who can't sing like Galli-Curchi—used to—but can act. In fact in spite of such stiff professional competition as Alice Brady and Binne Barnes, these three sub debs stole the show. We will say nothing about Charles Winninger for we can't stand the man,—never could,—just a personal prejudice we admit, but personal prejudices are other factors the movie magnates should take into account! But we would like to hand a bouquet to Mischa Auer who takes the part of the inebriated nobleman—have seen him for years in minor roles,—his work in this should give him a salary raise and a lead, for when polite comedy is concerned he has what it takes,—intelligence and restraint.

• • • • •

All we can say for "Mad Holiday" is that it was well named. If you want to have a holiday from popular mystery crime films, enjoy a travesty on them, and then go entirely cuckoo in the bargain you will not be as bored by this waste of good material as we were. Probably it's all in the mood. But after the sweetness and delicacy and wholesome fun of Three Smart Girls, sitting through Mad Holiday was rather like enduring a cheap night club swing band, after enjoying the Boston Symphony. And the cockeyed quality of the Lowe-Landis opus, wasn't authentic,—if you know what we mean. It was bogus. To put on a satire of a mystery thriller is all right, but to put on a satire of a satire, as this was, leaves you nothing to chew on, but slush.

Moreover there is that double bill problem again. Mad Holiday has a marvellous cast—Lowe and Landi backed up by Zasu Pitts, Healey and his prize stooge, and a very competent supporting cast, but the stupidity of hooking it up with a little gem like Three Smart Girls. Like serving hash and a fried egg, after Blue Point on the half shell and green turtle soup!

• • • • •

Portland has returned to normalcy at last. It's four p. m., dark as your hat, and the rain is coming down in buckets!

R. W. R.

186 8

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
JAN 29 1937

MUSIC

By LAWRENCE GILMAN

Enesco Appears With the Philharmonic-Symphony as Guest Conductor

3,275th concert of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York, under the direction of Georges Enesco, Guest Composer-Conductor, at Carnegie Hall:

PROGRAM

1. Gluck..Overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis"
2. Dukas...........Symphony in C major
   I. Allegro non troppo
   II. Andante espressivo
   III. Allegro spiritoso
   (First time by the Society)

Intermission

3. Jora.....................Marche Julve
   (First performance in America)
4. Enesco.Symphony in E-flat major, Op. 13
   I. Assez vif et rhythme
   II. Lent
   III. Vif et vigoureux
   (First time by the Society)

Georges Enesco

Directing the Philharmonic-Symphony as guest

GEORGES ENESCO, the eminent Roumanian who can do almost everything with music but make it sound pretentious or superficial or insincere, directed the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra last evening in the first of a series of eight concerts at which he will appear as guest conductor. Mr. Enesco is not only a conductor. He is a famous violin virtuoso, a composer of force and imagination, an excellent pianist, a 'cellist and an organist. I have never heard that he can also, like Mr. Koussevitzky, play the double bass, but I am quite prepared to believe it.

Fourteen years ago Mr. Enesco conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra in one of its concerts at Carnegie Hall (it was his first appearance in America). He has been heard here since then as conductor and violinist, but he had never led the Philharmonic before last night.

* * *

It was heartening to observe the manner in which Mr. Enesco was received by last evening's audience, which is used to fine musicians and (to say the least) good conducting. It was heartening, because Mr. Enesco had not been on the stage for thirty seconds before he had quite unintentionally made manifest, to the people who were watching him, the fact that he is an artist of unassailable integrity, simplicity, and rectitude. It would be difficult to say how an artist can and does make known his possession of such qualities—often before he raises a baton or moves a bow or touches a keyboard. But it happens, again and again; and it happened last night. The whole aspect of the visitor, his bearing, his gestures, his attitude, betrayed the directness and warmth and fineness of the artist and the man.

The audience, assured of these things, sat back and waited to hear Mr. Enesco conduct Gluck's overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis" and the unfamiliar symphony of Paul Dukas.

* * *

The thrice-familiar Overture went well. But Mr. Enesco did not get into his stride until he began to conduct the Symphony of the man who wrote "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." The symphony itself was introduced here a quarter of a century ago by Walter Damrosch (who in those days introduced most new music to America or to New York). It has seldom been played here since. It is not difficult to realize why. Dukas, the composer of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," of the noble and moving opera after Maeterlinck, "Ariane et Barbe-Bleue," was a master. The Dukas of the C major Symphony (it dates from the middle '90s, when Dukas was in his thirties), is a far less remarkable composer. This music is for the most part undistinguished, though there are striking and effective passages in the slow movement. In the vigorous Finale, Dukas remembers too well a certain famous Belgian, and strews his score with fragments of the somewhat shopworn halo of Père Franck.

* * *

But clearly Mr. Enesco thinks well of the work. He conducted it last night with every evidence of regard, and with abounding vitality, confidence, and musicianly care. When he came to the end of the piece, the audience burst into applause of a heartiness beyond mistaking. If they did not particularly like the symphony (though perhaps they did), they certainly liked Mr. Enesco—liked his directness and ardor and sincerity, and that quality about the man that is endearing and restorative. They summoned him many times to the stage before they allowed him to retire to his temporary resting-place upstairs behind the scenes.

* * *

Mr. Enesco's own symphony, the First, in E flat, ended the program (prefaced by an amusing and clever "Marche Juive" by his countryman, Mihail Jora). Mr. Enesco's symphony is an incomparably finer work than the symphony of Dukas. It has been known here since 1911, when Walter Damrosch introduced it. But it is heard too seldom. This is valid and attaching music, admirably written, often moving, often engrossing. We do not know Enesco's music well enough (except the two familiar "Roumanian Rhapsodies"). He is due for a revival.

American
Hebrew & Jewish Tribune
JAN 22 1937

MUSIC

David Ewen

A MUSICAL discovery of major significance was revealed at the recent concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitzky. It was a symphony by Muzio Clementi — famous composer of musical exercises for the piano—which had been lost for a century. It may be recalled by the reader that recently a series of Clementi symphonies, which mysteriously disappeared, were discovered in a private collection and bought by Carl Engel for the Library of Congress in Washington. Many of these symphonies were in fragments which the Italian composer, Alfredo Casella, reconstructed into a unified whole. One of these symphonies, in D-major, which required the least amount of surgical attention on the part of Mr. Casella, was featured at the recent New York concert of the Boston orchestra. It proved to be a work of such imagination and originality, a work so filled with vernal ideas, that musical history may be compelled to revaluate the significance of Clementi.

To the historian the symphony may prove to be of especial importance because, written though it was in an age of classicism, it is suffused with the Romantic spirit, evoking at certain moments the accents of the Romantic composers that were soon to emerge. The enchanting third movement is a Schubertian waltz at its best; the first movement is richly emotional, cluttered with intriguing figures of deeply felt melodies. But the most complete and most inspired movement of the work is the second, in which Clementi proved himself to be an introspective poet capable of transferring his sensitive musings to tone.

OTHER CONCERTS of the week brought us the final appearances of the season of John Barbirolli as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic. What we said originally about Barbirolli we maintain still: he is a conductor of talent and taste, but he is still artistically immature. He is a growing artist, it is true; but, as we have said once before, an orchestra that has known Toscanini for ten years should not be subjected to the growing pains of a conductor. Why Barbirolli has been selected as the permanent conductor of the Philharmonic will remain a mystery to this critic, who feels that men like Erich Kleiber, Otto Klemperer and Bruno Walter are much more deserving of the post.

The week also brought us an evening of impeccable violin playing by Jascha Heifetz in a program that included a Bach partita, the Concerto by Ernst and an unfamiliar sonata by Gabriel Faure. Gaspar Cassado gave a violoncello recital which confirmed our opinion that he is one of the great living violoncellists. Poldi Mildner again disclosed her phenomenal pianistic technique.

DAVID EWEN.

FORT WAYNE, IND.
JOURNAL-GAZETTE
JAN 31 1937

Arrange Outstanding Program for Civic Symphony Concert

ASIDE FROM the unusual attraction represented by two local soloists, Anna Wambaugh Mast and Marguerite Baker, a program of outstanding interest is announced by Conductor Gaston Bailhe in his orchestral selections for the civic symphony concert February 7 at Concordia college music hall.

Few beyond the most scholarly are familiar with the career of Antonio Maria Gaspere Sacchini, the Italian, born at Pozzuoli near Naples, July 23, 1734, died at Paris, October 7, 1786. All of his many operatic endeavors have long since been consigned to oblivion, still the overture to his opera, "Oedipus at Colonna," serves to keep alive the name of a man who, in the words of Prof. Burney, the foremost authority of that age, is described as a "graceful, elegant and judicious composer." His early years, turned toward paths of music by the chance song which an alert friend had heard and had used his influence toward enrolling the talented youth in the conservatory at Naples, was the initial step in what proved to be a brilliant career. There Sacchini progressed rapidly in his study of the violin. But that lack of balance so frequently the handicap of genius, retarded his progress. As a young man he went to Venice; by 1770 we find him at Stuttgart, Munich, and later in England. Calumny and jealousy were rampant among musicians then as always, and the dissolute habits of the young Italian estranged his friends, impaired his health, and involved him deeply in debt.

Queen Is Patron

Sacchini finally settled in Paris in 1782. There he seemed to make more progress under the patronage of no less a personage than the queen, Marie Antoinette. The emperor, Joseph II, having known Sacchine, and cognizant of his exceptional talent, recommended the queen's interest.

The opera, "Oedipus at Colonna" was completed in 1785. Marie Antoinette promised that it should be the first opera at the Royal theater during the court's next residence at Fontainebleau. As the time approached nothing further was said of it, and Sacchini remarked with anxiety that the queen avoided him and seemed uneasy in his presence. The suspense became intolerable; the composer sought an audience with his champion, and then only did he learn that national jealousy had robbed him of the crowning achievement so anxiously anticipated.

"My dear Sacchini," said the queen, "I am accused of showing too much favour to foreignors. I have been so much pressed to command a performance of M. Lemoine's 'Phedre' instead of your 'Oedipus' that I cannot refuse. You see the situation; forgive me."

It is related that poor Sacchini controlled himself for the moment, but on arriving home gave way to despair. The queen's favour lost, he believed his only chance was gone. He took to his bed then and there, and died three months afterwards.

Work Long Popular

Little did the unfortunate composer realize that the fickleness of French popularity would prove but a temporary impediment to the production of this, his last opera. It was performed for the first time at Versailles, April 4, 1786, less than a year after Sacchini's death. For the next 57 years, from 1787 to 1844 it had no less than 583 representations and was on the "boards" of the opera almost continuously. But, like too many works of the Italian school, it became outmoded by the middle of the nineteenth century. Today, the overture to "Oedipus at Colonna" which the civic symphony will use to start its program, is all that remains popular out of over 41 operas, 21 sacred compositions, two symphonies, and some chamber music.

The influence of Gluck is unmistakable in the later works of Sacchini. Among second rate writers he stands first; had he possessed a little more force, a little less facility, he might not be numbered among those listed by Ernest Newman, the great English critic, as "but a name to contrast rather than compare with Richard Wagner."

Another composer, a contemporary, nearly two centuries removed from Sacchini, but born of an Italian mother and a German father, is Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari. He was born at Venice, January 12, 1876.

It is remarkable how few operatic composers possess the faculty of establishing a libretto on the plane of their musical composition. Here is a man in whom the most sought after, the most elusive faculty, is prolific—the art of melody. His best known work, the opera, "Jewels of the Madonna," contains music that is passionate and picturesque. The two "Intermezzi," and the "Prayer," the latter of which Mr. Bailhe has selected for this concert, have established Wolf-Ferrari as a composer of exceptional talent; still the opera itself, with a story lurid in the extreme, and without a redeeming feature, a sordid, revolting plot, cannot be redeemed by music, however beautiful. Fortunately the concert hall has been enriched though the stage has suffered by the pen of this gifted man.

In the year 1866, Johannes Brahms published his opus 39, a set of 16 waltzes for the pianoforte, for four hands. Originally, these waltzes were designed as chamber-work compositions, and were never intended for use in a ballroom. But unquestionably Brahms was influenced by the spirit of Viennese joyousness, and the famous critic, Hanslick, in reviewing them, spoke of the influence of Vienna: how the city had not only set Beethoven to dancing, but also to writing dance music, how it had inspired Schumann to write his "Fasching-schwank"; and so Brahms, far from Vienna (for he lived in various towns from 1864 to 1869) fondly remembered waltzes by Strauss, landler by Schubert, warblers and gypsy music, the pretty girls, the heady wine, the hills crowned with green, wrote these waltzes as an expression of his recollections.

"Waltz melodies and rhythms are handled in free artistic form and ennobled by dignified treatment. There are hints at the swing of the Viennese Waltz, more frequently at the landler; now and then there is an echo of Schubert or Schumann, and toward the end the hearer is in Hungary."

As early as 1899 these waltzes were scored for a performance of the Boston Symphony orchestra. In the present rearrangement by Charles J. Roberts which the Civic Symphony orchestra will include on this program, six of the most melodious of these Brahms' waltzes have been combined into a charming suite. The fourth, in "A" major, is perhaps as well known as any item in the entire catalog of writings that Brahms has bequeathed to later generations.

CONCORD, N. H.
Monitor & N. H. Patriot
FEB 1 1937

Josef Hoffman, world renowned pianist, plays at Phillips Exeter academy Sunday evening, Feb. 14. Ruggiero Ricci, violinist, plays at Nashua this evening in the cocmunity concert series. Another violinist, Ruth Breton, is at the University of New Hampshire Wednesday evening. At the Keene normal school this evening the Aeolians, a quartette from the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be assisted by Doric Aviani, baritone. Geoffrey O'Hara, author of popular songs, was the guest speaker at a meeting of the In and About New Hampshire music club at Hanover. The Edward MacDowell Radio Festival, on national hook-ups last week was most successful.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
FEB 1 - 1937

Mahler's "Song of the Earth" ("Das Lied von der Erde") is announced by Serge Koussevitzky for performance at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York, which will be given on Friday evening, February 12, instead of the usual Thursday. The second concert will be given Saturday afternoon, February 13.

The orchestra will give its first Pension Fund concert in this city on Wednesday evening, February 10. Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony and Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, with Jascha Heifetz as soloist.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.
NEWS
FEB 2 1937

Witek Quintette Will Feature Greenwald Sunday Recital

On next Sunday at 4 p. m., Louis Greenwald will present the third in his series of eight chamber music concerts. These are given in the parish house of St. Paul's Church.

Three important ensemble works will be performed on Sunday by the "Witek Quintette." This group is composed entirely of native born American women, all of whom received their musical education in this country. It is the only group of its kind on the concert stage today.

Alma Witek, first violinist, was the wife of Anton Witek, late concert-master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One of her notable achievements is a recording for the Columbia Phonograph Company of a Bach concerto which she made with Mr. Witek. The remaining artists of the Quintette are Loris Gratke, second violin; Dorothea Bestor, viola; Virginia Nolte, cello, and Ruth Emerson, piano.

The program which the Witek Quintette presents here, will include works of Mozart, Dvorak and Schumann. It is the same program which they presented recently in the concert course of Columbia University.

Messrs. Hunkins and Ochsman, who were to be here on Sunday, are ill, and will appear at a later date.

GARDNER, MASS.
NEWS
FEB 2 - 1937

Margaret Pearson On Choral Club Concert Program

Margaret Pearson, Worcester contralto, who has sung with the Boston Symphony orchestra and other outstanding musical organizations, will be one of the soloists in the concert to be given by the Gardner Choral club in Pearson auditorium at the high school Friday night. Miss Pearson replaces Miss Marie Murray of Boston who will be unable to take part in the program because of illness.

She has sung in this city on several occasions and numbers many friends here. Tickets for the concert may be secured from club members.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
JAN 29 1937

MUSIC

By LAWRENCE GILMAN

Enesco Appears With the Philharmonic-Symphony as Guest Conductor

3,275th concert of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York, under the direction of Georges Enesco, Guest Composer-Conductor, at Carnegie Hall:

PROGRAM

1. Gluck..Overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis"
2. Dukas...........Symphony in C major
    I. Allegro non troppo
    II. Andante espressivo
    III. Allegro spiritoso
    (First time by the Society)

Intermission

3. Jora ....Marche Juive
    (First performance in America)
4. Enesco. Symphony in E-flat major, Op. 13
    I. Assez vif et rhythme
    II. Lent
    III. Vif et vigoureux
    (First time by the Society)

GEORGES ENESCO, the eminent Roumanian who can do almost everything with music but make it sound pretentious or superficial or insincere, directed the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra last evening in the first of a series of eight concerts at which he will appear as guest conductor. Mr. Enesco is not only a conductor. He is a famous violin virtuoso, a composer of force and imagination, an excellent pianist, a 'cellist and an organist. I have never heard that he can also, like Mr. Koussevitzky, play the double bass, but I am quite prepared to believe it.

Fourteen years ago Mr. Enesco conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra in one of its concerts at Carnegie Hall (it was his first appearance in America). He has been heard here since then as conductor and violinist, but he had never led the Philharmonic before last night.

* * *

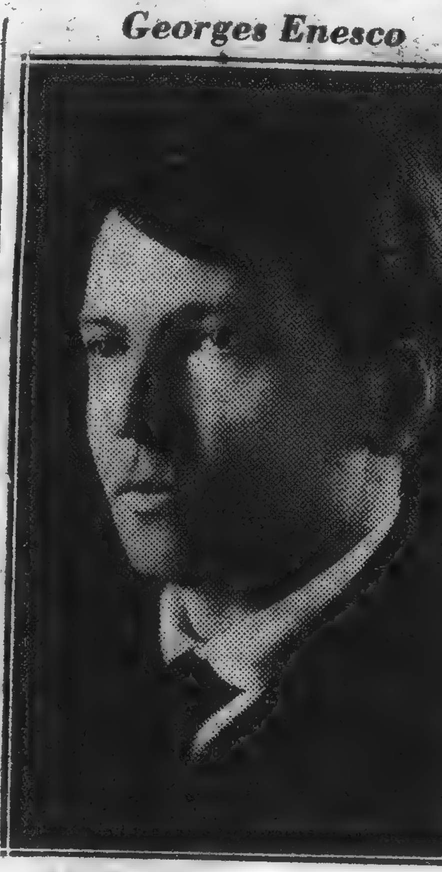
It was heartening to observe the manner in which Mr. Enesco was received by last evening's audience, which is used to fine musicians and (to say the least) good conducting. It was heartening, because Mr. Enesco had not been on the stage for thirty seconds before he had quite unintentionally made manifest, to the people who were watching him, the fact that he is an artist of unassailable integrity, simplicity, and rectitude. It would be difficult to say how an artist can and does make known his possession of such qualities—often before he raises a baton or moves a bow or touches a keyboard. But it happens, again and again; and it happened last night. The whole aspect of the visitor, his bearing, his gestures, his attitude, betrayed the directness and warmth and fineness of the artist and the man.

The audience, assured of these things, sat back and waited to hear Mr. Enesco conduct Gluck's overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis" and the unfamiliar symphony of Paul Dukas.

* * *

The thrice-familiar Overture went well. But Mr. Enesco did not get into his stride until he began to conduct the Symphony of the man who wrote "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." The symphony itself was introduced here a quarter of a century ago by Walter Damrosch (who in those days introduced most new music to America or to New York). It has seldom been played here since.

Georges Enesco



Directing the Philharmonic-Symphony as guest

It is not difficult to realize why. Dukas, the composer of "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," of the noble and moving opera after Maeterlinck, "Ariane et Barbe-Bleue," was a master. The Dukas of the C major Symphony (it dates from the middle '90s, when Dukas was in his thirties), is a far less remarkable composer. This music is for the most part undistinguished, though there are striking and effective passages in the slow movement. In the vigorous Finale, Dukas remembers too well a certain famous Belgian, and strews his score with fragments of the somewhat shopworn halo of Père Franck.

* * *

But clearly Mr. Enesco thinks well of the work. He conducted it last night with every evidence of regard, and with abounding vitality, confidence, and musicianly care. When he came to the end of the piece, the audience burst into applause of a heartiness beyond mistaking. If they did not particularly like the symphony (though perhaps they did), they certainly liked Mr. Enesco—liked his directness and ardor and sincerity, and that quality about the man that is endearing and restorative. They summoned him many times to the stage before they allowed him to retire to his temporary resting-place upstairs behind the scenes.

* * *

Mr. Enesco's own symphony, the First, in E flat, ended the program (prefaced by an amusing and clever "Marche Juive" by his countryman, Mihail Jora). Mr. Enesco's symphony is an incomparably finer work than the symphony of Dukas. It has been known here since 1911, when Walter Damrosch introduced it. But it is heard too seldom. This is valid and attaching music, admirably written, often moving, often engrossing. We do not know Enesco's music well enough (except the two familiar "Roumanian Rhapsodies"). He is due for a revival.

American
Hebrew & Jewish Tribune
JAN 22 1937 N.Y.C.

MUSIC

David Ewen

A MUSICAL discovery of major significance was revealed at the recent concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitzky. It was a symphony by Muzio Clementi — famous composer of musical exercises for the piano—which had been lost for a century. It may be recalled by the reader that recently a series of Clementi symphonies, which mysteriously disappeared, were discovered in a private collection and bought by Carl Engel for the Library of Congress in Washington. Many of these symphonies were in fragments which the Italian composer, Alfredo Casella, reconstructed into a unified whole. One of these symphonies, in D-major, which required the least amount of surgical attention on the part of Mr. Casella, was featured at the recent New York concert of the Boston orchestra. It proved to be a work of such imagination and originality. a work so filled with vernal ideas, that musical history may be compelled to revaluate the significance of Clementi.

To the historian the symphony may prove to be of especial importance because, written though it was in an age of classicism, it is suffused with the Romantic spirit, evoking at certain moments the accents of the Romantic composers that were soon to emerge. The enchanting third movement is a Schubertian waltz at its best; the first movement is richly emotional, cluttered with intriguing figures of deeply felt melodies. But the most complete and most inspired movement of the work is the second, in which Clementi proved himself to be an introspective poet capable of transferring his sensitive musings to tone.

*

OTHER CONCERTS of the week brought us the final appearances of the season of John Barbirolli as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic. What we said originally about Barbirolli we maintain still: he is a conductor of talent and taste, but he is still artistically immature. He is a growing artist, it is true; but, as we have said once before, an orchestra that has known Toscanini for ten years should not be subjected to the growing pains of a conductor. Why Barbirolli has been selected as the permanent conductor of the Philharmonic will remain a mystery to this critic, who feels that men like Erich Kleiber, Otto Klemperer and Bruno Walter are much more deserving of the post.

The week also brought us an evening of impeccable violin playing by Jascha Heifetz in a program that included a Bach partita, the Concerto by Ernst and an unfamiliar sonata by Gabriel Faure. Gaspar Cassado gave a violoncello recital which confirmed our opinion that he is one of the great living violoncellists. Poldi Mildner again disclosed her phenomenal pianistic technique.

DAVID EWEN.

FORT WAYNE, IND.
JOURNAL-GAZETTE
JAN 31 1937

Arrange Outstanding Program for Civic Symphony Concert

ASIDE FROM the unusual attraction represented by two local soloists, Anna Wambaugh Mast and Marguerite Baker, a program of outstanding interest is announced by Conductor Gaston Bailhe in his orchestral selections for the civic symphony concert February 7 at Concordia college music hall.

Few beyond the most scholarly are familiar with the career of Antonio Maria Gaspere Sacchini, the Italian, born at Pozzuoli near Naples, July 23, 1734, died at Paris, October 7, 1786. All of his many operatic endeavors have long since been consigned to oblivion, still the overture to his opera, "Oedipus at Colonna," serves to keep alive the name of a man who, in the words of Prof. Burney, the foremost authority of that age, is described as a "graceful, elegant and judicious composer." His early years, turned toward paths of music by the chance song which an alert friend had heard and had used his influence toward enrolling the talented youth in the conservatory at Naples, was the initial step in what proved to be a brilliant career. There Sacchini progressed rapidly in his study of the violin. But that lack of balance so frequently the handicap of genius, retarded his progress. As a young man he went to Venice; by 1770 we find him at Stuttgart, Munich, and later in England. Calumny and jealousy were rampant among musicians then as always, and the dissolute habits of the young Italian estranged his friends, impaired his health, and involved him deeply in debt.

Queen Is Patron

Sacchini finally settled in Paris in 1782. There he seemed to make more progress under the patronage of no less a personage than the queen, Marie Antoinette. The emperor, Joseph II, having known Sacchine, and cognizant of his exceptional talent, recommended the queen's interest.

The opera, "Oedipus at Colonna" was completed in 1785. Marie Antoinette promised that it should be the first opera at the Royal theater during the court's next residence at Fontainebleau. As the time approached nothing further was said of it, and Sacchini remarked with anxiety that the queen avoided him and seemed uneasy in his presence. The suspense became intolerable; the composer sought an audience with his champion, and then only did he learn that national jealousy had robbed him of the crowning achievement so anxiously anticipated.

"My dear Sacchini," said the queen, "I am accused of showing too much favour to foreignors. I have been so much pressed to command a performance of M. Lemoine's 'Phedre' instead of your 'Oedipus' that I cannot refuse. You see the situation; forgive me."

It is related that poor Sacchini controlled himself for the moment, but on arriving home gave way to despair. The queen's favour lost, he believed his only chance was gone. He took to his bed then and there, and died three months afterwards.

Work Long Popular

Little did the unfortunate composer realize that the fickleness of French popularity would prove but a temporary impediment to the production of this, his last opera. It was performed for the first time at Versailles, April 4, 1786, less than a year after Sacchini's death. For the next 57 years, from 1787 to 1844 it had no less than 583 representations and was on the "boards" of the opera almost continuously. But, like too many works of the Italian school, it became outmoded by the middle of the nineteenth century. Today, the overture to "Oedipus at Colonna" which the civic symphony will use to start its program, is all that remains popular out of over 41 operas, 21 sacred compositions, two symphonies, and some chamber music.

The influence of Gluck is unmistakable in the later works of Sacchini. Among second rate writers he stands first; had he possessed a little more force, a little less facility, he might not be numbered among those listed by Ernest Newman, the great English critic, as "but a name to contrast rather than compare with Richard Wagner."

Another composer, a contemporary, nearly two centuries removed from Sacchini, but born of an Italian mother and a German father, is Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari. He was born at Venice, January 12, 1876.

It is remarkable how few operatic composers possess the faculty of establishing a libretto on the plane of their musical composition. Here is a man in whom the most sought after, the most elusive faculty, is prolific—the art of melody. His best known work, the opera, "Jewels of the Madonna," contains music that is passionate and picturesque. The two "Intermezzi," and the "Prayer," the latter of which Mr. Bailhe has selected for this concert, have established Wolf-Ferrari as a composer of exceptional talent; still the opera itself, with a story lurid in the extreme, and without a redeeming feature, a sordid, revolting plot, cannot be redeemed by music, however beautiful. Fortunately the concert hall has been enriched though the stage has suffered by the pen of this gifted man.

In the year 1866, Johannes Brahms published his opus 39, a set of 16 waltzes for the pianoforte, for four hands. Originally, these waltzes were designed as chamber-work compositions, and were never intended for use in a ballroom. But unquestionably Brahms was influenced by the spirit of Viennese joyousness, and the famous critic, Hanslick, in reviewing them, spoke of the influence of Vienna; how the city had not only set Beethoven to dancing, but also to writing dance music, how it had inspired Schumann to write his "Fasching-schwank"; and so Brahms, far from Vienna (for he lived in various towns from 1864 to 1869) fondly remembered waltzes by Strauss, landler by Schubert, warblers and gypsy music, the pretty girls, the heady wine, the hills crowned with green, wrote these waltzes as an expression of his recollections.

"Waltz melodies and rhythms are handled in free artistic form and ennobled by dignified treatment. There are hints at the swing of the Viennese Waltz, more frequently at the landler; now and then there is an echo of Schubert or Schumann, and toward the end the hearer is in Hungary."

As early as 1899 these waltzes were scored for a performance of the Boston Symphony orchestra. In the present rearrangement by Charles J. Roberts which the Civic Symphony orchestra will include on this program, six of the most melodious of these Brahms' waltzes have been combined into a charming suite. The fourth, in "A" major, is perhaps as well known as any item in the entire catalog of writings that Brahms has bequeathed to later generations.

CONCORD, N. H.
Monitor & N. H. Patriot
FEB 1 - 1937

Josef Hoffman, world renowned pianist, plays at Phillips Exeter academy Sunday evening, Feb. 14. Ruggiero Ricci, violinist, plays at Nashua this evening in the coemunity concert series. Another violinist, Ruth Breton, is at the University of New Hampshire Wednesday evening. At the Keene normal school this evening the Aeolians, a quartette from the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be assisted by Doric Aviani, baritone. Geoffrey O'Hara, author of popular songs, was the guest speaker at a meeting of the In and About New Hampshire music club at Hanover. The Edward MacDowell Radio Festival, on national hook-ups last week was most successful.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
FEB 1 - 1937

Mahler's "Song of the Earth" ("Das Lied von der Erde") is announced by Serge Koussevitzky for performance at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York, which will be given on Friday evening, February 12, instead of the usual Thursday. The second concert will be given Saturday afternoon, February 13.

The orchestra will give its first Pension Fund concert in this city on Wednesday evening, February 10. Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony and Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, with Jascha Heifetz as soloist.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.
NEWS
FEB 2 - 1937

Witek Quintette Will Feature Greenwald Sunday Recital

On next Sunday at 4 p. m., Louis Greenwald will present the third in his series of eight chamber music concerts. These are given in the parish house of St. Paul's Church.

Three important ensemble works will be performed on Sunday by the "Witek Quintette." This group is composed entirely of native born American women, all of whom received their musical education in this country. It is the only group of its kind on the concert stage today.

Alma Witek, first violinist, was the wife of Anton Witek, late concert-master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One of her notable achievements is a recording for the Columbia Phonograph Company of a Bach concerto which she made with Mr. Witek. The remaining artists of the Quintette are Loris Gratke, second violin; Dorothea Bestor, viola; Virginia Nolte, cello, and Ruth Emerson, piano.

The program which the Witek Quintette presents here, will include works of Mozart, Dvorak and Schumann. It is the same program which they presented recently in the concert course of Columbia University.

Messrs. Hunkins and Ochsman, who were to be here on Sunday, are ill, and will appear at a later date.

GARDNER, MASS.
NEWS
FEB 2 - 1937

Margaret Pearson On Choral Club Concert Program

Margaret Pearson, Worcester contralto, who has sung with the Boston Symphony orchestra and other outstanding musical organizations, will be one of the soloists in the concert to be given by the Gardner Choral club in Pearson auditorium at the high school Friday night. Miss Pearson replaces Miss Marie Murray of Boston who will be unable to take part in the program because of illness.

She has sung in this city on several occasions and numbers many friends here. Tickets for the concert may be secured from club members.

88

COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN

187

JAN 3 0 1937

Personal Appearance

IGOR STRAVINSKY, "predominant living music-maker" (according to Lawrence Gilman), will come to Mees Hall, Capital University, for two concerts a week from tomorrow and Tuesday evenings. He will be pianist in a program of his own works, with Samuel Dushkin, violinist, assisting.

Columbus audiences are none too familiar with Stravinsky as a composer (has it gone beyond "Petroushka" and "L'oiseau de feu"?) and of course have had no opportunity to become acquainted with him as a person. He was scheduled for a similar concert last season in Capital University's series, but engagements kept him in Europe all season. Those who have heard the Philharmonic broadcasts of the last two Sundays have a better notion of Stravinsky's work, both as composer and interpreter (a word he disclaims), than they had before. Then he served as conductor of the New York orchestra in programs predominantly of his own music. Mr. Dushkin was to have been soloist on one of the Sundays, but illness prevented his participation. He seems to have recovered, for a day or two ago the pianist and violinist gave a two-man show in New York.

As a preface to the appearance here of the noted Russian musician, it may be of interest to quote from his autobiography, recently published by Simon and Schuster—which, incidentally, would make absorbing reading even if we were not so soon to see its author in the flesh.

In his boyhood in Russia in the '80s, Stravinsky had had thorough musical training, which of course included piano playing. But absorption in the problems of composition had kept him from stressing that aspect of the musical art. In the winter of 1922-23 he was finishing the writing of his piano concerto at Biarritz. There Serge Koussevitzky suggested that he ought to play the Concerto himself. The suggestion, indeed, probably opened up other welcome fields, for post-war poverty in Europe had curtailed Stravinsky's income, and that which he was deriving from his Russian properties had of course been completely cut off.

* * *

"I HESITATED at first," writes the diffident pianist-composer, "fearing that I should not have time to perfect my technique as a pianist, to practice enough and to acquire the endurance necessary to execute a work demanding sustained effort. But as I am by nature always temtped by anything needing prolonged effort, and prone to persist in overcoming difficulties, and as, also, the prospect of creating my work for myself, and thus establishing the manner in which I wished it to be played, greatly attracted me, these influences combined to induce me to undertake it.

"I began, therefore, the loosening of my fingers by playing a lot of Czerny exercises, which was not only very useful but gave me keen musical pleasure. I have always admired Czerny, not only as a remarkable teacher but also as a thoroughbred musician . . ."

"At the beginnining of my career as a piano soloist I naturally suffered from stage fright, and for a long time I had a good deal of difficulty in overcoming it. It was only by habit and sustained effort that I managed, in tme, to master my nerves and so to withstand one of the most distressing sensations that I know. In analyzing the cause of this stage fright, I have come to the conclusion that it is chiefly due to fear of a lapse of memory or of some distraction, however trifling, which might have irreparable consequences. . . . I remember at my first debut (at the Paris Opera under Konssevitzky) being seized by just such a lapse of memory, thought it fortunately had no dire results. Having finished the first part of my Concerto, just before beginning the Largo which opens with a piano solo, I suddenly realized that I had entirely forgotten how it started. I whispered this to Koussevitzky. He glanced at the score and whispered the first notes. That was enough to restore my balance and enable me to attack the Largo."

* * *

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

FEB 6 - 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY HERE FOR THREE CONCERTS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a special concert for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund Wednesday evening, February 10, at Carnegie Hall. Jascha Heifetz will play the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto; the orchestral selections will be the Tchaikovsky Fourth Symphony and the Mendelssohn "Italian" Symphony.

Mahler's "The Song of the Earth" will be presented Friday evening (in place of the usual Thursday evening) and Saturday afternoon, February 12 and 13. Soloists will be Maria Ranzow, contralto, and Paul Althouse, tenor. At the Friday concert the Mozart C major Symphony will be played; Saturday, the Mozart "Prague" Symphony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JAN 3 1 1937

RECENT RECORDINGS

By COMPTON PAKENHAM

TCHAIKOVSKY'S Fourth symphony (in F minor, Op. 36) is not new to the gramophone, but when played and recorded in the manner of other recent duplications by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky—Schubert's Unfinished and Mendelssohn's Italian, for example—it might just as well be. Here again, in Victor Album M-327, is refreshing directness of presentation coupled with exceptional orchestral balance and clarity. In such a purposeful reading this symphony can stand the exaggerated dynamics Koussevitzky gives it and the perfection of the detail compensates for what might have been unfortunate hall echoes.

In each of the four movements there is evidence of quality. In the first, through the bridge to the close of the exposition, the strings and woodwinds are in direct opposition and yet every detail of both choirs is clear and, later, the triple forte climax, generally mere noise, is made entirely intelligible. Then there is the unmistakable, dark color without which the second section is meaningless and the ease with which the lower strings can be followed when they take up the first theme in the third. Incidentally, this movement has been cut. On the re-entry of the strings, pizzicato, Koussevitzky goes straight to the repeat, omitting some seventy-five bars in order to get it all, without actually losing anything, on one side—as it should be.

Whatever one may think of the finale, from previous recordings, the opinion will be revised after hearing this. Following a magnificently virile opening it goes through with irresistible surge. Which might be applied to the whole set. By a combination of all the virtues that go to make a first-rate recording, several passages through which, thanks to blurred reproduction in earlier sets, Tchaikovsky seems to be tentatively feeling his way are made abundantly plain. After this one might have asked whether Koussevitzky and his orchestra were considering a re-recording of the last of Tchaikovsky's symphonies, but . . .

Coincidentally, in simultaneous release, Columbia comes out with the Sixth, in B minor, otherwise the Pathétique, played by the Paris Conservatory Orchestra under the direction of Philippe Gaubert (M. W. Album 277). Whether, despite several years' difference in recording, it will replace that by the Boston Orchestra (Victor M-85) is a matter for individual judgment—for ourselves, an emphatic negative. To do Tchaikovsky justice requires a certain almost vicious barbarity that the Paris orchestra lacks. A crueler bite to the strings and a keener intent to the whole scheme of things, particularly in the first movement, would have helped.

Tchaikovsky's name appears again on Victor Album M-326, in which the London Philharmonic Orchestra plays "Aurora's Wedding," a pasticcio ballet in the piecing together of which bits from another ballet, "The Sleeping Beauty," predominate. It is directed by Efrem Kurtz, conductor of the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe, in the current répertoire of which "Aurora's Wedding" finds a place. The successive pieces are typical of Tchaikovsky's dance manner, melodious and flowing without any excess weight. The recording might be considerably better and is by no means up to the current standard of the London Philharmonic. The bass is on the heavy side and tends to rumble in the old indefinite manner one thought had long since been rectified.

Brunswick has now added to its regular list a double-sided, ten-inch disk taken from the broadcast made by the Duke of Windsor a few hours after discharging his last duty as King and Emperor and immediately prior to his leaving England (7810). Not the only disk available of this historic but not especially significant talk, it is, however, the first to appear under one of the standard labels. Commencing with the introduction: "This is Windsor Castle. His Royal Highness Prince Edward * * *" it presents a good reproduction of the clear but not entirely characteristic radio voice.

On the subject of spoken records, Columbia issues a strange disk not the least of the peculiarities of which is that it is single sided. It carries Lincoln's Gettysburg Address declaimed by Charles Laughton and recorded abroad (S271M). Pronounced with a dignity fitting to the words yet without the sonorous overemphasis to which the idea of tradition too often tempts readers, it should be found of particular use in the schools.

Coming Programs

At the next pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Feb. 19 and 20 (the Orchestra will be out of town next week), the centenary of Alexander Pushkin, the Russian poet, will be observed with the performance of a Suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera, "Tsar Saltan," excerpts from the same composer's "Le Coq d'Or" and the Letter Scene from Tchaikovsky's opera, "Eugene Onegin." The soprano for the last-named number will be Olga Averino. The first part of the program will be Beethoven's Fourth Symphony in B-flat, a work somewhat neglected here recently.

The concert in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Thursday evening, Feb. 18, will be the occasion for a brief address by Professor Sorokin about Pushkin. The first part of the program will consist of the Overture to Glinka's "Russian and Ludmilla" and the "Coq d'Or" and Eugene Onegin" excerpts as above. The concert will end with Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" Symphony.

The performances of the Alban Berg Violin Concerto, with Louis Krasner, Boston violinist, as soloist, have been advanced from April, in the original announcement, to Friday afternoon and evening, Feb. 26 and 27. The re-arrangement means that it will be possible for Mr. Krasner, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Symphony Orchestra to present in New York as well as in Boston a work that is likely to be one of the most significant novelties in the current American symphonic season. The New York performance will take place in March.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMERICAN

FEB 7 - 1937

Boston Symphony Boxholders Listed

Mrs. Frank Reynolds will be the hostess in the committee box when the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes its third visit of the season to Brooklyn next Thursday. Half of the program for this mid-season concert in Brooklyn Academy of Music will be devoted to works of Wagner as follows: Prelude to "Lohengrin;" "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," Act II; and Overture to "Tannhauser." Brahms' Symphony No. 3 in F Major, op. 90; and "Suite in E Major, op. 63, for string orchestras, a composition by Foote, will comprise the first part of the program.

Other box holders will be: Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Frank E. Simmons, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Miss Irma A. Logan, Mrs. Robert F. Ives, Mrs. Joseph A. Bennett, and Rear Admiral Harris Laning, commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JAN 3 1 1937

Music on Records

Tschaikowsky's F Minor Symphony and Other February Releases

THE Victor Company recently issued a recording of Schubert's B minor Symphony by Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra though its list already included a recording of the work by Stokowski and the Philadelphians. This process of duplication is repeated now with Tschaikowsky's F minor Symphony, which was recorded years back under Stokowski's direction and now makes its appearance in a new recording conducted by Koussevitzky. One would understand this duplication of expensive multiple-disc sets if the point were the replacement of early and inferior recordings by new and superior ones. But in both instances mentioned the earlier recording is the better one—Stokowski's performances of the Schubert and Tschaikowsky symphonies were recorded before he had definitely set his feet in the direction of Hollywood and in time his extraordinary gifts — which properly developed, might have made him one of the greatest of orchestral conductors—are magnificently demonstrated. And the recordings of these performances, though they date back five years and more, are quite satisfactory.

The Koussevitzky recording of Tschaikowsky's Fourth, on the other hand, has serious defects, and this despite the fact that the new and superior recording technique was used in making it. These defects, which the listener recognizes in the poor balance of instrumental choirs, in the disproportion of sound in loud passages and soft passages, in the distortions of tone affecting chiefly the woodwind instruments, and in a persistent echo, are probably all due to a single cause—to the making of the recording under unfavorable physical conditions, in an empty auditorium, in an auditorium or studio with poor acoustics, or something of the sort. It is impossible to believe that this recording was made under conditions identical with those which prevailed for the Koussevitzky recordings of, say, Sibelius' Second Symphony and Strauss's "Zarathustra."

There is no excuse whatsoever for variation in quality among the recordings of a single orchestra. If the recording studios wish to experiment with various methods of recording, the results when unsatisfactory by prevailing standards should be discarded and not issued for sale. A number of Stokowski recordings made during the past few years represented experiments on the part of the conductor and Victor technicians in the use of a small orchestra; these experiment resulted in unsatisfactory recordings and were subsequently abandoned. But the recordings were not retired and charged to profit and loss—an attempt was made to market them, involving everybody in loss—the record buyer who, having heard Stokowski's superb recordings of the first three Brahms symphonies, naturally expected this conductor's recording of the fourth to measure up to standard; the conductor and orchestra, whose prestige naturally suffered; the Victor Company, which was later obliged to issue a third recording of this work by the BBC orchestra under Fritz Busch.

This is as good a time as any to draw attention to the need for replacing some of the older Boston Symphony recordings with new ones. Discs made by the Boston Symphony before the introduction of high-frequency recording were under the standard set in this country by the Philadelphia Orchestra recordings of the same period. Yet at this time Koussevitzky recorded a number of works of which his performances are the finest we are likely in this generation to hear. Ravel's second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite, for one example; Stravinsky's "Petrouschka" for another. But when these works are re-recorded by Koussevitzky, let it be under conditions that will faithfully reproduce the characteristics of the music and of its performance.

QUINCY, MASS.
NEWS

FEB 4 - 1937

* * * *

"From every point in the compass in Massachusetts, music lovers flock to the six special concerts gien on Tuesday afternoons at 3 p. m. Furthermore, Koussevitzky originates a new plot for the Tuesday programs annually. This season the plot is "Composers of the Eighteenth Century" (the Great Romantic Period). Soloist of the Friday and Saturday program will be Serge Prokofieff, playing his own Third Piano Concerto."

* * * *

We feel certain that the many South Shore residents who wouldn't miss Symphony for anything less than a fascist uprising, will be interested in the following: with such intensity does Serge Koussevitsky conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in its rehearsals and performances, that officials compel him to take an annual mid-season vacation of two weeks

* * * *

It was in Florida, at Winter Park, that Koussevitzky passed his vacation. His praise knows no bounds. He says that for colorful scenery, combined with balmy air, the rest of the world can offer only Morocco to compete with Florida. And, after being in both he prefers Florida.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

FEB 5 - 1937

FINE ARTS PROGRAM

The Chamber quartet of Boston, whose members are Boston Symphony orchestra musicians, gave a program of chamber music at the Women's club auditorium last night, as the last program in the fine arts series presented under the auspices of the Mattatuck Musical Art society.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 5 - 1937

WOMEN INDIGNANT AT GIBE BY ITURBI

Remark They Can't Be Great in Music Rouses Sponsors of Miss Brico's Orchestra

BLINDFOLD TEST PROPOSED

Campaign for $65,000 to Put Group on Permanent Basis Is Begun at Luncheon

Sponsors of the New York Women's Symphony Orchestra were indignant yesterday in contradicting a statement attributed to José Iturbi, Spanish pianist and conductor, that women can never achieve greatness in music or sports.

The statement, contained in a Canadian Press dispatch from Toronto, was ridiculed at a luncheon given by the backers of the women's orchestra in the Hotel Biltmore to start a campaign for $65,000 to assure financial security for the orchestra for three years and place it on a permanent basis.

Mr. Iturbi was quoted in a press interview as saying that women were "physically limited from attaining the standard of men, and are limited temperamentally besides."

"I am glad to have them play and sing, of course, because it gives them a change from their domestic life," Mr. Iturbi continued, according to The Canadian Press. "I wouldn't have them kept in a cage all the time. But their efforts, while often praiseworthy and occasionally reaching real artistry, never achieve greatness."

Has Trouble Ahead

Commenting on Mr. Iturbi's statement, Leonard Liebling, editor of The Musical Courier, said:

"In the Book of Job it is said, 'Man that is born of a woman is of a few days, and full of trouble.' I don't know how many days Mr. Iturbi has left, but he will certainly have trouble. Records are full of achievement in music by women and they completely refute what Mr. Iturbi so carelessly said and will live to rue."

Miss Antonia Brico, conductor of the New York Women's Symphony Orchestra, asserted that if it were not obvious to Mr. Iturbi that women had made a place for themselves in music he might look at their records in sports. If women are not prominent in music, she said, it is not because they lack talent but rather because they have not had the opportunity to demonstrate it.

Miss Brico issued a challenge to Mr. Iturbi, suggesting a contest in which members of her orchestra might compete with men, unseen by the judges. She expressed her approval of mixed orchestras and recalled having seen a woman harpist or "stray violinist" in orchestras of men. She saw no reason why a man could not be admitted to her orchestra.

"Long Since Arrived"

J. Stanley Sheppard, adjutant of the Salvation Army, noted that "women have long since arrived in the musical world as singers, composers and instrumental performers" and added, "Why not in the orchestral field?"

Blanche Yurka, actress, told the gathering that in the theatre, she believed, "women have a slight edge in the audience's favor."

Mrs. George J. Openhym, chairman of the New York Women's Symphony Orchestra, who presided, said the orchestra was past the experimental stage and "a definite part of the New York music world." All the speakers paid tribute to Miss Brico's work and commendatory messages were received from Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and others.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

FEB 5 - 1937

Women Bristle At Iturbi's View They're Inferior

Storm Breaks at Meeting to Raise $65,000 to Aid N. Y. Women's Orchestra

The ability of women to attain eminence in music and in sports, which had been doubted by Jose Iturbi in remarks attributed to him Wednesday in Toronto, was warmly defended yesterday by Antonia Brico, conductor of the New York Women's Symphony Orchestra, at a luncheon held in the Biltmore Hotel to open a campaign for $65,000 to maintain the orchestra for the next three years.

Blanche Yurka, citing her own field of the theater as an example, likewise asserted the ability of women to rise to great heights in the arts. Leonard Liebling, editor of "The Musical Courier," and Adjutant J. Stanley Sheppard, of the Salvation Army, also developed this theme. Mrs. George J. Openhym, president of the orchestra's board of directors, presided.

Iturbi's Offending Remarks

In his Toronto interview the Spanish conductor-pianist was quoted as saying that women "are physically limited from attaining the standard of men, and are limited temperamentally, besides." The interview continued:

"I am glad to have them play and sing, of course, because it gives them a change from their domestic life. I wouldn't have them kept in a cage all the time. But their efforts, while often praiseworthy and occasionally reaching real artistry, never achieve greatness."

Miss Brico, admitting that such a point of view made her a little hot under the collar, mentioned women of notable achievement in music, sports and other fields, including Kirsten Flagstad, Jenny Lind, Sonja Henie, the skater; Amelia Earhart and Anne Morrow Lindbergh.

"Women have arrived in other professional fields," said Miss Brico, "why not that of the orchestra?"

Women in music have achieved their greatest eminence as singers, especially in opera, she remarked, because they had their first chance in that field, whereas opportunities for women to shine as instrumentalists have been limited until relatively recently, and have been limited particularly in the orchestras.

Miss Brico said she desired ultimately to see equal opportunity in the orchestras for men and women musicians. But an orchestra such as the Women's Symphony is necessary to give a convincing demonstration of the abilities of women as orchestral musicians, she continued, so as to win for them such an opportunity.

Editor Praises Women's Orchestra

Mr. Liebling said that explanations and apologies for the formation of a women's orchestra are no longer necessary. He asserted that the two-year-old New York Women's Orchestra "can match itself confidently and competently with many men's orchestras throughout the country.

Mr. Sheppard also said that the ability of women had been proved in every field of endeavor. "Don't sell the public the idea of financing an organization," he advised; "sell them the idea of a service in the field of music and musical art beyond an estimate of dollars."

Mrs. Openhym, who praised the conductorial ability of Miss Brico and the service rendered the orchestra by Mrs. James H. Perkins, one of its honorary chairmen, read the following congratulatory telegram from Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt:

"I want to commend board of directors and Miss Brico on efforts to make New York Women's Symphony permanent organization. Hope your campaign for funds will be most successful. My best wishes.

"ELEANOR ROOSEVELT."

Other Messages Read

She also read messages from Mrs. John McClure Chase, president of the New York State Federation of Music Clubs; from Mme. Olga Samaroff-Stokowski; from Mrs. Ogden Reid, who expressed her best wishes for the objectives of the campaign; from Serge Koussevitzky and from Mrs. Leland ~~Atherton~~ Irish, manager of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra. Mrs. Openhym also thanked the musicians' union for its cooperation; Richard Copley, manager of the orchestra and its staff, and the players themselves.

Among the guests at the luncheon were Mrs. Raynal C. Bolling, honorary chairman of the orchestra; Mrs. J. T. Johnston Mali, vice-chairman; Mrs. Walter W. Naumburg, secretary, and Mr. Naumburg; Mrs. Miner W. Allen, Mrs. Eddy Brown, Mrs. Robert S. Davis jr., Mrs. Sara Sokolsky-Freid, Mrs. Edward A. McDougall and Mrs. Duncan Parham, directors; Mrs. Olin Downes, Mrs. James H. Perkins, Eddy Brown, Mr. Copley, Miss Irene Lewisohn, Mrs. Henry Goddard Leach, Mrs. Harold Vincent Milligan, Mr. George J. Openhym, Miss Ethel Peyser, Miss Maria Safonoff, Mr. and Mrs. Segismond Stojowski and Miss Margherita de Vecchi.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

FEB 5 - 1937

Manuel Quiroga

Last night at Carnegie Hall the Philharmonic was host to Manuel Quiroga, Spanish violinist, in a program that comprised Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Lalo's "Spanish" Symphony, and the 2nd Suite for Orchestra by the conductor, Georges Enesco.

In a season punctuated by visits from these virtuoso organizations, the Philadelphia and Boston Symphony orchestras, it has become painfuly evident that the Philharmonic is udergoing a decline of technical powers. In the strings this decline has taken the form of courseness in tone and occasional lack of cogency; in the woodwinds, insufficient balance and occasionally inaccurate pitch; in the brasses, glaring lack of balance and almost habitual tardiness in entrances. The situation in all choirs seemed worse last night than it has ever been; and since the most conspicuous troubles occurr in the brasses and woodwinds the favor Brahms bestowed upon these sections in his "Variations" made the performance of that composition one of the most shabby in the writer's memory. Mr. Enesco's responsibility in this matter cannot be precisely estimated, as the faults of last night have been evident in a less extreme degree under preceding conductors; but one wonders why he made no effort to shush up some of the instruments when they stuck out of the middle of a chord like sore thumbs.

Mr. Quiroga's performance was not the saving grace of the evening. Possibly because of nervousness, the tone he produced never asserted itself to the extent of a well-defined forte, and his pitch was sometimes almost naively bad. Too many portamentos added the inevitably maudlin flavor to the performance. The choice of the Symphonie Espagnole for Mr. Quiroga's American debut was an admirably frank expression of his intentions, which are those of a virtuoso—and his record shows that he has carried them out successfully in Europe—but last night, for some reason or other, they paved the proverbial road. RALPH WINETT.

PROKOFIEFF DOMINATES SYMPHONY

Post Feb. 6/37

Composes, Plays His Piano Concerto for High Light

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

On the programme side yesterday's Symphony Concert came close to being what the painters call a one-man show, and that man was Serge Prokofieff, who also appeared as soloist in his own Third Piano Concerto. Mozart's so-called "Prague" Symphony served as introduction.

HIS MARVELOUS CONCERTO

In addition to the Concerto, the compositions of Mr. Prokofieff heard yesterday were the all-too-brief March and Scherzo from the opera "The Love for Three Oranges" and the youthful Scythian Suite, a still stirring work even though some of its original savagery is passing with the years. In that particular direction, of course, Prokofieff outdid his own achievement in his choral "Seven, They Are Seven!"

It was through the Concerto, which the composer had played here 11 years ago that Mr. Prokofieff who fortunately does not know how to be dull, was most impressively represented yesterday. Here is the Prokofieff in whom the true classic spirit flourishes, and without affectation. This music exists only of and for itself; it stimulates and it charms; at times it even moves and touches; yet it is wholly of our day, not back to Bach nor back to Mozart nor back to anyone else.

Still a Young Man

In that he can be in his concerto and symphonies both up to the minute and ingratiating, Prokofieff stands a little apart from the other composers of our day. Except in the "Classical" Symphony, a pure jeu d'esprit, he has not felt compelled variously to revive the musical past in the manner of the later Stravinsky, while on the other hand he happily lacks the deliberate harshness of Hindemith.

It was patent yesterday that the audience liked Mr. Prokofieff's music—all of it—and that it liked him no less. His Concerto is not a virtuoso piece in the Lisztian manner, although it imposes no small strain upon its performer, and Mr. Prokofieff played it in a fashion at once competent and unassuming that must have won his listeners quite as much as did his boyish awkwardness of demeanor. It is difficult to believe, for all his growing baldness, that Mr. Prokofieff is nearing 46.

Every Piece Liked

The choice of Mozart's Symphony, identifiable as that in D major without Minuet, was a fortunate one. Written between "Figaro" and "Don Giovanni," this Symphony has some of the operatic flavor that sets it and many of its companions quite apart from the symphonies of either Haydn or Beethoven.

The performance, to come at last to the deserving if self-effacing Dr. Koussevitzky, was in every way admirable and delightful, while that of Mr. Prokofieff's music we can safely assume to have been to the entire satisfaction of the composer.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 15th regular concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Serge Prokofieff, composer and pianist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Mozart—Symphony in D major (K. 504)
Prokofieff—March and Scherzo from "The Love for Three Oranges"
Prokofieff—Piano Concerto No. 3, Op. 26
Prokofieff—Scythian Suite, "Ala and Lolli," Op. 20

Prokofieff is not only the most stimulating and one of the most important of modern composers, he is also a pianist of astounding ability. These qualities are well known in Boston, so that it was not surprising that a capacity audience gave him an enthusiastic reception yesterday. His is not music that requires intense discussion, for above all it is clear. Its bold contrasts, strong rhythms and its essential simplicity, in spite of the large orchestra in the Scythian Suite and the elaborate piano part in the Concerto, make it easy to understand. There may be those who do not happen to like his music; but this can not come from any obscurity. For our part, we enjoyed every minute of the concert.

Mozart's so-called "Prague" Symphony made an excellent beginning to the concert. The classic composers, as a matter of fact, blend exceedingly well on a program with the moderns. And, particularly, the clarity of Mozart's music makes an interesting contrast with the same quality in Prokofieff. This very symphony might easily have served as the inspiration for Prokofieff's Classical Symphony. But another kind of programmatic contrast would not have done at all. Consider how impossible Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony, for example, would have sounded when one compared it with the fantastic Scythian Suite.

That able commentator on Mozart's symphonies, G. de Saint-Foix, has written about the last movement of the Prague Symphony: "There is a strong mixture, in fact, of the elements of drama and joy; the latter mood assuredly closes the Symphony in D, but on rhythms that are brusque and almost lashing where one divines more of struggle and energetic elan than of real good humor." Might not the same comment be made on Prokofieff's music?

Of course there are many more points of difference between the spiritual classicist and the ironic Russian; but the similarity is also there if one looks for it. Mozart's D major Symphony, to write of it by itself, is one of his great works in the form. The finale is perhaps the most captivating, but the whole Symphony is beautiful and interesting music. M. de Saint-Foix finds the influence of Clementi in it, although Mozart affected to despise the Italian. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted a performance of great precision and in good taste. The work of the wood-winds was especially good. Incidentally, Dr. Koussevitzky should positively have it on his conscience that he has neglected this Symphony during his administration of the orchestra.

We observed last Sunday that Prokofieff was inimitable as a solo pianist in his own music. His playing has the virtues of the music itself and is consequently amazingly crisp and clear. He is a fascinating pianist to watch in the effortless detachment of his performance. Moreover, the Third Concerto is a brilliant work. It abounds in contrasts of emotion and musical wit, in a most ingenious dialogue between piano and orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra in marvellous accord with the soloist.
Love for Three Oranges" are well
The March and Scherzo from "The known both in a piano arrangement and on a record. They are deft and amusing pieces. The Scythian Suite may possibly endure as Prokofieff's greatest work. It is a work of imagination and not of literal realism. Given such a splendid performance as that of yesterday, the Scythian Suite is extraordinarily exciting. Mr. Prokofieff again came out on the platform to acknowledge the applause at the end of the concert.

The concert will be repeated tonight; and we may earnestly recommend any one who has never heard Mr. Prokofieff play to attend as well as for other reasons which the above article has attempted to analyze.

The orchestra will be out of town next week-end. The concerts of Feb. 19 and 20 will offer Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and Russian music inspired by Pushkin's poetry.

MUSIC 88

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

This might be called "Prokofieff Week" at the Boston Symphony concerts. From that outstanding figure among modern composers came most of the music on the program which Dr Koussevitzky conducted yesterday afternoon and will repeat tonight. Mr Prokofieff plays the solo part in his Third Piano Concerto, and is otherwise represented by the "Scythian Suite," and the March and Scherzo from his opera "The Love for Three Oranges." There is also a Mozart Symphony, the Prague" so-called, designated No. 504 in the Koechel catalogue, and last performed by this orchestra in 19[illegible]. But Mozart must have been forgotten by many after the rhythmic brilliance and the flooding sonorities of Prokofieff.

Even to this day, Serge Prokofieff may perhaps be regarded by more conservative listeners as a musical anarch, particularly when they hear the savage dissonance of the "Scythian Suite," or remember the tribal tumult of "Sept, Ils Sont Sept." Some liberal opinion places him not only as the most original Russian composer since Stravinsky, but one of the two greatest among the younger contemporary composers, the other being Paul Hindemith.

Prokofieff is representative of his time when he invokes orchestral dissonance, insistent and complex rhythms, and the esthetic restlessness which has been prevalent since the war. Where Hindemith, gifted though he is, tends to write music more intellectual than emotional, Prokofieff reveals a greater play of imagination.

The "Scythian Suite" is 23 years old, and to one listener at least, it has not suffered from the fact of age. Of very little music composed since then could this be said. Nor could one hardly mistake the implications of barbarism which Prokofieff set forth in so deft yet so unrestrained a manner, even though it would be difficult to make a sustained "program" if one were unacquainted with the composer's own synopsis. Particularly remarkable is the unified style, the cohesion of the piece, which begins at high tension and carries through without diminution of interest. The conclusion is quite as exciting as the opening measures.

A more fanciful Prokofieff conceived the witty excerpts from "The Love for Three Oranges." That is natural considering the nature of Gozzi's 18th century tale, which formed the plot of the opera. A fairy Prince does not behave like a Scythian.

According to the record, his Third Piano Concerto had not been heard at a Symphony concert since its introduction, with Prokofieff as soloist, 11 years ago. Here again was testimony to enduring qualities. The Concerto might have been composed only yesterday so far as freshness was concerned. If it is too long, and if the piano is treated entirely as a percussive instrument, there are memorable and varied pages. Mr Prokofieff played it engrossingly. He was applauded with more than usual fervor by the Friday audience. Orchestrally, the Concerto shared the prevailing brilliance of the afternoon.

Mozart's "Prague" Symphony was a product of his later years, but its three movements suggest that he wrote it when younger. Why it had lain unplayed so long is not answerable. Just escaping the stature of the three greatest of Mozart symphonies, it nevertheless is fine music and ought to be a fixture of the standard repertory.

Next week the orchestra goes to New York. The next Boston concerts will be Feb 19 and 20, when half the program will be given to music inspired by Pushkin, the Russian poet, who was killed 100 years ago Feb 10. C. W. D.

NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Post Feb 7/37

Is It Opera or Is It Musical Comedy?

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Symphony Orchestra journeys to New York this week, but before its departure it will be heard tomorrow evening in the fourth of the current series of Monday evening Symphony Concerts. The programme lists the Symphonic Picture "From the Apocalypse" of Liadov, the Third Symphony of Brahms and, for the second half, various excerpts from the music dramas of Wagner.

* * * *

There are two concerts scheduled

85

Serge Prokoieff Dominates Symphony Divides Program With Work By Mozart

Russian Thrills Audience by Brilliant Scoring of Music of Strong Racial Significance

By Redfern Mason

Probably with a whimsical smile, which he only shared with the members of the Symphony and the still young composer, Prokofieff, Serge Koussevitzky, in the program of yesterday's concert, balanced the aristocratic world of imperial Austria against the tormented Russia of the Great War and the years succeeding it.

And, as if to pay him out for his temerity, the Fates that govern concerts made the divine Mozart appear somewhat at a disadvantage. The work which the director gave us was the so-called "Prague" Symphony in D (No. 504 in Koechel's catalogue), a composition which, while genial and beautiful, especially in the slow movement, lacks something of the serene beauty of the immortal three that are the crown of the composer's symphonic utterance.

It may also be that the sheer contemporaneity of the work of Prokofieff, its modernistic exuberance, its Slav alternations between hopes Heavens high and moments of black doubt and despair so captivated his fancy, for the nonce, that he could not capture the pure Mozartean rapture with his wonted assuredness.

Whatever the reason that Allegro which follows the introductory Adagio lacked the sparkle and vivacity which Bruno Walter puts into Mozart. The Boston strings are admirable; but yesterday they had not the gossamer lightness that I have learned to look for.

But with the advent of the March and Scherzo of "The Love of the Three Oranges," a change came over the aesthetic atmosphere. Written just after the Great War, it is an attempt to realize the spirit of one of the "feeries" which Carlo Gozzi wrote for the Venetians at the time of his rivalry with Goldoni. The oranges, of course, are ladies transformed into fruit by a magician.

Prokofieff had already assimilated the orchestra of Rimsky and he had not ignored the picturesque instrumentation of Tschaikovsky's "Nutcracker" Suite. But with this musical organism he works in his own vein; he knows all the exotic allurements of tone and he has the wit to give them an expressiveness peculiar to himself. The sheer fantasy of it all captured the audience, and Mozart faded out of their mind; at least, it did out of my own.

Then we had the pleasure of hearing, not only the music of Prokofieff, but the composer himself as soloist in his C major Concerto for piano and orchestra. In a thoroughly delightful performance, he left the impression of a sort of Russian Alfred de Musset who lives in a world of fantasy and is now uplifted Heaven high on dreams of a new and happier world, then sinks deep in the dregs of disillusion. None caresses the wood wind more happily than he does; no contemporary composer extracts more poignant accents from the trumpet. The variations which constitute the second movement are now tenderly idyllic; now they ring with passionate protest; they are audacious, brilliant, challenging.

Prokofieff is content to be part of the orchestra; he does not seek any aggressive sovereignty of the score. He is a master indeed; but he is a legitimate monarch, not tyrant.

The concluding number on the program was Prokofieff's "Scythian Suite," composed in 1914, when he was a young man of twenty-three. It is a pagan tone poem, based on the barbaric mythology of those Scythians whom the Roman legions learned to fear but never could conquer. It is music of a brutal magnificence, picturing the struggle between the gods of light and darkness, with a human hero participating, like a sort of Russian Siegfried.

Here we had a young poet envisioning and idealizing the past of his race, seeing it in the light of a savage splendor, a splendor which the magic of the orchestra alone can realize. The music is vivid, vicious, violent, with periods that almost tear one's vitals. There is a gorgeous lustfulness about it; there are irridescent grandeurs, something of the spirit of Tamerlane and Genghis Khan.

All the audience may not have liked its fierce sonorities; but I think there were few who did not feel their blood stirred by its pagan vitality.

Sergei Prokofieff Soloist In Brilliant Symphony

Feb 6

By RUTH MARSTERS

Sergei Prokofieff, appearing as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at yesterday afternoon's concert in Symphony Hall, won the marked enthusiasm of a capacity audience in a brilliant performance of his Third Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, Op. 26.

As a pianist, Prokofieff's virtuosity is unsurpassed. Luminous clarity and precision are ever a part of his performance and this through the whole range of dynamics from the slightest pianissimo to the most extreme forte. The tone is metallic rather than warm—the approach is, of course impersonal rather than emotional.

It is this very intellectuality which, combined with barbarousness creates the enigma of his personality as a composer.

There could hardly have been found wider divergence in idea than that presented in the three works of the Russian composer which Dr. Koussevitzky included in the program.

That the March and Scherzo from the Opera, "The Love for Three Oranges" followed the Mozart Symphony in D major (K. No. 504) was, in addition, a stroke of program making which was obviously not unplanned.

The contrast from the positive, direct, work of Mozart, so expressive of a spirit whole and free to the music of Prokofieff was stunning. The latter, clever though it always is lacks heart at its core. Forceful as it is, its ultimate concern is with negation.

Confronted again with the Concerto in its pure classicism then with the Scythian Suite, "Ala and Lolli," Op. 20, in its frenzied barbarism Prokofieff's secret seems more than ever to evade discovery.

Does he participate in the chaos which he so forcefully describes or is he himself aloof? Is it the mockery of disillusionment, or is it impersonal comment?

This is a matter which will no doubt continue to be the subject of various conjecture.

Certain it is at any rate that there is nothing unordered in the medium through which he speaks. His idiom is peculiar to him, brilliancy of orchestration as of harmonic structure, being one with the idea expressed. It is in this that it derives its force.

The orchestra under Dr. Kousevitzy's inspired and meticulous direction gave performances to each work that were truly magnificent. The precision, and solidity, the sweeping sonority and blazing color, the sensitiveness and vitality of the virtuoso orchestra never cease to amaze.

The program will be repeated at this evening's concert in Symphony Hall.

84

Symphony Miniatures

RICHARD BURGIN

Concert Master of Boston Symphony Has Had Many an Interesting Experience Here and Abroad

The library of the Boston Symphony, and facing me sits Richard Burgin, concert master, modesty personified, but quick on the trigger as a conversationalist.

Joachim was his inspiration and Leopold Auer was the master violinist who gave his art competence and authority.

"Do I think the fiddle the prima donna of the orchestra, as Berlioz says? Yes, and no. For one thing, in Berlioz' time the term prima donna did not connote quite the same idea in the popular mind, as it does today. Besides, though the violin can sing like Melba or Lucrezia Bori, it is essentially a masculine instrument."

I launch a barbed remark: "Don't you think the players in an orchestra hear less of the performance as a whole than does the audience?"

"The cellists probably have the best of it," he replies, with a whimsical smile; "they're in the middle of the harmony, you see. There is a danger, I admit, that instrumentalists in a given section may be so absorbed in the effect they are producing that they ignore the rest."

"And the concert master?"

"Well, he must have the score in his mind and listen mentally as well as physically."

"Meaning that musicians must be something more than mere players from the printed page?"

"Indeed they must. Your musician must be a citizen; he must be an active part of the social machine; he should be steeped in the literature of the masters; he must be interested in all the arts."

"Schumann says there is only one art, but many media?"

Burgin nods. "I am a Russian, though I was born in Poland. Do you think I could sense the great Slav composers if I hadn't loved Pushkine and Lhermontoff and made a sort of Bible of Dostoievsky?"

"They are doing great things for music in Russia today."

"Indeed they are, miraculous things. Every little town now has its band or orchestra, its chorus, and the old folk-songs, none grander in the world, are sung with a joy today greater than ever before."

"Perhaps it means that, when the politicians and the sociologists have failed, the artists will redeem society."

"I like to think so."

Feb 7

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO HONOR PUSHKIN

The centenary (Feb. 10) of the death of Alexander Pushkin, foremost of Russian poets, will be observed in many places this month, and at the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the second half of the program will be devoted to music which his verses have inspired. These concerts will take place a week from next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, since the coming week will be occupied by the third anual visit of the orchestra to New York.

In memory of Pushkin, Koussevitzky has chosen the suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera, "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan," which is based upon a narrative poem of Pushkin; also the famous Letter Scene from Tchaikovsky's opera "Eugene Oniegin," which is probably the poet's most famous work. This air will be sung by Olga Averino, "Le Coq d'Or," another opera of Rimsky-Korsakov based upon a fairy tale in verse by Pushkin, will be the concluding number. The first part of the program will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, which has not been performed at the regular concerts for a considerable time.

At the concert in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on the previous Thursday evening, Feb. 18, Prof. Sorokin will speak briefly upon the Pushkin centenary. The Overture to Glinka's opera, "Russian and Ludmilla," derived from Pushkin, will be played, as well as Rimsky-Korsakov's Introduction and March from "Le Coq d'Or," and the Leter Scene from Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic' Symphony No. 6.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN

FEB 6 - 1937

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the third of its series of concerts in Brooklyn on Thursday evening at the Academy of Music. The orchestra will be conducted by Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky.

Prokofieff and The Symphony

Adv. Feb. 7/37

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening to which Sergei Prokofieff contributed as both composer and soloist were occasions singularly stimulating.

The wealth of idea presented in the program, the sheer excellence of performance, together brought about, in fact, another of those musical achievements which though undeniably rare in ordinary circumstances seem to be more frequent than not with the particular organization which is the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Koussevitzky opened the program with the Mozart Symphony in D major (K. No. 504), that positive work which preceded the three great Symphonies which were the last.

It is not difficult to understand that this Symphony was accepted wholeheartedly by the people of Prague in which it was first performed in 1787. The completeness expressed within the exquisitely wrought structure could not fail recognition, then or now.

* * *

FOLLOWING THIS, the March and Scherzo from Prokofieff's Opera, "The Love for Three Oranges," appeared by contrast all the more devastating. Here indeed was Prokofieff the "Barbarian" to use Nicholas Slonimsky's designation. Prokofieff the "Classicist," to continue the same authority's thought, was to make his appearance in the Third Concerto for Pianoforte, Op. 26.

But the particular personality in question seems to us only half explained in such terms. Intellectuality is, of course, the keynote. As in the Scythian Suite, "Ala and Lolli," Op. 20, Prokofieff expresses all chaos, all barbarism, through a medium which is above all precise, lucid, ordered.

The force of his speech is a terrible and frightening one. Prokofieff has been called diabolically clever—with reason.

* * *

THE CONCERTO—classic in its lack of personal comment and its pure concern with the abstract musical idea—is certainly one of the most important works of contemporary times.

Prokofieff began its composition in 1918, and completed it, after some interruption, in 1921.

It was given its first performance by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in December of that year. It was first heard in Boston with the composer as soloist in 1926.

As a pianist Prokofieff is no less brilliant than as a composer. The precision on the part of both soloist and orchestra in the performance of the concerto at the Friday concert was indescribably perfect. There is a piercing lucidity in Mr. Prokofieff's playing that is peculiar to him. (The dry quality of tone has something to do with this.)

The orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky's keenly perceptive direction, brought all its powers of virtuosity to bear on the performance.

The audience could not help but be tremendously enthusiastic.

* * *

AS the orchestra will be engaged in concerts in greater New York during the coming week, the next pair of concerts in Symphony Hall will be given on February 19 and 20.

The program will be devoted to the memory of Alexander Pushkin, the centenary of whose death occurs on February 10.

Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's Opera, "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan," which is based upon a narrative poem of Pushkin, also the famous "Letter Scene" from Tchaikovsky's Opera "Eugene Oniegin" which is probably the poet's most famous work. The air will be sung by Olga Averino.

The Introduction and March Coq d'Or," also based upon a fairy tale in verse by Pushkin, will be the concluding number.

Notes and Comment

The centenary (Feb 10) of the death of Alexander Pushkin, foremost of Russian poets, will be observed at the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra when the second half of the program will be devoted to music which his verses have inspired. These concerts will take place a week from next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, since the coming week will be occupied by the third visit this year of the orchestra to New York.

In memory of Pushkin, Dr Koussevitzky has chosen the suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera, "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan," which is based upon a narrative poem of Pushkin; also the famous "Letter Scene" from Tchaikovsky's opera, "Eugene Oniegin." This air will be sung by Olga Averino, soprano. The Introduction and March from "Le Coq d'Or," another opera by Rimsky-Korsakov, will be the concluding number. The first part of the program will consist of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, unheard at these concerts for a number of seasons.

At the concert in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Thursday evening, Feb 18, Prof Sorokin will speak briefly upon the Pushkin centenary. The Overture to Glinka's opera, "Russlan and Ludmilla," derived from Pushkin, will be played, as well as Rimsky-Korsakov's Introduction and March from "Le Coq d'Or," and the "Letter Scene" from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Oniegin," with Olga Averino as soloist. The program will be concluded with Tchaikovskys "Pathetic" Symphony.

◆ ◆ ◆

Gladys Swarthout, mezzo-soprano, will be heard in recital at Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, March 14. This artist is equally well known at the Metropolitan Opera, in movies and over the air.

◆ ◆ ◆

Ludwig Juht, double-bass player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give a recital Thursday evening, Feb 25, at the Boston Art Club.

◆ ◆ ◆

The recent floods caused a mixup in the schedule of Jascha Heifetz.

190

THE MICROPHONE
BOSTON, MASS.

FEB 6 - 1937

This and That

By Morris Hastings

ONLY the other week in England the BBC broadcast a concert arrangement of an unique opera, "CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS," by DARIUS MILHAUD with a text by PAUL CLAUDEL, formerly French ambassador to the United States.

Dr. KOUSSEVITZKY

Monsieur MILHAUD is that vigorous young French composer some of whose earlier music has been championed in the United States by such conductors as Dr. KOUSSEVITZKY and LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI. Last Tuesday ALFRED WALLENSTEIN broadcast MILHAUD'S Fifth Symphony in his radio concert.

M. D. CALVOCORESSI, eminent musicologist, describes "CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS" in a recent issue of The Radio Times, BBC publication.

Although the work is entitled an opera, says the writer, it is better described as "an opera-oratorio."

And then, Mr. CALVOCORESSI proceeds to enlarge upon the manifold and fascinating complexities of the composition:

"Certain scenes are dramatic or descriptive in the usual more or less realistic way, others are symbolic or allegorical.

"We have not one narrator, as in oratorio, but two, the second playing the part of 'contradictor' or devil's advocate. COLUMBUS himself, in certain of the scenes, is dual, and discussions take place between COLUMBUS 1 and COLUMBUS 2.

When "CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS" is produced on the stage, a screen is set up in the background. From time to time pictures, intended to supplement events described by participants, are flashed on the screen.

DARIUS MILHAUD himself gives the reason for this in the published score.

"This drama," he writes, "is like a book that is opened so that its contents are revealed to the audience. The audience must know all that takes place in the actors' hearts and minds, and be aware of the mysterious warnings which they receive from Fate or Providence."

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

JAN 3 1 1937

KSD'S Monday night concerts by Richard Crooks and Margaret Speaks are to go somewhat "popular." Tomorrow evening, Crooks will sing Moya's "Song of Songs" as well as "Kathleen Mavourneen," a Liszt lieder and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Song of India," Miss Speaks will sing "Give Me an Hour" from Friml's "White Eagle." Nat Shilkret will be the conductor.

A concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, is set for 7:30 to 8:30 Thursday night on the WJZ network.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,

Feb. 6/37

What's Going On in

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Serge Prokofieff is the distinguished guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week in its fifteenth pair of concerts for the season, the first of which was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. He played the solo part of his Third Pianoforte Concerto, and Dr. Koussevitzky directed also the March and Scherzo from the opera, "The Love for Three Oranges," and the "Scythian" Suite. The program opened with Mozart's Symphony in D major (K. No. 504).

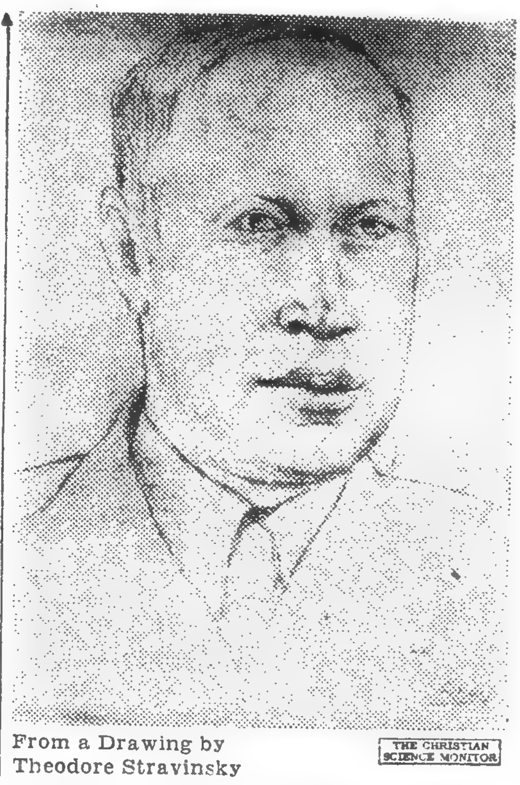
Mr. Prokofieff, one of the leading composers of the period and an excellent pianist, has been the guest of the orchestra several times before, and he has been represented on its programs every season since 1924, when Dr. Koussevitzky took over the direction. The "Scythian" Suite and the choral piece, "Sept, Ils Sont Sept," made a considerable sensation at their first presentations, and the First Violin Concerto, three of the piano concertos, the "Classical" Symphony and the Fourth Symphony (composed for the orchestra's fiftieth anniversary) all gave pleasure in their several ways. There can be no question of the composer's mastery of musical form and of the orchestra, nor of his individuality as a composer.

All the compositions by which he is represented on this week's program are familiar to us. Moreover, they are all early works. We do not wish to seem too exacting, but would it not have been more stimulating to hear something new? We should like to hear, for example, the Second Violin Concerto, produced in Madrid a little over a year ago. To be sure, the composer is making a tour and he is not a violinist. Very well; how about music he has composed since he went back to live in Soviet Russia? The program notes tell us that he has been commissioned by the Soviet Government to write music for the Pushkin centenary, including some for the plays, "Eugen Onégin" and "Boris Godounoff." The centenary date is next Monday. Surely the work must be done. Might we not have heard something of all this?

We might, but we didn't. What we did hear constitutes at all events a representative selection from the composer's early work. The March and Scherzo from "The Love for Three Oranges" are not very exciting, detached from the opera, but the Third Piano Concerto is an engrossing work and we can still enjoy the barbarity, the atmospheric nocturnal effects and the sunrise of the "Scythian" Suite. Still, it was not necessary to play these pieces again in order to establish Mr. Prokofieff's place in music.

The orchestra played brilliantly all the works of Mr. Prokofieff, who received an ovation. And the performance of the Mozart symphony (unheard here since 1921) was a model of delicacy and charm, of precision, balance and flexibility.

L. A. S.



From a Drawing by Theodore Stravinsky

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Serge Prokofieff, Guest Pianist-Composer With the Boston Symphony Orchestra This Week

---

Symphony Concert Series

By WILLIAM T. CHASE, Jr.

The great modern Russian composer-pianist, Serge Prokofieff, achieved something of a triumph at the 15th of the regular series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. He was the guest soloist in his own Third Piano Concerto, Opus 26, and was the author of two of the other three works that comprised the remainder of the program. They were the March and Scherzo from his opera "The Love for Three Oranges," and the Scythian Suite, "Ala and Lolli," Opus 20. The single interloper, so to speak, was Mozart, represented by his Symphony in D major (Koechel No. 504).

In many respects Prokofieff's playing of his own piano concerto was the highlight of the afternoon. Always his writing had amazing clarity. The orchestration was excellent, with especially effective passages for the woodwinds and high pizzicato strings. Divided into the customary three movements, the concerto opened with a solo passage for clarinet, the theme was picked up by the strings and soon there began a lively dialogue between the piano and the orchestra. So it went. Sudden changes of tempo, alteration of the tonal dynamics, and clever and unusual use of rhythms marked the work right through to the brilliant coda of the finale.

Prokofiff played the piano part with the same beautiful clarity that distinguishes so much of his work. He treated the most difficult of passages with an effortlessness that was truly extraordinary. And always there was the feeling that his method was exactly right; a feeling not necessarily engendered because he happened to be the composer as well as the soloist. We remember occasions when a composer appeared in one of his own works and made a terrible botch of it. A full share of the responsibility for the seemingly remarkable unity of purpose must be placed on Dr. Koussevitzky's shoulders. For he led the orchestra through a magnificently proportioned accompaniment.

The orchestra was equally fine in the rest of the program. The March and Scherzo from "The Love for Three Oranges" were set forth with a gusto that made the most of the vigorous scoring. And the concluding Scythian Suite, "Ala and Lolli," received a reading of unimaginably beautiful dissonance. Surely the tonal picturization of a sunrise at the end will linger long in the memories of those fortunate enough to hear it from the leading orchestra in the world today. And, strangely enough, the Mozart symphony did not appear out of place beside the [illegible] The clarity and suggestions of the classical style in Prokofieff's music found an agreeable companion in the charming Mozart creation. This concert will be repeated tonight. Next week the orchestra will be out of town.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

FEB 6 - 1937

Next Wednesday evening, a special concert will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in [redacted] Hall for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund. Jascha Heifetz will be the soloist appearing with the orchestra in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto. Serge Koussevitzky will open the program with the same composer's "Italian" Symphony. The closing number will be Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4.

Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" ("The Song of the Earth"), will be presented at its third pair of regular concerts of the season in the coming week. These will be given in Carnegie Hall on Friday evening (instead of the usual Thursday evening), at 8:45, and on Saturday afternoon at 2:30. Mahler's work will be performed at each concert, and at each the first number will be a symphony of Mozart. At the Friday evening concert, this composer's Symphony in C major, No. 34 (K. 338), will be played. At the Saturday matinee, Mozart's Symphony in D major (K. 504), known as the "Prague" symphony, will precede the performance of "The Song of the Earth." The cycle is for large orchestra with tenor and contralto voices. The singers will be Maria Ranzow, the Austrian contralto, and Paul Althouse.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

TIRINDELLI IS DEAD

New York, Feb. 6 (A. P.).—Friends in New York today received a telegram announcing the death in Rome, Italy, of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer who was associated for many years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

Italian Composer Dies.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6 (AP).—Friends in New York Saturday received a telegram announcing the death in Rome, Italy, of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer who was associated for many years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Death was due to a heart attack.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

FEB 6 - 1937

The New Records

Tschaikowsky Redivivus—Two Symphonies Newly Recorded—Bach Music.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

The Tschaikowsky famine has ended, so far as the phonograph is concerned, and enthusiasts for the work of the sometimes melancholy Slav are this month offered new versions of the Fourth and Sixth symphonies. Though the two performances reflect sharply different types of treatment, both recordings have numerous points of interest.

For Serge Koussevitzky's performance of the Fourth symphony, Victor's engineers have provided a reproduction of curiously erratic qualities. It seems based on a desire to reproduce, with maximum fidelity, the total sound of the full orchestra, and in this respect it is highly successful (save for an excess of reverberation). However, the individual choirs are disproportionately represented in their solo passages—the strings, horns and trumpets with excellent tone and balance, but the clarinets, flutes and bassons sound out of focus, distant from the ear. Certainly the shrillness of the piccolo in the scherzo argues an ill-advised alteration of the microphone placement that achieved such splendid results in the same band's recording of "Zarathustra." On the other hand the finale is exceptionally full and veritable.

The Koussevitzky reading is energetic, straightforward, undistorted, particularly good in the rousing pages of the first and last movements. The slow movement is ead with less care than that of the still excellent Mengelberg version (which was plainly a tour de force of the Hollander). There will be curosity, no doubt, about the secret of Victor's presentation of the scherzo on one record side. The answer is simple: by cutting seventy measures from the movement! The tenth side has a luxurious performance of the waltz from the "Serenade" (opus 48) by the matchless Boston strings.

Gaubert's 'Pathetique.'

The orchestra of the Paris Conservatory is scarcely a virtuoso ensemble, nor is Philippe Gaubert a "personality" conductor. But within the scope of its modest pretensions, the Columbia "Pathetique" by these artists is a well-integrated effort. Gaubert's performance is plainly designed to match Tschaikowsky's hysteria with restraint, which is a reasonable thought so far as the two end movements are concerned. However, the same understatement is discernible in the middle two, which gives the 5/4 waltz a touch of casualness, and makes the march more cheerful than macabre. The recording has ample resonance, no echo, and especially good string tone.

The Greater Bach.

Some of the finest playing Nathan Milstein has yet put on records is contained in the violinist's treatment of the Bach D minor partita, newly issued by Columbia. It is not the broadest or most passionately intense Bach playing, but for mastery of the musical detail it is altogether admirable, especially in the Allemande and Gigue. The Chaconne is disappointingly small in scale, but the refinement of thought, the superb delineation of detail is eminently creditable to the performer. He has the advantage of recording that does every justice to the performance.

Also an item of considerable interest is the second of the introductory releases from Musicraft, a harpsichord performance of Bach's "Italian Concerto," by Ralph Kirkpatrick. His technical mastery of the instrument is patent, and the style of the playing is splendidly elevated, though with a touch of pedantry in the Allegros. Mr. Kirkpatrick uses a Dolmetsch harpsichord (quite different, tonally, from Landowska's) and its unusually faithful reproduction is one of the recording's major virtues. A superb fugue (in C minor) from "Das Musikalisches Opfer" occupies the fourth side of the two disks.

Lighter Matters.

"On the Avenue," the new Irving Berlin film, has made its appearance visually and aurally, and, of course, phonographically. As usual, his tunes are not prepossessing, but this is no guaranty that you will not suddenly discover that one has taken possession of you a week after first hearing it. Of the half dozen in the score, the most promising seem to be "This Year's Kisses" and "He Ain't Got Rhythm," which are coupled by the Goodman band on Victor 25505. The latter is particularly suited to the Goodman manner, and it has an excellent vocal by James Rushing. On Brunswick 7812, the first is paired with "You're Laughing at Me." The performers are Hal Kemp and band, the method subdued and suave. Brunswick also offers the sprightly "Slumming on Park Avenue" by Red Norvo (No. 2813) with "I've Got My Love to Keep Me Warm" on the reverse. Both have excellent vocals by Mildred Bailey.

For Goodmanites.

It seems that Japan is the latest area to capitulate to phonograph records, swing, and Benny Goodman in particular. By official invitation, he will broadcast a half-hour program at 11 o'clock tonight that will be shortwaved to Japan, offering "St. Louis Blues" and "Dinah" among its numbers. For the sake of international amity, "China Boy," "Nagasaki" and "Japanese Sandman" will, however, not be included.

What They're Selling.

Centre Music Shop—
"He Ain't Got Rhythm" V
"Slumming on Park Avenue" V
Gramophone—
"Chapel in the Moonlight" ..B
"Goodnight My Love" ....B
New York Band—
"Easy to Love" V
"I've Got My Love to Keep Me Warm" ....B

Performances are appraised in this column purely on a basis of phonographic reproduction, without regard for the concert hall achievements of the artists. These records were played on an RCA-Victor combination, and Actone Transcription Needles were used. Inquiries concerning records, needles, machines, or accessories are welcomed.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D.
ARGUS LEADER

FEB 7 - 1937

FAMED VIOLINIST DIES AFTER HEART ATTACK

New York, Feb. 6.—(AP)—Friends in New York today received a telegram announcing the death in Rome, Italy, of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer who was associated for many years with the Boston symphony orchestra and the Cincinnati conservatory of music.

Death occurred today and was due to a heart attack.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

FEB 5 1937

Boston Symphony to Be Heard from Brooklyn

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will offer a full-hour concert from the Brooklyn Academy of Music, Brooklyn, N. Y., on Thursday, Feb. 11, at 8:30 p. m. Koussevitzky has programmed Foote's Suite in E Major, Opus 63, for String Orchestra, to open the concert. The second and concluding number of the radio portion of the concert will be Symphony No. 3 in F Major, Opus 90, by Brahms.

87 191

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

FEB 6 - 1937

The Music Box

BRIEF BIOGRAPHY: Carlos Chavez, born June 13, 1899, just outside Mexico City, the seventh child of Agustin Chavez and Juvencia Ramirez de Chavez. His ancestry boasts an inventor, a statesman, a scientist, an author, an outstanding patriot. Began his first piano lessons with his brother, Manuel; continued with Manuel M. Ponce (composer of "Estrellita") and Pedro Luis Ogazon, most erudite of Mexican musicians. Commissioned by Jose Vasconcelos, Secretary of Education of Mexico and deus ex machina of Mexico's artistic renaissance, to write ballet, "El Fuego Nuevo." In 1928 was appointed conductor of the Symphony Orchestra of Mexico, an organization that had neither experience, tradition nor regular audience. Chavez created all three. Soon after accepted position of director of National Conservatory of Music, by which means he made his country music-conscious. Continued his fertilizing influence on his native art as chief of Department of Fine Arts of the Secretariat of Public Education, a post given him when he was thirty-four years old. Today, at thirty-eight, composer, conductor, pianist, educator, he is recognized as the Mexican Musical Messiah.

Reginald Forsythe, British composer, is in New York composing and arranging for a forthcoming series of Paul Whiteman concerts at Carnegie Hall....He's also busy on a two-piano concerto for Vera Brodsky and Harold Triggs.... Harry Sosnick, Chicago composer, is working on a tone-poem called "Disaster," inspired by the flood in the Middle West....And Leonard Stocker is taking a vacation from his job as Metropolitan Opera curtain puller, to give his second baritone recital at Steinway Hall, February 23....Jascha Heifetz will be making his seventh appearance in New York when he plays solo at the Boston Symphony Pension Fund Concert next Wednesday at Carnegie.... Mr. Heifetz has given fifty-five recitals in the past four months. March 1 he's bound for an English tour....And Leopold Stokowski, cinemactor, used to study, and still can play, the flute....Which reminds us that our own Michel Mok says that the easiest job he ever held was that of publicity man for Mr. Stokowski, who is a Barnum in his own right.

Brief Biography: Gregor Piatigorsky, born in the Ukraine, 1903. Started 'cello with his father at the age of six; at seven he could play the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto; at ten he helped support his family by taking jobs in movie houses; at fifteen engaged as first 'cellist of the Imperial Opera in Moscow. During the revolution endured extreme poverty and hardships, but was finally smuggled out of Russia in 1921, making his way to Germany the next year. That country being in the throes of the worst inflation known to history, Gregor played again in movie houses and coffee shops. One day Artur Schnabel heard of his playing. It proved the beginning of his career. He was asked to fill the post of solo 'cellist of the Berlin Philharmonic, which he left eventually for a recital career. Last week papers carried the story of Piatigorsky's marriage with a member of the Paris Rothschilds.

SALAAMS

To Pianist Josef Hofmann, on the birth of a son, Peter, his third child, for his magnificent recital at Carnegie Hall;

To Guitarist Andres Segovia, because he is unique in his art;

To the Dessoff Choirs, for having Paul Boepple as their conductor;

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

FEB 7 - 1937

Mrs. Frank Reynolds to Be Hostess At the Boston Symphony Concert

Mrs. Frank Reynolds will be the hostess in the committee box when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, makes its third visit of the season to Brooklyn this Thursday evening, Fab. 11.

Half of the concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music will be devoted to works of Richard Wagner: the Prelude to "Lohengrin," "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," Act II; and the overture to "Tannhaeuser." Brahms' Symphony No. 3 in F major, op. 90; and Suite in E Major, op. 63, for string orchestra, a composition by Foote, the American composer, will comprise the first part of the program. The suite is in three movements, Prelude, Pizzicato and Adagietto, Fugue.

Other box holders will be Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Frank E. Simmons, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Miss Irma A. Logan, Mrs. Robert F. Ives, Mrs. Joseph A. Bennett, Rear-Admiral Harris Laning, Commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and the Adelphi Academy Alumnae.

The 51st season the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn is sponsored by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which Mr. Blum is president of the board of trustees, the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which R. Huntington Woodman is chairman, and the Brooklyn committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman, and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, acting chairman.

In the interest of the Brooklyn season Mrs. Blum is chairman of boxes, Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, membership chairman, and Miss Virginia Marvin, chairman of the Junior League Committee.

Members of the Junior League Committee include Miss Marvin, Miss Phyllis Barnes, Mrs. Theodore FitzRandolph, Miss Louise Goetze, Miss Arietta Smith, Mrs. Hollis Thayer, Miss Catherine Van Brunt and Miss Edith Warren.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMERICAN

FEB 7 - 1937

Kirsten Flagstad To Sing Here

Academy Also Offers WPA Vaudeville Performance

Attractions at the Academy of Music, mecca for society folk, this week will include such varied entertainment as a concert tomorrow night by Kirsten Flagstad, Metropolitan soprano, and a vaudeville performance under WPA auspices Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday afternoon.

Acclaimed the greatest liivng Wagnerian singer, Mme. Flagstad will sing a group of songs by Richard Strauss, Grieg, Jordan and Joseph Marx, three melodies in English by Michael Head, Ernest Charles and Frank Bridge, and two Wagnerian arias—Elsa's Dream from Lohengrin and Sieglinde's Aria from Walkuere.

Dr. George E. Raiguel will lecture Tuesday at 4 o'clock on "Current History" at the Academy, and Dr. Henry J. Frey in the evening will tell of "The Conquest of Disease." Motion picture programs will be given Wednesday afternoon and evening while on Thursday the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard.

HEIFETZ RECITAL

Jascha Heifetz will give a recital on Sunday afternoon, February 14, at 3.30 in Symphony hall. The famous violinist [illegible] the following programme: Allegro, by Mozart; Sonata No. 3 in E-flat, by Beethoven. Sonata in C major (for violin alone), by Bach; Concerto in D minor, by Wieniawski; and a group which he has transcribed, as follows: L'Apres midi d'un Faune, by Debussy; Meditteranean, by Bax; El Puerto, by Albeniz; Sea-Murmurs, by Castelnuovo-Tedesco; Danza de la Gitana, by Halffter.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMERICAN

FEB 7 - 1937

honic Repertoire

The Federal Project

Theatre of Music Marks Step Forward for Government Forces

By GRENA BENNETT.

One of the most comforting results of the depression was the creation of the Federal Music Project, marking the first step in national patronage of the arts. This governmental sponsorship of music rescued thousands of cultured men and women, many of them internationally famous, from the despair that comes from idleness and with little if any hope of future relief.

That branch of the Works Progress Administration not only gave material benefit to persons in every department of the musical art, but also provided work with the various units, thus saving the morale and diverting tragic tendencies.

The recent opening of the Theatre of Music was an important step forward. The prospectus of that movement is a most ambitious and attractive one. Following that national policy, a first-class symphony orchestra of one hundred experienced instrumentalists has been formed to appear at regular Sunday evening concerts. Among the guest conductors engaged are Paul Stassevitch, long an important member of the local musical colony; Arthur Fiedler, for several years assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony; Horace Britt, Chalmers Clifton and Samuel Gardner.

The grand opera unit will offer classic and modern works in the vernacular at popular prices; and fortnightly programs of chamber music are featured in the schedule. At these events the works of Mozart and Haydn will be performed and the Federal Music Project Chamber Orchestra will function. A number of noted soloists will assist. Among these are Katherine Bacon, Martha Baird, James Friskin, Carol Robinson and Sascha Gorodnitzki, all of whom have made the grade in their piano recitals; Jacques Gordon, of the Gordon String Quartet; Helen Teschner Tas and Boris Koutzen, violinists; Leon Barzin, conductor of the National Orchestral Association, will be the solo violinist, and Julia Peters, soprano, are among those already signed on the dotted line.

Also listed is a series of five Sunday afternoon concerts by the Madrigal Singers, under the baton of Lehman Engel, who have prepared programs of old Dutch works, ancient English folksongs and madrigals, French music of various epochs and numbers by Bach and other German composers.

At the third subscription series, which will begin this afternoon, the first program of a series illustrating "The Sources of Dance Rhythms and Form"

MONDAY NIGHT AT SYMPHONY

Pieces From Regular List Brilliantly Played

Save for the Prelude to "Lohengrin," the programme of last evening's concert of the Symphony Orchestra was entirely made up of pieces heard at the recent regular concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Beginning with Liadov's Symphonic Picture "From the Apocalypse," it continued with the Third Symphony of Brahms and concluded with three Wagnerian excerpts, the aforementioned Prelude, the "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried" and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser."

As such things are ordinarily reckoned, every number on this programme was a masterpiece, with the exception of the first. The Symphonic Picture is apocalyptic or bombastic, according to whether the listener has his mind upon St. John or upon the composer. At a recent pair of Symphonic Concerts, it thus prefaced the Symphony of Brahms and, in spite of its inferiority as music per se, had the curious effect of taking the wind out of Brahms' sails. Last evening, as before, the music of this minor Russian served to emphasize the more brilliant sonorities of the orchestra, while that of Brahms, by comparison, abounded in subtle mezzo-tints. With the music of Wagner, the balance was restored. Here brilliance was not purchased at the expense of musical value, and in both the Prelude to "Lohengrin" and in the first part of the "Forest Murmurs," there was opportunity, well realized, for the finest graduations of tone.

MUSIC

Globe Feb 9

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

If the music played at last night's Symphony concert was characterized by any amalgamating motif, it was of a sort best described by that misused adjective "colorful." By accident or design, it was just that: Liadov's Symphonic Picture "From the Apocalypse"; Brahms' Third Symphony, and three Wagner prunings—prelude to "Lohengrin"; the "Forest-Murmurs" from Siegfried (act II), and the overture to "Tannhaeuser."

The Liadov is purely descriptive. It is, in fact, a subdued, gloomy, generically Russian sort of judgment-day (one can catch fancied echoes, in the first portion, of distant strains of a Russian cathedral-choir). Wisely, Dr Koussevitzky takes care not to overplay this music—as if, for example, it were Strauss.

Each new hearing of such a work as Brahms' Third Symphony is to marvel at its superb symphonic fabric—the maze of rhythm, the variety and subtlety of orchestral color, the inexhaustable and singularly appropriate variety of the themes. Though their intention was, needless to say, to do full justice to such grandeur, it seemed as though the orchestra—its conductor, too—was a shade fatigued (no wonder, certainly), reading the score with something less than the usual blaze of inspiration.

Passing to the Wagner music after intermission, the orchestra was in truer form. Hearing the "Forest Murmurs" interlude, one was struck with the seeming fact that, to a degree, the orchestra has changed its extraordinarily brilliant tone of the earlier Koussevitzky years for an utterance more compact, more subtle. Consequently the conductor finds his effects at once nearer at hand, more telling, more deeply comprehended.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

FEB 6 - 1937

THE Boston Symphony orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, announces the engagement of John Priebe to sing the role of the Evangelist in the St. Matthew Passion, of Johann Sebastian Bach, to be performed at Symphony hall, in Boston, on Good Friday, March 26.

Mr. Priebe, of this city, is solo tenor at First Presbyterian church.

* * *

Southern Radio News
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

FEB 6 - 1937

Floyd Gibbons will give three more "True Adventures" over CBS at 9 p.m.

A full hour concert will be given by the Boston Symphony over NBC at 7:30 p.m.

MUSIC

Her Feb 9

MONDAY SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, gave the fourth concert of the Monday evening séries at Symphony hall last night. The program was as follows:

Liadov....."From the Apocalypse," Op. 56
Brahms. Symphony No. 3 in F major, Op. 90
Wagner...........Prelude to "Lohengrin"
Wagner..........."Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfred"
Wagner.........Overture to "Tannhauser"

Liadov called his orchestral piece, "From the Apocalypse" a "symphonic picture" and, according to the verses he wrote on the score, this picture portrays in music the vision of St. John the Divine. This, surely, is a subject to be tackled only by a genius of the highest order. Liadov was not that; inevitably, then, he fell short of his purpose. But the music itself, apart from the program, is by no means inferior. Its massive harmonies, as interpreted by the orchestra last night, were impressive, and there were passages of true nobility, such as the entrance of the chorale which is announced by the brass section. It would be interesting, by the way, to discover whether this chorale is of Liadov's own composition or borrowed from the liturgy of the Russian church. In any case it has an exertmely religious flavor. The piece as a whole was brilliantly played, without lapses into mere bombast; it served admirably as a preface to a Brahms-Wagner concert.

The very fact that the Brahms Second Symphony has been baptized with such heterogeneous titles as: "Eroica," "Hero and Leander" and "A Forest Idyll" (by Richter, Joachim and Clara Schumann, respectively), is enough to prove that here we have pure music which envelops so many varying moods that it cannot be conveniently pigeon-holed.

Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation last night was such as to emphasize the variety of expression inherent in thew ork. There may be some who found too much restraint in the playing of the second movement. To us severity seems quite in its place here; necessary indeed, to the proper balance of the whole. We have had excitement in the first movement, in spite of the pastoral tranquility of the second theme. The allegretto is wholly lyric, and the tortured rhythms of the finale alternate with mysterious undercurrents of foreboding. All these qualities were brought out last night with great artistry by Dr. Koussevitzky and his men; straight-forward simplicity in the second movement seemed exactly what was needed to make everything fall into its proper place. The Wagner excerpts were performed by the orchestra with its customary virtuosity, and enjoyed by a very enthusiastic audience. P. C. A.

PUSHKIN TO BE HONORED IN SYMPHONY CONCERT

The centenary (February 10) of the death of Alexander Pushkin, foremost of Russian poets, will be observed this month in many places, and at the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, tho second half of the programme will be devoted to music which his verses have inspired. These concerts will take place a week from next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, since the coming week will be occupied by the third annual visit of the orchestra to greater New York.

In memory of Pushkin, Koussevitzky has chosen the suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera, "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan", which is based upon a narrative poem of Pushkin; also the famous Letter Scene from Tchaikovsky's opera "Eugene Oniegin", which is probably the poet's most famous work. This air will be sung by Olga Averino. "Le Coq d'Or", another opera of Rimsky-Korsakov based upon a fairy tale in verse by Pushkin, will be the concluding number. The first part of the programme will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, which has not been performed at the regular concerts for a considerable time.

At the concert in Sanders theatre, Cambridge, on the previous Thursday evening, February 18, Professor Sorokin will speak briefly upon the Pushkin centenary. The overture to GGlinka's opera, "Russian and Ludmilla", derived from Pushkin, will be played, as well as Rimsky-Korsakov's Introduction and March from "De Coq d'Or", and the Letter Scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Oniegin", with Olga Averino as soloist. The programme will be concluded with Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" Symphony No. 6.

Feb. 9

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

JAN 30 1937

Fanfare

National Government Opens Theater Devoted To Music In New York City

ANOTHER important step in the development of the musical resources of the nation through government subsidy was taken this week, when the WPA Theater of Music opened with a concert by the 100-piece Federal Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Nikolai Sokoloff.

DR. SOKOLOFF

manner conforming to the early (

* * *

SUNDAY nights will be devoted to symphony programs. One each month will be known as a "New Talent" performance, when young American musicians will have opportunities to appear as conductors and soloists. The programs also will present compositions of native composers.

Beginning Jan. 29 there will be five Friday evening concerts devoted to the music of Mozart and Haydn by the Federal Music Project Chamber Orchestra. The conductors will include Horace Britt, Chalmers Clifton, Samuel Gardner, Paul Stassevitch, and Arthur Fiedler assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Orchestras

(Continued from preceding page)

morning, February 13, in Carnegie Hall to music from, or descriptive of, Mediterranean countries, including Spanish works by Albeniz, Granados and de Falla; Blanchet's "Soir de Ramadan," representing Turkey; the triumphal march from Verdi's "Aida," representing Egypt, and the Mediterranean Suite of the American composer, Aris Sleihan, representing Northern Africa. The audience will get representation to Italy by singing Denza's "Funiculi funicula."

Four Boston Symphony Concerts

For the first time in the fifty years of its visits to New York the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a special concert here for the benefit of its pension fund next Wednesday night, February 10, in Carnegie Hall. Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the [illegible] symphonies of Tchaikovsky and Mendelssohn, and Jascha Heifetz will be the soloist in Mendelssohn's violin concerto.

The programs for both of the Boston Symphony's regular Carnegie Hall concerts under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, next Friday night and Saturday afternoon, February 12 and 13, include Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" with Maria Ranzow, contralto, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera, and Paul Althouse, tenor of the Metropolitan, as the soloists. This was last performed here by the Philharmonic-Symphony under Bruno Walter on December 20 and 21, 1934, with Maria Olszewska and Frederick Jagel as soloists.

Dr. Koussevitzky will open both programs with Mozart works, presenting the Symphony in C (K. 338) on Friday, and the Symphony in D (K. 504) on Saturday.

Dr. Koussevitzky's program for Thursday night's concert at th Brooklyn Academy of Music incl Arthur Foote's suite in E for s Brahms's third symphony a Wagner excerpts.

Feb. 7/37

OMAHA, NEB.
Evening World-Herald

FEB 2 1937

Jews' Music, Chants Alike

Christians 'Borrowed' Tunes, Says Speaker

Christian churches have borrowed heavily from the religious music of the Jews as well as from their religious literature and doctrines, said Prof. A. W. Binder, composer and authority on Jewish music, who speaks tonight at the Jewish Community Center.

A. W. Binder.

"The early Christians were Jews," said Prof. Binder. "When they organized the first Christian churches they brought along into their new churches the tunes and melodies they had known as Jews in the synagogues.

"And when these tunes are traced and compared with the Gregorian chants, as has already been done to a very great extent, it will be found that the development of the musical art in the churches owes much to old Jewish music."

Composed 75 Hymns.

Professor of Jewish music of the Jewish Institute of Religion in New York, Binder is also director of music at the Free Synagogue, of which Stephen A. Wise is rabbi. Of the many hymns he has written the most popular, said the composer, is "Come, O Sabbath Day."

Hitherto musical historians have not given the Jews the credit due them in development of music, Binder says.

"We find many Jews among the great musical performers," he explained. "Among violinist there are Heifitz, Elman, Kreisler. Among pianists are Bauer, Gabrilovich, Horowitz, Godowsky, Rosenthal. Among conductors are Damrosch, Koussevitzky, Golschmann, Walter."

Gershwyn Named.

Jewish composers also have made their contribution to music in this country, he said. "Men like Copeland, Gruenberg and George Gershwyn, have done much toward developing American music and to place it on a high plane."

Prof. Binder will speak tonight on "The Part Which Jewish Music Has Played In Jewish Life Throughout the Ages."

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

TIRINDELLI, VIOLINIST, DIES

Succumbs in Italy, Formerly at Boston and Cincinnati.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—Friends in New York received a cable announcing the death today in Rome, Italy, of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer, who was associated for many years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the ~~Cincinnati Conservatory~~ of Music.

Death was due to a heart disease.

Signor Tirindelli was born at Conegliano, near Venice, May 5, 1858, and came to the United States about 1895 to become concert-master for the Boston orchestra. For many years he ~~headed the~~ violin department of the Cincinnati conservatory. He returned ~~to Italy~~ about 15 years ago.

NEWS

[illegible]

FEB 4 - 193

192

Brilliant Audience Hears Pushkin Centenary Program

Friends Of Russian Music Sponsor Recital At Home Of Mme. Catherine Gsovski In Great Neck Honoring Famous Poet

A literary and musical treat was offered on Saturday night a tthe home of Mme. Catherine Gsovski, 7 Cambridge Road, Great Neck, when Boris Brasol, author-lecturer, Alexis Tcherkassky, noted Russian baritone and Apolina Stoskus, soprano, presented a program dedicated to the centenary of Alexander Pushkin, famous Russian poet. The program, sponsored by the Friends of Russian Music, attracted a distinguished audience.

Mr. Brasel, chairman of the Pushkin committee in this country, spoke on the poet's life and work. Son after beginning his talk, he had imbued the audience with his enthusiasm and added to their interest in the musical number to come, all of them set to poems by Pushkin. Included in his talk were excerpts from "Boris Godunov."

Mr. Tcherkassky, soloist with the Boston Symphony and with the Philadelphia Orchestra and leading baritone with the Art of Musical Russia, Inc., sang compositions of Rimsky Korsakoff, Borodin, Glinka, Rachmaninoff and other Russian musicians, set to the poems of Pushkin. Miss Stoskus and Mr. Tcherkassky sang arias and duets from "Eugene Onyegin."

Mr. Tcherkassky again delighted his Great Neck audience, as he has on previous occasions. His voice is truly magnificent and it is the hope of the writer that we may have the opportunity of hearing it in a large auditorium allowing full scope for its tremendous power and depth of quality. His translations of the poems were given with charming dignity and it was quite evident that Mr. Tcherkassky has a sense of humor.

Miss Stoskus likewise has a glorious voice, full and with clarity of tone. Her operatic arias marked her debut in the use of Russian, causing her fellow artist to ask the Russian members of the audience to be "what you call it—indulgent."

Mr. Tcherkassky studied in France and made his debut when he was 23 years of age, with Lily Pons. After successful operatic and concert appearances in Europe, he came to America and was engaged by Leopold Stokowski to sing with the Philadelphia Orchestra. He has sung with leading symphony orchestra, under the direction of Walter Damrosch, Efrem Zimbalist, Dr. Arthur Rodzinski and others.

For the past four years he has been the leading baritone of the Art of Musical Russia, Inc., which has presented Russian operas in New York and other leading cities in the United States. On Tuesday night he gave a recital at the Hotel Plaza

Among the subscribers for Saturday night's affair were: Mr. and Mrs. David Kemp, Mr. and Mrs. William R. Witherell, Mr. and Mrs. Hunter L. Delatour, Mrs. Roswell Eldridge, Mrs. J. A. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Eden, Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Zinsser, Miss Dolly Jarbeau, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald E. Gillmor, Mr. and Mrs. Innis O'Rourke, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Fitzgerald, Mr. and Mrs. Gustav Wittig, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh W. MacNair.

Also, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Culver, Mr. and Mrs. Randall J. LeBouef, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bethel, Mr. and Mrs. Tracy Lewis, Mr. Frederick Uhl, Mrs. J. Edward Meyer, Mrs. Catherine Irving, Miss Muriel Williams, Miss Miriam Sanborn, Miss Marjorie Griffen, Miss Elizabeth Farnham, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Williams, Dr. and Mrs. Theodore Sedlmayer, Mrs. Stanhope Foster, Mrs. Anita Hecht, Mrs. Alphonse Pelham, Mrs. Norman G. Chambers, Mr and Mrs. Sidney Mattison, Dr. and Mrs. Paul Kavanagh, the Rev. A. R. McKechnie and Mrs. McKechnie of Great Neck.

Also, Mrs. Francis Tweddell, Mr. and Mrs. Otto B. Blackwell, Mr. and Mrs. John I. Mange and Miss Virginia Shoemaker, Plandome; Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Bristol, Douglaston; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Savitch, Beechhurst; Princess Marie Gagarin, Westbury; Princess Sophie Gagarin, Mme. Helene Olgerd, Nicholas Dimitrieff, Alexlander Smolensky, Vecheslav Svoboda and Mme. Jurieva Svoboda of New York City.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

FEB 7 - 1937

Among This

Left to right: Jascha Heifetz negie Hall; Emanuel List, ba Harris, pianist,

Will be heard
with B.S.O

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

1937

"MANON" ON OPERA BILL

Radio listeners will attend the performance of "Manon" as broadcast from the Metropolitan Opera Saturday afternoon and will hear the debut of Bidu Sayoa, Brazilian lyric soprano, in the name part. This may be another afternoon as thrilling as was the debut of Gina Cigna in "Aida" Saturday.

Those who will be spending the week-end in New York may attend any of the following, (it is a good idea to write for tickets in advance):

At the Metropolitan on Saturday night, Faust.

Friday — Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra, Carnegie hall, 2:30 p. m.; Lucile Dreskell, soprano, Town Hall, 3 p. m.; Roth quartet, Town Hall, 8:30 p. m.; Federal Chamber orchestra, Theater of Music, 8:30 p. m.; Boston Symphony orchestra, Carnegie Hall, 8:45 p. m.

Saturday — Philharmonic Young People's concert, Carnegie Hall, 11 a. m.; Boston Symphony orchestra, Carnegie Hall, 2:30 p. m.; Bartlett and Robertson, duo-pianists, Town Hall, 3 p. m.; Pro Arte quartet, Washington Irving auditorium, 8:15 p. m.; Judith Sidorsky, piano, Town Hall, 8:30 p. m.; Kirsten Flagstad, soprano, McMillin theater, 8:30 p. m.

* * *

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 7 - 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO PLAY THURSDAY

Third Brooklyn Concert of Season Will Be Given at the Academy of Music

FLAGSTAD PLANS RECITAL

Verdi's 'La Traviata' Will Be Fourth Metropolitan Opera—Other Music Notes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, will give its third Brooklyn concert this season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday night. The program will consist of Foote's Suite in E major (Opus 63) for string orchestra, Brahms's Symphony No. 3 in F major (Opus 90) and Wagner's prelude to "Lohengrin," "Forest Murmurs," from "Siegfried" and overture to "Tannhaeuser."

Mrs. Frank Reynolds will be the hostess in the committee box. Other boxholders will be Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Frank E. Simmons, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Miss Irma A. Logan, Mrs. Robert F. Ives, Mrs. Joseph A. Bennett, Rear Admiral Harris Laning and the Adelphi Academy Alumnae.

The fifty-first season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn is under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which E. Huntington Woodman is chairman, and the Brooklyn committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman. Mrs. W. Preston Goodfellow is membership chairman and Miss Virginia Marvin chairman of the Junior League Committee.

Flagstad Recital Tomorrow

Kirsten Flagstad, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Association, will give a song recital at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, tomorrow night. The program will include selections by Strauss, Grieg, Wagner, Jordan, Joseph Marx, Michael Head, Ernest Charles and Frank Bridge.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

FEB 7 - 1937

Mrs. Frank Reynolds To Be Hostess at Boston Symphony

Mrs. Frank Reynolds will be the hostess in the committee box when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is the conductor, makes its third visit of the season to Brooklyn Thursday evening. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct.

Half of the program for this mid-season concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music will be devoted to the works of Wagner as follows: Prelude to "Lohengrin," "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," Act II, and Overture to "Tannhauser"; Brahms' symphony No. 3 in F major, op. 90, and Suite in E major, op. 63, for string orchestra, a composition by Foote, the American composer, will comprise the first part of the program. The suite is in three movements, consisting of prelude, pizzicato and adagietto and fugue.

Other boxholders will be Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Frank E. Simmons, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Miss Irma A. Logan, Mrs. Robert F. Ives, Mrs. Joseph A. Bennett, Rear Admiral Harris Laning, commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and the Adelphi Academy Associate Alumnae.

The 51st season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn is sponsored by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which Mr. Blum is president of the board of trustees; the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which R. Huntington Woodman is chairman, and the Brooklyn Committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport is acting chairman.

In the interest of the Brooklyn season Mrs. Blum is chairman of boxes, Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, membership chairman, and Miss Virginia Marvin, chairman of the Junior League committee.

Members of the Junior League committee include Miss Marvin, Miss Phyllis Barnes, Mrs. Theodore Fitz Randolph, Miss Louise Goetze, Miss Arrietta Smith, Mrs. Hollis K. Thayer, Miss Catherine Van Brunt and Miss Edith Warren.

* * *

192

85

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

JAN 30 1937

Fanfare

National Government Opens Theater Devoted To Music In New York City

ANOTHER important step in the development of the musical resources of the nation through government subsidy was taken this week, when the WPA Theater of Music opened with a concert by the 100-piece Federal Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Nikolai Sokoloff.

DR. SOKOLOFF

manner conforming to the early (

* * *

SUNDAY nights will be devoted to symphony programs. One each month will be known as a "New Talent" performance, when young American musicians will have opportunities to appear as conductors and soloists. The programs also will present compositions of native composers.

Beginning Jan. 29 there will be five Friday evening concerts devoted to the music of Mozart and Haydn by the Federal Music Project Chamber Orchestra. The conductors will include Horace Britt, Chalmers Clifton, Samuel Gardner, Paul Stassevitch, and Arthur Fiedler assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Orchestras

(Continued from preceding page)

morning, February 13, in Carnegie Hall, to music from, or descriptive of, Mediterranean countries, including Spanish works by Albeniz, Granados and de Falla; Blanchet's "Soir de Ramadan," representing Turkey; the triumphal march from Verdi's "Aida," representing Egypt, and the Mediterranean Suite of the American composer, Anis Fuleihan, representing northern Africa. The audience will give representation to Italy by singing Denza's "Funiculi, funicula."

Four Boston Symphony Concerts

For the first time in the fifty years of its visits to New York the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a special concert here for the benefit of its pension fund next Wednesday night, February 10, in Carnegie Hall. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the fourth symphonies of Tchaikovsky and Mendelssohn, and Jascha Heifetz will be the soloist in Mendelssohn's violin concerto.

Feb 7/37

The programs for both of the Boston Symphony's regular Carnegie Hall concerts under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, next Friday night and Saturday afternoon, February 12 and 13, include Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" with Maria Ranzow, contralto, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera, and Paul Althouse, tenor of the Metropolitan, as the soloists. This was last performed here by the Philharmonic-Symphony under Bruno Walter on December 20 and 21, 1934, with Maria Olszewska and Frederick Jagel as soloists.

Dr. Koussevitzky will open both programs with Mozart works, presenting the Symphony in C (K. 338) on Friday, and the Symphony in D (K. 504) on Saturday.

Dr. Koussevitzky's program for Thursday night's concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music inclu Arthur Foote's suite in E for s Brahms's third symphony Wagner excerpts.

OMAHA, NEB.
Evening World-Herald

FEB 2 - 1937

Jews' Music, Chants Alike

Christians 'Borrowed' Tunes, Says Speaker

Christian churches have borrowed heavily from the religious music of the Jews as well as from their religious literature and doctrines, said Prof. A. W. Binder, composer and authority on Jewish music, who speaks tonight at the Jewish Community Center.

A. W. Binder.

"The early Christians were Jews," said Prof. Binder. "When they organized the first Christian churches they brought along into their new churches the tunes and melodies they had known as Jews in the synagogues.

"And when these tunes are traced and compared with the Gregorian chants, as has already been done to a very great extent, it will be found that the development of the musical art in the churches owes much to old Jewish music."

Composed 75 Hymns.

Professor of Jewish music of the Jewish Institute of Religion in New York, Binder is also director of music at the Free Synagogue, of which Stephen A. Wise is rabbi. Of the many hymns he has written the most popular, said the composer, is "Come, O Sabbath Day."

Hitherto musical historians have not given the Jews the credit due them in development of music, Binder says.

"We find many Jews among the great musical performers," he explained. "Among violinist there are Heifitz, Elman, Kreisler. Among pianists are Bauer, Gabrilovich, Horowitz, Godowsky, Rosenthal. Among conductors are Damrosch, Koussevitzky, Golschmann, Walter."

Gershwyn Named.

Jewish composers also have made their contribution to music in this country, he said. "Men like Copeland, Gruenberg and George Gershwyn, have done much toward developing American music and to place it on a high plane."

Prof. Binder will speak tonight on "The Part Which Jewish Music Has Played In Jewish Life Throughout the Ages."

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

TIRINDELLI, VIOLINIST, DIES

cumbs in Italy, Formerly at Boston and Cincinnati.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—Friends in New York received a cable announcing the death today in Rome, Italy, of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer, who was associated for many years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

Death was due to a heart disease.

Signor Tirindelli was born at Conegliano, near Venice, May 5, 1858, and came to the United States about 1895 to become concert-master for the Boston orchestra. For many years he headed the violin department of the Cincinnati conservatory. He returned to Italy about 15 years ago.

NEWS

Roslyn, N.J.

FEB 4 - 1937

Brilliant Audience Hears Pushkin Centenary Program

Friends Of Russian Music Sponsor Recital At Home Of Mme. Catherine Gsovski In Great Neck Honoring Famous Poet

A literary and musical treat was offered on Saturday night a tthe home of Mme. Catherine Gsovski, 7 Cambridge Road, Great Neck, when Boris Brasol, author-lecturer, Alexis Tcherkassky, noted Russian baritone and Apolina Stoskus, soprano, presented a program dedicated to the centenary of Alexander Pushkin, famous Russian poet. The program, sponsored by the Friends of Russian Music, attracted a distinguished audience.

Mr. Brasel, chairman of the Pushkin committee in this country, spoke on the poet's life and work. Son after beginning his talk, he had imbued the audience with his enthusiasm and added to their interest in the musical number to come, all of them set to poems by Pushkin. Included in his talk were excerpts from "Boris Godunov."

Mr. Tcherkassky, soloist with the Boston Symphony and with the Philadelphia Orchestra and leading baritone with the Art of Musical Russia, Inc., sang compositions of Rimsky Korsakoff, Borodin, Glinka, Rachmaninoff and other Russian musicians, set to the poems of Pushkin. Miss Stoskus and Mr. Tcherkassky sang arias and duets from "Eugene Onyegin."

Mr. Tcherkassky again delighted his Great Neck audience, as he has on previous occasions. His voice is truly magnificent and it is the hope of the writer that we may have the opportunity of hearing it in a large auditorium allowing full scope for its tremendous power and depth of quality. His translations of the poems were given with charming dignity and it was quite evident that Mr. Tcherkassky has a sense of humor.

Miss Stoskus likewise has a glorious voice, full and with clarity of tone. Her operatic arias marked her debut in the use of Russian, causing her fellow artist to ask the Russian members of the audiehce to be "what you call it—indulgent."

Mr. Tcherkassky studied in France and made his debut when he was 23 years of age, with Lily Pons. After successful operatic and concert appearances in Europe, he came to America and was engaged by Leopold Stokowski to sing with the Philadelphia Orchestra. He has sung with leading symphony orchestra, under the direction of Walter Damrosch, Efrem Zimbalist, Dr. Arthur Rodzinski and others.

For the past four years he has been the leading baritone of the Art of Musical Russia, Inc., which has presented Russian operas in New York and other leading cities in the United States. On Tuesday night he gave a recital at the Hotel Plaza

Among the subscribers for Saturday night's affair were: Mr. and Mrs. David Kemp, Mr. and Mrs. William R. Witherell, Mr. and Mrs. Hunter L. Delatour, Mrs. Roswell Eldridge, Mrs. J. A. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Eden, Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Zinsser, Miss Dolly Jarbeau, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald E. Gillmor, Mr. and Mrs. Innis O'Rourke, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Fitzgerald, Mr. and Mrs. Gustav Wittig, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh W. MacNair.

Also, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Culver, Mr. and Mrs. Randall J. LeBouef, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bethel, Mr. and Mrs. Tracy Lewis, Mr. Frederick Uhl, Mrs. J. Edward Meyer, Mrs. Catherine Irving, Miss Muriel Williams, Miss Miriam Sanborn, Miss Marjorie Griffen, Miss Elizabeth Farnham. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Williams, Dr. and Mrs. Theodore Sedlmayer, Mrs. Stanhope Foster, Mrs. Anita Hecht, Mrs. Alphonse Pelham. Mrs. Norman G. Chambers, Mr and Mrs. Sidney Mattison, Dr. and Mrs. Paul Kavanagh, the Rev. A. R. McKechnie and Mrs. McKechnie of Great Neck.

Also, Mrs. Francis Tweddell, Mr. and Mrs. Otto B. Blackwell, Mr. and Mrs. John I. Mange and Miss Virginia Shoemaker, Plandome; Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Bristol, Douglaston; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Savitch, Beechhurst; Princess Marie Gagarin, Westbury; Princess Sophie Gagarin, Mme. Helene Olgerd, Nicholas Dimitrieff, Alexlander Smolensky, Vecheslav Svoboda and Mme. Jurieva Svoboda of New York City.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

FEB 7 - 1937

Among This

Left to right: Jascha Heifetz negie Hall; Emanuel List, ba Harris, pianist,

Will be heard with B.S.O.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

FEB 8 - 1937

"MANON" ON OPERA BILL

Radio listeners will attend the performance of "Manon" as broadcast from the Metropolitan Opera Saturday afternoon and will hear the debut of Bidu Sayoa, Brazilian lyric soprano, in the name part. This may be another afternoon as thrilling as was the debut of Gina Cigna in "Aida" Saturday.

Those who will be spending the week-end in New York may attend any of the following, (it is a good idea to write for tickets in advance):

At the Metropolitan on Saturday night, Faust.

Friday — Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra, Carnegie hall, 2:30 p. m.; Lucile Dreskell, soprano, Town Hall, 3 p. m.; Roth quartet, Town Hall, 8:30 p. m.; Federal Chamber orchestra, Theater of Music, 8:30 p. m.; Boston Symphony orchestra, Carnegie Hall, 8:45 p. m.

Saturday — Philharmonic Young People's concert, Carnegie Hall, 11 a. m.; Boston Symphony orchestra, Carnegie Hall, 2:30 p. m.; Bartlett and Robertson, duo-pianists, Town Hall, 3 p. m.; Pro Arte quartet, Washington Irving auditorium, 8:15 p. m.; Judith Sidorsky, piano, Town Hall, 8:30 p. m.; Kirsten Flagstad, soprano, McMillin theater, 8:30 p. m.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 7 - 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO PLAY THURSDAY

Third Brooklyn Concert of Season Will Be Given at the Academy of Music

FLAGSTAD PLANS RECITAL

Verdi's 'La Traviata' Will Be Fourth Metropolitan Opera—Other Music Notes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, will give its third Brooklyn concert this season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday night. The program will consist of Foote's Suite in E major (Opus 63) for string orchestra, Brahms's Symphony No. 3 in F major (Opus 90) and Wagner's prelude to "Lohengrin," "Forest Murmurs," from "Siegfried" and overture to "Tannhaeuser."

Mrs. Frank Reynolds will be the hostess in the committee box. Other boxholders will be Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Frank E. Simmons, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Miss Irma A. Logan, Mrs. Robert F. Ives, Mrs. Joseph A. Bennett, Rear Admiral Harris Laning and the Adelphi Academy Alumnae.

The fifty-first season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn is under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which E. Huntington Woodman is chairman, and the Brooklyn committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman. Mrs. W. Preston Goodfellow is membership chairman and Miss Virginia Marvin chairman of the Junior League Committee.

Flagstad Recital Tomorrow

Kirsten Flagstad, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Association, will give a song recital at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, tomorrow night. The program will include selections by Strauss, Grieg, Wagner, Jordan, Joseph Marx, Michael Head, Ernest Charles and Frank Bridge.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

FEB 7 - 1937

Mrs. Frank Reynolds To Be Hostess at Boston Symphony

Mrs. Frank Reynolds will be the hostess in the committee box when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is the conductor, makes its third visit of the season to Brooklyn Thursday evening. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct.

Half of the program for this midseason concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music will be devoted to the works of Wagner as follows: Prelude to "Lohengrin," "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," Act II, and Overture to "Tannhauser"; Brahms' symphony No. 3 in F major, op. 90, and Suite in E major, op. 63, for string orchestra, a composition by Foote, the American composer, will comprise the first part of the program. The suite is in three movements, consisting of prelude, pizzicato and adagietto and fugue.

Other boxholders will be Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Frank E. Simmons, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Miss Irma A. Logan, Mrs. Robert F. Ives, Mrs. Joseph A. Bennett, Rear Admiral Harris Laning, commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and the Adelphi Academy Associate Alumnae.

The 51st season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn is sponsored by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which Mr. Blum is president of the board of trustees; the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which R. Huntington Woodman is chairman, and the Brooklyn Committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport is acting chairman.

In the interest of the Brooklyn season Mrs. Blum is chairman of boxes, Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, membership chairman, and Miss Virginia Marvin, chairman of the Junior League committee.

Members of the Junior League committee include Miss Marvin, Miss Phyllis Barnes, Mrs. Theodore Fitz Randolph, Miss Louise Goetze, Miss Arrietta Smith, Mrs. Hollis K. Thayer, Miss Catherine Van Brunt and Miss Edith Warren.

* * *

MUSIC

Serge Prokofieff, Noted Pianist With Boston Symphony, Says Position of Artist and Musician Has Improved in Russia Under Reds

At the grand piano on Symphony Hall stage sat an alert, bald, heavy-lipped man of 46 years, wearing a gray business suit and equipped with spectacles trimmed in gray shell. Behind him, at left and in front, were ranged the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in sweaters and business jackets. Their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, dominated the scene from the podium between piano and orchestra.

The auditorium was shut off from the stage by a faded, rose-colored curtain that hung from ceiling to floor the full width of the hall, leaving only a few rows of seats visible from the stage. Long lances of sunlight pierced the rounded windows near the high ceiling and struck through the darkened hall against the curtain. Charwomen went quietly about their prosaic tasks.

Dr. Koussevitzky raised his baton and in the silence there sounded the voice of a single clarinet. Another clarinet joined in, then other voices of the orchestra, and presently the man in the gray suit began to strike the piano keys. He played with a sort of electric energy and vitality. His powerful hands swept the keyboard with precision and confidence, now striking softly, now with a crisp accent. It was evident that he was master of the instrument and of the music.

Serge Prokofieff, he was, one of the foremost of living composers and pianists, and the music was his own third concerto, opus 26, which he was rehearsing for performance with the orchestra yesterday afternoon and tonight.

At intervals the rehearsal stopped abruptly and Prokofieff sprang from his seat, conferred with Dr. Koussevitzky, flew back to the piano and began again. Occasionally, when he had a few measures rest, he whipped out a handkerchief, dried his domelike forehead, returned the handkerchief to his trousers pocket and resumed playing, with movements so rapid and accurate that the whole interlude had the effect of a conjuring trick. Everything he did was brisk and energetic.

After his part of the rehearsal was done, he sat in the gallery and heard the orchestra play his "Scythian Suite," which, with the march and scherzo from "The Love for Three Oranges," also are on the program The other number being presented with these modern works is Mozart's symphony in G-minor, an odd contrast. Prokofieff himself has written a "Classical Symphony" in Mozartian vein.

Born in the Russian Ukraine, Prokofieff showed musical ability when very young and was given excellent instruction. Among his teachers were Rimsky-Korsakov and Liadov. He graduated from the St. Petersburg Conservatory in 1914. and had the good fortune not to be called for army service. After the Bolshevik revolution. he came to America where he had some success. In 1923 he went to Paris, and has lived there since. Occasionally he makes tours to Russia, America and elsewhere.

After his rehearsal in Boston he consented to give "five minutes, maybe 10 minutes" to discussing music, and he proceeded in characteristically energetic and earnest fashion:

"The position of the artist, the musician in Russia today is very good. There is no longer any aristocracy or any class that is dominant because of great wealth. 'So," he smiled. "the creative worker in the arts has come to the front.

"There are unions of painters and unions of composers. In each centre, as in Moscow and Leningrad, there is such a union, each of which is a distinct unit, but all the units are linked to each other, like branches of a central organization.

"Suppose a composer wants to write a symphony. He goes to the union, of which he is a member, and he says, 'I need time to write a symphony.'

"'How much time?' they ask him.

"'I need four months to work on nothing but the symphony,' he says, 'and then I will have it in such shape that I can complete it by working part of my time at it.'

"So, if they think he is a good composer, they give him enough money so he can live four months without doing anything but writing his symphony. They don't give him enough so he can live in great style, but enough to live suitably while he is working. This is not money that the government has control of. It is the union's money. Some of it may have been given to the union by the government, and some of it may have come from concerts and things of that sort.

"How do they decide who is worth supporting with the union's money? Well, if he is a composer who has written a good deal, they have something to judge by. If he is a young man just out of the conservatory, they ask his professors, and if they say he has talent, the union takes a chance on him and gives him opportunity.

"Suppose at the end of the four months, or four weeks, or whatever time he asked for, he hasn't much done. Then he'll have a harder time getting money the next time he asks for it. Or suppose he finishes his work and it is performed and everybody dislikes it. Maybe it just bores people. They don't stop giving him an opportunity to write, but they make him wait longer, maybe a year or so, before they give him another chance.

"When a concert is given, the composers whose works are played get a share of the proceeds. If works are by a composer who is dead, the money goes to the union. That helps them get money to enable new composers to work."

As to the kind of music now being written by the Russians, including himself, he had this to say:

"Where there used to be thousands of Russians going to concerts in the old days, there are now hundreds of thousands. They are not mature in music, most of them, so that presents a problem. Classical music must be played for them, so that they can become acquainted with it. But then they ask, 'What are our own composers doing?' But they would not be able to comprehend a good deal of the modern work because it is so complicated. So the modern composer must work along two lines: He must write the music that is in line with his development and he must also write music that is simpler and yet original. That is not so easy. He cannot merely copy the simplicity of the older writers. He must invent a new and original simplicity.

Prokofieff made an expressive graceful gesture with his right hand.

"New melodic curves must be developed," he said. "New but simple harmonization must be found. I am working a great deal on such music myself, along with my music of different sort."

Among Russians doing important work he mentioned Miasrovsky, now at work on a symphony; Shebalin, with a string quartet under way; Shostakovitch, finishing his Fourth Symphony and Polovinkin, who is writing remarkable music for children. He wrote their names on a piece of paper in the interest of accuracy.

Prokofieff has experienced and is experiencing the pangs that every originator has had to endure.

"When I produced my third piano concerto 15 years ago and played it for the first time, there was some very nasty criticism of it in New York and in Chicago," he said. "People didn't understand it. Now it seems comprehensible enough. But that's the way it always was and will be. It was that way with Beethoven, with Wagner, with Stravinsky. It's that way with me. It takes people time to understand."

The composer smiled, held out his hand, leaped from his chair and said he had to go. He strode into another room, whirled into his furlined coat and then paced back and forth vigorously for a minute or two more to reiterate what he had said about the new simplicity and the education and enthusiasm of Russian audiences.

On the way out the door another question overtook him. When was he returning to Europe?

"I am sailing Feb. 9 for Paris," he called back.

Then he went upstairs so rapidly that he seemed rather to vanish than merely to go away.

G. Y. L.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

FEB 6 - 1937

193

STEEL AGE INSPIRES HIM

Serge Prokofieff Wrote "Le Pas d'Acier", the "Scythian Suite" and Other Complicated Music, but for the Soviet's Musically Immature Thousands He Aims to Compose Works That Are Simple but Original.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY NEWS

FEB 7 - 1937

Boston Orchestra on Institute Program

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences will present the following program this week at the Academy of Music:

Monday — Illustrated Lecture, "The Adriatic Gateway to Northern Italy," by Dr. J. Lane Miller, 4 P. M. Illustrated Lecture-Demonstration, "Plant-Animal Links in the Chain of Life," by Dr. Alfred Gundersen and Maud H. Purdy, 8:15 P. M. Recital, by Kirsten Flagstad, soprano, 8:15 P. M.

Tuesday—Lecture, "Current History," by Dr. George Earle Haiguel, 4 P. M. Lecture, "Landmarks in the Science of Man. Pasteur, Lister and Koch: The Conquest of Disease," by Dr. Henry J. Fry, 8:15 P. M.

Wednesday—Motion Picture Program: "Hearts in Bondage" and News Releases, 3:30 P. M. Lecture, "Round South America Tour" (color and motion pictures), by James C. Sawders, 8:15 P. M.

Thursday—Lecture, "Ben Jonson and His Friends (Shakespeare, Drayton, Donne, Herrick)," by Hugh Hardyman, 4 P. M. Illustrated Lecture, "Measuring Geologic Time," by Dr. Alfred C. Lane, 8:15 P. M. Concert, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, 8:30 P. M.

Saturday—Junior Program: Lecture, "Backstage at the Zoo," (lantern views and motion pictures), by Dr. Claude W. Leister; Motion Picture Program, including "M'Liss," 2:15 P. M. Motion Picture Program: "San Francisco" and News Releases, 8:15 P. M.

Sunday — Lecture, "Contemporary Books Worth Reading," by William Lyon Phelps, 3 P. M.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

Noted Italian Artist Reported Dead In Rome

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—(AP)—Friends in New York today received a telegram announcing the death in Rome today of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer who was associated for many years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

Death was due to a heart attack.

Signor Tirindelli was born at Conegliano, near Venice, May 5, 1858, and came to the United States about 1895 to become concert-master for the Boston orchestra. For many years he headed the violin department of the Cincinnati Conservatory. He returned to Italy about 15 years ago.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, Noted Violinist, Dies

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—(AP)—Friends in New York today received a telegram announcing the death in Rome, Italy, of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer, who was associated for many years with the Boston (Mass.) Symphony orchestra and the Cincinnati (O.) Conservatory of Music.

Death occurred today and was due to a heart attack.

Signor Tirindelli was born at Conegliano, near Venice, May 5, 1858, and came to the United States about 1895 to become concert master for the Boston orchestra. For many years he headed the violin department of the Cincinnati conservatory. He returned to Italy about fifteen years ago.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN

FEB 8 - 1937

Mrs. Frank Reynolds to Entertain At Boston Symphony Concert; Others to Have Guests

Mrs. Frank Reynolds will be hostess in the committee box when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, makes its third visit of the season to the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday evening.

Other box holders will be: Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Frank E. Simmons, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Miss Irma A. Logan, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, Mrs. Joseph A. Bennett, Rear Admiral Harris Laning, Commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard and the Adelphi Academy Alumnae.

The program will include selections from the works of Richard Wagner, Brahms and Foote.

The fifty-first borough season of the orchestra is sponsored by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which Edward C. Blum is president of the board of trustees; the Philharmonic Society, R. Huntington Woodman, chairman and the Brooklyn Committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, is acting chairman. Miss Virginia Marvin heads a Junior League Committee, working in the interest of the concerts.

Symphony Concert Series

By WILLIAM T. CHASE, Jr.

That rather trite phrase, "a familiar group of established masterpieces," might well be used to describe the program played at the fourth of the Monday series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, in Symphony Hall last evening. But it would probably be wiser not to do so, for the anti-Brahms and anti-Wagner clans would be up in arms in a moment. Whether anybody would protest against the inclusion of Liadov's "From the Apocalypse," in such a classification is more of a problem. Anyhow, aside from the Liadov Symphonic Picture, the evening was devoted to the Brahms Symphony No. 3 in F major, and the Wagner Prelude to "Lohengrin," "Forest Murmurs" from the second act of "Siegfried" and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser."

From an audience point of view—to judge from the volume of the applause—the tremendous climax achieved at the end of the "Tannhaeuser" overture was the highlight of the program. Certainly the ovation given Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra was fully deserved. And it is interesting, too, that the Friday and the Tuesday audiences have found these three Wagner selections very much to their liking. This reviewer, though, is inclined to question the wisdom of giving the "Forest Murmurs" in concert form. There are a number of dull portions in this particular excerpt and the tempo adopted by Dr. Koussevitzky does not tend to brighten them.

In any case the Wagner did not wipe out the memory of an excellent performance of the Brahms Third Symphony. Both this work and the Liadov were interpreted as recently as the Friday and Saturday concerts of Jan. 29 and 30. Yesterday, as then, Dr. Koussevitzky's way with the Brahms seemed to reveal all its best qualities. Technically the most difficult of the four symphonies, the orchestra treated such matters as tone, rhythm and phrasing with customary brilliance. The slow, rather solemn second movement, opening with dialogue between clarinets and strings ('cellos and violas), was taken at an admirable pace this time and the poco allegretto was altogether delightful. After such a reading it would be hard to find any reason for the apparent neglect of the symphony in favor of the other three. The colorful Liadov made an effective opening number. The fifth concert of the Monday series will be played on Feb. 22.

Zighera Concert Thrills Large Audience

A most enthusiastic audience assembled in Jordan Hall last evening to hear the third and last of the concerts initiated and conducted by Bernard Zighera. The applause for Gregor Piatigorsky, well-known 'cellist, was simply deafening, and Mme. Olga Averino, Boston soprano, and the chamber orchestra composed of members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, also received their share of the ovation.

Sitting well down in front were Mr. and Mrs. Carl Dreyfus. Mrs. Dreyfus wearing a sable wrap with her black velvet gown. Nearby were Mr. and Mrs. Chester B. Humphrey, and Mrs. Samuel P. Sears, in black. Mrs. Alexander Steinert, wearing a corsage of violets with her royal purple gown, was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Samuel J. Newman. With her garnet red frock, Mrs. Charles E. Monroe wore a sable cape, and Mrs. Graham Winslow topped her black skirt with a jade green tunic.

Among others present were Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, and their niece, Miss Natalie Koussevitzky, Mrs. G. Loring Briggs, Miss Mimi Little, Miss Ruth Coffin, Dr. and Mrs. Roger I. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Jesus Maria Sanroma, Mrs. Putnam Aldrich, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Foote, Miss Gertrude Sands, Miss Susanna R. Dabney, Mr. and Mrs. Carl F. Danner, Miss Eleanor Babson, Mr. Edmund Brigham, Mrs. Hayward W. Cushing, Miss Mabel Daniels and Miss Nina Burnham.

NORFOLK. VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT

7 - 1937

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will offer a full-hour concert from the Brooklyn Academy of Music beginning at 8:30 o'clock tonight over the NBC-Blue network. Foote's Suite in E Major, Opus 63, for String Orchestra, will open the program. The second and concluding number will be Symphony No. 3 in F Major, Opus 90, by Brahms.

194

2

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
FEB 7 - 1937

Conductor and Soprano

Serge Koussevitzky, conducting the Boston Sympho

[illegible]

Koussevitzky Conducts Significant Music with Penetrating Mastery

Trans. Feb. 9/37

Brahms Symphony Thrills on Repetition; Trio of Wagner Overtures Arouse Enthusiasm

By Redfern Mason

Two numbers in last night's program of the Symphony have been heard in the general subscription series, and it is a pity that they cannot be heard by every man, woman and child in Boston. They are the "Apocalypse" of Liadov and the F major Symphony of Brahms.

On a rehearing, the Liadov seemed a little more theatrical, a trifle more melodramatic, perhaps, than when played recently. Palestrina succeeds in giving a more divine idea of the hereafter in the "Et vitam venturi saeculi" of the Mass of Pope Marcellus, and he does it with voices alone. The Sanctus of the Bach minor Mass pictures the glory of the hereafter with a grandeur that the Russian never achieves.

Still the Liadov has its superb moments, and, to a Slav brought up to the chanting of the monks of the Eastern Church, it must be tenderly impressive. There are in it, too, reminiscences of Rimsky Korsakov's Easter Music, reminiscences full of spiritual exhilaration.

Serge Koussevitzky directed the score with a dedication that inspired the orchestra and kindled a like spirit in the audience.

The Brahms is a work to know which, in its height and its breadth, its length and its breadth, calls for a long apprenticeship. To many indeed it is the master's finest symphonic expression. You feel in it the spirit of the composer as he struggles mentally with the problems of life and death and eternity. Hope and doubt are poised against each other; but to the listener who follows the pendulum swing of the emotions it seems to conclude in the mood of Robert Louis Stevenson, when he declared that he believed in "the ultimate decency of things."

It was superbly played, and with such psychic unanimity that it seems idle to try to particularize excellencies.

The second part of the program was devoted to Wagner. It comprised the overtures to "Lohengrin" and "Tannhauser" and the "Waldweben" from "Siegfried." The outstanding feature of the performance of the "Lohengrin" was the ethereal, the imponderable lightness of the strings at the beginning and end, suggesting, as the composer sought to do, the nearing of the Holy Grail to earth and its going away.

The Boston strings have a heavenly pianissimo; they produce an effect like the shimmer of light; it is holy music.

There was pianissimo, too, in the "Waldweben," perhaps a trifle too tenuous at times to be quite successful; but, taken as a whole, the orchestral picture was one to gladden the heart of the Wagnerite.

Last came the "Tannhauser" overture, maddeningly sensual in its Bacchanalian phases, devout in its hymning, subtly seductive in its suggestion of the alluring queen of the Venusberg.

Again I must regret that the great mass of the people of Boston cannot hear such a concert as we heard last night.

MUSIC

JORDAN HALL
Zighera Orchestra

Globe Feb 10/37

Bernard Zighera conducted in Jordan Hall last night the final concert in a subscription series of three by chamber orchestra. These concerts have served not only to make known to us Mr Zighera's gifts as a conductor, but they have presented some unusual programs. That of last night was no exception.

The first item was Mozart's Symphony No. 1, a dazzling venture for a boy of 8. Mozart was just that age and he and his sister "Nannerl," and their father were in England. It was the Summer of 1764, father Leopold was sick and little Wolfgang, so the books tell us, wrote this symphony and another to amuse himself. The performance last night enlisted but seven violins, three violas, two cellos, a single double-bass, two oboes and two horns, a just and sufficient number for this charming essay.

There were two soloists, the first of whom, Olga Averino, sang an aria from a Bach cantata, and the soprano portion of Ernst Toch's "chamber symphony" called "The Chinese Flute." Just five years ago next month this work had what was said to be its first American performances by student musicians from Boston University, at Sleeper Hall. Toch set his music in six movements, three instrumental, three for voice. His verses he found in Hans Bethge's collection of Chinese lyrics, the same collection from which Mahler drew his texts for "The Song of the Earth."

But where Mahler employed Chinese poetry translated into German, in a personal style, Toch has sought to gain pseudo-Oriental effects which establish no definite mood and achieve no purpose. The vocal writing, however, is full of sensuous beauty. Mme Averino, too nervous to make the most of Bach, was at ease throughout Toch's piece and sang with superb tone and musicianship.

Gregor Piatigorsky, the cellist, achieved such a performance of the solo part in a Boccherini concerto as most of us only dream about. A cellist of formidable technic who can make his instrument sing like a divinely-fired voice, Mr Piatigorsky carried all before him. He was applauded tempestuously.

The concert ended with Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theatre," long known in this city. How the years do change us! Once this seemed viable music proclaiming the spirit of its day; now it lingers as dubious art outworn and old-fashioned, notable for avoidance of beauty, no matter how brilliant its technical devices.

The audience was larger than at any previous concert of this series, but it ought to have been of greater size. One was pleased to note on the back of the program an announcement of a similar series for next season.

C. W. D.

LAST CONCERT OF NEW SERIES

Post Feb. 10/37

Zighera Chamber Orchestra at Jordan Hall

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Last evening at Jordan Hall the new series of chamber orchestra concerts, at which Bernard Zighera has conducted a group of players from the Boston Symphony, came to an end. According to an announcement on the printed programme, these interesting affairs will be continued next year. This particular concert was rich in variety if not always in musical satisfactions.

For beginning came the first of Mozart's symphonies, written when that precocious composer was eight years old and on visit to London. It was almost depressing to realize how little the composer's style changed in its essentials in the nearly 30 years of life that remained to him. Followed an air from a church cantata of Bach, effectively sung by Olga Averino, who immediately afterward was heard in Toch's Suite for soprano and chamber orchestra, "The Chinese Flute," more impressive for its ingenious instrumentation than for the actual musical content.

The other soloist of the evening was none other than that prince among 'cellists, Gregor Piatigorsky, who was heard in a Concerto of Boccerini. Of its three movements the Adagio pleased most. Finally came, after a lapse of 12 years, Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theatre." The sort of rowdiness exemplified in part of the Prologue and in the final Dance seemed once refreshing and stimulating; last night it was merely tiresome, although the performance was of virtuoso quality. Throughout the evening the audience was highly enthusiastic.

Music in Review

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEW YORK JOURNAL
FEB 1 0 1937

* * *

Tonight the Boston Symphony Orchestra is asking New York for the first time to help with its pension fund. The extra concert given by the Boston visitors this week is for that purpose. It is about time that New York should come to the aid of this worthy cause since this fine orchestra has been bringing joy to music lovers for over fifty years. Dr. Koussevitzky has planned a "popular" program in the best sense with Jascha Heifetz as soloist in the Mendelssohn concerto.

The Friday and Saturday concerts of the Boston Orchestra this week will feature Mahler's "Lied von der Erde."

Boston Players In Concert for Pension Fund

Orchestra Gives Concerto, Heifetz Soloist; Group To Be in Brooklyn Tonight

Two Pianists Are Heard

Hannah Klein and Pauline Gilbert Presented as Team

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, prefaced this week's regular subscription concerts at Carnegie Hall and the Brooklyn Academy of Music with a special concert last night in the former auditorium for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund, which profited by the presence of a large audience with many standees. Dr. Koussevitzky began his program with Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, and closed it with the fourth symphony of Tchaikovsky. The soloist of the evening was Jascha Heifetz, playing Mendelssohn's violin concerto.

Mr. Heifetz was in excellent form, and the orchestra gave a remarkably well proportioned accompaniment characterized by notable finesse of dynamic shading and the exceptional quality of tone which is one of the major features of the Bostonians' concerts. Both conductor and orchestra, as usual, were happy in their interpretation of Tchaikovsky's score. Like other organizations, the Boston Symphony gives an annual pension fund benefit concert in its own city, but this was the first time in the fifty years' history of its New York visits that it has given a special concert for this purpose here.

The usual dates of the regular evening Carnegie Hall and Brooklyn concerts have been transposed, Dr. Koussevitzky and his men playing at the Academy of Music tonight and in Carnegie Hall tomorrow. The afternoon subscription concert will, according to the usual practice, take place on Saturday.

Two young pianists, Hannah Klein and Pauline Gilbert, who have both studied at the Juilliard Graduate School with Mme. Olga Samaroff, gave their first New York concert as a two-piano team last night in Town Hall, beginning with Harold Bauer's transcription of a Bach prelude and fugue in C minor and Miss Klein's well-wrought transcription of Handel's fifth organ concerto. Miss Gilbert was also represented as a transcriber in Three Character Pieces by Mendelssohn; Bernard Greenhouse, Alan Shulman and Harry Shapiro were assisting artists in Schumann's andante and variations for two pianos, two cellos and horn.

Playing with instruments side by side, rather than in the more familiar back-to-back arrangement, and clad in sober and dignified black, the two musicians gave a very promising performance, keeping well together and giving the impression of the necessary unity of interpretative outlook, while each proved to be a well-equipped artist from the technical point of view.

Naturally, they had not yet reached the thorough degree of finish of performance which characterizes the long-experienced leaders in this field, such as the Robertsons, and in the Bach-Bauer work dynamic contrasts were sometimes cultivated at the expense of intermediate degrees of volume, but the net impression was one of an artistic and musicianly performance. Shorter pieces by Paul Nordoff, Arensky, Albeniz, Busoni and Stravinsky formed the final group of the set program.

Meanwhile, at the Metropolitan Opera House, "Caponsacchi" was having its second performance under the direction of its composer, Richard Hageman, with its three principals, Mario Chamlee in the title role; Helen Jepson as Pompilia and Lawrence Tibbett as Guido Franceschini, proving effective from a vocal and dramatic point of view and also doing well in regard to the intelligibility of Arthur Goodrich's text. John Gurney and Doris Doe, as Pompilia's parents, and Norman Cordon as the Pope were among the others in the populous cast. The opera was well received by a good-sized audience.

F. D. P.

Fine Concert Given to Aid Pension Fund

Boston Symphony Gives Exquisite Program in Carnegie Hall.

By PITTS SANBORN.

There was a "first time" for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last evening, the orchestra for the first time in New York giving a concert for the benefit of its Pension Fund.

The program consisted of thrice familiar numbers — Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, the same composer's violin concerto and the Foutrh Symphony of Tschaikowsky. Jascha Heifetz was the soloist.

Benefit concerts are not usually the occasion for extended criticism. As far as last evening's is concerned criticism necessarily becomes what it has been called, the art of praise.

The orchestra played in the way that has brought it deserved renown. The "Italian" symphony was done with fine dynamic adjustment, with exquisite articulation and polish.

In Tschaikowsky's Fourth Serge Koussevitzky, who of course conducted, allowed the tonal possibilities of his band full scope, and the result was of a bewildering splendor.

Naturally the accompaniment furnished Mr. Heifetz was quite of the first order, and Mr. Heifetz himself played with a euphony, a mastery of style and a consummate ease and finish that beggar praise.

The audience, though not filling the hall to capacity, was very large, and its applause was thunderous.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
FEB 12 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY PAYS THIRD VISIT TO BOROUGH

Second Half of Program Devoted Solely to Wagnerian Works

The Boston Symphony Orchestra paid the third of its five scheduled visits to Brooklyn last night. Once again the orchestra's renowned director, Dr. Serge Kousevitzky, who was represented by his concert master in the Boston's last appearance here, was on the podium at the Academy of Music. He made it clear that no one could possibly get such excellent results from the orchestra.

Last night's program was a good one both in the substance of its parts and in the arrangement of those parts, to the end that each seemed to complement the others.

The first was the not well-known Suite in E Major, Opus 63, for String Orchestra, by Foote. The large string section of the Boston, which probably has no close rival, did full justice to the piece, particularly in the second pizzicato and adagietto movement. The plucked strings greatly heightened the suite's unsubstantial effect.

The symphony of the evening was Brahms' Symphony in F. Major, Opus 90. It is one of Brahms' major accomplishments. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men abstracted great quantities of beauty and joy from it. There is little more one can say in its praise.

Following the intermission the program was exclusively and grandly Wagnerian. There were the Prelude to "Lohengrin," "Forest Murmurs" from Siegfried" (Act II) and the Overture to "Tannhauser." Juxtaposition of the three pieces added to the dramatic effect. The "Lohengrin" prelude with its conclusion in some of the highest notes ever orchestrated grew through the Siegfried selection into the "Tannhauser" overture, with its tremendous power.

91

195

RECORD

Great Neck, N.Y.

FEB 4 - 1937

Brilliant Audience Hears Pushkin Centenary Program

Friends Of Russian Music Sponsor Recital At Home Of Mme. Catherine Gsovski In Great Neck Honoring Famous Poet

A literary and musical treat was offered on Saturday night a tthe home of Mme. Catherine Gsovski, 7 Cambridge Road, Great Neck, when Boris Brasol, author-lecturer, Alexis Tcherkassky, noted Russian baritone and Apolina Stoskus, soprano, presented a program dedicated to the centenary of Alexander Pushkin, famous Russian poet. The program, sponsored by the Friends of Russian Music, attracted a distinguished audience.

Mr. Brasel, chairman of the Pushkin committee in this country, spoke on the poet's life and work. Son after beginning his talk, he had imbued the audience with his enthusiasm and added to their interest in the musical number to come, all of them set to poems by Pushkin. Included in his talk were excerpts from "Boris Godunov."

Mr. Tcherkassky, soloist with the Boston Symphony and with the Philadelphia Orchestra and leading baritcne with the Art of Musical Russia, Inc., sang compositions of Rimsky Korsakoff, Borodin, Glinka, Rachmaninoff and other Russian musicians, set to the poems of Pushkin. Miss Stoskus and Mr. Tcherkassky sang arias and duets from "Eugene Onyegin."

Mr. Tcherkassky again delighted his Great Neck audience, as he has on previous occasions. His voice is truly magnificent and it is the hope of the writer that we may have the opportunity of hearing it in a large auditorium allowing full scope for its tremendous power and depth of quality. His translations of the poems were given with charming dignity and it was quite evident that Mr. Tcherkassky has a sense of humor.

Miss Stoskus likewise has a glorious voice, full and with clarity of tone. Her operatic arias marked her debut in the use of Russian, causing her fellow artist to ask the Russian members of the audience to be "what you call it—indulgent."

Mr. Tcherkassky studied in France and made his debut when he was 23 years of age, with Lily Pons. After successful operatic and concert appearances in Europe, he came to America and was engaged by Leopold Stokowski to sing with the Philadelphia Orchestra. He has sung with leading symphony orchestra, under the direction of Walter Damrosch, Efrem Zimbalist, Dr. Arthur Rodzinski and others.

For the past four years he has been the leading baritone of the Art of Musical Russia, Inc., which has presented Russian operas in New York and other leading cities in the United States. On Tuesday night he gave a recital at the Hotel Plaza

Among the subscribers for Saturday night's affair were: Mr. and Mrs. David Kemp, Mr. and Mrs. William R. Witherell, Mr. and Mrs. Hunter L. Delatour, Mrs. Roswell Eldridge, Mrs. J. A. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Eden, Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Zinsser, Miss Dolly Jarbeau, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald E. Gillmor, Mr. and Mrs. Innis O'Rourke, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Fitzgerald, Mr. and Mrs. Gustav Wittig, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh W. MacNair.

Also, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Culver, Mr. and Mrs. Randall J. LeBouef, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bethel, Mr. and Mrs. Tracy Lewis, Mr. Frederick Uhl, Mrs. J. Edward Meyer, Mrs. Catherine Irving, Miss Muriel Williams, Miss Miriam Sanborn, Miss Marjorie Griffen, Miss Elizabeth Farnham, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Williams, Dr. and Mrs. Theodore Sedlmayer, Mrs. Stanhcpe Foster, Mrs. Anita Hecht, Mrs. Alphonse Pelham, Mrs. Norman G. Chambers, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Mattison, Dr. and Mrs. Paul Kavanagh, the Rev. A. R. McKechnie and Mrs. McKechnie of Great Neck.

Also, Mrs. Francis Tweddell, Mr. and Mrs. Otto B. Blackwell, Mr. and Mrs. John I. Mange and Miss Virginia Shoemaker, Plandome; Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Bristol, Douglaston; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Savitch, Beechhurst; Princess Marie Gagarin, Westbury; Princess Sophie Gagarin, Mme. Helene Olgerd, Nicholas Dimitrieff, Alexlander Smolensky, Vecheslav Svoboda and Mme. Jurieva Svoboda of New York City.

OTTAWA, CAN.
EVE. JOURNAL

FEB 6 - 1937

For Pension Fund

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give an extra concert in Carnegie Hall this season. It will be for the benefit of the ensemble's pension fund, and the date will be Feb. 10. Jascha Heifetz will be the soloist, and Serge Koussevitzky will, of course, conduct. Subscribers are receiving first crack at the tickets, and the chances are good that the event will sell out. No program announced yet.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS

Feb 7/37

* * *

To Sing With Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, has engaged John Priebe to sing the role of the evangelist in the St. Matthew Passion of Johann Sebastian Bach, to be performed at Symphony Hall, Boston, Good Friday, March 26th. The role of Christus will be sung by Keith Falkner. Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, and Kathryn Meisle, contralto, will sing the other solo parts. The choruses will be sung by the Harvard and Radcliffe Glee clubs. The work is being given in full.

* * *

PORTLAND, MAINE
PRESS HERALD

FEB 8 - 1937

In Yesterday's News

The best of news to radio music-lovers comes in the announcement that Toscanini the Great has signed a contract to conduct the N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra next season in a series of concerts. The two great press bureaus are in dispute as to what term of years the contract covers; one says three years, the other 10 years. Rome reports that Mr. Toscanini himself announced that he would broadcast 10 concerts each year for three years; and it is understood that his remuneration will be at the rate of nearly $5,000 a concert of not over more than hour each. This is what may be called "fancy pay," but no one in the world has demonstrated his right to receive large rewards better than Mr. Toscanini. He is admittedly the greatest conductor living. It is a source of satisfaction to learn that he will again be heard in this Country.

Aside from the fact that this great maestro is to be heard 10 times a year over the radio, lovers of real music will rejoice that a regular series of symphony concerts will be added to the present inadequate list of such events. Sunday, to be sure, is a big day in music, with the Philharmonic Symphony Society concerts in the afternoon and the two "motor" hours in the evening. Perhaps the National Broadcasting Company has in mind extending the drawing power of its own symphony orchestra through the signing of Mr. Toscanini as conductor in order to meet the competition of the Philharmonic concerts, which are broadcast over its chief competitor's system. But it could compete even better were it to broadcast every Saturday evening, say, the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. There should be for at least an hour of each evening a fine program of symphonic music available over a national broadcast. There must be in the aggregate millions of persons who would enjoy really good music daily and not just upon Sundays. Perhaps the engagement of Mr. Toscanini is an augury of better musical times to come.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY NEWS

FEB 11 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS TONIGHT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will play its third Brooklyn concert tonight at the Academy of Music. The concert will be under auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. Half of the program will be devoted to works of Richard Wagner and the other half to compositions by Brahms and Foote.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

ON THE RECORDS

By MICHAEL SHAW, JR.

Vivid Tschaikowsky

THE WEDDING of hysterical melancholy and uncanny sparkle in Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony is captured by Serge Koussevitzky and his Bostonians (Victor Set M-327; nine sides).

Engineers have provided such vivid reproduction that a good machine is needed to keep intact the melodic line of the composer's more obstreperous moments. For us a high spot is reached in the Scherzo as woodwinds drolly spin amid eccentric halts in the brass and pizzicato strings.

Trans 2/10/37

Music Dates Ahead

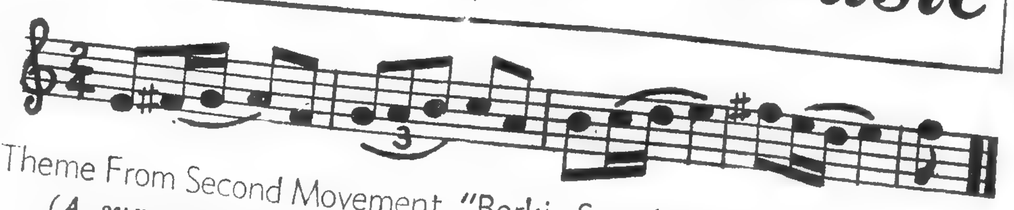
On learning from her Boston manager, Aaron Richmond, that the seating capacity of Symphony Hall will be exhausted before the hour of the concert, Kirsten Flagstad, the Norwegian star, who is scheduled for an appearance in that auditorium tomorrow night, granted permission to seat a limited number of her admirers on the stage. Word comes from the Symphony Hall box office that these stage seats will go on sale this morning at ten. Madame Flagstad arrived in Boston this morning and has gone into seclusion in preparation for her concert tomorrow evening.

* * *

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES

FEB 8 - 1937

The World of Music



Theme From Second Movement, "Berkie Symphony," by R. Deane Shur

(A suggestion for using and preserving the daily music theme: Many teachers of music appreciation advise their pupils to clip and paste them on a 3 x 5 filing card with composer's name at the top and file them in alphabetical order.)

By CARL L. BEMIES

One of the most prolific of living composers and a pianist of great ability, Serge Prokofieff will be heard tonight in a recital of his own compositions at the Soviet embassy. His program is made up of the following six works: "Andante, Opus 29"; "Dix Visions Fugitives, Opus 22"; "Trois Gavottes, Op. 12, 25, 32"; Musique d'Enfants"; "Etude, Opus 2, No. 4," and "Suggestion Diabolique, No. 4."

Prokofieff has made several concert tours in this country and has had much of his symphonic works introduced here by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His "Symphony No. 4" was composed for the fiftieth anniversary of the Boston Orchestra (1929-30), and a commissioned quartet was presented at the Library of Congress, April 25, 1931. He has been engaged recently in writing for the films.

Of his style, we quote Irving Schwerke, Paris editor of Musical Courier: "Prokofieff's aim is "to be simple with a new simplicity,' and the student of Prokofieff may expect to find that his predominating characteristic is his personal impersonality.

The theme shown above, from the second movement of R. Deane Shure's new work, "Berkie Symphony," introduces the second section of the movement, a dance of wild abandon, introduced by the piccolo. The composer's notes contain the following description of the section: "When she was 12 her enthusiasm knew no bounds, and with unrestrained fervor of youth she raced with wild abandon." This symphony will be given its premiere by the National Symphony Orchestra February 17 at Constitution Hall.

Trans 2/6/37

Wins Triumph

ufern Mason

the desire of Bernard nd the members of nber Orchestra to give thing unhackneyed, they ly succeeded, and the au e at Jordan Hall last night oyed the concert hugely.

Fancy beginning with a child od symphony of Mozart, in hich the future master is clearly foreshadowed and end ng with Aaron Copland doing his utmost to be American and, in some measure, succeeding.

And there was a Bach interlude, an aria from one of his cantatas, finely sung by Miss Olga Averino. Then came the pages of Ernst Toch's "Chinese Flute," in which the composer works miracles of harmonic suggestion with vocal and instrumental recitative of a kind that was probably old when Troilus sighed his soul "towards the Greekish tents" for his all too impressionable Cressida.

Let me dare a little musical blasphemy and state that Toch's music, with its melopeia more ancient than the plain chant, roused me from the weariness into which the interminable eloquence of Johann Sebastian had plunged me. Bach is probably the greatest composer who ever lived; but it would be a blessing if he did not insist on extracting the utmost drop of virtue out of every idea that presents itself to him.

The songs set by Toch are by Li Po, Sao Han, and no less a man than Confucius himself. Shimmerings of the celesta, clangors of brass, unisonal breathings of wood wind and strings, are interspersed with unaccompanied vocal melody that is both new and ancient at the same time, and very beautiful. Here Miss Averino did her best work and it was excellent.

I keep the best of all to the last. It was the 'cellist Piatigorsky's performance of Boccherini's 'Cello Concerto, which has slumbered unknown for many years and now comes to life to put most modern works of the same character to shame.

Piatigorsky's playing was the art of a master. You may remind me of Casals; but I think Pablo would be the first to reach out his hand in congratulation, and his admirers would rejoice to exclaim: "Par nobile fratrum."

You have seen Giorgione's canvas, "The Concert," and remember the central figure? Piatigorsky's face recalled it.

The audience went wild with enthusiasm and finally he played again, choosing, if I am not mistaken, one of the Bach compositions for 'cello, chapters of music that belong to the Holy Scriptures of the art.

Zighera conducted; he has a clean, decisive beat and does his work well. But more rehearsals were needed to bring the orchestra up to the spiritual heights realized by Piatigorsky.

PUEBLO, COLO.
STAR JOURNAL
FEB 9 - 1937

AMERICA'S SYMPHONIES BECAME GREAT AFTER OVERCOMING PERSONNEL AND MONEY PROBLEMS

By HAZEL A. SMITH

Growing pains have been as common to the great symphony orchestras of the United States as they have been to Pueblo's Civic Symphony orchestra.

Recounting of the obstacles encountered in bringing into being the symphony orchestras of Philadelphia and Boston contains passages that might be taken from the history of Pueblo's own orchestra.

Apathy on the part of the public, lack of funds with which to finance the ventures, selling the idea of a symphony orchestra to the public—these are difficulties which have faced the Boston symphony and the Philadelphia symphony, just as they face Pueblo's Civic Symphony.

Altho the Boston symphony was born with a silver spoon in its mouth, it has had to meet rare, as well as common problems.

One of its first difficulties was what to do about ticket speculators, Ronald F. Eyer has written in the Jan. 10 issue of "Musical America." Admission demands were such that scalpers did a neat business and threatened one of the prime purposes of the organizer, Henry L. Higginson—that of providing music for all the people at moderate prices. The plan of auctioning tickets was hit upon, and it worked admirably up to 1918 when the present plan of established seasonal prices, with anual renewal privileges went into effect.

So strong became the Boston symphony in 1893, when city planning doomed the Music hall for destruction, a group was created to raise funds for a home for the orchestra, and seven years later, Oct. 15, 1900, the new symphony hall was opened to the public as the permanent home of the Boston symphony. It cost $750,000.

STRIKE CAUSED TROUBLE

In 1920 a strike took place in the Boston symphony. Eight musicians demanded higher wages, and the question of unionization which had arisen once before, again came to he front. Trustees declared they ad no money to meet the demands. Then the concert master refused to rise when thed irector signaled the orchestra to acknowledge applause at an afternoon concert. The concert master was dismissed. A large number of musicians, in protest, refused to play the concert the following evening, but an appeal at the last moment to keep faith with the public, rallied 56 players and an impromptu program was given. However, the director, thru hard work, again built up the organization.

Criticism arose frequently over the music he performed—a condition that has frequently faced the Pueblo organization also. Today however the Boston symphony carries on toward the zenith of perfection. In 1931 the orchestra celebrated its 50th anniversary.

Only administrative change in recent years has been the founding of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Edward A. Taft, whose purpose it is to raise as much as possible of the annual deficit. Its members number more than 2,000 and are to be found in New York, Brooklyn, Providence and other cities in addition to Boston. Operating deficit last year was $85,000, which is an improvement of over $50,000 compared to the preceding year.

In the Jan. 25 issue of Musical America, Eyer points out that the Philadelphia orchestra is one of the youngest of the great symphonic organizations of the world. Public apathy where music was concerned followed positive opposition of early years, and early attempts to establish an orchestra were "abortive and highly discouraging."

PHILADELPHIA KEEPS SCHEEL

Summer concerts conducted by Fritz Scheel in Woodside park finally led to the Philadelphia orchestra. A plan was worked out by interested parties to keep Scheel in the city to administer to its musical needs.

When time came to present professional concerts, sponsors were at a loss as to how the concerts were to be financed. It was finally decided to present them as benefits for families of soldiers and sailors fallen in the Philippines. The idea interested Mrs. Alexander J. Cassatt and she organized a women's committee to carry thru the project. Eight hundred patrons and patronesses were secured. The concerts were successful. A guaranteed fund was raised thru circulars and solicitation of 2,000 women as patronesses. First concert of the Philadelphia orchestra was announced for Nov. 16, 1900.

On May 17, 1901, the Philadelphia Orchestra association came into being with a board of directors of 24 and an executive committee of seven. The public exhibited vast indifference and the deficit of 52 concerts rose from $14,000 to $72,000 in the first season.

Quoting Eyer, "The public attitude prompted many of the officers to demand lighter programs; most people in Philadelphia didn't know there was an orchrestra. Scheel would not be moved, but he did suggest the introduction of popular concerts . . . Thereafter the orchestra was used on all sorts of social occasions with some injury to its dignity perhaps, but more advantage to its purse."

MET ALL OBSTACLES

Not only were financial problems paramount with the Philadelphia association from time to time, but it faced great difficulty at various periods in securing conductors. Then the question arose as to whether it would survive the World war—whether there would be any players—any money—any audiencse. But all were answered in he affirmative.

Just at the time the old idea f a temporary guarantee was wearng out, there came forward the unknown donor," later identified s Edward Bok, who proposed to neet the anual deficit for five ears consecutively, provided a ermanent endowment fund of $500,000 was raised by the association ver the same period. Again the women's committees came into the icture and succeeded in obtaining ven more than was required.

In 1919 at Bok's suggestion $1,100,000 was raised, with 13,000 Philadelphians contributing.

The Philadelphia orchestra was a pioneer in experimenting with "orchestra opera" performances, and also started the young people's educational oncerts in 1902, still being carried on successfully.

A major project was a transcontinental tour in the spring of 1936, during which 27 key cities heard the orchestra under Stowoski. It was during this tour the orchestra visited Denver. Another such tour is scheduled for this season.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
FEB 1 1 1937

PIATIGORSKY HAS APPEARED WITH MAJOR U. S. SYMPHONIES

Four times soloist with the New York, Boston and Chicago symphony orchestras, twice with the Cleveland Symphony, soloist once with the Cincinnati, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Philadelphia and Detroit symphonies, Gregor Piatigorsky, world famous cellist, will come to this city as soloist with the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, Ferdinand Schaefer conducting, next Tuesday evening at the Murat.

Although Piatigorsky's musical genius was never doubted from the moment he began to study the cello, he has led a tempestuous life in obtaining the position of secured eminence which he now holds.

He was born in the Ukraine, in Ekaterinoslav, in 1903. When he was only 9 years old his father's financial reverses forced upon him the task of supporting his entire family. For six years he played in motion picture houses, went to school, and practiced every minute of his spare time to perfect his technique on the cello. Local fame, quickly accorded to him, spread to the Russian capital, and at the age of 15 he was called to be first cellist in the Imperial Opera at Moscow, and to join the string quartet of the Moscow Conservatory of Music.

Smuggled Into Poland.

The revolution forced him into a position in one of the state orchestras, playing in a small border town, and in 1921, by selling his 'cello and everything else he possessed, he managed to have himself smuggled into the Polish capital, Warsaw.

Almost discouraged by poverty and lack of opportunity even to display his talent, he tramped the streets of Warsaw for nearly a year before a lucky chance allowed him to substitute in the Warsaw Opera. Recognition of his talent was immediate and, after rejecting a contract to make an American tour, he allowed an American philanthropist to lend him enough money to go to Leipzig, where he hoped to study with Julius Klengel.

Klengel refused to accept as pupil a man who would know infinitely more than his teacher, and Piatigorsky—too proud to accept more money from his American sponsor—went to Berlin where he entered upon another period of poverty because he could not get a hearing.

Aided by Schnabel.

Finally, because of the impression he made upon the frequenters of the Berlin coffee houses and movies where he found occasional work, he came to the attention of Arthur Schnabel, famous pianist. Schnabel invited him to play in a quartet whose flutist was a member of the Berlin Philharmonic orchestra. The flutist's enthusiasm led to an audition with Furtwaengler, conductor of the Philharmonic, and an almost immediate engagement as first 'cellist with that orchestra.

His success was immediate. Offers of concert engagements in all major European cities led to severance of his connection with the orchestra—he played only at the concerts conducted by Furtwaengler himself—and in 1929, after several years of repeated triumphs on the continent, he made his first American tour.

A large portion of his symphony audience next Tuesday night will be made of people who have already learned to love his artistry; they will remember his four previous appearances in Indianapolis as guest artist with the Maennerchor.

STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE
FEB 1 1 1937

Efrem Zimbalist Studied His Art Over Long Period

One of the most famous names in the musical world today is that of Efrem Zimbalist, who will appear here in recital on Sunday afternoon, March 7, at the Palace Theatre under the auspices of the Stamford Jewish Center. Zimbalist is celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of his American debut.

Although Russian by birth, Zimbalist is an American citizen. He makes his Winter home in New York City and his Summer home in Connecticut. He has two children born in this country.

Zimbalist was born in Rostov-on-the-Don, April 8, 1889. His first teacher was his father, who was an orchestra leader. The boy showed such extraordinary gifts that when he was only nine years old he became first violinist in a grand opera orchestra.

In 1903 he entered the Imperial Conservatory in Petrograd, studying under Professor Leopold Auer. Graduating, he was awarded the coveted gold medal and the Rubenstein scholarship of 12,000 rubels. He made his Berlin debut at the age of 18 and appeared later in London and on the continent with great success.

His American debut was made on Oct. 27, 1911, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In the 25 years that have passed since then the name of Zimbalist has become synonymous with great violin music. He has played in almost every large city in the world.

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
FEB 1 1 1937

Young Stamford Pianist To Play With Symphony

Ralph Sheldon To Appear In Second Concert Of Series March 1

The Stamford Symphony Society will present Ralph M. Sheldon, youthful Stamford pianist, in his first public recital, at the second concert in the society's winter series of three, at the Stamford High School auditorium Monday evening, March 1.

Mr. Sheldon, who is a grandson of Col. and Mrs. Hugh L. Cooper of Stamford, is richly endowed with a musical heritage. His paternal grandmother was Wilhemina Heegaard, a Danish pianist, who graduated with honors, at the age of 18, from the Boston Conservatory of Music and played with the Boston Symphony. Mr. Sheldon's father, the late Ralph M. Sheldon, was an amateur pianist of notable achievement, having commenced his studies at the age of 7.

Mr. Sheldon is a graduate of Stamford High School, has been a pupil of Joseph Lhevinne, and is now studying under Sacha Gorodintcki at the Institute of Musical Art in New York. Although the artist has been heard in recitals for small groups in Stamford and Rhinebeck, N. Y., his performance on March 1 will mark his professional debut.

The Symphony's concert should be of additional interest, bringing as it does a Stamford person as guest artist and sponsoring the musical debut of a young person. However, this follows closely the policy of the Symphony in being an organization of more or less local artists and affording an opportunity to young musicians to further their careers.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
FEB 1 1 1937

Fine Concert Given to Aid Pension Fund

Boston Symphony Gives Exquisite Program in Carnegie Hall.

By PITTS SANBORN.

There was a "first time" for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last evening, the orchestra for the first time in New York giving a concert for the benefit of its Pension Fund.

The program consisted of thrice familiar numbers—Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, the same composer's violin concerto and the Foutrh Symphony of Tschaikowsky. Jascha Heifetz was the soloist.

Benefit concerts are not usually the occasion for extended criticism. As far as last evening's is concerned criticism necessarily becomes what it has been called, the art of praise.

The orchestra played in the way that has brought it deserved renown. The "Italian" symphony was done with fine dynamic adjustment, with exquisite articulation and polish.

In Tschaikowsky's Fourth Serge Koussevitzky, who of course conducted, allowed the tonal possibilities of his band full scope, and the result was of a bewildering splendor.

Naturally the accompaniment furnished Mr. Heifetz was quite of the first order, and Mr. Heifetz himself played with a euphony, a mastery of style and a consummate ease and finish that beggar praise.

The audience, though not filling the hall to capacity, was very large, and its applause was thunderous.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST
FEB 1 1 1937

Koussevitzky and Heifetz In Carnegie Hall Concert

Boston Symphony Orchestra and Soloist Heard in Program of Consummate Artistry

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY and the Boston Symphony Orchestra came to Carnegie Hall last night for their first local Pension Fund concert and bestowed upon an excited capacity audience performances of consummate artistic accomplishment. The evening will long be remembered as one of unremitting glories, for, quite literally, there was scarcely a flaw from the first note to the last.

Mendelssohn and Tchaikovsky made up the program. The German master was represented by the A major "Italian" Symphony and the Violin Concerto, with Jascha Heifetz as interpreter; the Russian by his Fourth Symphony. Mendelssohn has rarely been served so well. The glowing, youthfully spirited romanticism of the Symphony was set forth in a fashion unique to the Boston strings and woodwinds.

Their tone sang with an airy freedom and lightness, and was as fluent and transparent as running waters. The first movement and the final presto were alive with a young-blooded exhuberance of limitless energy that never did violence to the aristocratic style and proportions of the work. The Symphony swept along with a spontaneity that belied the labor that such perfection must have exacted.

Dr. Koussevitzky set dazzling standards in the Mendelssohn Symphony. They were superbly maintained in the Concerto. For Mr. Heifetz was in exceptionally fine form. His tone never sounded richer, his phrasing more subtle and meaningful; the flawlessness of his technique needs no recounting. It was a performance that washed the memory clean of countless mediocre readings, and the work seemed bright with a pristine beauty. The first movement had greater virility and boldness than is usually associated with Mendelssohn; the andante was sheer poetry; the finale (in which for once the woodwinds were as nimble and happy as the solo violin) attained an almost Shakespearean fancy. Mr. Heifetz was accorded an ovation, which he shared with Dr. Koussevitzky and the members of the orchestra.

GAMA GILBERT.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEW YORK JOURNAL

FEB 11 1937

197

Music in Review

By Henriette Weber

One of the most distinguished audiences that have ever gathered in Carnegie Hall last evening attended the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. The Bostonians have been coming to New York regularly for 51 years, but this is the first time that they have asked Manhattan to assist in the worthy cause which is such an integral part of the organization of every major orchestra. The concert is estimated to have netted nearly $9.000.

What makes a company of symphony players great as an ensemble is to have as little change in the personnel as possible, so it transpires that men stay with their orchestra (as is the case with our Philharmonic, too) for 25 to 50 years of active service. Having given all of their best years to their orchestra, they should be insured some financial ease when they no longer play.

Mr. Koussevitzky, conducting, so it seemed, with even more fervor and emotion than usual, presented a program of well-loved and familiar music. He commenced with Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony which led naturally into the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, played superbly by Jascha Heifetz as soloist. The accompaniment was a model of what an orchestral background should be like, and together Heifetz and Koussevitzky wove a spell of superlative performance rarely equalled.

* * *

Emotional Appeal

The second half of the concert was given to Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony—music which never fails in its deep emotional appeal. Its fateful message at the beginning was set forth gloriously. The supreme melancholy of the slow part was eloquent with meaning. The delicious pizzicato of the scherzo was done with the eerie softness that Mr. Koussevitzky accentuates a little more than any other conductor. And the concluding movement—"if you find no happiness, look at others," as the composer himself expressed it—was the climax.

This symphony has its human interest recently revived by the book, "Beloved Friend," in which the strange friendship of Tschaikowsky and Nadeshda von Meck is fully described. He called this "our symphony," and ascribed its "story" to the inspiration and help derived from his friend, whom he never saw, but merely corresponded with for many years. He began the work when about to marry a woman whom he did not love, but who had proposed to him. A short and stormy honeymoon interrupted the creation of the symphony, which was not completed until Tschaikowsky had left his bride "forever" after 13 days of married unhappiness.

* * *

Two young pianists, Hannah Klein and Pauline Gilbert, both graduates of Juilliard, gave their first public concert last night at Town Hall. They have been playing together for four years, chiefly on the radio, so they have achieved a certain confidence and a mutual knowledge of each other that stood them in good stead in last night's program.

They have both been diligent students of theory also, which places their piano playing on a secure basis of musical understanding. Thus their concert offered their own two-piano arrangement of six out of the nine numbers listed which was a feature of novel interest. They play exceedingly well, with a freedom and assurance that shows them to have a real flair for public performance. Their audience was not slow in showing them how well they were liked.

* * *

Tonight Carlos Chavez makes his bow as guest conductor of the Philharmonic for two weeks. The orchestra will therefore find itself in new hands, after the calculating modernism of Stravinsky, or Enesco, the dreamer, who dwells on the Olympian heights. The Mexican conductor is still in his thirties, dynamic, progressive and typical of the musical thought of today.

His opening programs will feature two of his own works consisting of his Symphony based on Sophocles' "Antigone" and his ballet, "H. P.," that stands for horsepower, which Chavez holds is a symbol of the dynamic energy that characterizes our era. "H.P." shows the correlation of the northern regions with the tropics. The tropics produce things in their primitive state. The north has the machinery with which to manufacture from these products. The two regions need each other.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

FEB 11 1937

Music of the Day

By B. H. HAGGIN

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony in Benefit Concert—Duo Pianists Make New York Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky was heard in a special concert at Carnegie Hall last night for the benefit of its pension fund. The program consisted of Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, his Violin Concerto, in which Jascha Heifetz was the soloist, and Tchaikocsky's Fourth Symphony.

Mr. Koussevitzky's performance of Mendelssohn's exquisite symphony with his orchestra is one of the miracles of present-day orchestral performance. Its swiftness, its radiance, it buoyancy and lightness even in moments of greatest sonority, its delicate orchestral colors—the feathery but marvelously sensitized and alive tone of the strings in certain quiet passages, the light-as-air playing of the woodwinds, the repeated flutter of the woodwinds near the end of the first part of the third movement, the magical sound of the horns in the beginning of the second part of this movement — all these are things which one has to keep re-hearing if one is to believe they are possible. Only part of the testimony of last night's performance reached my ears in the place where I was seated; but enough did for me to know that the rest was being heard in other parts of the hall.

The performance of Tchaikovsky's Fourth is another fine achievement, largely because of a straightforwardness unusual in performances of Tchaikovsky. Precisely because of this general straightforwardness the few instances of over-emphasis or wilfullness stand out. One notices, for example that Tchaikovsky directs that a passage in the first movement bgein in the same tempo as the preceding passage and then gradually accelerate, but that Mr. Koussevitzky takes the passage faster from the beginning, depriving it of the effect which Tchaikovsky intended. And one wonders why Mr. Koussevitzky is wilful just at that point, when he is not at so many others.

Mr. Koussevitzky took the introductory measures of the first movement of the concerto at a pace which Mr. Heifetz quickened at his entrance; and this lack of complete unanimity could be felt throughout the movement. There was an improvement in this respect in the remaining movements; and the finale in particular was a brilliant joint display of the virtuosity of soloist and orchestra.

The audience was large and appreciative.

contrast, and a sense of the larger musical contours. Still lacking, but no doubt an imminent acquisition for the young artists, are the ability to present more finely shaded degrees of emotional intensity as well as of dynamics, and the equally important ability to give tones mellowness in addition to loudness. The Schumann Variations, an especially interesting item on the program, fell short of its possibilities because of apparently inadequate preparation on the part of the assistants. A competent performance of the Nordoff composition failed to life this music, either, out of the category "interesting."

The audience was large and appreciative. A noval arrangement of the two pianos — both faced the same direction and were parallell with sounding boards up—and the appropriate similarity in the black dresses of the pianists, imparted visual as aural musical grace to the occasion.

RALPH WINETT.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA AIDS PENSION FUND

N. Y. Times

Koussevitzky Leads Ensemble in Stirring Program at Carnegie Hall

Feb 11/37

HEIFETZ IS GUEST SOLOIST

He Plays Mendelssohn Violin Concerto — Fourth Symphony by Tchaikovsky Is Given

By OLIN DOWNES

An extremely brilliant concert in aid of its pension fund was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, with Jascha Heifetz as assisting artist, last night in Carnegie Hall. This concert was not only for the benefit of the pension fund of the orchestra; it was also for the benefit of one Felix Mendelssohn and a great audience, numbers of which may have forgotten the aristocratic distinction and freshness of his art.

Tchaikovsky of the Fourth symphony also figured on this program, and the writer yields to none in his enthusiam for this exceptional composer. Mr. Koussevitzky is famous in interpretation of Tchaikovsky's works. But it may be an even more remarkable feat to play the Italian symphony as this orchestra has played it more than once under his guidance in this city, and it may be added that seldom in late decades has the old and familiar violin concerto had such a thrilling presentation as it was given by Mr. Heifetz. The net result of all this was to make us newly aware of Mendelssohn's genius, which, indeed, has been far underrated by this and by recent generations.

Truer Estimates of Mendelssohn

Nietzsche longed for an art that moved swiftly and on light feet. The joy of Mendelssohn's music, a characteristic which in an age prone to melodrama was deemed a reproach, is perhaps perceived now at a truer value by a strife-weary world. Or perhaps we simply have reached a degree of balance in our musical estimates that we did not have before. The wonderful simplicity and lyricism, the perfection and the felicity of this youthful music transport the listener, suddenly aware that he is in the presence of inspired and consummate art. When such perfection is attained, with Mendelssohn's sweet naturalness and gayety, it is breathtaking, and it is not necessary to support the composer against the Wagners, Mussorgskys, Verdis and Tchaikovskys to be aware of that fact, which last night's performances drove home.

A requisite, in attaining these results, is an orchestra of the very first rank, as well as a conductor who has the true comprehension of great music. The transparency of tone, precision of intonation and finish, which enabled the horns, for example, to play so precisely the sixteenths of the figure that introduces the adorable trio of the third movement enabled Mendelssohn himself to make his very best bow and give his most enchanting smile.

Then there was the exhilaration of the pace, and the complete and fortunate absence of the sentimentality which may be given the phrases of the two middle movements if the tempo is permitted to flag. Nothing of the sort was done; there was the acme of good taste in every measure. No wonder that there was crashing applause at the end.

The first two movements of the concerto were performed as Mendelssohn intended, without a break, and Mr. Heifetz played these two movements with a noble fire and warmth that equalled his mastery. For years there was talk of the cool perfection of his playing. Then a period when some of Mr. Heifetz's warmest admirers feared that he was inclined to make concessions to the gallery—to overplay and exaggerate now and again, in response to these comments, and at the expense of the fine proportions of his art.

Tone Has Every Color

If there was anything in such an apprehension, it certainly has been dispersed by two of Mr. Heifetz's performances of the present season. One was his playing of the Sibelius concerto with the Boston Symphony and another his performance of last night. He then gripped his audience with the first note and he held it in a spell until the closing measure of the andante. It was as if the last reservation which had interfered with complete freedom and spontaneity in his playing had vanished.

And yet, with this complete freedom and spontaneity, there was never slackness, affectation or anything not characterized by structural logic and manly power. The tone had every color and the little violin at climaxes matched the orchestra. The tempo of the first movement was the properly animated Mendelssohn allegro, but it was elastic and the singing of the second theme had a breadth and sensuousness that threw into greater contrast the prevailing mood of the movement—"molto passionato."

Only in the finale did Mr. Heifetz go the way of virtuoso flesh in the rapidity of his tempo. To whirl off this movement so rapidly that a generous stroke of the bow is nowhere possible, any more than an orchestral accompaniment that clicks exactly with the flying figures that emanate from the solo violin, is a temptation that very few who can achieve the swift tempo seem able to resist.

Mr. Koussevitzky's introductory chords promised something a little more substantial, but as soon as the soloist had begun the movement proper it was apparent that things were going to fly. And fly they did, with the audience going wild. For this the multitude had reason. They had heard, for two movements, at least, violin playing of the first order, the highest musicianship, the most communicative emotion. When the tone did not blaze, it richly glowed. Details concerning which there can readily be differences of sound opinion properly faded into the background in the face of the achievement. At first the audience contented itself with thunderous applause, then, when Mr. Heifetz brought Mr. Koussevitzky (whose accompaniment was not the least masterly feature of the interpretation) it broke into cheers.

Mendelssohn, also, had triumphed.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

FEB 12 1937

Boston Band At Academy

Dr. Serge Koussevitizky, who was absent when the Boston Symphony Orchestra last was heard here, returned to the Academy of Music podium last night when the third in the series of five Brooklyn concerts was presented again under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute.

Dr. Koussevitzky started his program with a work by an American composer, presenting the Suite in E Major for strings, by Arthur Foote, a contemporary of MacDowell.. It is a pleasing bit of froth and was played with the usual Koussevitzky charm.

The symphony was the No. 3 of Brahams and, after the intermission three Wagnerian excerpts were offered. the prelude to "Lohengrin," the "Waldweben" from "Siegfried" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

Treating Brahams somewhat more traditionally than Wagner, Dr. Kousssevitzky brought the program to a brilliant close with a Russianized reading of the passionate Tannhauser music. The "Lohengrin" episode lacked its accustomed facility and religious air but the "Siegfried" excerpt was read with keen understanding,

H. E. S.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

FEB 11 1937

Boston Players In Concert for Pension Fund

Orchestra Gives Concerto, Heifetz Soloist; Group To Be in Brooklyn Tonight

Two Pianists Are Heard

Hannah Klein and Pauline Gilbert Presented as Team

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, prefaced this week's regular subscription concerts at Carnegie Hall and the Brooklyn Academy of Music with a special concert last night in the former auditorium for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund, which profited by the presence of a large audience with many standees. Dr. Koussevitzky began his program with Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, and closed it with the fourth symphony of Tchaikovsky. The soloist of the evening was Jascha Heifetz, playing Mendelssohn's violin concerto.

Mr. Heifetz was in excellent form, and the orchestra gave a remarkably well proportioned accompaniment characterized by notable finesse of dynamic shading and the exceptional quality of tone which is one of the major features of the Bostonians' concerts. Both conductor and orchestra, as usual, were happy in their interpretation of Tchaikovsky's score. Like other organizations, the Boston Symphony gives an annual pension fund benefit concert in its own city, but this was the first time in the fifty years' history of its New York visits that it has given a special concert for this purpose here.

The usual dates of the regular evening Carnegie Hall and Brooklyn concerts have been transposed, Dr. Koussevitzky and his men playing at the Academy of Music tonight and in Carnegie Hall tomorrow. The afternoon subscription concert will, according to the usual practice, take place on Saturday.

Two young pianists, Hannah Klein and Pauline Gilbert, who have both studied at the Juilliard Graduate School with Mme. Olga Samaroff, gave their first New York concert as a two-piano team last night in Town Hall, beginning with Harold Bauer's transcription of a Bach prelude and fugue in C minor and Miss Klein's well-wrought transcription of Handel's fifth organ concerto. Miss Gilbert was also represented as a transcriber in Three Character Pieces by Mendelssohn; Bernard Greenhouse, Alan Shulman and Harry Shapiro were assisting artists in Schumann's andante and variations for two pianos, two cellos and horn.

Playing with instruments side by side, rather than in the more familiar back-to-back arrangement, and clad in sober and dignified black, the two musicians gave a very promising performance, keeping well together and giving the impression of the necessary unity of interpretative outlook, while each proved to be a well-equipped artist from the technical point of view.

Naturally, they had not yet reached the thorough degree of finish of performance which characterizes the long-experienced leaders in this field, such as the Robertsons, and in the Bach-Bauer work dynamic contrasts were sometimes cultivated at the expense of intermediate degrees of volume, but the net impression was one of an artistic and musicianly performance. Shorter pieces by Paul Nordoff, Arensky, Albeniz, Busoni and Stravinsky formed the final group of the set program.

Meanwhile, at the Metropolitan Opera House, "Caponsacchi" was having its second performance under the direction of its composer, Richard Hageman, with its three principals, Mario Chamlee in the title role; Helen Jepson as Pompilia and Lawrence Tibbett as Guido Franceschini, proving effective from a vocal and dramatic point of view and also doing well in regard to the intelligibility of Arthur Goodrich's text. John Gurney and Doris Doe, as Pompilia's parents, and Norman Cordon as the Pope were among the others in the populous cast. The opera was well received by a good-sized audience.

F. D. P.

Metropolitan Host
N. Y., N. Y.

FEB 13 1937

Music

February 13th, afternoon, Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall, 57th and 7th Ave., Bartlett and Robertson, pianists at Town Hall, 123 W. 43rd St., "Manon" at the Metropolitan Opera House, 39th and Broadway; evening, Judith Sidorsky, pianist at Town Hall, "Faust" at the Metropolitan.

192

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEW YORK JOURNAL

FEB 1 1 1937

Music in Review

By Henriette Weber

One of the most distinguished audiences that have ever gathered in Carnegie Hall last evening attended the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. The Bostonians have been coming to New York regularly for 51 years, but this is the first time that they have asked Manhattan to assist in the worthy cause which is such an integral part of the organization of every major orchestra. The concert is estimated to have netted nearly $9,000.

What makes a company of symphony players great as an ensemble is to have as little change in the personnel as possible, so it transpires that men stay with their orchestra (as is the case with our Philharmonic, too) for 25 to 50 years of active service. Having given all of their best years to their orchestra, they should be insured some financial ease when they no longer play.

Mr. Koussevitzky, conducting, so it seemed, with even more fervor and emotion than usual, presented a program of well-loved and familiar music. He commenced with Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony which led naturally into the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, played superbly by Jascha Heifetz as soloist. The accompaniment was a model of what an orchestral background should be like, and together Heifetz and Koussevitzky wove a spell of superlative performance rarely equalled.

* * *

Emotional Appeal

The second half of the concert was given to Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony—music which never fails in its deep emotional appeal. Its fateful message at the beginning was set forth gloriously. The supreme melancholy of the slow part was eloquent with meaning. The delicious pizzicato of the scherzo was done with the eerie softness that Mr. Koussevitzky accentuates a little more than any other conductor. And the concluding movement—"if you find no happiness, look at others," as the composer himself expressed it—was the climax.

This symphony has its human interest recently revived by the book, "Beloved Friend," in which the strange friendship of Tschaikowsky and Nadeshda von Meck is fully described. He called this "our symphony," and ascribed its "story" to the inspiration and help derived from his friend, whom he never saw, but merely corresponded with for many years. He began the work when about to marry a woman whom he did not love, but who had proposed to him. A short and stormy honeymoon interrupted the creation of the symphony, which was not completed until Tschaikowsky had left his bride "forever" after 13 days of married unhappiness.

* * *

Two young pianists, Hannah Klein and Pauline Gilbert, both graduates of Juilliard, gave their first public concert last night at Town Hall. They have been playing together for four years, chiefly on the radio, so they have achieved a certain confidence and a mutual knowledge of each other that stood them in good stead in last night's program.

They have both been diligent students of theory also, which places their piano playing on a secure basis of musical understanding. Thus their concert offered their own two-piano arrangement of six out of the nine numbers listed which was a feature of novel interest. They play exceedingly well, with a freedom and assurance that shows them to have a real flair for public performance. Their audience was not slow in showing them how well they were liked.

* * *

Tonight Carlos Chavez makes his bow as guest conductor of the Philharmonic for two weeks. The orchestra will therefore find itself in new hands, after the calculating modernism of Stravinsky, or Enesco, the dreamer, who dwells on the Olympian heights. The Mexican conductor is still in his thirties, dynamic, progressive and typical of the musical thought of today.

His opening programs will feature two of his own works consisting of his Symphony based on Sophocles' "Antigone" and his ballet, "H. P.," that stands for horsepower, which Chavez holds is a symbol of the dynamic energy that characterizes our era. "H.P." shows the correlation of the northern regions with the tropics. The tropics produce things in their primitive state. The north has the machinery with which to manufacture from these products. The two regions need each other.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA AIDS PENSION FUND

N. Y. Times

Koussevitzky Leads Ensemble in Stirring Program at Carnegie Hall

Feb. 11/37

HEIFETZ IS GUEST SOLOIST

He Plays Mendelssohn Violin Concerto — Fourth Symphony by Tchaikovsky Is Given

By OLIN DOWNES

An extremely brilliant concert in aid of its pension fund was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, with Jascha Heifetz as assisting artist, last night in Carnegie Hall. This concert was not only for the benefit of the pension fund of the orchestra; it was also for the benefit of one Felix Mendelssohn and a great audience, numbers of which may have forgotten the aristocratic distinction and freshness of his art.

Tchaikovsky of the Fourth symphony also figured on this program, and the writer yields to none in his enthusiam for this exceptional composer. Mr. Koussevitzky is famous in interpretation of Tchaikovsky's works. But it may be an even more remarkable feat to play the Italian symphony as this orchestra has played it more than once under his guidance in this city, and it may be added that seldom in late decades has the old and familiar violin concerto had such a thrilling presentation as it was given by Mr. Heifetz. The net result of all this was to make us newly aware of Mendelssohn's genius, which, indeed, has been far underrated by this and by recent generations.

Truer Estimates of Mendelssohn

Nietzsche longed for an art that moved swiftly and on light feet. The joy of Mendelssohn's music, a characteristic which in an age prone to melodrama was deemed a reproach, is perhaps perceived now at a truer value by a strife-weary world. Or perhaps we simply have reached a degree of balance in our musical estimates that we did not have before. The wonderful simplicity and lyricism, the perfection and the felicity of this youthful music transport the listener, suddenly aware that he is in the presence of inspired and consummate art. When such perfection is attained, with Mendelssohn's sweet naturalness and gayety, it is breathtaking, and it is not necessary to support the composer against the Wagners, Mussorgskys, Verdis and Tchaikovskys to be aware of that fact, which last night's performances drove home.

A requisite, in attaining these results, is an orchestra of the very first rank, as well as a conductor who has the true comprehension of great music. The transparency of tone, precision of intonation and finish, which enabled the horns, for example, to play so precisely the sixteenths of the figure that introduces the adorable trio of the third movement enabled Mendelssohn himself to make his very best bow and give his most enchanting smile.

Then there was the exhilaration of the pace, and the complete and fortunate absence of the sentimentality which may be given the phrases of the two middle movements if the tempo is permitted to flag. Nothing of the sort was done; there was the acme of good taste in every measure. No wonder that there was crashing applause at the end.

The first two movements of the concerto were performed as Mendelssohn intended, without a break, and Mr. Heifetz played these two movements with a noble fire and warmth that equalled his mastery. For years there was talk of the cool perfection of his playing. Then a period when some of Mr. Heifetz's warmest admirers feared that he was inclined to make concessions to the gallery—to overplay and exaggerate now and again, in response to these comments, and at the expense of the fine proportions of his art.

Tone Has Every Color

If there was anything in such an apprehension, it certainly has been dispersed by two of Mr. Heifetz's performances of the present season. One was his playing of the Sibelius concerto with the Boston Symphony and another his performance of last night. He then gripped his audience with the first note and he held it in a spell until the closing measure of the andante. It was as if the last reservation which had interfered with complete freedom and spontaneity in his playing had vanished.

And yet, with this complete freedom and spontaneity, there was never slackness, affectation or anything not characterized by structural logic and manly power. The tone had every color and the little violin at climaxes matched the orchestra. The tempo of the first movement was the properly animated Mendelssohn allegro, but it was elastic and the singing of the second theme had a breadth and sensuousness that threw into greater contrast the prevailing mood of the movement—"molto passionato."

Only in the finale did Mr. Heifetz go the way of virtuoso flesh in the rapidity of his tempo. To whirl off this movement so rapidly that a generous stroke of the bow is nowhere possible, any more than an orchestral accompaniment that clicks exactly with the flying figures that emanate from the solo violin, is a temptation that very few who can achieve the swift tempo seem able to resist.

Mr. Koussevitzky's introductory chords promised something a little more substantial, but as soon as the soloist had begun the movement proper it was apparent that things were going to fly. And fly they did, with the audience going wild. For this the multitude had reason. They had heard, for two movements, at least, violin playing of the first order, the highest musicianship, the most communicative emotion. When the tone did not blaze, it richly glowed. Details concerning which there can readily be differences of sound opinion properly faded into the background in the face of the achievement. At first the audience contented itself with thunderous applause, then, when Mr. Heifetz brought Mr. Koussevitzky (whose accompaniment was not the least masterly feature of the interpretation) it broke into cheers.

Mendelssohn, also, had triumphed.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

FEB 1 1 1937

Music of the Day

By B. H. HAGGIN

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony in Benefit Concert—Duo Pianists Make New York Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky was heard in a special concert at Carnegie Hall last night for the benefit of its pension fund. The program consisted of Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, his Violin Concerto, in which Jascha Heifetz was the soloist, and Tchaikocsky's Fourth Symphony.

Mr. Koussevitzky's performance of Mendelssohn's exquisite symphony with his orchestra is one of the miracles of present-day orchestral performance. Its swiftness, its radiance, it buoyancy, and lightness even in moments of greatest sonority, its delicate orchestral colors—the feathery but marvelously sensitized and alive tone of the strings in certain quiet passages, the light-as-air playing of the woodwinds, the repeated flutter of the woodwinds near the end of the first part of the third movement, the magical sound of the horns in the beginning of the second part of this movement — all these are things which one has to keep re-hearing if one is to believe they are possible. Only part of the testimony of last night's performance reached my ears in the place where I was seated; but enough did for me to know that the rest was being heard in other parts of the hall.

The performance of Tchaikovsky's Fourth is another fine achievement, largely because of a straightforwardness unusual in performances of Tchaikovsky. Precisely because of this general straightforwardness the few instances of over-emphasis or wilfullness stand out. One notices, for example that Tchaikovsky directs that a passage in the first movement bgein in the same tempo as the preceding passage and then gradually accelerate, but that Mr. Koussevitzky takes the passage faster from the beginning, depriving it of the effect which Tchaikovsky intended. And one wonders why Mr. Koussevitzky is wilful just at that point, when he is not at so many others.

Mr. Koussevitzky took the introductory measures of the first movement of the concerto at a pace which Mr. Heifetz quickened at his entrance; and this lack of complete unanimity could be felt throughout the movement. There was an improvement in this respect in the remaining movements; and the finale in particular was a brilliant joint display of the virtuosity of soloist and orchestra.

The audience was large and appreciative.

---

contrast, and a sense of the larger musical contours. Still lacking, but no doubt an imminent acquisition for the young artists, are the ability to present more finely shaded degrees of emotional intensity as well as of dynamics, and the equally important ability to give tones mellowness in addition to loudness. The Schumann Variations, an especially interesting item on the program, fell short of its possibilities because of apparently inadequate preparation on the part of the assistants. A competent performance of the Nordoff composition failed to life this music, either, out of the category "interesting."

The audience was large and appreciative. A noval arrangement of the two pianos — both faced the same direction and were parallell with sounding boards up—and the appropriate similarity in the black dresses of the pianists, imparted visual as aural musical grace to the occasion. RALPH WINETT.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

FEB 12 1937

Boston Band At Academy

Dr. Serge Koussevitizky, who was absent when the Boston Symphony Orchestra last was heard here, returned to the Academy of Music podium last night when the third in the series of five Brooklyn concerts was presented again under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute.

Dr. Koussevitzky started his program with a work by an American composer, presenting the Suite in E Major for strings, by Arthur Foote, a contemporary of MacDowell.. It is a pleasing bit of froth and was played with the usual Koussevitzky charm.

The symphony was the No. 3 of Brahams and, after the intermission three Wagnerian excerpts were offered, the prelude to "Lohengrin," the "Waldweben" from "Siegfried" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

Treating Brahams somewhat more traditionally than Wagner, Dr. Kousssevitzky brought the program to a brilliant close with a Russianized reading of the passionate Tannhauser music. The "Lohengrin" episode lacked its accustomed facility and religious air but the "Siegfried" excerpt was read with keen understanding, H. E. S.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

FEB 1 1 1937

Boston Players In Concert for Pension Fund

Orchestra Gives Concerto, Heifetz Soloist; Group To Be in Brooklyn Tonight

Two Pianists Are Heard

Hannah Klein and Pauline Gilbert Presented as Team

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, prefaced this week's regular subscription concerts at Carnegie Hall and the Brooklyn Academy of Music with a special concert last night in the former auditorium for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund, which profited by the presence of a large audience with many standees. Dr. Koussevitzky began his program with Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, and closed it with the fourth symphony of Tchaikovsky. The soloist of the evening was Jascha Heifetz, playing Mendelssohn's violin concerto.

Mr. Heifetz was in excellent form, and the orchestra gave a remarkably well proportioned accompaniment characterized by notable finesse of dynamic shading and the exceptional quality of tone which is one of the major features of the Bostonians' concerts. Both conductor and orchestra, as usual, were happy in their interpretation of Tchaikovsky's score. Like other organizations, the Boston Symphony gives an annual pension fund benefit concert in its own city, but this was the first time in the fifty years' history of its New York visits that it has given a special concert for this purpose here.

The usual dates of the regular evening Carnegie Hall and Brooklyn concerts have been transposed, Dr. Koussevitzky and his men playing at the Academy of Music tonight and in Carnegie Hall tomorrow. The afternoon subscription concert will, according to the usual practice, take place on Saturday.

Two young pianists, Hannah Klein and Pauline Gilbert, who have both studied at the Juilliard Graduate School with Mme. Olga Samaroff, gave their first New York concert as a two-piano team last night in Town Hall, beginning with Harold Bauer's transcription of a Bach prelude and fugue in C minor and Miss Klein's well-wrought transcription of Handel's fifth organ concerto. Miss Gilbert was also represented as a transcriber in Three Character Pieces by Mendelssohn; Bernard Greenhouse, Alan Shulman and Harry Shapiro were assisting artists in Schumann's andante and variations for two pianos, two cellos and horn.

Playing with instruments side by side, rather than in the more familiar back-to-back arrangement, and clad in sober and dignified black, the two musicians gave a very promising performance, keeping well together and giving the impression of the necessary unity of interpretative outlook, while each proved to be a well-equipped artist from the technical point of view.

Naturally, they had not yet reached the thorough degree of finish of performance which characterizes the long-experienced leaders in this field, such as the Robertsons, and in the Bach-Bauer work dynamic contrasts were sometimes cultivated at the expense of intermediate degrees of volume, but the net impression was one of an artistic and musicianly performance. Shorter pieces by Paul Nordoff. Arensky, Albeniz, Busoni and Stravinsky formed the final group of the set program.

Meanwhile, at the Metropolitan Opera House, "Caponsacchi" was having its second performance under the direction of its composer, Richard Hageman, with its three principals, Mario Chamlee in the title role; Helen Jepson as Pompilia and Lawrence Tibbett as Guido Franceschini, proving effective from a vocal and dramatic point of view and also doing well in regard to the intelligibility of Arthur Goodrich's text. John Gurney and Doris Doe, as Pompilia's parents, and Norman Cordon as the Pope were among the others in the populous cast. The opera was well received by a good-sized audience.

F. D. P.

Metropolitan Host
N. Y., N. Y.

FEB 1 3 1937

Music

February 13th, afternoon, Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall, 57th and 7th Ave., Bartlett and Robertson, pianists at Town Hall, 123 W. 43rd St., "Manon" at the Metropolitan Opera House, 39th and Broadway; evening, Judith Sidorsky, pianist at Town Hall, "Faust" at the Metropolitan.

198

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

FEB 1 1 1937

Heifetz Aids Boston Symphony

Violinist Plays Mendelssohn Concerto at Concert in Carnegie Hall.

By W. J. HENDERSON.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra came to town yesterday and in Carnegie Hall last evening, with the important assistance of Jascha Heifetz, gave a concert in aid of its pension fund. That part of the concert preceding the intermission was devoted to a composer who, once overrated, has of late been singularly underrated, to wit, Felix Mendelssohn. The compositions by which he was represented were the Italian symphony and, of course, with Mr. Heifetz as the soloist, the violin concerto.

New York has in recent years been so Brahms-minded that composers whose art is characterized by aristocratic elegance, idiom and meticulous finish of detail have suffered. But perhaps the divergent views of Mendelssohn, which have existed so long, contained exaggerations greater than those of our own immediate time. "Mendelssohn in his maturity," said the incomparable Philip Hale, "wrote his music as he looks in his picture, smiling and with a stickpin in his ruffled shirt." Donald Francie Tovey, sturdy Scotchman, declared, "In the violin concerto Mendelssohn's inspiration is high and vigorous." There you have both sides of the matter.

Mr. Heifetz leans toward the view of Prof. Tovey. His performance last evening had inspiration high and vigorous. It stirred audience and orchestra. There was a turmoil of applause on and off the stage and the violinist was recalled again and again. Finally he dragged a reluctant Koussevitsky with him to acknowledge the plaudits and then asked the orchestra to rise and accept its proper share of the praise. Which was entirely in accord with the temper of the assembly, for the concerto had been presented to it not as a solo with accompaniment but as an organized work for violin and orchestra.

There is room for belief that Mr. Heifetz has restudied the composition. He had not played it frequently in seasons just past, but this winter he has brought it actively into his repertory again and with its interpretation so enlivened by virility of style and by a remarkably fine adjustment of proportions that he has renewed the vitality of a work which fifty years ago was regarded as a first and almost final test of the capabilities of a violinist. Those who heard Mr. Heifetz play the concerto last night are not likely soon to forget the experience. It was a magnificent performance, and the word "magnificent" is used with explicit purpose.

The "cold" Mr. Heifetz gave to the first movement one of the most fiery performances ever heard in this town. The high and vigorous inspiration of Mendelssohn perceived by Prof. Tovey was proclaimed with the authority of a master, the tone of a lyric singer and the technical certainty of a supreme virtuoso. It was a moving exposition of the flashing lines of this often emasculated movement. The second movement Mr. Heifetz presented with unaffected simplicity, with all the wealth of his marvelous singing cantilena and with all the spotless purity of his unsullied style. The finale was exciting in the rush and glitter of its phrases and in the bold and gallant sweep of its outline. And nowhere in the performance was there an instant of departure from the dignity, the chastity of style which have always marked the art of Mr. Heifetz as a perfect exemplification of flawless taste. Today this violinist is greater than ever, and that is saying about all that can be said.

The Italian symphony, it has often been said with truth, is not especially Italian. Even the last movement, which bases itself on an Italian dance, remains reserved. But it is an admirably written work in the later classic model, to whose development Mendelssohn contributed a delicate but firmly cut formal architecture and an uncommon charm in elegant treatment of the orchestration. Mr. Koussevitzky and his musicians placed the symphony before the audience in a most engaging manner, with tempi brisk but not overdriven, and clarity patent to every hearer. The concert concluded with the fourth symphony of Tschaikowsky, which, after Mendelssohn, seemed to contain considerable musical hurly-burly.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

FEB 12 1937

Boston Players at the Academy

Third in a series of "five philharmonic concerts" at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, the concert last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, was another triumph of euphony. Seldom have this organization's strings had so much to do, or done it so well.

To begin with, there was Arthur Foote's E major suite for string orchestra, which the Bostonians played once before this season in Carnegie Hall. The writer liked this well-confected music even more on this occasion, and the strings sang out its soothing lyricism with what seemed even more perfectly molded phrasing.

Mr. Koussevitzky then led an exposition of Brahms's Third Symphony that missed no instrumental detail and gave clarity and precision to every phrase. The performance sounded well from the first note to the last, and in the end there was a massing of luscious tone colors such as this orchestra is noted for.

The strings were once more to the fore in the prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin," in which Mr. Koussevitzky adopted a subtly graduated dynamic scale that caught every nuance, every fluctuation of mood. It was smooth and polished, almost to the point of cloying.

But what brought on a tempest of applause was the orchestra's infinite delicacy in treating the wealth of fascinating detail in the "Waldweben" from Wagner's "Siegfried," and, of course, the "Tannhaeuser" overture, concluding the concert, came in for a demonstration. L. B.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

FEB 12 1937

Boston Symphony at Academy For Its 51st Season Concert

The midseason concert of the 51st season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn was given at the Brooklyn Academy of Music last night with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The series of five philharmonic concerts by the only major symphony orchestra appearing in Brooklyn, is presented under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences of which Edward G. Blum is president of the Board of Trustees; the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn of which R. Huntington Woodman is chairman, and the Brooklyn Committee. Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman of this committee and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, acting chairman.

Hostesses at Dinner

Mrs. Frank Reynolds was the hostess in the committee box last night and her guests at a dinner party at her home, 44 Remsen St. and at the concert included: Mr. and Mrs. Clarence E. Corner, Mrs. and Mrs. John T. Sackett, Mr. and Mrs. George G. Reynolds, and Miss Mary Storrs Packard.

MONTCLAIR, N. J.
TIMES

EB 1 2 1937

Unity Director Granted Leave

Mrs. E. S. Wiers, Institute Head, Will Visit in California.

Mrs. Edgar Swan Wiers, who, as director of Unity Institute, has carried on the work of that organization with success through the depression years, has asked for a leave of absence and will leave Montclair next week for a two months' stay in California. While away she will be the guest of her brother, Samuel G. McClure, publisher and owner of the Santa Monica Evening Outlook. Mrs. Wiers will remain in California until April.

During the six years of Mrs. Wiers's directorship, Unity Institute has continued to bring to Montclair in the Unity Concert Course the best talent in the field of music, and in the Unity Travel Course, the best speakers in the field of exploration and travel. For the coming season 1937-38 the plans are completed for these courses.

In the Unity Concert Course the outstanding event will be the coming to Montclair of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. For seven successive seasons (1922-1929) the appearance of this great musical organization was a social event in Montclair and the patrons of the Unity Concert Course are now expressing their appreciation of the return of this great orchestra on Feb. 9, 1938.

COLUMBUS, O.
STATE JOURNAL

FEB 1 2 1937

Yale Savant Is Due Here

The American pianist, Bruce Simonds, is to present a recital at 8:30 p. m. Friday, Feb. 19, in Erskine Hall at St. Mary's of the Springs College. Tickets are available to the public.

Born in Connecticut, he showed marked ability at the age of 7, received highest honors in music from Yale University and studied with Harold Bauer before going abroad for further study. He worked with Vincent d'Indy in Paris and with great success in both cities before his return to America.

For some years he has been connected with the Yale school of music. He was the first president of the American Matthay Association. He has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the National Orchestral Society of New York, the Cleveland, Minneapolis and New Haven Orchestras and has given recitals in most of the large eastern cities and many schools and colleges.

In 1934 he played the entire series of Beethoven piano sonatas at Yale University, eliciting highest praise from the public and the press.

The complete Simonds program follows:

Scarlatti............Three small sonatas
  G minor.
  C minor.
  F major.
Beethoven...Sonata in F minor, Op. 57
  (Appassionata.)
  Allegro assai.
  Andante con moto.
  Allegro ma non troppo.
d'Indy...........Aaron (Helvetia Valse)
Faure..................First Nocturne
Debussy.....................Minstrels
  Jardins sous la pluie.
Chopin.....Polonaise in F sharp major
  Impromptu in A flat major.
Scriabin.........................Poeme
Liapounov...................Lesghinka

* * *

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

FEB 1 2 1937

Music of the Day

Chavez Begins Guest Engagement With the Philharmonic-Symphony — Boston Symphony at Academy

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky gave its third concert of the Brooklyn season at the Academy of Music last night. The varied program comprised Foote's Suite for Strings in E, Op. 36; Brahms' Third Symphony, and by Wagner the "Lohengrin" Prelude, the "Waldweben" from "Siegfried" and the "Tannhaeuser" Overture.

The ability of Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra to accomplish miracles of fine delineation in phrasing and dynamics was again demonstrated last night, and there were also demonstrated two characteristics of this ability, one of which may be only temporary, and the other of which has appeared in all Dr. Koussevitzky's work. The characteristic which, it is hoped, is temporary, is the disappearance of fine delineation in climaxes, and the at other times apparent sacrifice of the climax to the fine delineation which the orchestra seems to find incompatible with the former. It happened many times in the Brahms Symphony; for example, that exquisite phrasing laid the ground for an overwhelming climax, which never materialized, even though both the composer's instructions and the ear of the listener demanded it. One aspect of this failure, the simple lack of force in forte passages, may be explained by the damping effect of the slip covers with which each chair in the orchestra was equipped. But this does not explain why, in its infrequent full-blooded bursts of sound, the orchestra should have lost the acuteness of its quieter moments. Perhaps the reason lies in Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting itself, which, during tranquil passages is the embodiment of sensitivity, but during climaxes becomes inexplicit through the extremity of his own emotion.

The second feature of Dr. Koussevitzky's delineation, which operated, as has been mentioned, only in the more tranquil passages, was a highly skillful and carefully rehearsed division of attention between whatever instruments happened to be playing at the same time. This may be iluustrated by the orchestra's method in one of its outstanding accomplishments, the Italian Symphony of Mendelssohn, not played last night, but furnishing a simple example of the technique under discussion. At the beginning of the second movement there is an exquisite passage scored for strings and divided flutes. For Dr. Koussevitzky the fact that both flutes and strings are playing at the same time is not enough; he carefully lifts the flutes above the strings whenever the latter's task warrants, and vice versa, thus producing a sort of antiphony between the choirs involved. The same careful treatment is accorded the most complex scoring and, applied to the intricate orchestration of the Brahms Symphony, yielded a sonority and clarity that few other orchestras have ever equaled.

The playing of the "Lohengrin" prelude again exploded the myth of the "ethereal" quality of Wagner's divided violins, which even under Dr. Koussevitzky sounded breathy and weak, as they could not help doing in the high register of the opening bars. And Mr. Burgin's scratchy open strings and inaccurate pitch did not help the situation. RALPH WINETT.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN

FEB 12 1937

Society Notes

By LUCILE MINTZ

Third Boston Symphony Concert Preceded by Many Dinners; Mrs. Reynolds Is Hostess

A large and responsive audience attended the season's third concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducting, last evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Among the many dinners which preceded the concert was that given by Mrs. Frank Reynolds at her home, No. 44 Remsen street. Later the party occupied the box of the sponsoring committee at the concert, in which Mrs. Reynolds was hostess. The group included: Mr. and Mrs. Clarence E. Corner, Mr. and Mrs. John T. Sackett, Mr. and Mrs. George G. Reynolds and Miss Mary Storrs

Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Blum entertained their box guests at dinner at their home, No. 45 Plaza street, before the concert. Their guests were: Mr. and Mrs. William P. Earle, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rogers and Mrs. William H. Good.

Rear Admiral Harris Laning, Commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and Mrs Laning, had as their dinner and box guests: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Marion Hall, Captain and Mrs. George Gelm, U. S. N., retired and Commander and Mrs. Earl P. Huff, M. C., U. S. N.

Mr. and Mrs. Hollis K. Thayer were hosts in the box of Mrs Maxwell Lester and Mrs. Frank .E. Simmons, who have gone to Florida. Their guests were: Mr. and Mrs. W. Watson Northrop, Mr. and Mrs. George Levess and Mrs. John H. Livingston, Mr. and Mrs. Thayer entertained the group at dinner at their home, No 3 Grace Court ally.

Mrs. Roy M. Hart, president of the Associate Alumnae of Adelphi Academy was the hostess in the Alumnae box. Her guests included Mr. and Mrs. Edward P. Holden, Jr., Miss Emma Jessie Odd, Mrs. Luther R. Dyott and Mr. Hart Mrs. Dermod Ives of Garden City entertained in the box of Miss Anna A. Logan. Mrs. Joseph A. Bennett's box was occupied by the Misses Mary and Catherine Bennett. Another box was occupied by Mrs. Robert F. Ives and her guests.

---

at Carbertson,
" at the ay; eve-
"Faust"

199

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
FEB 14 1937

Outside Listening In

BACH for breakfast. Beethoven for lunch and Stravinsky for dinner is the menu from which America will choose its musical victuals in another 20 years, believes Erno Rapee, diminutive, dynamic director of the Sunday night Carnegie Hall broadcasts.

Instead of heading for the symphonic bowwows, Americans are building a tradition for both musical appreciation and accomplishment which today is causing the best of the Europeans to look to their laurels, declares Rapee.

"The quality of musicianship in the United States has already reached such a degree that no other country can hope to equal us for quite a few years," argues Rapee, basing his judgments upon the recent development of symphonic orchestras in America and the influence of radio in the dissemination of musical literature.

"And while American orchestras have been improving, European standards have been steadily declining. This is not surmise but fact. In the 25 years I have been in this country I have had ample opportunity of watching the growth of this young musical prodigy—America. We are past the gurgling and toddling stage, by all tests, and are now on the eve of a great golden age of musical accomplishment, the like of which the world has never seen," said Rapee after a radio rehearsal yesterday.

Rapee considers modern music, in its multitudinous forms, "a necessary phase in the evolutionary process."

"Jazz," he says, "is the pleasant prattle of our musical childhood. It was a babble of strange and wonderful noise in the beginning, undecipherable and unpromising. There was really no rhyme or reason or melody to the early cooings of this precocious infant. Then, one day there came idea and finally melody. Today, we are witnessing the steady development of an orderly education and the child has actually acquired considerable personal charm and some poise." Much of our modern music is definitely charming, he says.

But more significantly, says Rapee, young America has now turned to the classics and not to jazz for creative inspiration.

"Two million youngsters are playing musical instruments. There are approximately 75,000 bands and orchestras in our schools and colleges. What is the musical fare that these young musicians finally will master and pass along to their younger brothers and sisters for serious thought? Not Berlin, but Beethoven and Bach. In the orchestras of our public schols are the musicians who are already filling the rosters of our symphonies.

"There are 41 fine symphony orchestras in the United States and a score of first-rate singing organizations. Half of these at least are native Americans, trained in the classical traditions nevertheless."

In Europe there are few school orchestras and bands, says Rapee, and meager financial rewards for those who take up music as a livelihood.

"Here in America it is possible for ambitious young musicians to earn a good living, in normal times, through music. All our symphonies pay living wages. In Europe there are really few opportunities for the most talented players and the wages are woefully inadequate.

"Born and educated in Hungary, a land of romantic musical traditions, I am, nevertheless, aware of this depressing fact. Music in Europe is sadly ailing, chiefly because Europeans must turn to other occupations to make their living. It is well enough to say that art will survive, even on an empty stomach—but not for long.

"There is nothing that equals the musicianship of our publicly supported symphonies. In the past few months it has been my privilege to stand as guest conductor before a dozen of our leading orchestras in various sections of the country. Take them in any order—Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, Detroit, New York, San Francisco, Los Angeles—all are superior musical units, soundly financed and capably directed."

Rapee credits radio with developing musical consciousness in America.

"With the exception of Paderewski, Rachmaninoff and Kreisler, every internationally famous instrumentalist and singer has appeared on the air. It is significant that Toscanini is coming back to us. Stravinsky's guest appearance tonight from Carnegie Hall is another milestone of achievement. It is evident that America is getting ready for a full course musical dinner."

THE MICROPHONE
BOSTON, MASS.
FEB 13 1937

A Listener Writes In Defense Of Mr. Taylor

THIS is the Letter Box of The MICROPHONE, in which readers are invited to express, briefly, their constructive criticism of raido. The name and address of the writer are required for publication. Address Letter Box, The MICROPHONE, No. 34 Court Square, Boston, Massachusetts.

ADELAIDE S. BLACKMER of R.F.D. 25, Plymouth, Massachusetts, writes:

"I have read in my last copy of The MICROPHONE, and also in a previous copy, very sharp criticism of Mr. DEEMS TAYLOR, and I write to ask you to allow me, a subscriber, space to present my more favorable views, if you will.

"For many years I attended the Boston Symphony concerts and there the intermission is frankly for relaxation—people chat with each other, visit friends in other parts of the hall, walk about the outer corridor—and the management sounds a warning gong that they may return to their seats in time for the second portion of the concert.

"I have never had the happiness of attending a New York Symphony in person but I feel safe in assuming that the same condition obtains there — and I wonder what use your correspondent made of this period when she attended the concerts in person.

"It is assumed that the radio audience cannot be left to its own devices (I understand in England they are) during this period and entertainment is provided—this is certainly generous.

"To this end Mr. TAYLOR has been selected and to my mind he is very satisfactory. He tells us what we need to know about the program, since we have no notes, and he fills in the time with matter suggested by the matter in hand.

"This seems to give great offense to your correspondent, Mrs. L. H. SMITH, and she refers to the talk as 'gossip, and worse.'

"Now gossip is defined in my new dictionary as 'malicious tattle.' She of course couldn't mean that, because it isn't true. Does she perhaps mean 'personalities?' Some people dislike them, more enjoy them — witness the famous books, MONTAIGNE, ROUSSEAU, PEPYS, BOSWELL and the splendid biographies we have had of late years, so eagerly received by the public — absorbing because of their intensely personal matter.

"A most charming book of this intimate character was the Little Chronicle of MADALENA BACH, which Mr. GILMAN recommended to his audience, telling the intimate details of their home life.

"I am perfectly certain that most people enjoy hearing all about the life and character of musicians and I am also certain that a 15 to 20 minute intermission is NOT the place for serious study of a composition.

"I would like to suggest what seems to me a happy method of study for one who takes music seriously—i. e., as a student. Procure from the bookseller, or library, a good book, like Mr. O'CONNELL'S work on the symphonies, read up on your favorite work about construction and instrumentation and then put the record on your phonograph. Do this until you get to know it."

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD IN MOZART

Symphony in C Is Brilliantly Presented Under Baton of Serge Koussevitzky

MAHLER WORK IS OFFERED

Maria Ranzow and Paul Althouse Are Guest Singers Taking Part in Performance

By OLIN DOWNES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, signalized the concert it gave last night in Carnegie Hall by a delectable performance of a delectable symphony of Mozart and by a very painstaking performance of essentially worthless and fatiguing music—that is to say, Mahler's "Lied von der Erde." It was in Mozart's work that there was occasion again to delight in the qualities of the band and in the masterly conducting of Dr. Koussevitzky.

Incidentally, the letter of Mozart quoted by Mr. Burke in the program book, a letter written in 1780, the year of the composition of the C major symphony played last night, is evidence that not all performances of works of the classic Viennese school were given with miniature orchestras. Mozart's letter speaks of "forty violins played—the wind instruments all doubled—ten violas, ten double-basses, eight violoncellos and six bassoons." A generously proportioned orchestra, with, one would say, far too heavy a wood-wind choir for the music heard last night! The charm of that music is its ineffable grace, gayety, perfection of workmanship, and a master's sense of beauty. Other composers of Mozart's time used most of formulas found in his early symphony. Genius translates these formulas into wonder.

Mahler's Music Ably Given

Then came the performance of Mahler's music, in which the orchestra was assisted by Paul Althouse, tenor, and Maria Ranzow, contralto. The instrumental performance, per se, was a very brilliant one. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the music not only as if he believed in it but as if a major issue depended upon its expert presentation. Mr. Althouse contended successfully with Mahler's climaxes and took a difficult tenor part with much credit to his prowess. Miss Ranzow did not achieve so much. As regards technic and tone, she was a disappointment.

But it would be hard to conceive of any performance of this music, however finished or eloquent, which would make convincing its sterility, its essential conventionality and sodden pessimistic mood. There are pages in Mahler's works when the intensity of his feeling or the flare of his dramatic imagination carries him over his incapacity to create original music. The tragic circumstances associated with his "Lied von der Erde" are known. It is also tragic that the loss of a child could not have been fittingly expressed after the dictates of his heart by this great musician.

Entire Score Void of Ideas

But it was not to be. The best page of "Lied von der Erde" has a commonplace tuneful, a sentimental sadness and melancholy. There are dramatic outcries and there is a feverish brilliancy in the parts devoted to thoughts of youth, wine, revelry, the carelessness of nature. The expressive intention is clear; Mahler cannot realize it in terms of significant art. Through the entire score one listens in vain for one single idea which is original and distinguished. This is not said after one hearing of the score or anything but repeated effort to find in it something deserving reputation. "Das Lied von der Erde" has been played repeatedly in New York in the last thirteen years, but it has never won a place in the repertory and it never will.

For it is simply bad, dreary music. Conductors from Artur Bodanzky to Bruno Walter and now to Dr. Koussevitzky have tried to breathe life into the score, but there isn't a device yet created by science or art either that could do it. It is regrettable that the efforts of the superb Boston Symphony should be so largely devoted to this work on the occasion of the present visit of the band, since we can ill afford to devote the capacities of such an orchestra to superfluous undertakings.

Gustav Mahler Work Given by Boston Players

'Das Lied von der Erde' Is Presented by Koussevitzky and His Orchestra

Maria Ranzow Is Soloist

Also Paul Althouse; Mozart Symphony on Program

By Jerome D. Bohm

For the first time in something over three years, Gustav Mahler's "Lied von der Erde" was heard here in Carnegie Hall last night in a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky with Maria Ranzow, contralto, and Paul Althouse, tenor, as soloists. It was preceded by Mozart's symphony in C major, No. 34 (K.338).

As one listened to Mr. Koussevitzky and his great orchestra traverse the pages of Mahler's poignantly moving score, the conviction grew that this was perhaps the most enduring music in its genre created by any composer since Wagner. This is especially true of the concluding movement, "Abschied," which, with its ineffably tender breathing of the word "Ewig" at the close, is unforgettably touching.

Again the impression was renewed that the school of polytonal composers stems directly from Mahler. Here, in "Das Lied von der Erde," one finds the origin of the procedure of juxtaposing horizontally conflicting melodies, regardless of the harmonic acerbities resulting. And here, too, the hearer will discover the sources of the newest type of instrumentation.

The interpretation by Mr. Koussevitzky and his players was often affecting and always satisfying tonally. One has heard certain portions of the work set forth with greater inwardness, but the silence of the audience before bursting into applause at the conclusion bespoke the integrity of the conception.

Mme. Ranzow, well remembered here for her delineation of some of the Wagnerian contralto parts at the Metropolitan Opera House several years ago, has not grown more expert in the projection of her voice, but she sang with sincerity and, in certain measures which did not lie too high for her, with convincing expressiveness. Mr. Althouse, too, when he was able to encompass his lines without effort, sang earnestly and understandingly.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST
FEB 13 1937

BOSTON ORCHESTRA GIVES "SONG OF THE EARTH"

Gustav Mahler's profoundly touching "symphony" entitled "The Song of the Earth," for tenor, contralto and orchestra, was presented with reverence and passion last night at Carnegie Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. The soloists were Paul Althouse and Maria Ranzow, whose voice has a quality peculiarly effective for her poetic role in this work.

Mozart's Symphony in C major, No. 34, also was performed. Perhaps on Monday there will be space to say more about this great concert. Just another Boston Orchestra concert, diligently prepared and superbly performed by the orchestra, with Mr. Koussevitzky's authoritative intelligence never relaxing for a moment, but still the fineness of the strings and the exactitude and coherence of the playing of Mozart remain sensational enough for comment. Also for substance and detail, Mahler's autumnal music deserves much more attention.

H. B.

Trans
Feb 13/37

Boston Quartet

In Jordan Hall, on the evening of Feb. 24, the Boston String Quartet will call upon Jesus Maria Sanroma as assisting pianist.

To be heard at their Feb. 24 concert are quartets by Haydn (C major) and Brahms (C minor) as well as the pianoforte quintet of Ernest Bloch.

This season the quartet's personnel remains as before. The first violinist and director is Harrison Keller, disciple of Leopold Auer. Paul Federovsky, second violinist, studied with Ottakar Sevcik. In pre-revolution days he was director of the Imperial Conservatory in Vladivostock. Georges Fourel, viola, was a member both of the Conservatoire and Lamoureux Orchestras, and of the Krettly Quartet. Alfred Zighera, 'cellist, was a member of the Paris orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky before his conductorship of the Boston Symphony.

200

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEW YORK JOURNAL

FEB 1 3 1937

Mahler's 'A Song of Earth' Given by Boston Orchestra

By Henriette Weber

The Boston Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, presented Mahler's "Lied von der Erde" (A Song of Earth) for the first time in this city yesterday evening and will repeat it at this afternoon's concert in Carnegie Hall. This stupendous work, written for orchestra and two solo voices, contralto and tenor, has not been done here since December, 1934, when Bruno Walter gave it with the Philharmonic. At both concerts Mozart's Symphony in C Major precedes it.

This Mahler composition is one of symphonic proportions, so balanced that at times the voice parts predominate, and again the singers must resort to what is practically declamatory narrative while the orchestra emphasizes the more lyrical aspects. The six poems which Mahler has selected for this musical setting are taken from a collection of Chinese poems of the 8th century, freely translated into German by Hans Bethge.

The poems emphasize one dominent theme—that of the mystery and futility of life. Thus Mahler expresses here in grand and poignant fashion his own philosophy of living. His peculiar nature prevented him from viewing this world "as a friendly dwelling place," and withdrawal from this uncongenial existence, ending on a note of tragic peace, is the essential thought behind the entire work.

It was given with wonderful insight by the brilliant conductor of the Boston Orchestra who knew how to reach inward and draw forth Mahler's very soul for our inspection by means of this revealing music. This interpretation was exactly that—a revelation. It told more of "the thing behind the thing" than any previous reading of Mahler's music has made clear. It was grand in the biggest sense, and infinitely sad.

Needless to say the orchestra played with superb understanding. The soloists were Paul Althouse, tenor of the Metropolitan, and Marie Ranzow, Australian contralto. Mr. Althouse, who has become one of our best interpreters of German music and who has grown immeasurably in artistic stature, as his recent "Tannhauser" at the opera showed, sang with impressive feeling the difficult assignment for the tenor voice. Quite in the spirit of it all was also the excellent singing of Miss Ranzow, although her voice lost its good quality in the upper range.

* * *

It was fine to hear the Roth Quartet once again, and a large audience at Town Hall thought so too. The novelty of their concert was a new Piano Quintet by Roy Harris, with Johanna Harris taking the piano part. The Quintet had its "first time" on this occasion.

Unfortunately this work could not be heard, but it was a joy to be present at the Roth Mastery of a Beethoven string quartet which opened their concert. They fairly dashed into the first movement, not with restlessness but with a persistent urge that became cumulative in its effect because it was so subtly controlled. Particularly notable, too, was the exquisite smoothness of the slow movement which made the finale doubly brilliant.

* * *

Since the Metropolitan is not putting on any Puccini operas, Mr. Salmaggi is making this a season to revive several of these favorite operas without waiting for his promised season in April. He therefore announces a matinee and night performance for Washington's birthday at the Hippodrome of "Butterfly" in the afternoon and "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci" that evening. "La Boheme" will be put on Tuesday night, Feb. 23.

KOUSSEVITZY LEADS BOSTON SYMPHONY IN MAHLER SCORE

By WINTHROP SARGEANT.

Last night in Carnegie Hall, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra provided New York with its first hearing this season of a work by Gustav Mahler. The work was one of the most ingratiating of the great romantic master's compositions, "Das Lied von der Erde."

There may still exist in some quarters the feeling that Mahler was a composer of extremely abstruse and difficult scores. But the feeling has seldom extended to that "symphony for tenor and alto soli and orchestra," which he composed after Hans Bethge's translations of old Chinese poetry by Li-Tai-Po and others.

"Das Lied von der Erde," or "The Song of the Earth," represents the intimate rather than the heroic Mahler. It is a work of pastel shades and delicate moods. And yet its message is one of poignant emotion expressed in fantastic and imaginative terms. For those who have learned to appreciate its subtle mysticism, it remains a product unique in the whole repertoire of symphonic music. Without question it should be accorded its place among the most profound and beautiful musical works that have graced our country.

The performance accorded it by the Bostonians last night left several things to be desired. Neither Maria Ranzow, the contralto soloist, nor Paul Althouse, who sang the tenor part, were quite adequate to their tasks. Both sang out of tune on several occasions, and Mme. Ranzow, in particular, was afflicted with unevenness of production. Nor is "Das Lied von der Erde" the sort of music in which Mr. Koussevitzky shines to best advantage.

There was, nevertheless, a clear and polished account of the orchestral part of the score. And, if something of the sober abandon and romantic fantasy native to the work was lacking, there was at least a careful projection of the composer's delicate and subtly colored instrumental writing. The "Drinking Song of Earthly Woe" had an interpretation that was nervous and intense rather than leisurely in its flights of emotional feeling, and the "Lonely One in Autumn" was somewhat hurried and rigid. The most successful readings fell perhaps to the lighter movements, "Von der Jugend" and "Von der Schoenheit." The large audience showed its approval of the work in unmistakable terms.

As a prelude to the Mahler work, Mr. Koussevitzky had chosen a Mozart symphony, that in C Major, which bears the Koechel catalogue number 338. In this work the Boston orchestra played with its usual unbelievable transparency and Mr. Koussevitzky conducted with immaculate taste and discernment.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

FEB 1 3 1937

The Music Box

SCRIBNER'S have sent us their catalogue of musical first editions and original manuscripts. The prize plum in the package is the original holograph manuscript of Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony (K.385), on sale for $20,000. Other tidbits are the first edition of Bach's "Musicalisches Opfer," published in Leipzig in the composer's own time, price $550; first edition (Breitkopf & Haertel, 1826) of the first six Beethoven symphonies (except No. 3, second edition), six volumes, $325; first edition of the Beethoven Ninth (Schott, 1826), $235; first edition (Bessel, 1875) of Moussorgsky's "Boris Godounoff," $325; a page of original Mozart manuscript, containing twenty-seven bars of the opening of an aria from "Serraglio," in piano and vocal score, $465. And just in time for the Met.'s "Ring" cycles, the first edition of the orchestral score of the complete "Ring" (Schott, 1873-76), formerly the property of Camille Saint-Saens, $950.

Added bargain: the electric organ offers more than 250,000,000 tonal combinations.... Alexander Brailowsky will give a series of six recitals next season at Town Hall, in which the entire 169 works of Chopin will be played. He has done it seven times since 1924, four in Paris alone. . . . Recently Mr. Brailowsky was forbidden to play Chopin in Italy, because of the composer's Polish birth.... Many in the audience that attended yesterday's "Meistersinger," given for the benefit of Smith College, remembered Charles Kullman (Walther) as a former professor of music at Smith.

Next Monday Town Hall opens its books for the season 1937-38, and judging from the requests already on file, the management foresees one of the busiest years in the Hall's history.... Ezio Pinza will figure in his third revival of the current season with the performance of "Norma" at the Met. next Saturday afternoon.... Jeanne Behrend having lately put behind her a Carnegie Hall piano recital, Husband Alexander Kelberine, not to be outdone, will give one of his own March 15.... And the University of Pennsylvania is making a Doctor of Eugene Ormandy.

Seen at the Opera: Helen Jepson, an eye-filling Giulietta in "Tales of Hoffmann," reaching the climax of a grand exit, only to be rudely halted while her numerous retinue worked frantically to release her gown from a chink in the steps.... In last week's "Walkuere," across the flame-lit skies of the last act, the monstrous shadow of the backstage fan used in the scene.... And the "Walkuere" rocks, rendered intermittently transparent by the lighting. ... Lauritz Melchior, as the first-act Siegfried, throwing himself recklessly upon the couch and bouncing back in a hurry to remove the hunting horn that dug into his stomach.

* * *

SALAAMS

To Serge Koussevitzky and Jascha Heifetz, for their unforgettable playing of Mendelssohn;

To Gregor Piatigorsky and Felix Salmond, first-rate cellists both;

To the Pasquier String Trio, one of the best ensembles of the day.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

FEB 1 3 1937

Boston Symphony Attracts Good Audience.

Two numbers only made up the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening in Carnegie Hall, namely, the C major symphony (K. 338) of Mozart and Gustav Mahler's "Das Lied vonder Erde." Serge Koussevitzky, naturally, conducted, and Maria Ranzow, contralto, and Paul Althouse, tenor, sang the solo parts in the Mahler composition.

"Das Lied von der Erde," which, if memory serves, has not been given in Carnegie Hall since Bruno Walter's performance of it with the Philharmonic - Symphony Society some four years ago, is a work that suffers an undue neglect here. Its six sections contain many pages of poetic loveliness; music that is delicately scented and music that rises up in glorious tumult, following as it does the mercurial lines of Hans Bethge, upon which it is based.

As the piece presented last evening, it could not be said that all of its brimming beauty was captured completely. Some parts emerged with a soulfully penetrating communion among the elements involved. Others less so. The orchestra's share in the proceedings went usually well, only occasionally descending from a high plane of performance.

Mr. Althouse, in better voice than he has been of late, acquitted himself in the excellent manner of which he is capable. Mme. Ranzow had the strength of voice and sympathetic approach to project her lines with intelligence. But she often had difficulty with high tones.

With regard to the symphony, it need only be said that Mr. Koussevitzky again showed himself to be a master of nuance, of style and of tonal proportion. The musicians responded to his direction to the letter.

An audience of good size and great enthusiasm attended. R. C. B.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

FEB 1 3 1937

Gustav Mahler Work Given by Boston Players

'Das Lied von der Erde' Is Presented by Koussevitzky and His Orchestra

Maria Ranzow Is Soloist

Also Paul Althouse; Mozart Symphony on Program

By Jerome D. Bohm

For the first time in something over three years, Gustav Mahler's "Lied von der Erde" was heard here in Carnegie Hall last night in a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky with Maria Ranzow, contralto, and Paul Althouse, tenor, as soloists. It was preceded by Mozart's symphony in C major, No. 34 (K.338).

As one listened to Mr. Koussevitzky and his great orchestra traverse the pages of Mahler's poignantly moving score, the conviction grew that this was perhaps the most enduring music in its genre created by any composer since Wagner. This is especially true of the concluding movement, "Abschied," which, with its ineffably tender breathing of the word "Ewig" at the close, is unforgettably touching.

Again the impression was renewed that the school of polytonal composers stems directly from Mahler. Here, in "Das Lied von der Erde," one finds the origin of the procedure of juxtaposing horizontally conflicting melodies, regardless of the harmonic acerbities resulting. And here, too, the hearer will discover the sources of the newest type of instrumentation.

The interpretation by Mr. Koussevitzky and his players was often affecting and always satisfying tonally. One has heard certain portions of the work set forth with greater inwardness, but the silence of the audience before bursting into applause at the conclusion bespoke the integrity of the conception.

Mme. Ranzow, well remembered here for her delineation of some of the Wagnerian contralto parts at the Metropolitan Opera House several years ago, has not grown more expert in the projection of her voice, but she sang with sincerity and, in certain measures which did not lie too high for her, with convincing expressiveness. Mr. Althouse, too, when he was able to encompass his lines without effort, sang earnestly and understandingly.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

FEB 1 3 1937

Boston Symphony Plays Mahler Work

Owing to the prior claim of the Philharmonic on Carnegie Hall for Thursday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its February concert last night. The program consisted of Mozart's C major symphony (Koechel 338) and Gustave Mahler's symphony, with vocal solos entitled "Das Lied von der Erde." The singers were Paul Althouse, tenor, and Maria Ranzow, contralto. There was a large audience, which diminished slightly during the performance of the Mahler work.

This ambitious creation is brought forward from time to time to the satisfaction of that considerable number of music lovers who rank Mahler with the important composers of the nineteenth century. The work had its last previous presentation at a concert of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society on December 20, 1934, Bruno Walter conducting. The singers were Maria Olzschewska and Frederick Jaegel.

There was a devotional attitude last evening in the revelation of this, Mahler's last large utterance. Koussevitzky and the orchestra imparted to the music all that intelligent and sympathetic conducting and excellent playing could bring to it, and its best pages were published with complete disclosure of their beauty. But the prolixity of the composition and its extended periods of aridity could not be disguised. Miss Ranzow and Mr. Althouse gave themselves unreservedly, but the audience showed more pleasure after the lovely and admirably played Mozart symphony than at any interval in the solemn proclamations of Mahler.

The customary afternoon concert of the Bostonians today repeats the "Song of the Earth" and precedes it with a different symphony of Mozart.

NEW YORK TO BOSTON

For the first time in the fifty years it has visited New York, the Boston Symphony orchestra gave a special concert in Carnegie hall Wednesday night for its pension fund. In this "extremely brilliant concert" —the adjectives are those of Olin Downes of the Times—Jascha Heifetz joined with the orchestra in playing Mendelssohn's violin concerto. Their performance was received with cheers by the large audience, which included many standees. The concluding work was Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony, a fittingly emotional climax to what must have been a festive occasion.

The New York critics' opinion of Dr. Koussevitzky's band was never higher and its popularity with the public never larger than it is today. As a consequence, the management felt justified in inviting attendance at this benefit concert. The response was most friendly and generous. We in Boston have come to depend on New York for our annual brief season of opera. It is gratifying to believe that New York now regards the visits of our orchestra in the same spirit.

CONCERTS THIS WEEK

Symphony Hall

JASCHA HEIFETZ, the great violinist, at 3:30 today, accompanied by Emanuel Bay. The program:

Mozart: Allegro from Divertimento in D (transcribed by Heifetz); Beethoven: Sonata, Op 12, No. 3: Bach: Sonata in C major for violin alone; Wieniawski: Concerto in D minor; Transcriptions by Heifetz—Debussy: "L'Apres midi d'un Faune"; Bax: "Mediterranean"; Albeniz: "El Puerto"; Castelnuovo-Tedesco: "Sea Murmurs"; Halffter: "Danza de la Gitana."

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr Serge Koussevitzky conductor, at 2:30 Friday and 8:15 Saturday. Sixteenth program. The 100th anniversary of the death of the Russian poet, Alexander Pushkin, will be observed at these concerts by inclusion in the second half of the program of Russian music whose literary and imaginative basis came from the work of Pushkin. These pieces will be the instrumental suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan," the introduction and march from the same composer's last opera, "Le Coq d'Or"; Tatiana's "Letter Scene" from the opera "Eugen Oniegin" of Tchaikovsky, to be sung by Olga Averino, soprano. The program will begin with Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

2/14/37

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

FEB 13 1937

Recorded Music

Koussevitzky's Tschaikowsky

MUSICIANS are in the habit of according Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony a leading place as authoritative exponents of classical works, and the new recording of their performance of Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony, included in the Victor release for February, will explain at once why this is so. The line is pliant but immensely firm and direct; the delivery is admirably shaded but of intense voltage. The essence of what people recurrently long for in turning to the dramatic Russian drenches these nine surfaces, supplemented by a tenth, with a delightful performance of the waltz from Tchaikowsky's serenade for strings.

Jascha Heifetz finds his equal in his accompanist, Emanuel Bay, in a distinguished recording of the exquisite Faure sonata for violin and piano. Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia orchestra give a suitably virile performance of a Handel overture which Mr. Stokowski has "freely transcribed." George Copeland plays with delicate insight a sarabande and a minuet of Debussy, for piano.

Kirsten Flagstad's cool perfection in heroic song is further immortalized this month in two master songs of Grieg, "A Dream" and a version of "I Love You," which suggests that the honeymoon was years ago. The real vocal dynamite lies in Marian Anderson's singing of "Go Down Moses" and "My Soul's Been Anchored in the Lord."

Eugene Ormandy and the Minneapolis Symphony give a pell-mell performance of Zador's interestingly orchestrated Hungarian Caprice. The Villa Lobos "Choros No. 7" is skillfully performed by the striking Victor Brazilian orchestra, led by the composer; is this work an offshoot of jazz or an obscure descendant of "Sacre de du Printemps?" It is fascinating as either and lovers of either will snatch it from the counters.

Ten standard operatic arias, from Verdi to Wagner, have been assembled in an album as sung by Lehmann, Bori, Pons, Jepson, Melchior, Martinelli, Crooks, Tibbett and Thomas; a popular assortment.

Why has Victor issued an album of eleven Bach transcriptions? The arrangements are the work of Jeanne Behrend and Alexander Kelberine, who play them well. And the transcriptions themselves, while marked by an absence of ingenuity, are straightforward and faithful, and are useful for students. But the virtue of a transcription is that it brings close something otherwise inaccessible, and yet that is precisely the virtue of the phonograph itself, and unless the transcriptions are remarkable for expanding the resources of the instrument to which it is translated, the phonograph record ought surely bring the original.

Helen Jepson sings the aria and lullaby from Hageman's new "Caponsacchi," produced for the first time in America last Thursday at the Metropolitan. Arthur Fielder conducts the Boston Pops orchestra in Suppe's "Poet and Peasant" overture.

Herald Feb 14/37

THURSDAY—The 6th Cambridge concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, will be given in Sanders Theater at 8 P. M. The program has been arranged in commemoration of the centenary of the death of the Russian poet, Pushkin. Professor Sorokin will speak briefly at this concert. The program is as follows: Glinka's Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla"; Tchaikovsky's Letter Scene from "Eugene Onegin"; Rimsky-Korsakov's Introduction and March from "Le Coq d'Or"; Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B minor, "Pathetic." Olga Averino, soprano, will be the soloist.

FRIDAY—The 16th regular concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, will be given in Symphony hall at 2:30 P. M. Olga Averino will be the soloist, and the program will be somewhat similar to that on Thursday in Cambridge. Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 in B flat major will be played instead of the Pathetic Symphony, and Rimsky-Korsakov's suite from "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan" will be substituted for Glinka's overture.

SATURDAY—Wallace Goodrich, head of the New England Conservatory, will lecture on Wagner's "Das Rheingold" and "Die Walkuere" in Jordan hall at 3 P. M. He will have the assistance of the conservatory orchestra . . . Repetition of Friday's symphony concert in Symphony hall at 8:15 P. M.

MONDAY, Feb. 22—The fifth concert in the Monday series by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, will be given in Symphony hall at 8:15 P. M. Harold Bauer, celebrated pianist, will be the soloist on this occasion. No program has been received.

TUESDAY, Feb. 23—

Trav Feb. 13/37

Pushkin Honored at Symphony

The hundredth anniversary of the death of Alexander Pushkin will be observed at the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The Symphony concert in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, next Thursday evening will likewise be dedicated in part to Pushkin's memory, and the performance will be prefaced by remarks by Professor Sorokin of the University.

Serge Koussevitzky will include three numbers on the program for Friday and Saturday from operas inspired by Pushkin's poems. They will be the Suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Fairy Tale of Tsar Sultan," including the little intermezzo, "The Flight of the Bumble-Bee." There will also be excerpts from Rimsky-Korsakov's last opera, "The Golden Cock," based upon one of Pushkin's fairy tales in rhyme. The introduction to the opera, and the march from the final act will be played. Olga Averino, soprano, will appear with the orchestra in Tatiana's "Letter Scene" from Tchaikovsky's opera "Eugen Onegin," based upon Pushkin's romantic novel in verse. The program will be opened with a performance of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

At the Cambridge concert, the excerpts from the "Golden Cock," and the "Letter Scene" from "Eugen Onegin" with Mme. Averino as soloist, will also be included on the program, together with the Overture to Glinka's "Russlan and Ludmilla" (after Pushkin). Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" Symphony will complete an all Russian program.

The fifth concert of the Monday evening series will be given in Symphony Hall on Feb. 22. Harold Bauer will be the soloist.

PUSHKIN HONORED AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

The 100th anniversary of the death of Alexander Pushkin has called general attention to the genius of the Russian poet and will be especially observed at the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The Symphony concert in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, next Thursday evening will likewise be dedicated in part to Pushkin's memory, and the performance will be prefaced by remarks by Prof. Sorokin of the University.

Serge Koussevitzky will include three numbers on the program for Friday and Saturday from operas which have been inspired by Pushkin's poems. They will be the Suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan," including the little intermezzo, "The Flight of the Bumble-Bee," in which the folk tale reaches its climax. There will also be excerpts from Rimsky-Korsakov's last opera, "The Golden Cock," which was likewise based upon one of Pushkin's fairy tales in rhyme. The introduction to the opera and the March from the final act will be played. Olga Averino, the noted soprano, will appear with the orchestra in Tatiana's "Letter Scene" from Tchaikovsky's opera, "Eugene Oniegin," based upon Pushkin's romantic novel in verse. The program will be opened with a performance of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN

FEB 13 1937

Ormandy's Offeirngs

THE program which Eugene Ormandy has devised for the Philadelphia Orchestra in its Memorial Hall concert of Feb. 23 has been received. Its details follow:

Organ Prelude and Fugue, F minor:
Chorale—"Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" .... J. S. Bach
(Transcribed for orchestra by Lucien Cailliet.)
Symphony No. 3, E-flat ("Eroica") .... Beethoven
Pictures at an Exhibition .... Moussorgsky
(Transcribed for orchestra by Lucien Cailliet.)

* * *

THE Symphony itself, one of the most compelling of the indispensable Nine, needs no introduction. Its epic utterances, once heard, are rooted in the memory, where they bear fresh fruit at every fresh hearing.

The transcriptions which make up the rest of the program can do with prefatory paragraphs. Mr. Cailliet, the transcriber, is a clarinetist in the ranks of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Some of the arrangements from the works of Sebastian Bach which have become familiar in the performances of this orchestra, and in its records and broadcasts, are from his pen. Those promised on this program are comparatively new.

The organ prelude and fugue in F-minor dates from the late Wiemar period, when the composer was court organist and had few duties but to write and play music for that instrument. The prelude is simply and soundly built, the fugue a solemn one which has its cumulative excitements. The chorale, "Jesu, meiner Freuden Freude," is the final movement of the cantata "Herz und Mund und That." It is familiar to many in the piano version made by Myra Hess, but its original form for chorus, oboe and string orchestra is rarely to be heard.

Moussorgsky's suite of little pieces were originally for piano. A one-man show by the composer's painter-friend, Victor Hartmann, is in progress. An unmistakably Russian tune takes us into the gallery. We pause before one picture after another—children at play, hens and chickens, two querulous Jews in a Ghetto, an ox-cart groaning along a country road, the gates of Kiev—and the music describes them for us. A touch of the introductory promenade tune carries us from one painting to the next. The work was orchestrated by Maurice Ravel at the instance of Serge Koussevitzky; Mr. Cailliet says he has gone only to Moussorgsky's score for his new version.

The Philadelphians' concert is the second of the two concerts of the season sponsored by the Symphony Club of Central Ohio. Reservations may be made with Helen Alcorn, 34 Linwood-av, FAirfax 1535.

* * *

Three Spares

FOUR pianos go along when Sergei Rachmaninoff starts on one of his lengthy American tours. This does not mean that all four are sent to every city. They are kept in different sections of the country so that when the pianist has to make a long jump between cities, there will be no danger of his being without the right kind of a piano.

William Hupfer, a tuner, always travels with him. His duties are to check up on the piano before every concert. "It's mostly the weather that affects the pitch, but one of those heavy programs can do a lot of damage, too," he explains.

Between times, the piano tuner reads detective stories, goes to movies and sleeps. At every concert he sits in the wings. Mr. Hupfer tells an amusing story of how once while they were riding to the concert hall in Toronto, Rachmaninoff suddenly turned to him and xclaimd:

"God Save the King."

Not knowing just what to make of this solicitous exclamation, he kept still, but Rachmaninoff continued:

"Tell me how the tune goes. I had forgotten it must always be played here at the beginning of a concert, and I cannot remember how it goes."

Then Mr. Hupfer understood. The boss needed prompting on the tune "God Save the King." So while they were riding along, he whistled it. Mr. Rachmaninoff whistled it. They whistled it together. And by the time they reached the concert hall the pianist was prepared to play it.

Rachmaninoff plays at Memorial Hall Feb. 26 for the Civic Concerts. Tickets are at Heaton's.

* * *

Globe Feb 14/37

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Pushkin, Faure, and B. Zighera

Three quite different topics are here gathered under one headline for Sabbath morning rumination—the Russian poet, Pushkin; Gabriel Faure, one of France's most gracious and, locally, least known composers, and Mr Bernard Zighera, whose enterprise has given Boston concert-goers an unusual and a gratifying series of concerts by chamber orchestra this year.

Appropriate observation of musical anniversaries has been a praiseworthy aspect of Dr Serge Koussevitzky's regime as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This present week he and the gentlemen of the orchestra will do honor to the memory not of a musician but of a poet whose work inspired many a tonal artist—Alexander Pushkin.

It is therefore to the point to set forth a brief outline of Pushkin's crowded if short life. He was born in Moscow June 6, 1799, of we are indeed blessed; most of the great concert artists come our way periodically, and there is no dearth of lesser ones. But we are not treated from season to season with so many novel events as, for example, New York may boast. Concerts of music for chamber orchestra are rare in Boston.

For this reason the three subscription programs conducted by Bernard Zighera have been welcome, particularly so because they drew from old and new music, omitting neither Mozart nor Hindemith. Not all that was heard was rewarding, but the important fact remains that it was heard. And that is something to gladden the heart.

Mr Zighera is announced to be planning another series for next season. In this project he deserves the full support of concert-goers. This writer hopes devoutly to find all seats taken when Mr Zighera, a young man with decided latent gifts for conducting, again mounts the stand.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 15 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RECEIVE ESTATE

Tanglewood Is Offered by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Mrs. Mary Tappan for Berkshire Fete

ONCE HAWTHORNE'S HOME

Trustees of Festival to Confer Today With Directors of Orchestra on Gift

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Feb. 14.—Historic Tanglewood on the north shore of Mahkeenac Lake has been offered as a gift by its owners, Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Boston, to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for Summer headquarters and for development by the Berkshire Music Festival Corporation.

Trustees of the festival, including Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and Mrs. Carlos M. De Heredia, vice president, will have a conference with Boston Symphony directors in the Boston office of the president, Bentley Wirt Warren, tomorrow to consider the offer of Mrs. Brooks and also one made by the owners of the Daniel R. Hanna estate, who will give the orchestra several acres on the west shore of the lake. Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller of Cleveland is a leading figure in the Hanna property ownership.

Under a five-year financing plan the festival trustees propose to raise $25,000 this season for construction of a permanent music shed, where concerts will be given in August. For two years the festival was held on the Hanna farm and last year at Holmwood, the Lenox estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Miss Tappan is the daughter of William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston banker and merchant, who in 1849 created the estates which now comprise 210 acres. The house, completed in 1865, and its ornate garden surrounded by a California privet and hemlock hedge, overlook the lake.

From 1851 to 1853 Nathaniel Hawthorne, author of "Tanglewood Tales," from which the place was named, lived in a little red cottage that was burned June 22, 1890.

The festival management has had an architect inspect the property, where thirty years ago gymkhana was introduced to Lenox by Sir Mortimer Durand, British Ambassador at Washington. On the estate are giant hemlocks, equaled in size only by the primeval forest at Highwood, the adjoining Bullard estate.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

FEB 7 - 1937

NOTED VIOLINIST DIES

NEW YORK, Feb. 6 (AP)—Friends in New York today received a telegram announcing the death in Rome, Italy, of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer who was associated for many years with the Boston Symphony orchestra and the ~~Cincinnati~~ Conservatory of Music. Death occurred today and was due to a heart attack.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

FEB 15 1937

Boston Symphony Gets Offer of Brooks Estate

For Summer Headquarters and Berkshire Concerts

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Feb. 14.—Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass., has offered her 210-acre estate, Tanglewood, on the north shore of Mahkeenac Lake at Stockbridge, as a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be used as its summer headquarters and for the Berkshire festival concerts. The festival corporation also has received an offer of a gift of several acres of the Daniel R. Hanna farm, on the west shore of the lake, of which Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller, of Cleveland, is one of the owners.

The festival trustees, including Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, vice-president, will meet with the orchestra directors tomorrow at the Boston office of the president, Mr. Bentley Wirt Warren, to decide which offer to accept and to make plans for the summer.

It is planned to have six concerts extending over ten days or two weeks in August. The festival organization will be asked to build a permanent music structure under a five-year plan of financing, with $25,000 to be raised this year. The festival was held for two years at the Hanna farm and last August at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood.

Mrs. Brooks is the former Miss Rosamond Sturgis Dixey. Her mother, now deceased, was Ellen Sturgis Tappan, and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, is now living at Brookline. Her father, William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston banker and merchant, acquired the Tanglewood land in 1849.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

FEB 15 1937

Boston Symphony Repeats Mahler Work

A repetition of Gustav Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" occupied the major portion of the concert given in Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The soloists were again Maria Ranzow, contralto, and Paul Althouse, tenor.

As preface to Mahler's ambitious score Mr. Koussevitzky presented the D major symphony of Mozart (Koechel No. 504), known as the "Prague," and also distinguished from others of this composer by its lack of a minuet. It is a work in which extraordinary high spirits and magnificent artistry are blended to a symphonic total exceeded by Mozart only in his last three creations in this form, which followed two years later. Particularly in the development section of the first movement and the manipulation of the musical materials of the finale, it carries the symphonic form forward in a great stride toward his ultimate achievements. Mr. Koussevitzky's performance was remarkably poised and forthright, the symmetry of the music beautifully presented The tonal resources of this superb band gave the listener a new conception of Mozart's skill as a colorist. There have been larger audiences at other concerts of this series.

202

RETURN OF TOSCANINI

N.Y. Times Feb. 14/37

His Engagement for Series of Radio Concerts—Its National Importance

By OLIN DOWNES

THE sudden and dramatic announcement, recently made, of the engagement of Arturo Toscanini to conduct concerts by the orchestra of the National Broadcasting Company next season is significant of many things, but of none more than the potency of the radio as a factor in modern musical life.

It is not a long-established symphony orchestra which secures the services of one of the greatest conductors the world has known, but, after all other agencies had failed, a broadcasting company. This company places its immense financial and artistic resources at the conductor's disposition. It gives him carte blanche to take any measures necessary to achieve the best symphonic performances in his power. His interpretations, moreover, will be heard free of any advertising consideration, for the benefit of the great public of the air. This has been done in spite of the fact that the contract arranged by emissary and radiophone with Mr. Toscanini was one which permitted the sponsoring of the performances by advertising interests of the RCA or its subsidiary, the Victor Company. But the concerts directed by the Italian master will be given on a purely artistic basis.

* * *

Some music lovers have expressed apprehension of the effect that Toscanini's presence would have on the fortunes next season of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, committed for the next three years to the leadership of the gifted Mr. Barbirolli. These apprehensions are hardly justified, nor should the motives behind Mr. Toscanini's engagement be misunderstood.

It will be remembered that the first offer made him was in the form of an invitation to tour America, after the end of the Philharmonic-Symphony Winter season, with that orchestra, and, also with that orchestra, to make Toscanini-Philharmonic-Symphony records. This was the same kind of an invitation as that which had been extended previously to Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra, and accepted by them. The proposal did not strike Mr. Toscanini favorably. There may also have been contractual conditions which made its acceptance impossible by the Philharmonic-Symphony. But it was only after this invitation had been declined that another offer was made to Mr. Toscanini, which he promptly accepted.

There is no disposition on the part of Mr. Sarnoff, whose personal initiative was responsible for the Toscanini engagement, to institute competition or rivalry in the concert field with the performances of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra. The Toscanini performances will not be given in a concert hall, but in the studios of the NBC. Care will be taken to arrange hours with special consideration for the Philharmonic-Symphony schedules. Competition "on the air" there will be—healthy and productive competition, which should redound to the benefit not only of radio audiences but of the great American orchestral institutions, through the interest in symphonic music which good radio performances tend to stimulate. Competition on the ground, so to speak, would be a different matter.

The nearest competitors to the Philharmonic-Symphony are not the broadcast concerts but those given in New York by the Boston and Philadelphia Orchestras. This competition has been going on for many years. Up to the present time the Philharmonic-Symphony has not lost ground because of it. What the future will bring depends partly upon John Barbirolli and the manner in which his interpretations compare, through the seasons, with those of the great visiting orchestras and certain distinguished leaders. But no one conductor, however distinguished, makes the fortunes of the Philharmonic-Symphony.

* * *

The Philharmonic-Symphony is the oldest organization of its kind in America. It has as one of its assets a long history of brilliant achievements and as another, which is perhaps of greater immediate importance, the artistic standards and traditions which long periods of training in symphonic performance have created. Results such as these are not gained in a day by any orchestra whatsoever. Individual talents have been welded together in common service. These men have acquired a knowledge and understanding of symphonic masterpieces which is of the highest value in performance.

The orchestra is not a single organization that has become secure and complacent in its position with the usages of years. It is the sum of two great orchestras, the New York Symphony and the Philharmonic, which were rivals for long before they decided to merge their resources and, with the backing of the very generous and idealistic citizens who had no other purpose than public service in their minds, to give New York the best symphonic music. That objective, often with substantial personal sacrifices, has been attained. The public would not be turned from offerings such as these by radio performances, however admirable, while in its own field the Philharmonic-Symphony has long since proved that it can hold its ground. It does not face rivalry, nor was rivalry intended in the Toscanini concerts.

A further element in the situation, as between radio concerts and performances given in a concert hall, is the fact that a transmitted performance never equals the effect of the one at which the hearer is personally present. The blessings of radio transmission, the pleasure and benefit resulting therefrom to people distant from the place where the music is actually sounded, are incalculable. But in bad weather "static" interferes with reception, and in the best of weather the best transmission does not equal the effect in the concert hall. The radio performance makes people eager to hear and see the real thing, and, if they have not the real thing, as for example a symphony orchestra or operatic organization, to create one. Thus radio is a "feeder" for performances such as those of the Philharmonic-Symphony or the Metropolitan Opera Association. Some concert managers say differently, but surely the increased public interest in good music and the public support of opera and symphony noted today are due in part to the constructive effects of broadcasting.

The more the quality of this broadcasting can be improved and the more the impeccable finish and the profound musicianship of such performances as Toscanini's can be established as a model of artistic rectitude, the better for music and the better for the national appreciation of the art. Thanks as well as congratulations are due those who have secured the services of Mr. Toscanini for the nation. He will institute, in the radio field, the ideals of musical performances to which he contributed so greatly in other places. The orchestra of a leading broadcasting company will be developed by a great master, which will be for the good of all concerned. The competition between broadcasting systems thus stimulated should have a beneficial and lasting effect upon ideals and standards of performance.

If, as a sort of by-product, these arrangements serve to remind the directorate of the Philharmonic-Symphony that it may not be the wisest course to engage for three seasons a young and relatively untried conductor and entrust the fortunes of the orchestra wholly to his guidance for that period, nothing will be lost by that. One thing is certain: the brilliant tactics which secured Mr. Toscanini exclusively for a series of radio concerts and for recordings of his performances put broadcast music on a different level from what it has known before, and compels the recognition, whether it is willing or not, of the potency of radio as a force in the nation's musical development.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

FEB 11 1937

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will offer a full-hour concert from the Brooklyn Academy of Music, Brooklyn, N. Y., at 8.30 p. m. over WBZA. Koussevitzky has programmed Foote's Suite in E Major, Opus 63, for String Orchestra, to open the concert.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

FEB 14 1937

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

VICTOR has issued the fourth symphony of Tchaikovsky played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The intrinsic value of Tchaikovsky's music is still the subject of much discussion pro and con, although apart from such staunch admirers as his countryman Igor Stravinsky, he has fewer partisans among musicians than among laymen. Those who find pleasure in listening to the fourth symphony will therefore not be disturbed by the fact that Taneieff contemptuously dismissed it as "ballet music." Mr. Koussevitzky's interpretation is exemplary. It is free from those exaggerations of pacing and dynamics which mar the conceptions of so many conductors and yet is sufficiently elastic to give a veracious account of the music's content. From the mechanical aspect the records are excellent and the orchestra's tonal qualities remain unsurpassed.

The first sonata, for violin and piano, of Gabriel Faure in A major, Op. 13, has been recorded by Jascha Heifetz and Emanuel Bay. Considering the date of its composition, 1876, this sonata is a work of remarkable originality and those who find in its final movement moments which recall the Franck sonata may be surprised to learn that Faure penned his creation ten years before the Belgian master conceived his masterpiece. While not a composition of profound import, this sonata of Faure's is refreshingly melodious music, and this recorded version is in every way worth while.

The album of transcriptions for two pianos of various compositions of Bach by Alexander Kelberine and performed by the latter and Jeanne Behrend is not one of Victor's most compelling releases. Aside from the questionable musical value of these arrangements, which, excepting the prelude in E major from the third suite for unaccompanied violin, sound ineffectual on the discs, the performances leave much to be desired. Especially unsatisfactory are the interpretations of the choral preludes, "Herzlich thut mich verlangen," "Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten," "Ich ruf zu Dir, Herr," "Aus der Tiefe rufe ich," "Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland," the duet from Cantata No. 10, "Er denkt der Barmherzigkeit," the choral from Cantata No. 22, "Ertödt uns durch dein Güte." In all of these too great emphasis is laid on the melodic contours and the middle voices and basses are subjugated to such an extent that Bach's harmonies emerge divested of their poignancy.

Ten arias from "Carmen," "Barbiere di Siviglia," "Rigoletto," "Manon," "Louise," "Traviata," "Boheme" and "Aida" and two excerpts from "Walküre," sung by Lawrence Tibbett, Lily Pons, Richard Crooks, Helen Jepson, John Charles Thomas, Lucrezia Bori, Giovanni Martinelli, Lotte Lehmann and Lauritz Melchior, all of which had been previously available in recorded form either singly or, in the case of the Wagner disks, have been taken from the complete recording of the first act of "Walküre," may now be procured in an album labeled "Stars of the Metropolitan." Further comment is superfluous.

Kirsten Flagstad sings Grieg's "Ich liebe dich" and "Ein Traum" in inimitable fashion to accompaniments by Edwin McArthur. Leopold Stokowski makes an unnecessary attempt to bring Handel up to date by rescoring it for a modern orchestra. Ideas such as Handel's do not require tonal inflation but are sufficiently impressive to hold their own in the form originally given them. The Philadelphia Orchestra, of course, is always good to hear, and the record is, technically viewed, a fine one.

Helen Jepson sings the aria "This Very Vivid Morn" and the Lullaby from Hageman's "Caponsachhi" in capable fashion.

George Copeland plays two of Debussy's early piano pieces, the minuet from the "Suite Bergamasque," wrongly labeled as being from the "Petite Suite," and the Sarabande from "Pour le Piano" with his customary understanding of the French master's idiom, and there is an effective recording of Villa Lobos's attractive Chores No. 7 by the Victor Brazilian Orchestra under the composer's direction.

Monitor Feb. 15/37

Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, Jascha Heifetz gave a concert of music for the violin in original versions and in transcriptions made by the artist. Emanuel Bay was the efficient pianoforte accompanist, and the program was as follows: Mozart, Allegro from a Divertimento in D major (transcription); Beethoven, Sonata No. 3 in E flat; Bach, Sonata in C major for violin alone; Wieniawski, Concerto in D minor, and the following in transcription: Debussy, "L'Après-midi d'un Faune"; Bax, "Mediterranean"; Albeniz, "El Puerto"; Castelnuovo-Tedesco, "Sea-murmurs," and Halffter, "Danza de la Gitana."

It was a wretched day for strings, which may have accounted in part for occasional lapse from the suavity of tone which we have come to associate with Mr. Heifetz. One may commend the artist for his attempt to present an unhackneyed list of items without entirely subscribing to his choice of works. The Mozart transcription was an attempt in the right direction and proved agreeable listening. The more modern composers were ably presented, but the effort involved was scarcely in proper ratio to the worth of the material as concert pieces. The concerto was played with the usual disarming ease which Mr. Heifetz displays in his presentation of this melodious war-horse, and in the Beethoven both Mr. Heifetz and his accompanst shared equally the honors of an excellent performance.

It was the Bach, however, which won our unrestrained admiration, for it was here that the violinist completely revealed his mastery of his instrument, technically. Mr. Heifetz gave warmth to its measures without becoming either self-conscious or sentimental, and the Fuga was the high point of his achievement for the afternoon. Seldom is it given any artist to play this grilling movement with the perfection of detail which emerged under the fingers of Mr. Heifetz. Fugal subjects and answers were introduced with amazing clarity, and the entire structural outline of the movement was discernible throughout the performance, yet in presenting it the violinist was careful to avoid the pedantic, with a resultant flexibility, which roused the audience to a point of literally stopping his performance of the sonata at the conclusion of the fugue. There was the usual supplementary concert which Heifetz enthusiasts always demand.

G. M. S.

NEW YORK MIRROR

FEB 14 1937

Music

By JULIAN SEAMAN

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting; Mme. Maria Ranzow, contralto; Mr. Paul Althouse, tenor, soloists; Carnegie Hall Friday evening, yesterday afternoon.

JOINT PROGRAM

Symphony No. 34 in C (Koechel 338); Symphony in D (Koechel No. 504), Mozart; "The Song of the Earth," for tenor, contralto and orchestra, Gustav Mahler.

Music of transcendant beauty, haunting and poignant, yet holding within its fragile strands all of that perfumed ritual of poetry which upheld the civilization of the ancient Chinese has come to us once more by way of the Boston orchestra.

This work was revived two years ago by Mr. Bruno Walter and the Philharmonic, with Mme. Maria Olszewska and Mr. Frederick Jagel, both of the Metropolitan then, as soloists.

One had every reason to praise the devoted and luminous reading of Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra. But alas! Mme. Ranzow, despite an authoritative style and undoubted sincerity, had not learned the art of agreeable tone since her brief advent here with the Metropolitan during the Rosenstock regime.

Both the Mozart symphonies enjoyed the utmost care and felicity in performance; also, the surpassing richness and sonority of the Boston strings.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

FEB 14 1937

Philharmonic in 4th Concert

Plays in Young People's Series at Carnegie Hall

The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra gave its fourth concert in its Young People's Series in Carnegie Hall yesterday morning under the direction of Ernest Schelling. The program consisted exclusively of Mediterranean music and subsumed the "Navarra" of Albeniz, an intermezzo by Granados, the Ritual Fire Dance from De Falla's "Amor Brujo," Fuleihan's Mediterranean suite, Blanchet's "Soir de Ramadan" and the march from Verdi's "Aida."

In the afternoon, on the same platform, the Boston Symphony Orchestra repeated the program of the preceding evening, comprising Mozart's symphony in C major (K. 338) and Mahler's "Lied von der Erde," with Maria Ranzow, contralto, and Paul Althouse, tenor, as soloists.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

FEB 14 1937

GIESE BASS VIOL RECITAL

Waldemar Giese will give a bass violin recital on Thursday evening in the New Century auditorium, 124 S. 12th st. Maurice B. Katz will be at the piano. Sascha Jacobinoff will be the assisting artist in Giovanni Bottesini's "Grand Duo Concerto" for Violin and Bass.

Mr. Giese will be heard in his own arrangements of Goedecke's Improvisation; an Air by Johann Mattheson, Serge Koussevitzky's "Chanson Triste," a Legende by an unknown composer, Guiseppe Marangoni's "Elegie" and Reinhold Gliere's Tarantella.

203

ZIMBLER STRING GROUP YOU HEAR OVER WNAC

Globe — Feb. 14/37

Inaugurated Air Series in 1935; All Are Members of Boston Symphony

Left to Right—Manuel Zung, Alfred Krips and Hans Werner. Seated—Josef Zimbler.

Lovers of the sweet, soft rhythm of the waltz and the minuet are indeed fortunate to be able to enjoy the chamber music programs of the Zimbler String Quartet, an organization made up entirely of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which are broadcast over WNAC and associated stations every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, from 1:45 to 2 p m.

The quartet is under the direction of Josef Zimbler, 'cellist of the group and son of that famed Bohemian conductor and composer, Sigmund Zimbler, who is sometimes called the "Sousa" of Czechoslovakia. Other members of the group, well known throughout New England music circles are Alfred Krips, 1st violinist and former member of the Berlin State Opera; Manuel Zung, 2d violinist, a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, and Hans Werner, viola, a student of the Vienna Conservatory.

Alfred Krips, a native of Germany, was born in Berlin and studied under the well-known Prof Willy Hess of the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin and then became first violinist of the famous Royal Opera Orchestra and continued in that position for 12 years. He has been a member of the Boston Symphony since 1934.

Manuel Zung was born in Russia and came to the United States when only 5 years old, where he studied with Prof Gruenberg at the New England Conservatory. Hans Werner, a Czech by birth, he received his musical education in Vienna, where he studied under Prof Grun, and was later engaged by Dr Muck to join the Boston Symphony. For two years he was absent from the orchestra, during which time he played chamber music programs with Jacobsen, Jacques Gordon and others.

Josef Zimbler, himself, was born in Pilsen, Czechoslovakia, and studied the violin at first under his father. Young Zimbler, however, soon showed preference for the 'cello and, after two years of study with a local teacher, was sent to the Conservatory at Prague, where he came under the tutelage of Prof Talich. He appeared in public at the age of 16 with various orchestral organizations, as well as in recital, and at one time appeared before the Austrian royalty.

After the Great War Mr Zimbler continued his studies in Berlin and in 1923 appeared in joint recital with the famous Italian violinist, Cesare Barison, at Trieste, Italy. After three years of concert work in Italy his desire to see America brought him to the United States in 1927, where he appeared in New York, Boston, and throughout New England with the greatest success. For three years he was solo violinist with the People's Symphony Orchestra and a few years later joined the 'cello section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, during which time he organized the present string quartet. In December of 1935 the "Zimbler String Quartet" inaugurated the present series of programs over the Yankee Network.

Globe

MUSIC

[illegible]

SYMPHONY HALL

Jascha Heifetz

The audience gathered in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon enjoyed one of those rewarding experiences of listening to an artist-virtuoso discourse music at his greatest. Just to write or speak the name of Jascha Heifetz immediately conjures a vision or a memory of the violinist whose technical accomplishments are absolute and whose gifts of interpretation tempt effusive description.

The Weather Man, so contrary these months past, evidently did his best to forestall large attendance, and in part he must have succeeded. Symphony Hall certainly ought to have been better filled than it was.

Although the flowing melody and the brilliant technical feats of the Wieniawski D minor Concerto aroused most applause, the high point of the recital was Mr Heifetz' magnificent performance of a Bach sonata for unaccompanied violin.

Perhaps there is no music quite so difficult as that of Bach for the solo instrument. No doubt the first consideration is the staggering virtuosity requisite in mere playing of all the notes. Yet the qualities of intellectual perception demanded are of even more importance, so far as an audience is concerned. Mr Heifetz brought out both in positively dazzling manner. It really seems ungrateful to suggest that his bowing of the chords in the fugue was a little too robust, and that his initial entrance in the last movement of the Concerto was not exactly on pitch. Here, however, the weather may again have intruded, for warm, humid air is proverbially bad for stringed instruments.

The program began with Mr Heifetz' transcription of a fast movement from a Mozart divertimento, and continued with the E-flat Sonata, Op 12, No. 3, by Beethoven. They both were superbly done. The Sonata further benefited by the admirable piano playing of Emanuel Bay, Mr Heifetz' accompanist.

The last group consisted entirely of reductions by Mr Heifetz of miscellaneous pieces: The "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," by Debussy; the "Mediterranean" of Arnold Bax; Albeniz' "El Puerto"; "Sea-Murmurs," by the Italian Castelnuovo-Tedesco, and Halffter's "Danza de la Gitana."

C. W. D.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
FEB 7 - 1937

Thursday, KWK will broadcast a concert at 7 p. m. by the symphony orchestra of WOR, Newark, N. J., and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play Brahms Third Symphony at 7:30 p. m. on the WJZ network.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
FEB 14 1937

BOSTONIANS OFFER MOZART SYMPHONY

D Major Performed at Carnegie Hall Under Direction of Serge Koussevitzky

MAHLER LIED REPEATED

As at Previous Hearing, Soloists Are Maria Ranzow and Paul Althouse

As at its concert of the previous night in the same surroundings, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's program performed at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, under Serge Koussevitzky, comprised Mahler's "Lied von der Erde" prefaced by a Mozart symphony. This time, instead of the opus in C major of 1780, the Mozart offering was the far weightier and more important symphony in D major, known as the "Prague," which ranks with the three last symphonies of the master as the greatest of the genre composed during the eighteenth century.

The D major symphony was composed six years after the C major, and in the interim Mozart's art had grown vastly in expressive power and subjectivity. The genial, carefree nature of the earlier works largely disappeared, to be superseded by a new emotional tenseness and introspective quality, as the composer's pessimistic outlook on life increased. Besides this new element, the "Prague" symphony has many other characteristics of special interest. It is the most symmetrical in construction of any of Mozart's works of the kind, boasts no minuet and looks back to the "Marriage of Figaro" and forward to the later operatic masterpieces of the composer in much of its thematic material.

As the program notes explained, commenators have seen a resemblance between the first theme of the opening allegro and that of the overture to "Don Giovanni." What inexplicably seems to have escaped attention, however, is the fact that the third motive of the symphony's elaborate chief theme stems practically note for note from the famous melody Mozart borrowed from Clementi's sonata in B-flat and incorporated in the overture to "The Magic Flute." Nor does it seem to have been noticed that an oft repeated phrase in the second melody of the andante was a reminiscence of the "Non lo so far" phrase of Zerlina's "Vedrai carino" aria in "Don Giovanni," or that Beethoven undoubtedly had the second subject of the first allegro in mind when penning the finale of his piano sonata in D minor.

Mr. Koussevitzky's performance of this masterpiece was straightforward, filled with tonal glory and of the utmost technical finish. It was an interpretation which was anything but a "reading," in which the notes of the score spoke for themselves in a purely objective manner. It was amazing how much beauty the symphony was possible of summoning forth under this treatment. Naturally, the emphasis on the more tender and poignant implications of the music was lessened in this conception of the work, but the whole took on a Beethoven-like breadth, nobility and brilliance, instead, that gave it a new sort of significance.

After the symphony, Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" was repeated, with Maria Ranzow and Paul Althouse again as soloists. Since the performance of this was reviewed after its previous presentation the day before, further comment may be dispensed with here.

N. S.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
FEB 16 1937

ORCHESTRA GETS ESTATE.

By the United Press.

BOSTON, Feb. 16.—Tanglewood, beautiful 210-acre estate at Lenox and Stockbridge, where Nathaniel Hawthorne penned some of his classics, has been presented outright to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent site for the Berkshire symphonic festivals, it was announced today.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
FEB 14 1937

Music on Records: Some Additional Comment on a Recent Recording of Tschaikowsky's Fourth

THE music reviewer seldom feels it necessary to correct opinions which he has expressed of a concert or operatic performance. These opinions may have been influenced by any one of a number of things, ranging from the reviewer's state of mind during the performance to the location of his seats in the auditorium and the behavior of his neighbors. But since he cannot hear a given performance twice he can never know (though he may sometimes suspect) how wrong he was in his judgment of it. The reviewer of records, on the other hand, can always hear again any recording of which he has reason to believe that his firstt impression was misleading.

I have today to confess that in the light of such a rehearing of the Koussevitzky recording of Tschaikowsky's F minor symphony my comments upon it last Sunday appear to me extreme and consequently unfair. Having played these discs not only for the second but for the third and fourth times, I am still of the opinion that this recording does not come up to the Koussevitzky recordings of Strauss' "Zarathustra," the Second Symphony of Sibelius and Schubert's "Unfinished." The defects which I noted in it are there: the too strong contrasts between loud passages, or passages heavily instrumentated, and soft passages, or passages lightly instrumentated; the effect of remoteness created by the distance of certain instruments (woodwinds and percussion) from the microphone; the persistent echo, which gives the performance the effect of one in a large and empty auditorium. But of these defects my comments on the recording gave an exaggerated account; the recording might have been better than it is, but it might also have been a great deal worse. I have compared it again with other recordings of the same work, and, if I still prefer the Stokowski version for its superior balance and transparency of tone, I am now quite willing to admit that the Koussevitzky higher-fidelity recording has greater brilliance and greater fidelity of tone. The choice, in other words, is between a recording (Stokowski) made before the new high fidelity recording process was in use, and representative of the best results obtainable at the time, and a recording employing the newer technique, but not representative of the best results obtainable with its aid, though still brilliant and impressive.

* * *

Incidentally, the Victor releases for March will include a suite of excerpts from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" played by Koussevitzky and the Bostonians. There is no reason why the Victor Company should not employ Koussevitzky to record such music, but there are other and better reasons for it to employ him in recording certain works of which, as yet, no recordings are available, which are in his repertory and that of his orchestra and of which his performances are extraordinarily fine—for example, Mahler's Ninth Symphony and the same composer's "Lied von der Erde." Mr. Charles O'Connell was not afraid, a year and more back, to sponsor a recording of Mahler's Second Symphony by Ormandy and the Minneapolis Orchestra; "Das Lied von der Erde" is incomparably the finer work of the two, and in addition the one major work of Mahler which seems to be exempted from popular disfavor. It should be recorded.

* * *

BOSTONIANS OFFER MOZART SYMPHONY

D Major Performed at Carnegie Hall Under Direction of Serge Koussevitzky

N.Y. Times

MAHLER LIED REPEATED

Feb. 14/37

As at Previous Hearing, Soloists Are Maria Ranzow and Paul Althouse

As at its concert of the previous night in the same surroundings, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's program performed at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, under Serge Koussevitzky, comprised Mahler's "Lied von der Erde" prefaced by a Mozart symphony. This time, instead of the opus in C major of 1780, the Mozart offering was the far weightier and more important symphony in D major, known as the "Prague," which ranks with the three last symphonies of the master as the greatest of the genre composed during the eighteenth century.

The D major symphony was composed six years after the C major, and in the interim Mozart's art had grown vastly in expressive power and subjectivity. The genial, carefree nature of the earlier works largely disappeared, to be superseded by a new emotional tenseness and introspective quality, as the composer's pessimistic outlook on life increased. Besides this new element, the "Prague" symphony has many other characteristics of special interest. It is the most symmetrical in construction of any of Mozart's works of the kind, boasts no minuet and looks back to the "Marriage of Figaro" and forward to the later operatic masterpieces of the composer in much of its thematic material.

As the program notes explained, commenators have seen a resemblance between the first theme of the opening allegro and that of the overture to "Don Giovanni." What inexplicably seems to have escaped attention, however, is the fact that the third motive of the symphony's elaborate chief theme stems practically note for note from the famous melody Mozart borrowed from Clementi's sonata in B-flat and incorporated in the overture to "The Magic Flute." Nor does it seem to have been noticed that an oft repeated phrase in the second melody of the andante was a reminiscence of the "Non lo so far" phrase of Zerlina's "Vedrai carino" aria in "Don Giovanni," or that Beethoven undoubtedly had the second subject of the first allegro in mind when penning the finale of his piano sonata in D minor.

Mr. Koussevitzky's performance of this masterpiece was straightforward, filled with tonal glory and of the utmost technical finish. It was an interpretation which was anything but a "reading," in which the notes of the score spoke for themselves in a purely objective manner. It was amazing how much beauty the symphony was possible of summoning forth under this treatment. Naturally, the emphasis on the more tender and poignant implications of the music was lessened in this conception of the work, but the whole took on a Beethoven-like breadth, nobility and brilliance, instead, that gave it a new sort of significance.

After the symphony, Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" was repeated, with Maria Ranzow and Paul Althouse again as soloists. Since the performance of this was reviewed after its previous presentation the day before, further comment may be dispensed with here.

N. S.

ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
FEB [illegible]

NOTED VIOLINIST DIES

NEW YORK, Feb. 6 (AP).—Friends in New York today received a telegram announcing the death in Rome of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer who was associated for many years with the Boston symphony orchestra and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Death was due to a heart attack.

NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Post Feb. 14/37

Symphony Orchestra to Honor Pushkin

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

HARDLY less than its obligation to Shakspere and Gothe is music's debt to the Russian Pushkin, the 100th anniversary of whose death is being observed this month. Practically the whole modern Russian school was inspired at one time or another, in one way or another, by Pushkin. The list of songs, tone-poems and operas based upon his poetry is almost incredibly long.

At the Symphony Concerts of this week Pushkin's memory will be triply honored: by a Suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan," which includes the popular "Flight of the Bumble-Bee," excerpts from that composer's "The Golden Cockerel," soon to be heard at the Opera House, and the Letter Scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Oniegin," in which the singer will be Olga Averino. At Cambridge on Thursday the orchestra will also play the Overture to Glinka's "Russlan and Ludmillah." At the Boston concerts the non-Pushkin music will be Beethoven's Fourth Symphony; in Cambridge, Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" Symphony.

* * * *

"After the great victory of romanticism there began that age of transition to which we ourselves belong—the period of what is called 'modern' music. This age of ours has two conspicuous features: it presents simultaneously the widest and most incompatible contrasts, and it is also hampered by too great an inheritance from the past. There never was an age when art was more isolated, more completely divorced from life, and yet never had music a wider sphere of influence, or apparently greater practical possibilities of reaching the innermost hearts of the people."

Thus Alfred Einstein in "A Short History of Music," published by Alfred A. Knopf, New York. Like Paul Bekker, whose "The Story of the Orchestra" was lately discussed in these columns, Mr. Einstein is both a German exile and an eminent musical scholar, and like Mr. Bekker he writes readably and informatively upon the development of music, avoiding both a dry text-book technicality and the words of one-syllable popular approach with which some authors would bring the cosmos into your front parlor.

This latest approach to the story of music links the progress of that art with the wider play of social, economic and intellectual forces. Thus viewed, music is found to have its roots in the life of the time—that is, until we arrive at the immediate present. Mr. Einstein's words quoted above are here depressingly true. Furthermore wisdom such as this characterizes his book as a whole. Again a volume which should be required reading for all who have a genuine interest in music.

* * * *

ESTATE OFFERED TO SYMPHONY

Summer Headquarters Would Be Provided on Lake In Stockbridge

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

STOCKBRIDGE, Feb. 14—Historic Tanglewood on the north shore of Mahkeenac Lake has been offered by its owners, Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Boston to the Boston Symphony orchestra for summer headquarters and for development by the Berkshire Music Festival Corporation.

Trustees of the festival, including Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and Mrs. Carlos M. De-Heredia, vice-president, are to confer tomorrow with directors of the Symphony in the Boston office of the president, Bentley Wirt Warren, to consider the offer of Mrs. Brooks.

An offer by the owners of the Daniel R. Hanna estate who will give the orchestra several acres on the west shore of the lake, will also be considered.

Under a five-year financing plan the festival trustees propose to raise $25,000 this season for construction of a permanent music shed.

Herald Feb 15

HEIFETZ HEARD IN RECITAL

Violinist Arouses Enthusiasm in Symphony Hall

Post Feb. 15/37

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The recital by Jascha Heifetz at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon was the fourth by an eminent violinist which Boston has heard this season. Already Messrs. Kreisler, Elman and Szigeti had preceded him, and soon Mr. Huberman is to come in a sonata recital with Artur Schnabel.

The audience which received Mr. Heifetz yesterday was not as large as either the performer or the performance deserved but to drag out a well-worn tag, it supplied in enthusiasm what it lacked in numbers. At the end of Mr. Heifetz' dazzling and impassioned version of Wieniawski's shopworn Concerto in D minor, a glorification of the obvious such as Mr. Elman lately made of a Concerto of Vieuxtemps, the audience stamped as well as clapped its approbation. There was even a suggestion of cheers.

It is not always the worthiest music that makes the most impression, or the most deserving performance. From a musical point of view the high spot of the afternoon was the playing, by both Mr. Heifetz and his accompanist, Emanuel Bay, of Beethoven's early Sonata in E-flat major, a delightful piece as unjustly neglected as are many of its companions. Why the Beethoven violin sonatas other than the "Kreutzer" are not oftener heard in public is one of the mysteries of the concert hall.

To be fair to the audience, if it did not receive this remarkable setting-forth of Beethoven with quite the warmth deserved, it accorded tumultuous applause to the stiffest number of the afternoon, Bach's C major Sonata for violin alone. Whether this applause, both at the end of the Fugue and at the end of the Finale, was intended as a tribute to the music or to the valor of the violinist may not be said. To make any of these unaccompanied sonatas sound as this one was made to sound yesterday is a tour dé force. Nor was the performance wanting on the side of musicianship.

Like Mr. Kreisler, Mr. Heifetz has now decided to augment the somewhat limited violin literature with transcriptions of his own. Those of yesterday were of an Allegro from a Divertimento of Mozart, with which the concert began, and five from Debussy, Bax, Albeniz, Castelnuovo-Tedesco and Halffter, with which it concluded. That from Debussy was of the Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," and it must be admitted that even Mr. Heifetz and Mr. Bay could but faintly suggest the kaleidoscopic coloring of Debussy's orchestra. Somehow the piece seemed to be reduced, for the moment, to the dimensions of salon music.

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's Times.

A NEW SYMPHONY BY RUSSIAN HEARD

Work by Khrennikoff, Soviet Composer, Given by Ormandy and Philadelphians

Feb 18/37

A new symphony by Tikhon Khrennikoff, a Soviet composer not yet 24 years old, was revealed to New York by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy at Carnegie Hall last night. It shared the program with two other Russian works—Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" suite and Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," which had the benefit of a new orchestration by Lucien Cailliet, a member of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Khrennikoff was 22 when he wrote this symphony. While he has a number of compositions in various forms to his credit, none has been published. The performance last night was from manuscript. Leopold Stokowski directed the work in Philadelphia last November, and billed it for presentation here several days later, but made a sudden change in his program.

The symphony is the creation of a composer of indubitable talent. Khrennikoff writes for orchestra with breath-taking assurance. He has a technical security that would be the envy of older and more experienced men. His effects are shrewdly planned and consummated. He makes sparing use of the full tonal panoply of the modern orchestra and as a result his climaxes have impact. There is little waste motion.

The ideas cannot, of course, be separated from their form of expression. Nevertheless, it seemed that the music was not always deeply felt nor that it stemmed from a profound personal urgency. Khrennikoff succeeds in establishing cogent moods and he does not draw them out. At a first hearing the logic of the second of the three movements appeared most satisfactorily sustained. There were pages in the third movement that had thrust and spirit and a sense of joyousness.

Under Mr. Ormandy's mettlesome direction, the symphony was made to sound. The flowing cantilena passages from strings had breadth and color, and the contrasting rhythms were realized with incisive clarity. Khrennikoff does not hesitate to employ bright or luscious tunes when it suits his purpose, and the orchestra made the most of them.

The audience was generous in its applause at the end of this first New York performance. Equally well received was the "first" of Mr. Cailliet's orchestration of Mussorgsky. Mr. Cailliet writes that "I have made my transcription directly from Mussorgsky's original piano pieces." It may be presumed that he means that Ravel's well-known orchestration of the same work was not quite as faithful to the original. Otherwise, why a new orchestral setting? Ravel's is a masterpiece of its kind. Mr. Cailliet's is forthright and sturdy. In one or two places it catches the rich, earthy savor of Mussorgsky better, perhaps, than Ravel. But it has not the finish and the sparkle of its forerunner.

H. T.

Lenox Land Given To Orchestra For Summer Concerts

Monitor Feb 16

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin next August a permanent series of summer concerts at Tanglewood, beautiful 210-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., a former residence of Nathaniel Hawthorne.

The trustees of the orchestra announced today that they had accepted the estate as a gift from Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Brookline, and would make it the permanent location of the Berkshire musical festivals.

The first concerts on the estate where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and laid the plot of the "House of the Seven Gables" will be early in August, with the entire orchestra under the direction of its conductor, Serge Koussevitsky.

Two week ends of three concerts each will be given, the trustees announced, thus doubling the length of last year's festival. Dates will be Aug. 5, 7, 8 and 12, 14, 15 (Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays).

Bowl Planned

The estate, given to the orchestra by Mrs. Brooks and her aunt, is off West street in Lenox, looking across Stockbridge Bowl to Mt. Everett, second highest peak in Massachusetts. It contains a notable group of gardens, each surrounded by old, closely trimmed hemlock hedges.

An open air bowl to seat 5000 persons—attendance last summer—will be constructed this spring, it was announced. Work of raising funds already has been started by the Berkshire committee, headed by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge.

The bowl will be a thing of natural beauty, it was said, and the gardens of the estate will provide an unusual open air foyer for use during intermissions.

Hawthorne Cottage Site

The site of Hawthorne's little red cottage, which was burned, June 22, 1900, is marked on the estate by a bronze tablet. Other estates near Tanglewood are owned by Mrs. William Norton Ballard, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, a member of the Berkshire concerts executive committee; George Lee Higginson and Grenville L. Winthrop.

Mrs. Brooks, the donor, is the granddaughter of William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant and banker, who in 1849 set up the estate where the concerts will be given.

The meeting at which the gift was accepted was held at the offices of Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra trustees, 30 State street, Boston. Members of the Berkshire Festival committee and trustees of the orchestra attended.

Advance reservations from 25 states, Canada and Europe already have been received for the 1937 festival, the trustees announced.

CANTON, O.
REPOSITORY
FEB 7 - 1937

FORMER SYMPHONY CONCERT HEAD DIES

By The Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—Friends in New York today received a telegram announcing the death in Rome, Italy, of Pier Adolfo Trindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer who was associated for many years with the Boston symphony orchestra and the Cincinnati conservatory of music.

Signor Torindelli was born at Conegliano near Venice, May 5, 1858, and came to the United States about 1895 to become concert master for the Boston orchestra, for many years he headed the violin department of the Cincinnati conservatory. He returned to Italy about 15 years ago.

294

World of Music

Trans. Feb. 17/37

If Love Ruled the World; A Fairy Story About a Boy and a Violin

By Redfern Mason

Of course, what is here told never happened; but what might have happened is sometimes more interesting than what has actually taken place.

Yehudi Menuhin slept in his little bed. He had not yet won fame; the world had not yet come to regard him as a wonder-child. But the wonder was in his soul, and over his bed was a picture of the child Samuel, the lad who heard the voice of God, calling to him in the night, and rose to do His bidding. And, just where his eyes would rest when he woke in the morning, was an etching of that greatest of all makers of the violin, old Antonio Stradivarius.

On a chair, near enough for him to reach out and seize it, lay his fiddle, not the wonderful Strad that was given him by a millionaire when the world was at his feet, but a good enough fiddle of commerce and one which, under his fingers, would tell him stories as wonderful as those of Grimm or Hans Christian Andersen.

Whether Yehudi had awakened or not I do not know; but I do know that the fiddle spoke to him.

"Yehudi," it whispered, "there is wonderful music inside me, and it wants to be heard. Won't you please set it free?"

The boy was not astonished. The instrument had often talked to him when reminded by his fingers and the bow. But this was the first time it had ever volunteered a remark for itself.

"What do you want to tell me?" asked the boy.

A whisper came from the strings. "I want you to play something for your own people, and for the Gentiles as well. They are all one, though most of them do not know it. Play that old tune in which the Ashkenazi chant the story of Ruth and Naomi. They inherit it from the days of Babylon, when they sat by the waters of the Euphrates and wept their long captivity. For centuries nobody could write it down; but they didn't need to; it lingered in the memory of the people. For it is so beautiful that they could not forget it."

"But how in the world do you come to know it?" demanded Yehudi. "You are quite a young fiddle, you know."

The violin emitted a low murmur that sounded like the murmur of forest trees.

"Yehudi, my friend," it replied; "I am as old as the world. So are you, for that matter, and sleeping within us are memories that go back to the dawn of creation. In moments when all is still and anxious thoughts are far away, these memories come back to us, if we only have the wit to pay attention to them. Listen to your soul, and it will tell you the song with which Adam wooed Eve, or the strains with which the Sirens tempted Odysseus."

"Is nothing lost then?" gasped the boy.

"Nothing. The mind is a tablet from which not even the lightest impression is ever erased. A palimpsest the Greeks would call it, for under one record is concealed another and, on the Day of Judgment, all of them will be deciphered, till the whole truth is manifest."

"And will Cortelli tell us just what he meant by 'La Folia?' "

"Corelli will tell you that the greatest thing a musician can do is to make beautiful song. Tartini will explain his 'Devil's Trill.' Shakespeare will tell you just how far Hamlet was mad, and Bacon will jeer at the pedants who say that Bacon wrote the plays."

"But your own past? Do you remember it?"

"Most of it. Sometimes there is a little mistiness, as if the curse of original sin had affected my fibers. At other times the past comes surging back, vision upon vision, and I see the past as if it were today."

"I'd like to be able to do that," mused the boy.

"You can do it through me," said the violin; "but you must listen with all the force of your being and your heart must be pure. Remember the words of Cesar Franck: 'Only the pure of heart can write good counterpoint.' That is why the Mass of Pope Marcellus seems a revelation of Paradise."

The boy demurred: "Wagner was hardly what you would call pure of heart; yet he wrote splendid counterpoint."

"He spent his time in sinning and repenting," answered the fiddle. "See how he plays sacred and profane love against one another in 'Tannhauser.' Set the sensual rapture of the Venusberg against Elizabeth's Prayer."

"And the second act of 'Tristan'?"

"We shall learn about that one of these days from the lips of Richard and the Wesendonck. Some of the most beautiful sacred pictures of the Renaissance were painted by unbelievers, you know."

"And how do you explain that?"

"Because they painted in the spirit of their childhood faith."

"But wouldn't their work have been more religious if they had never sinned?"

"Saint Augustine was a sinner in his youth, Yehudi; yet he is one of the doctors of the Catholic Church."

"I wonder if that is what made Luther cry 'Pecca fortiter." Siegfried did not know what fear was till he found love in Brunnhilde, and Brunnhilde had to learn love from a human being."

"Well, Yehudi," said the fiddle, "we have to evolve wisdom out of our own experience. Maybe you too, like Beethoven, will meet a 'deathless beloved one.' When you do, put her into your music."

"What will she be like I wonder," mused the boy.

"When you see her your heart will sing; and you needn't try to explain her. When there is no longer any mystery love is at an end."

"But love isn't everything, though it may be the greatest thing of all. What about this troubled world? Can't we musicians do something about it?"

"I was waiting for you to ask that. Music is the language of the heart; it is portrayal of moods and emotions. Don't you think it would be better if men were to put a little more of the heart into the business of government?"

"Governments seem only to be guided by the brain," cries Yehudi; "they are always motivated by selfish interest. Take little Ireland, for instance, wouldn't her people be happier today if England had ruled her from the heart, not the intellect? Look at our America today, employers and workers hating one another; yet they are brothers. Friend Fiddle, I am inclined to think that if artists ran the government, instead of politicians, it would be a better world."

"Amen," said the fiddle, "if artists had done their part in the social scheme the world might not be in such a sorry mess as it is today."

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Evening Public Ledger

FEB 13 1937

Arthur Fiedler, well-known Boston conductor, leader of the Boston Symphony "Pops" Orchestra and Esplanade concerts, will appear as guest conductor of the Civic Symphony Orchestra in Irvine Auditorium, Thirty-fourth and Spruce Streets, tomorrow afternoon at 3:30, the concert being one in a series of regular Sunday afternoon events. Mr. Fiedler's program features the second symphony of Johannes Brahms.

Guy Marriner, associate director of the Franklin Institute in charge of music, will discuss Bach and Chopin tomorrow at his lecture-recital in the Institute, starting at 4 P. M.

205

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ACCEPTS TANGLEWOOD ESTATE IN LENOX

B. Globe - Feb. 16/37

TANGLEWOOD, ESTATE OF MRS GORHAM BROOKS AND HER AUNT, MISS MARY ASPINWALL TAPPAN OF BROOKLINE.

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today announced acceptance of the gift of Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge of Mrs Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, of Brookline, as a Summer home for the orchestra and locale for an annual series of Summer concerts.

The estate was offered by the Brookline benefactors as a consequence of the outstanding success of the Berkshire symphonic festival in 1936.

Tanglewood, situated on an eminence overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, is rich in tradition, having been the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne in the Berkshires at the time he wrote "Tanglewood Tales." It was there also that he planned the plot of the "House of Seven Gables."

In previous years the Berkshire festival had been given on vacant Berkshire estates, but the popularity of the venture grew so as to make the 1936 festival a marked success. Residents of 25 states, Canada European countries made advance reservations for the 1936 festival, so widely representative as to justify the predictions of the Festival Association that the country is no longer content with the Winter season of symphony concerts.

Residents of the Berkshire district are jubilant over the gift of Tanglewood, believing that the Symphony's Summer exodus to that territory will offer a new cultural attraction for thousands of vacation visitors who enter over New England's western gateway.

They have started a canvass for funds with which to erect a suitable amphitheatre that will harmonize with the architecture of the surroundings. It is planned to seat 5000 persons, which was the average number of guests at the last festival.

Next Summer the orchestra will give a total of six concerts under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. They will be given on the Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two week-ends in August.

The beautiful estate which becomes the home of the musicians is situated on West st in Lenox, looking across Stockbridge Bowl to Mt Everett. Beautiful gardens and hemlock hedges afford an unique open-air foyer for intermissions. On the property is a tablet commemorating Hawthorne's little red cottage which burned in 1890. The estates of Grenville Winthrop, George Lee Higginson, Mrs William N. Bullard and Mrs DeHeredia flank it.

Final plans for the passing of the property were arranged at a conference yesterday between the trustees of the orchestra and a Berkshire festival group at the office of Bentley W. Warren, chairman of the trustees.

Present as trustees were Allston Burr, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Henry B. Sawyer, Edward A. Taft and Mrs Warren. Representing the Berkshire group were Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival; Mrs Carlos deHeredia, Norval H. Busey Jr and John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington, George W. Edman and Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield and Joseph Franz of Stockbridge.

Permanent Berkshire Site Assures Symphony Festivals

Hawthorne's Tanglewood, on Tappan Estate, Accepted as Home of Summer Fete

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced today that Tanglewood, the 200-acre estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, has been accepted as the permanent site for the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

This year's festival, to be held on the first two weekends of August, will be twice as long as last year's, with six concerts under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Last year's outstandingly successful festival also was held at Tanglewood, in Lenox and Stockbridge, once the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne and the scene of his "Tanglewood Tales." Mrs. Brooks and Miss Tappan, who is her aunt, suggested that it become the permanent home of the festival.

In past years the festival has been given on vacant Berkshire estates. With a permanent site assured, the Berkshire committee recognized the need for a suitable enclosure and set to work immediately to raise the necessary funds. Construction will start this spring on lines that will harmonize with the natural surroundings. It is planned to accommodate an audience of 5000, the average attendance at the 1936 festival.

A meeting of the two groups concerned was held at the office of Bentley W. Warren, 30 State street, Boston, president of the trustees of the orchestra. At this meeting were Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival, and her executive committee: Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of New York and Stockbridge and Norval H. Busey, Jr., of New York and Lenox; John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington, George W. Edman and Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield, and Joseph Franz of Stockbridge. Trustees of the orchestra included Allston Burr, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Henry B. Sawyer, Edward T. Taft and Mr. Warren.

Continued on Page 2—Column 5

Symphony Gets Berkshire Site

Continued from Page One

Mrs. Brooks is the granddaughter of William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant and banker, who in 1849 created the estate where the concerts will be given. On the estate is a notable grouping of gardens, each surrounded by old, closely trimmed hemlock hedges. These gardens will provide a unique open-air foyer for use during intermissions.

The site of Hawthorne's little red cottage, which was burned June 22, 1890, is commemorated by a bronze tablet.

Other notable estates near Tanglewood are owned by Mrs. William Norton Bullard, Mrs. deHeredia, George Lee Higginson and Grenville L. Winthrop.

Residents of twenty-five States, Canada and Europe made advance reservations for the 1936 Festival.

NEW YORK TIMES

FEB 17 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY GETS BERKSHIRE SITE

Accepts Gift of Tanglewood—Building of Enclosure to Seat 5,000 Planned

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, Feb. 16.—The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today announced the acceptance of Tanglewood, the 210-acre Lenox-Stockbridge estate once occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne, as a permanent site for the orchestra's annual Berkshire symphony festival. The site, off West Street, Lenox, is the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, of Brookline.

With a permanent site established for the concerts, the Berkshire committee has launched a campaign for funds, and this Spring will begin construction of an enclosure to accommodate 5,000 persons. This year's series of concerts will be double that of last year, with six concerts on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two week-ends in August under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Those attending the recent meeting of the orchestra trustees and the festival committee were Bentley W. Warren, president of the trustees; Miss Gertrude R. Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Stockbridge, Norval H. Busey Jr. of New York and Lenox; John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, Robert K. Wheeier of Great Barrington, George W. Edman and Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield and Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, members of the festival committee; Allston Burr, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. de Wolfe Howe, Henry B. Sawyer, Edward A. Taft, trustees of the orchestra, and Mrs. Bentley W. Warren.

210-ACRE ESTATE FOR SYMPHONY FETE

Am. Feb. 16/37

LENOX SITE GIFT OF 2 WOMEN

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today announced acceptance of the gift of "Tanglewood," 210-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge, which was offered by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, of Brookline.

Acceptance of the gift was prompted, trustees announced, because of the outstanding success of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last year.

Tanglewood, rich in tradition, the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne and where he wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and laid the plot for "The House of Seven Gables," will be the permanent home for summer concerts of the Symphony Orchestra.

BEAUTIFUL VIEW

This beautiful estate, off West street in Lenox, looks across Stockbridge Bowl, a wide rolling valley, toward Mt. Everett, the second highest peak in Massachusetts.

In other years the Festival has been given on vacant Berkshire estates. Now, with a permanent site assured, the Berkshire committee recognizes the need for a suitable enclosure and has set to work to raise the necessary funds.

Construction of an enclosure that will harmonize with the beautiful natural surroundings will start in the spring. It will accommodate 5000 persons, the average attendance last year.

Plans have been formulated to make the 1937 Festival season twice as long as in 1936. There will be six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two weeks in August.

A meeting of the two groups sponsoring the Festival was held today at the offices of Bentley W. Warren, 30 State street, president of the trustees of the orchestra.

At this meeting were Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the Festival, and her executive committee, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of New York and Stockbridge, Norval H. Busey, Jr., of New York and Lenox, John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington, George W. Edman and Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield and Joseph Franz of Stockbridge.

Trustees of the orchestra present included, Allston Burr, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Henry B. Sawyer, Edward A. Taft, and Mrs. Warren.

Mrs. Brooks is the granddaughter of William Aspinwall Tappan, of Brookline, Boston merchant and banker, who created Tanglewood.

Prime beauties of the estate include the multitudinous gardens surrounded by closely-clipped hemlock hedges. These gardens will provide an enchanting open-air foyer during intermissions.

The site of Hawthorne's little red cottage, which was burned June 22, 1890, is commemorated by a bronze tablet.

Residents of 25 States, Canada and Europe have already made advance reservations for this year's festival.

Picture like above - in B. Globe - Feb. 16/37 - [illegible]

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

FEB 7 - 1937

FAMED VIOLINIST DIES

Signor Tirindelli Succumbs To Heart Attack In Rome

NEW YORK — (AP) — Friends in New York Saturday received a telegram announcing the death in Rome Saturday of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer who was associated for many years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Death was due to a heart attack.

Signor Tirindelli was born at Conegliano, near Venice, May 5, 1858, and came to the United States about 1895 to become concertmaster for the Boston orchestra. For many years he headed the violin department of the Cincinnati Conservatory. He returned to Italy about 15 years ago.

GOTHAM LIFE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

FEB 7 - 1937

BROOKLYN ACADEMY + + +

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences will present the following program this week at the Brooklyn Academy of Music:

Feb. 8, Illustrated Lecture, The Adriatic Gateway to Northern Italy, by Dr. J. Lane Miller, 4 p.m.

Feb. 9, Lecture, Current History, by Dr. George Earle Raiguel, 4 p.m. Also a Lecture, Landmarks in the Science of Man. Pasteur, Lister and Koch: The Conquest of Disease, by Dr. Henry J. Fry, 8:15 p.m.

Feb. 10, Lecture, Round South America Tour (color and motion films), by James C. Sawders, 8:15 p.m.

Feb. 11, Concert, by The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, Conductor, 8:30 p.m.

Feb. 13, Motion Picture Program: San Francisco and News Releases, 8:15 p.m.

Feb. 14, Lecture, Contemporary Books Worth Reading, by William Lyon Phelps, 3 p.m.

NEW YORK TO BOSTON

For the first time in the fifty years it has visited New York, the Boston Symphony orchestra gave a special concert in Carnegie hall Wednesday night for its pension fund. In this "extremely brilliant concert"—the adjectives are those of Olin Downes of the Times—Jascha Heifetz joined with the orchestra in playing Mendelssohn's violin concerto. Their performance was received with cheers by the large audience, which included many standees. The concluding work was Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony, a fittingly emotional climax to what must have been a festive occasion.

The New York critics' opinion of Dr. Koussevitzky's band was never higher and its popularity with the public never larger than it is today. As a consequence, the management felt justified in inviting attendance at this benefit concert. The response was most friendly and generous. We in Boston have come to depend on New York for our annual brief season of opera. It is gratifying to believe that New York now regards the visits of our orchestra in the same spirit.

Herald - Editorial column Sat - Feb 13

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

FEB 13 193

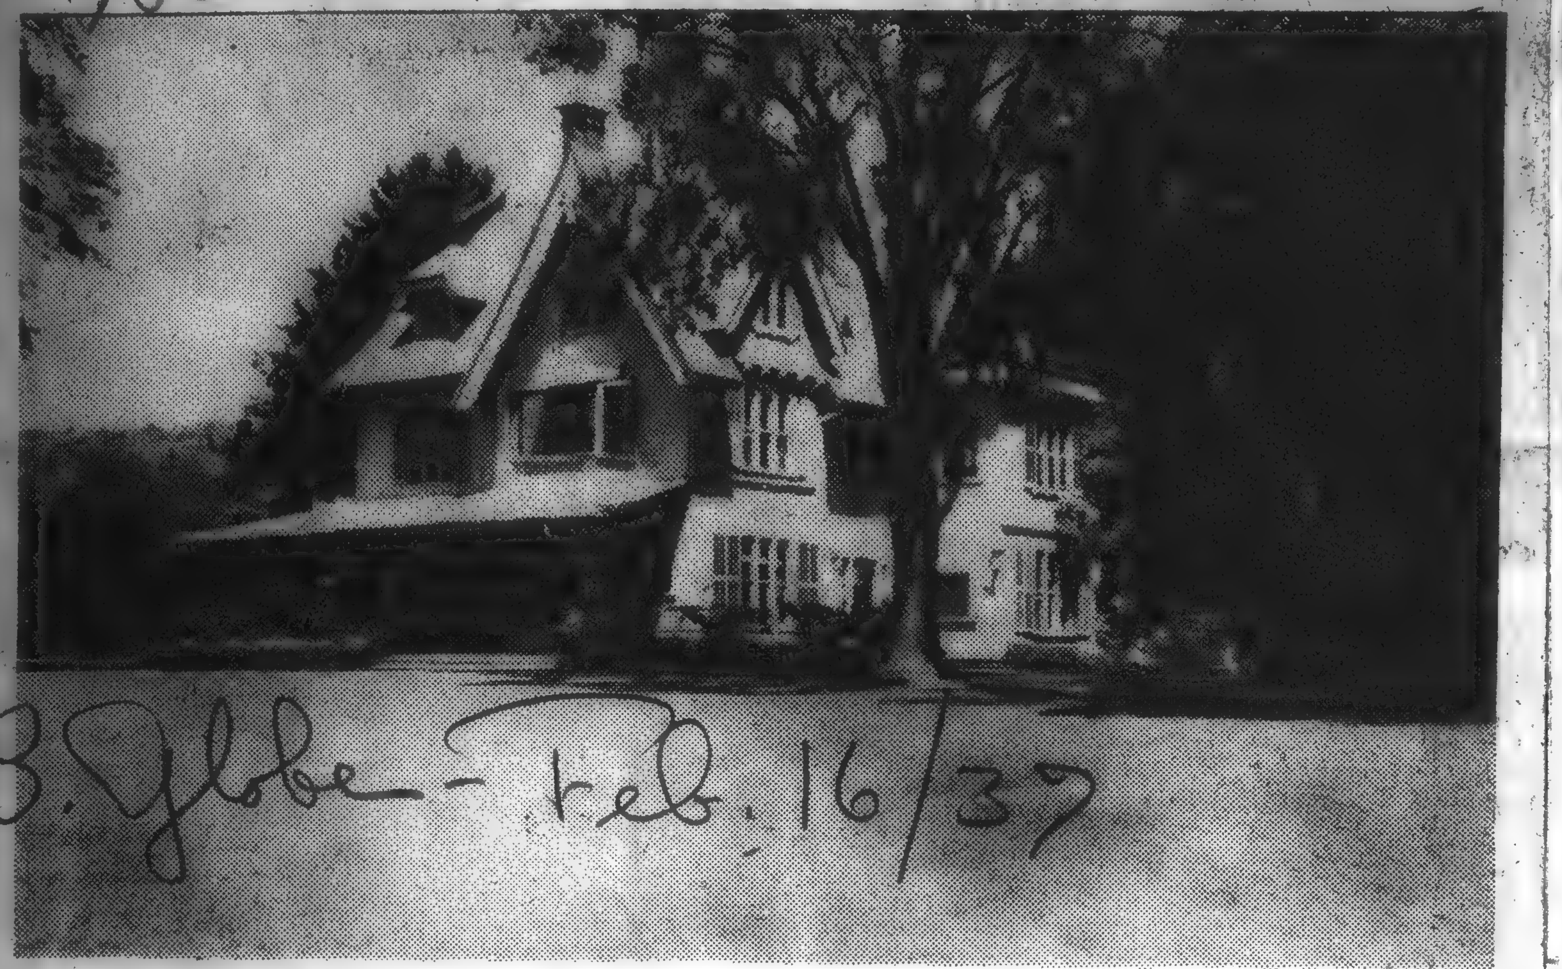
Music School Faculty Concert Next Tuesday

The second recital in the series of chamber concerts given annually by the faculty of the School of Music, will be held Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. in Sprague Memorial hall. Georges Laurent, first flutist of the Boston Symphony, will assist members of the faculty in the program which will consist of a concerto in B minor, for flute and string orchestra by Hasse, an eighteenth century composer; a sonata for flute and piano by Walter Piston, assistant professor of music at Harvard; and the Bach Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 for flute violin, piano and string orchestra.

Mr. Simonds will appear both in the Piston and in the Brandenburg Concerto. In the latter piece, Mr. Kortschak also will have a solo part. The faculty string quartet will play four fugues from Bach's "Die Kunst der Fuge," transcribed for String Quartet by Roy Harris and M. D. Herter Norton. Richard Donovan will conduct a string orchestra in the first and last numbers on the program. Tickets are on sale at Sprague Memorial hall.

205

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ACCEPTS TANGLEWOOD ESTATE IN LENOX



B. Globe - Feb. 16/37

TANGLEWOOD, ESTATE OF MRS GORHAM BROOKS AND HER AUNT, MISS MARY ASPINWALL TAPPAN OF BROOKLINE.

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today announced acceptance of the gift of Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge of Mrs Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, of Brookline, as a Summer home for the orchestra and locale for an annual series of Summer concerts.

The estate was offered by the Brookline benefactors as a consequence of the outstanding success of the Berkshire symphonic festival in 1936.

Tanglewood, situated on an eminence overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, is rich in tradition, having been the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne in the Berkshires at the time he wrote "Tanglewood Tales." It was there also that he planned the plot of the "House of Seven Gables."

In previous years the Berkshire festival had been given on vacant Berkshire estates, but the popularity of the venture grew so as to make the 1936 festival a marked success. Residents of 25 states, Canada European countries made advance reservations for the 1936 festival, so widely representative as to justify the predictions of the Festival Association that the country is no longer content with the Winter season of symphony concerts.

Residents of the Berkshire district are jubilant over the gift of Tanglewood, believing that the Symphony's Summer exodus to that territory will offer a new cultural attraction for thousands of vacation visitors who enter over New England's western gateway.

They have started a canvass for funds with which to erect a suitable amphitheatre that will harmonize with the architecture of the surroundings. It is planned to seat 5000 persons, which was the average number of guests at the last festival.

Next Summer the orchestra will give a total of six concerts under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. They will be given on the Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two week-ends in August.

The beautiful estate which becomes the home of the musicians is situated on West st in Lenox, looking across Stockbridge Bowl to Mt Everett. Beautiful gardens and hemlock hedges afford an unique open-air foyer for intermissions. On the property is a tablet commemorating Hawthorne's little red cottage which burned in 1890. The estates of Grenville Winthrop, George Lee Higginson, Mrs William N. Bullard and Mrs DeHeredia flank it.

Final plans for the passing of the property were arranged at a conference yesterday between the trustees of the orchestra and a Berkshire festival group at the office of Bentley W. Warren, chairman of the trustees.

Present as trustees were Allston Burr, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Henry B. Sawyer, Edward A. Taft and Mrs Warren. Representing the Berkshire group were Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival; Mrs Carlos deHeredia, Norval H. Busey Jr and John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington, George W. Edman and Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield and Joseph Franz of Stockbridge.

Permanent Berkshire Site Assures Symphony Festivals

Hawthorne's Tanglewood, on Tappan Estate, Accepted as Home of Summer Fete

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced today that Tanglewood, the 200-acre estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, has been accepted as the permanent site for the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

This year's festival, to be held on the first two weekends of August, will be twice as long as last year's, with six concerts under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Last year's outstandingly successful festival also was held at Tanglewood, in Lenox and Stockbridge, once the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne and the scene of his "Tanglewood Tales." Mrs. Brooks and Miss Tappan, who is her aunt, suggested that it become the permanent home of the festival.

In past years the festival has been given on vacant Berkshire estates. With a permanent site assured, the Berkshire committee recognized the need for a suitable enclosure and set to work immediately to raise the necessary funds. Construction will start this spring on lines that will harmonize with the natural surroundings. It is planned to accommodate an audience of 5000, the average attendance at the 1936 festival.

A meeting of the two groups concerned was held at the office of Bentley W. Warren, 30 State street, Boston, president of the trustees of the orchestra. At this meeting were Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival, and her executive committee: Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of New York and Stockbridge and Norval H. Busey, Jr., of New York and Lenox; John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington, George W. Edman and Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield, and Joseph Franz of Stockbridge. Trustees of the orchestra included Allston Burr, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Henry B. Sawyer, Edward T. Taft and Mr. Warren.

Continued on Page 2—Column 5

Symphony Gets Berkshire Site

Continued from Page One

Mrs. Brooks is the granddaughter of William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant and banker, who in 1849 created the estate where the concerts will be given. On the estate is a notable grouping of gardens, each surrounded by old, closely trimmed hemlock hedges. These gardens will provide a unique open-air foyer for use during intermissions.

The site of Hawthorne's little red cottage, which was burned June 22, 1890, is commemorated by a bronze tablet.

Other notable estates near Tanglewood are owned by Mrs. William Norton Bullard, Mrs. deHeredia, George Lee Higginson and Grenville L. Winthrop.

Residents of twenty-five States, Canada and Europe made advance reservations for the 1936 Festival.

NEW YORK TIMES

FEB 17 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY GETS BERKSHIRE SITE

Accepts Gift of Tanglewood—Building of Enclosure to Seat 5,000 Planned

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, Feb. 16.—The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today announced the acceptance of Tanglewood, the 210-acre Lenox-Stockbridge estate once occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne, as a permanent site for the orchestra's annual Berkshire symphony festival. The site, off West Street, Lenox, is the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, of Brookline.

With a permanent site established for the concerts, the Berkshire committee has launched a campaign for funds, and this Spring will begin construction of an enclosure to accommodate 5,000 persons. This year's series of concerts will be double that of last year, with six concerts on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two week-ends in August under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Those attending the recent meeting of the orchestra trustees and the festival committee were Bentley W. Warren, president of the trustees; Miss Gertrude R. Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Stockbridge, Norval H. Busey Jr. of New York and Lenox; John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington, George W. Edman and Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield and Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, members of the festival committee; Allston Burr, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. de Wolfe Howe, Henry B. Sawyer, Edward A. Taft, trustees of the orchestra, and Mrs. Bentley W. Warren.

210-ACRE ESTATE FOR SYMPHONY FETE

Am, Feb. 16/37

LENOX SITE GIFT OF 2 WOMEN

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today announced acceptance of the gift of "Tanglewood," 210-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge, which was offered by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, of Brookline.

Acceptance of the gift was prompted, trustees announced, because of the outstanding success of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last year.

Tanglewood, rich in tradition, the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne and where he wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and laid the plot for "The House of Seven Gables," will be the permanent home for summer concerts of the Symphony Orchestra.

BEAUTIFUL VIEW

This beautiful estate, off West street in Lenox, looks across Stockbridge Bowl, a wide rolling valley, toward Mt. Everett, the second highest peak in Massachusetts.

In other years the Festival has been given on vacant Berkshire estates. Now, with a permanent site assured, the Berkshire committee recognizes the need for a suitable enclosure and has set to work to raise the necessary funds.

Construction of an enclosure that will harmonize with the beautiful natural surroundings will start in the spring. It will accommodate 5000 persons, the average attendance last year.

Plans have been formulated to make the 1937 Festival season twice as long as in 1936. There will be six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two weeks in August.

A meeting of the two groups sponsoring the Festival was held today at the offices of Bentley W. Warren, 30 State street, president of the trustees of the orchestra.

At this meeting were Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the Festival, and her executive committee, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of New York and Stockbridge, Norval H. Busey, Jr., of New York and Lenox, John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington, George W. Edman and Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield and Joseph Franz of Stockbridge.

Trustees of the orchestra present included, Allston Burr, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Henry B. Sawyer, Edward A. Taft, and Mrs. Warren.

Mrs. Brooks is the granddaughter of William Aspinwall Tappan, of Brookline, Boston merchant and banker, who created Tanglewood.

Prime beauties of the estate include the multitudinous gardens surrounded by closely-clipped hemlock hedges. These gardens will provide an enchanting open-air foyer during intermissions.

The site of Hawthorne's little red cottage, which was burned June 22, 1890, is commemorated by a bronze tablet.

Residents of 25 States, Canada and Europe have already made advance reservations for this year's festival.

Picture like above in B. Globe - Feb. 16/37 - No story

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

FEB 7 - 1937

FAMED VIOLINIST DIES

Signor Tirindelli Succumbs To Heart Attack In Rome

NEW YORK — (AP) — Friends in New York Saturday received a telegram announcing the death in Rome Saturday of Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, noted Italian violinist and composer who was associated for many years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Death was due to a heart attack.

Signor Tirindelli was born at Conegliano, near Venice, May 5, 1858, and came to the United States about 1895 to become concertmaster for the Boston orchestra. For many years he headed the violin department of the Cincinnati Conservatory. He returned to Italy about 15 years ago.

GOTHAM LIFE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

FEB 7 - 1937

BROOKLYN ACADEMY + + +

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences will present the following program this week at the Brooklyn Academy of Music:

Feb. 8, Illustrated Lecture, The Adriatic Gateway to Northern Italy, by Dr. J. Lane Miller, 4 p.m.

Feb. 9, Lecture, Current History, by Dr. George Earle Raiguel, 4 p.m. Also a Lecture, Landmarks in the Science of Man. Pasteur, Lister and Koch: The Conquest of Disease, by Dr. Henry J. Fry, 8:15 p.m.

Feb. 10, Lecture, Round South America Tour (color and motion films), by James C. Sawders, 8:15 p.m.

Feb. 11, Concert, by The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, Conductor, 8:30 p.m.

Feb. 13, Motion Picture Program: San Francisco and News Releases, 8:15 p.m.

Feb. 14, Lecture, Contemporary Books Worth Reading, by William Lyon Phelps, 3 p.m.

NEW YORK TO BOSTON

For the first time in the fifty years it has visited New York, the Boston Symphony orchestra gave a special concert in Carnegie hall Wednesday night for its pension fund. In this "extremely brilliant concert"—the adjectives are those of Olin Downes of the Times—Jascha Heifetz joined with the orchestra in playing Mendelssohn's violin concerto. Their performance was received with cheers by the large audience, which included many standees. The concluding work was Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony, a fittingly emotional climax to what must have been a festive occasion.

The New York critics' opinion of Dr. Koussevitzky's band was never higher and its popularity with the public never larger than it is today. As a consequence, the management felt justified in inviting attendance at this benefit concert. The response was most friendly and generous. We in Boston have come to depend on New York for our annual brief season of opera. It is gratifying to believe that New York now regards the visits of our orchestra in the same spirit.

Herald - Editorial column Sat - Feb 13

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

FEB 13 1937

Music School Faculty Concert Next Tuesday

The second recital in the series of chamber concerts given annually by the faculty of the School of Music, will be held Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. in Sprague Memorial hall. Georges Laurent, first flutist of the Boston Symphony, will assist members of the faculty in the program which will consist of a concerto in B minor, for flute and string orchestra by Hasse, an eighteenth century composer; a sonata for flute and piano by Walter Piston, assistant professor of music at Harvard; and the Bach Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 for flute violin, piano and string orchestra.

Mr. Simonds will appear both in the Piston and in the Brandenburg Concerto. In the latter piece, Mr. Kortschak also will have a solo part. The faculty string quartet will play four fugues from Bach's "Die Kunst der Fuge," transcribed for String Quartet by Roy Harris and M. D. Herter Norton. Richard Donovan will conduct a string orchestra in the first and last numbers on the program. Tickets are on sale at Sprague Memorial hall.

206

PUSHKIN'S MEMORY HONORED

Post Feb. 20/37

Symphony Plays Pieces Based Upon His Poems

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The programme of this week's Symphony Concerts is curiously divided and contrasted, one half falling to Beethoven and the other to Russian opera. The immediate pretext for the latter was, of course, the now widely celebrated commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the death of the poet Pushkin, to whom nearly every Russian opera of consequence owes its existence.

BEAUTIFUL PLAYING

It was an afternoon, yesterday, of brilliant and beautiful playing, of what seemed for the moment an ideal presentation of each number on the programme. The beginning came with the performance of Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolanus," continued with that of his Fourth Symphony, of the Suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera, "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan," of the "Letter Scene" from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Oniegin," and concluded with that of the Introduction and March from Rimsky's "Le Coq d'Or."

Lest this praise of the performance be construed as an unqualified endorsement of the music itself, let it be said that the Fourth Symphony, for all its Attic purity of style, is among the relatively lesser of the Nine, and that the stage-music of Rimsky-Korsakov inclines to the merely pictorial and picturesque, the showily empty.

Tatiana's Letter Song

With Tatiana's Letter Song came for the moment warmth and emotion, and this intimate and tender page was sung by Olga Averino and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky so sympathetically and affectingly that the desire to hear them both in the entire opera was urgent and immediate. It is a double pity that Boston should know so well the symphonies of Tchaikovsky and have but the barest acquaintance with "Eugene Oniegin," and that it has heard "Pagliacci's" and "Faust's" by the dozen and "Eugene Oniegin" only once. For some of us that single performance, from a touring Russian company in the neighborhood of 15 years ago persists vividly in the memory.

It was a distinct pleasure, furthermore, to hear Mme. Averino in music that was not primarily exotic. All too often her exceptional talents have been required for the sort of music that no one else either could sing or was willing to.

Clarity and Balance

To return to the other music of the afternoon, further emphasis should be placed upon the clarity and balance and what is called musicality which distinguished Dr. Koussevitzky's reading and the orchestra's playing of the Fourth Symphony in a performance that surpassed even their own notable accomplishments with it. The Overture, less engrossing than either "Leonora No. 3" or "Egmont," was set forth with the rightful blending of its formal and dramatic elements. There was a beautiful parade of tone for its own sake in the excerpts from Rimsky-Korsakov, especially in the fourth division of the "Tsar Saltan" Suite, where the music itself rises for a moment above the mere virtuosity of the rest.

We may as well be thankful, and the shade of Pushkin would join with us, that Tchaikovsky and not Rimsky wrote "Eugene Oniegin." And we should remember, too, although we were not reminded of it yesterday, that Pushkin also inspired that greatest of all Russian operas, Mussorgsky's "Boris."

MUSIC

Feb 20/37

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Alexander Pushkin is venerated by the Russians not only as their great and first national poet but by those of musical inclinations as one who inspired a number of Russian compositions. Just 100 years ago Feb 8 Pushkin fell in the famous duel with D'Anthes and died two days afterward. Since the Boston Symphony Orchestra was in New York last week, proper observance here of the centenary had to be put off until the concerts of yesterday afternoon and tonight.

Dr Koussevitzky has therefore devoted the second half of the program to excerpts from three operas whose literary basis is found in the writings of Pushkin: the suite from "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan" and the introduction and march from "Le Coq d'Or," both by Rimsky-Korsakov; the so-called "Letter Scene," from "Eugene Oniegin," by Tchaikovsky, the solo part of which is sung by Olga Averino, soprano. The program begins with two works of Beethoven, the "Coriolanus" Overture and the Fourth Symphony.

Mr Burk has detailed in the program notes the names of Russian operas founded upon the work of Pushkin. The list is impressive and proffers a suggestion that from at least one of them could have been taken music more exciting than the "Tsar Saltan" suite. The "Coronation Scene" from Moussorgsky's "Boris Godounov," had such a presentation been feasible, would doubtless have been enthralling.

Rimsky-Korsakov was capital when it came to musical depiction and story telling, with his wealth of magnificent color and his characteristic semi-Oriental melodies. The "Tsar Saltan" music, unfortunately, is not of his best. The trumpet fanfares become tiresome; the rich orchestration cannot hide—save the "Flight of the Bumble Bee"—a patent lack of engrossing ideas. "Le Coq d'Or" is, however, another matter. Here Rimsky created music fascinating and vital.

Mme Averino's expressive singing of the aria from "Eugene Oniegin" aroused hope in one who has never heard more of Tchaikovsky's opera except the air of Lenski, that the work may some day be presented here again on the stage. According to record, there has been but one Boston performance of the whole, by a Russian company some years ago. Tatiana's agitation over what she has written to Oniegin reveals a side of Tchaikovsky quite different from that of the symphonist. Here there is no febrile brooding, no lamentation, but beautifully written music vividly suggestive of Tatiana's condition of mind. Mme Averino's voice never sounded more opulent, nor her singing more musicianly than yesterday.

If the simpler texture of Beethoven was shadowed by Slavic elaboration, the forceful eloquence of his thought suffered not at all. Of late years the "Coriolanus" Overture has not been performed so often as those to "Egmont" and "Fidelio," though in some ways it is quite as striking as any of them.

The Fourth Symphony has unaccountably been absent from the "regular" concerts since the Autumn of 1931, and the most recent hearing was during the Tuesday afternoon Beethoven cycle in the season of 1933-34. The Fifth Symphony might with profit be temporarily retired in favor of its immediate predecessor. When Beethoven wished to be warmly good-humored he did so with utmost devotion. Like the second, sixth and eighth symphonies, the fourth is uniformly light and charming.

The orchestra played with that extreme precision which is so important a part of its preeminence, although the horns had difficult moments. Dr Koussevitzky's present reading of the Fourth Symphony is wholly admirable.

Next week Richard Burgin will conduct the first American performances of the C minor Symphony by Yuri Shaporin, the Soviet composer. The program will begin with a Serenade (K 320) by Mozart.

C. W. D.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY CONCERT
By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 16th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky, conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Olga Averino, soprano, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Overture to "Coriolanus" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, op. 60 .... Beethoven
Suite from the opera, "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan" .... Rimsky-Korsakov Letter Scene from "Eugene Oniegin" Tchaikovsky
Introduction and March from "The Golden Cock" .... Rimsky-Korsakov

How many authors could achieve the distinction of a commemorative concert? Pushkin, to whom half of yesterday's concert was dedicated in spirit, has inspired the Russian people by his writings for a hundred years. Nor have the Russian composers lagged behind in using his works for operas. Goethe has inspired more music, probably, than any other writer. Shakespeare has his quota; and Byron too would deserve a concert. But it is hard to think of any other author who has aroused a great many composers. Maeterlinck, perhaps, though he is not a very satisfactory example.

It is another thing altogether when we speculate what these authors would themselves have thought of the music composed in their honor. Byron had no interest in music. Shakespeare would probably have been bewildered at what ideas his poetry brought forth in foreign composers. Volumes have been written on Goethe's taste in music, but the simple fact was that he was almost entirely governed by the hide-bound opinions of Carl Zelter in this connection. On the whole, then, it is permissible to assume that Pushkin would have had the best time at his own commemorative concert!

Apparently we get little or no idea of the greatness of Pushkin's poetry in translation. Certainly the "Letter Scene" in English is flat enough; yet Maurice Baring says that it "reaches the high-water mark of the world's poetry." As a matter of fact Mr. Baring's essay on Pushkin in his book, "Lost Lectures," is a fine piece of work and makes one see wherein Pushkin's greatness lies. He tries his hand at translation also, with really successful poetic results.

Yesterday we had to rely on music to speak for us in honor of Pushkin. The Rimsky-Korsakov works are an old story here and one that continues to be enjoyed. The unhappy "Bumble-Bee," who is undoubtedly battered about over the radio every night in the year, sounds better when played in the hall by a first-rate orchestra. The "Coq d'Or" music, though, is a much more effective work. The performance yesterday was brilliant. Mme. Averino brought her fine talent and voice to bear on the Letter Scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Oniegin." Her singing was beautifully pure, and her phrasing exceedingly graceful. She was applauded cordially by the audience.

Dr. Koussevitzky conducted an excellent performance of the Beethoven "Coriolanus" Overture and the Fourth Symphony. The orchestra was in capital form, so that both works sounded with superb precision and an eloquence that was in perfect taste. The Fourth Symphony is one where in, as Sir Donald Tovey points out, Beethoven catches the spirit of Mozart but without imitation. Mozart occasionally used the rondo form for a slow movement, as in the Violin and Piano Sonata in E flat major. In less expert hands than Mozart's, or Beethoven's in this Symphony, the slow rondo can become a bore. The scherzo and finale are in Beethoven's most sunny and genial manner, the mood that he achieves again in the Eighth Symphony.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra in Mozart's Divertimento (K. 320) and the Symphony in C minor by the Soviet composer, Yuri Shaporin.

RIVERSIDE, CALIF.
ENTERPRISE

FEB 5 - 1937

Woman's Improvement Club Introduces Artists as Guests

(Special Correspondence)

CORONA, Feb. 4.—Featuring one of the outstanding gatherings of the year for the music section of the Woman's Improvement club was the address by E. A. Franklin, well-known musician, in his appreciation of orchestra's contribution to the world of music. Mr. Franklin was the guest artist on the program and was presented by Mrs. Glen Joseph, program chairman.

For this occasion, Mrs. Glenn Harper, at her Southeast boulevard home, was hostess. Mrs. J. B. Harker, curator of the section, spoke in appreciation of the effort of the girls' glee club of the Junior high school, in bringing two outstanding musicians in a Friday night concert here. Plans were also made by the music section for a gift to the stage equipment of the auditorium of the Woman's Improvement club. Mrs. George E. Snidecor, Mrs. E. L. Tilson and Mrs. George E. Stanley were named as a committee on this project.

Mrs. Joseph, in opening the program, presented Miss Lois Johnson, pianist, one of the outstanding music students of the Corona Union high school.

With Mrs. Tilson as piano accompanist, Mrs. Harker read "The Patchwork Quilt" and "James", in a pleasing manner. Sextet from the Mulope chorus of the Woman's Improvement club appeared in Martha Washington costumes. Under the direction of John Lorin Farmer, with Mrs. Tilson as pianist, the group included Mrs. Ray T. Williams, Mrs. George E. Snidecor, Mrs. R. W. Voris, Mrs. J. B. Harker, Mrs. E. E. Knauer and Mrs. Albert Newcomb. This afternoon the same group appeared on the program of the Alvord Woman's club.

Mr. Franklin, besides giving an intimate review of orchestra history, added a group of flute solos, and Mr. Farmer sang "Danny Boy" and "Come to the Fair."

Mr. Franklin told much of interest of the formation and growth of the Boston Symphony orchestra, of which ~~he was a member~~. He paid a high tribute to John Phillips Sousa, with whom he was associated as a flutist, and of the manner in which Sousa encouraged young musicians.

Other experiences in the world of music were related by the speaker, who paid a high tribute to the late Frank A. Miller, master of the Mission Inn of Riverside, who did much to encourage musicians. Mr. Miller honored an orchestra of 52 members, under the direction of Mr. Franklin, in a gathering at the Mission Inn a few years ago.

Mrs. N. C. Kelley, at her home in Kenwood Place, West Olive street, was announced as hostess to the next section gathering on March 2.

Members of the study section of the Woman's Improvement club participated in an a enjoyable meeting on Monday afternoon in the club parlors. Mrs. Wilbur G. Darst, chairman, presided at a business session, opening with an interesting review of current events.

Featuring the program was a travelog by Mrs. R. L. Hampton, reviewing her trip to Alaska during the past summer and illustrating her descriptions with numerous souvenirs of the trip. Mrs. F. Raymond King conducted the class in corrective English, and following the program, tea was served, with Mrs. Jess McCarty, Mrs. Gunnell and Mrs. C. M. Scoville as hostesses.

Announcement was made of the program arranged for the Woman's Improvement club Tuesday afternoon, when the committee in charge will present Marguerite Harrison, noted author, lecturer and newspaper correspondent. She will tell of her experiences as newspaper writer in Russia during the revolution, when she was forced to spend much time in prison.

DAYTON, O.
HERALD

FEB 13 1937

Symphonies to Be Resumed Saturday In Cincinnati Hall

E. Robert Schmitz and Alexander Tansman Will Be Guest Soloists.

With Cincinnati virtually back to normal, after the most devastating flood in its history, the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra is ready to resume its concerts and operatic productions under the direction of Eugene Goossens. All symphony events that had to be cancelled because of the flood situation will be given at later dates.

The first after-flood concert will be held Saturday evening at 8:30 o'clock. E. Robert Schmitz, eminent French-American pianist, and Alexander Tansman, young Polish composer, conductor and pianist, will be the soloists.

Recognized Composer

Tansman is recognized as one of the most important of present-day composers. His works have been presented by the leading orchestras of America and Europe under the direction of such noted conductors as Stokowski, Koussevitzky, Goldschmann, Stock and Sir Henry Wood.

"The Marriage of Figaro," Mozart's great comic opera, will be presented by the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra in Music hall, February 19 and 20, a postponement, because of the flood, from January 22 and 23. The following weekend the orchestra will present Richard Strauss's tense opera, "Salome," with Erica Darbo, Milan Petrovic, Myron Taylor and Edward Molitore in the leading roles.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

FEB 15 1937

Music of the Day

By B. H. HAGGIN

Bostonians Repeat Mahler's "Lied von der Erde"—2 Duo-Piano Reciatls—Bidu Sayao in Metropolitan Debut

Saturday afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serg Koussevitzky, like the concert of the preceding evening, offered a performance of Mahler's symphony for tenor, contralto, and orchestra, "Das Lied von der Erde" ("The Song of the Earth"), a setting of six texts which Mahler took from Hans Bethge's "Die Chinesische Floete," a collection of adaptations of old Chinese poems. Mahler further altered them to express the feeling that dominated him in his last years. "Dark is life, is death," is the refrain of the first poem; "I seek rest for my lonely heart," one reads in the last; and the work is an embodiment in tone of this sickness of heart that was Mahler's. It is a work which requires, for complete appreciation, something of the same feeling in the listener, and which therefore failed of complete appreciation by the audience of healthy-minded New Yorkers that heard it on Saturday. But even a healthy-minded person can be aware of the individual quality and distinction of the musical thinking and craftsmanship.

The tension which I was informed had been present in Friday evening's performance of the work was not present in Saturday's. But this performance did not achieve communicative fire until the last section, entitled "The Farewell," in which the work, too, may be said to reach incandescence. Here the playing of the orchestra was superb; and it was in this section, particularly toward its end, that the contralto soloist, Maria Ranzow, brought her voice sufficiently under control to achieve something of the expressiveness and fervor that were required. But the quavering tenor of Paul Althouse was at all times inadequate to the needs of the occasion.

Mahler's work was preceded on Saturday afternoon by Mozart's "Prague" Symphony in D major, Koechel No. 504. Mr. Koussevitzky was successful with only one movement of the work—the concluding Presto, which was appropriately and exquisitely swift and light. What the slow movement might have disclosed if it had been taken Andante it had no opportunity to disclose when it was taken Allegretto. And even the first Allegro suffered from

---

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

FEB 14 1937

BEHR SENDS GREETING TO CI

Carl Be the North
phony orchestra and a charter member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, yesterday conveyed to the Greensboro public a Valentine greeting, portraying both originality and devotedness.

In a message sent to the Daily News and directed to the public, Mr. Behr stated: "May God, the great lover and infallible spirit of life, truth and love, enter every home and inmate and illuminate them with his spirit, is my sincere wish and Valentine greeting to Greensboro and its citizens, regardless of race, creed or color."

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
JOURNAL

FEB 14 1937

Noted Cellist to Play in St. Paul

The Schubert Club of St. Paul will present Caspar Cassado, the eminent Spanish cellist, in recital with Robert MacDonald at the piano Tuesday in People's church of that city at 8:15 p.m.

Cassado is a native of Barcelona. He became a pupil of Pablo Casals, who was the first to play Saado's cello concerto in public. His fame both as performing cellist and as composer is international. This is Mr. Cassado's first visit to this country. He is appearing four times with the New York Philharmonic as well as with the Boston, Chicago and Kansas City Symphony orchestras.

THE STAGE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
FEB - - 1937

Ballet-Hooey

By ISAAC GOLDBERG

Perhaps I'd better explain, at the outset, that this is not a diatribe against the ballet. Perhaps, too, I'd better explain that I am not an addict of the ballet, or, as the new word has it, a balletomaniac. This dance of words against the pretensions of the Dance is prompted, indeed, as much by those who have attempted to make a convert of me, as by any quality inherent in the Dance itself. There isn't an activity or an interest of man that does not lend itself to a perfected technique and, therefore, to the higher possibilities of human expression. That, without too much metaphysics, is what gives us art. And to say that the Dance was not an art would be to deny the obvious, as well as to confess oneself as a much too prejudiced witness.

To make of the Dance the Art of Arts, however; to work oneself up into a professional rapture that identifies ballet with living; to glory, in this psychiatric age, in the word mania; to turn the ballet into a ritual, and ballet criticism into worship; to turn the Dance into a secret revelation of the purposes behind existence—all this is, except for avowed balletomanes, too much.

Enthusiasm is a great thing—a thing for which the Greeks had a word that they gave us. Literally, it means the ecstasy of being in the possession of a god. When we are "enthused" (that is a colloquial Americanism which the dictionary admits through the back door) we are, so to speak, "en-God-ed." This, in turn, for the ordinary amusements of life, suggests fanaticism; and it is the fanatic element in enthusiasm that has done much to ruin my chances of ever liking ballet. My own tragic experience means nothing, except to me; but it must be representative of what has happened in the case of many others.

For that matter, this over-enthusiasm, this uncomfortable impression that someone is lashing himself into appreciation, is to be encountered in the other arts, too. I have chosen the ballet because, in my own experience, it is one of the newer arts, and thus reveals more crudely the process of ballet-hooey.

Consider, for example, the Charlie Chaplin of a dozen years ago. In those days the master mime was being nominated, by the master aestheticians, as a sure-fire Hamlet on the stage. They say, in fact, that Mr. Chaplin still fancies himself as a tragedian. Well, the Hamlet notion was an "arty" one at best, even if it did recognize the basic relationship of true comedy to true tragedy. Chaplin as Hamlet—this is my guess, which is as good as the next man's—would have been a fitting criticism of the people who first thought up the notion. I don't say that Chaplin could not understand Hamlet; I do say that I'd hate like the dickens to see him essay the rôle.

Wasn't it Elie Faure, the French art critic to whom we're indebted for a fine history, who went as delightfully nuts over Charlot as any balletomaniac ever went over the proper combination of pirouettes, fouettés, pointe dancing, and entrechats? Chaplin became, at the end of an astounding essay, a combination of Montaigne and Shakespeare.

At that, Faure, having paid his tribute to Chaplin's feet, did not suggest that we capture Charlie's old shoes, cook them in wine, and pass out the sliced tid-bits to the assembled company. This sort of thing, a queer combination of fetishism and cannibalism, seems to be reserved for the ceremonies of the dance maniacs. That it has its markedly sexual character appears from the fact that it is the ballerina's footgear which receives these culinary honors. Men have thus drunk from, and partaken of, ladies' shoes; the ladies have not, if we must trust the printed accounts, returned the compliment. Moreover, the balletomaniac is always a man.

What is it, I wonder, that makes folk go so crazy (and it is something deliberate about the going crazy that irritates me into protest) over orchestra conductors and ballet dancers? Most conductors, of course, and such a truly exceptional figure as the great mime, Charlie Chaplin, belong visibly to a form of ballet. For the loose purposes of this article, then, they may be grouped as artists of the dance who arouse worship. It is possible to read pages about Mengelberg, Koussevitzky, Stokowski, and Toscanini — especially about Toscanini — that make one wonder whether they have not been written by a professed balletomane about a favorite ballerina. A less charitable word for this sort of thing is gush.

Now, the gush is personal. It is Koussevitzky about whom the gushers rave, not Tchaikovsky; it is Toscanini, not Brahms, who receives the devotions of the musical parishioner; the present, corporeal object, not the vanished, abstract source. So, too, with ballet maniacs, who talk and write far more about the dancers than about the Dance.

Balletomania is, to Americans, a new word; it is an old fact. Even Emerson, who, according to Santayana, served up Goethe in ice water, could look upon Fannie Elssler and tell Margaret Fuller that this was religion. For many a minor dancer, it is too bad that Ellis wrote a book called The Dance of Life; or too bad, at any rate, that they should have read it and found in it only what their meager intelligence could discover. I don't like dancers who tell me that their movements upon the stage are statements, in terms of human limbs and gestures, of what is contained in the chapters of Ellis.

It does appear to me, however, that there is more the trouble with the Dance than the dancers or their hyperthyroid interpreters; that somehow, for this increasingly popular form of entertainment, too much is claimed. It strikes me too often as a sort of pantomime plus mysticism, or a sort of music plus mountebankery. It has the trappings of opera, without song. It is, in short, a part that aspires to be a whole.

It has, too, its elements of class snobbery. I recall an old communist who used to make his living—let us call it such—selling newspapers to the bourgeoisie. He would take me to task—I was then a fellow newsboy—for going to the opera. I was spending my hard-earned pennies, he told me, upon an amusement that had been nurtured in the lap of aristocracy, and that was meant only for the effete bourgeois. As for the ballet, which was part of every opera, that was a curse within a curse, a super-aristocratic indulgence in the midst of a dying bourgeois form.

Even at that time, to tell the truth, I found the ballet an intrusion. It halted the progress of the opera. Its real purpose, it seemed to my indignant and unjust spirit, was to provide for the more effete tired business men of the downstairs public the sort of stuff they could get more honestly at the burlesque show. In those days I was, like most young people, a moral person, and my indignations took a moralistic cast. Today, I can still see in the ballet not a little of this same element, but I can no longer feel moral about it.

Certainly I am not insensitive to the beauties of the human body. Certainly I am eager to discover ultimate meanings in what the body performs, by way of dance, against a background of art and music. Why, then, in all honesty, does the ballet bore me? For bore me does, despite everything I have done to overcome an instinctive aversion to the art. Why is it that, although I enjoy every element of which the ballet is composed, I cannot endure those elements when they are joined in the Dance? Why does this art so exhilarate others, and yet fill me with fatigue? Why do I honestly consider the better dancing choruses of the American musical comedy so much more entertaining than even the better ballet organizations of Europe, excepting only an occasional piece? Why does it offend me to see what the choreographers devise as interpretations of Tchaikovsky, or Brahms? Why, in a word, does the ballet strike me as a complicated charade, with all the childish associations that have been encrusted in that word?

What should be living sculpture leaves me cold as marble. Ballet seems to me, as compared with the drama or the opera, what an old-fashioned movie looks like compared to the finer type of talkie. It suggests something that is out-dated.

I am talking of the classical ballet. I shall come, presently, to the modern product. I find it very hard to regard the human body as an abstraction. When I hear a theme in a symphony, and am told that it represents Fate, I bridle at the imposition of philosophy upon sound, but it does not spoil my delight in the music as music. When, however, I behold a dancer garbed in green and black, with a scowl painted upon his face, following two blissfully unconscious maidens in bright hues, I cannot see Fate. I see human beings struggling with the frailties of the flesh, breathing hard, a living denial of the demonic and the angelic. That is why I can enjoy so much more the highly capable, but unpretentious, ballet of the better American musical comedy. The classical ballet is too much laden with its private mysticisms; a leg is no longer a leg, nor an arm an arm, nor a gesture a gesture: it becomes esoteric.

Ballet music should be devised for the ballet directly, not lifted from the symphonic repertory. Though here and there a choreographer shows great cleverness in adapting his action to the borrowed music, the logic of symphonic development is entirely different from that of ballet development, which belongs to the nature of the dancing. Ballet scenery, even, has no right to look like operatic or dramatic scenery. Ballet music and ballet scenery should each, in its own way, dance with the dancers. Why must ballets have messages of deep import to the human race? Why must dancers—and singers, too—go evangelistic? Why, for that matter, even on the radio, this passion of star entertainers for preaching?

I wonder whether ballet, classical or modern, is a matter for a whole evening's entertainment. There is, to me in any case, something of a strain in watching physical activity the

Over

35 its a Sop

from Fran

FIFTH AVE., bet. 47th an Pittsburgh: 225 Oliver Ave. • Chicago: 112

Newly decorated two, three or more terraces. All have full hotel service.
rant and Duplex
Permanent
The Bev
Ho
William A. Bue
ONE TWENTY-FIVE E

COLORED PAPER

2

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

FEB 13 1937

PIATIGORSKY COMBINES CONCERT TOUR AND HONEYMOON

Cellist Picks Haydn Work As Solo Here

Russian Artist Escaped Revolution by Sale Of Instrument.

By JAMES THRASHER

The nice thing about being a touring concert artist is that you can stay on the job during a honeymoon. That's what the Gregor Piatigorskys are doing.

When the famous Russian cellist arrives in town Monday for his solo appearance with the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday night, he will be accompanied with his bride of a few weeks. She is the daughter of Baron Edouard de Rothschild of Paris.

Mr. Piatigorsky is a familiar favorite with local audiences through his four recital appearances with the Maennerchor, but this will be his first engagement with the orchestra. Since his first American tour in 1929, he has been presented as soloist four times each with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony and Boston and Chicago Symphony Orchestras. He also has appeared with the symphony orchestras in Philadelphia, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Detroit.

Started In Movie House

Mr. Piatigorsky began his career at the age of 9, playing in the motion picture houses of his native city, Ekaterinoslav in the Russian Ukraine. He was his family's main support at the time, and continued in the cinema pit for six years while his fame as a musician spread. Finally, when he was 15, he was offered the position of first cellist at the Moscow Imperial Opera.

The Revolution came, and with it a decline in the Piatigorsky fortunes. Finally, by selling everything he owned—including his cello—the young artist got himself smuggled into Warsaw. After several odd jobs, he substituted for a cellist in the Warsaw Opera, later went to Leipzig, then to Berlin, where he attracted the attention of the noted pianist, Artur Schnabel.

Mr. Schnabel invited him to play in a quartet that included the Berlin Philharmonic's first flutist. Through this acquaintance, Mr. Piatigorsky got an audition with Furtwaengler, Philharmonic conductor, who appointed him first cellist.

Program Announced

From that time his fame spread rapidly. Soon he was forced to resign from the orchestra to fill concert engagements. He has appeared annually in the United States since 1929.

In Indianapolis Mr. Piatigorsky has chosen to play the Haydn Concerto in D Major. Ferdinand Schaefer, who will conduct, has announced the "Leonore, No. 2" Overture by Beethoven; Tschaikowsky's "Capriccio Italien," and Volkmann's Symphony in D Minor for the remainder of the program.

Mr. Schaefer, who wisely has built his programs in the orchestra's formative years to familiarizing his players with standard works, offers a novelty in Tuesday evening's symphony. It is the first of two symphonies by Friedrich Robert Volkmann, a Saxon who lived in the golden musical years of the 19th Century.

Encouraged By Schumann

Born in 1815. Volkmann studied first with his father and later in Freiberk. In 1836 he went to Liepzig where he received Robert Schumann's encouragement toward a musical career. After three years in Prague, he moved to Budapest. Except for four years in Vienna, he remained there until he died in 1883.

Besides the symphonies, he composed six string quartets, a cello concerto, arrangements of Mozart's and Schubert's songs and many miscellaneous works for solo voice and chorus.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TELEGRAM

FEB 12 1937

INFORMAL TALKS ON MUSIC IN HUB

Coincidental with the news that during their forthcoming spring visit to Boston, the Metropolitan Opera Company will present complete performances of the four music dramas comprising Richard Wagner's "Nibelungen Ring" cycle—unheard, as a whole, in Boston for many years—comes the welcome information that Wallace Goodrich, distinguished musician, conductor, and Director of the New England Conservatory of Music, will give two informal talks on the music of the "Ring" Saturday afternoons, Feb. 20 and 27, at 3 o'clock, in Jordan Hall.

An illustration of his remarks which incidentally, will be concerned more wiht purley musical aspects of these Wagnerian operas than with consideration of the stories themselves Mr. Goodrich is fortunate in having at his disposal the services of the New England Conservatory Orchestra: 85 student musicians, whose frequent concerts and radio broadcasts have made them one of the best known orchestral organizations in New England. To students of music, it is of additional interest that throughout these orchestral excerpts from the "Ring" dramas, to be played in demonstration of his remarks, Mr. Goodrich is using the original instrumentation.

On Saturday afternoon, Feb. 20, Mr. Goodrich will devote his program to a consideration of "Das Rheingold" and "Die Walkuere;" while on the 27th he will complete his survey of the "Ring" with comments on "Siegfried" and "Goetterdaemmerung."

The receipts of both concerts are in benefit of the New England Conservatory Sustaining Fund.

By reason of his long and illustrious career as organist conductor and educator, Mr. Goodrich is eminently fitted to make the subject of Wagner intensely interesting. As a young man he attended the Royal Academy of Music in Leipsig, afterwards also studying in Leipsig and Paris. Returning to his natve Boston in 1897, Mr. Goodrich became a faculty member of the New England Conservatory. From 1907 to 1930 he was Dean of the Faculty; and upon the retirement of George W. Chadwick as Director, Mr. Goodrich succeeded to that post. Early in that century Mr. Goodrich was organist at Trinity church, and also held the same post with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was founder and first conductor of the Choral Art Society, and was conductor of the Boston Opera Company for three years. During the war, Mr. Goodrich was active in the organization of army bands. He is the author of "The Organ in France," not last of the reason why, in 1935, the French government created him Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, as fitting reward for his loyal services to French music in America.

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

FEB 13 1937

Phonograph Music Now In Greater Demand, As Fine Recordings Appear

William Allen White Article Suggests Ways To Hear, Enjoy Classics; Gleemen Will Sing In Columbus

By OSCAR SMITH
Beacon Journal Music Editor

SOME years ago William Allen White, the sage of Emporia, wrote a magazine article which revealed him in a far happier vein than when he recently whooped it up for a fellow Kansan, Gov. Alf M. Landon.

* * *

THAT earlier article, "Memoirs of a Three-Fingered Pianist," depicted the various ways for a non-professional to hear and enjoy music. In it White did not stop with the usual consideration of operatic and concert stage music and a mention of radio.

* * *

HE WROTE: "Then with the phonograph he may learn much in his idle hours. This has been my method for three decades: To hear what I could first-hand, to take what I must second-hand and to enjoy it without shame and indeed in real pride."

Artur Schnabel

* * *

A HEALTHY revival of interest in phonograph music of the classical variety is under way today, according to the record dealers. This doesn't mean that there is any decline in the number of radio fans. It means that the music lover who has heard a broadcast of a Beethoven symphony, for example, has decided to own it in record form, so that he may hear it at will.

Not having the space to list all the excellent recordings now available, nevertheless I would like to suggest two new symphonic albums that will enrich the collection of any phonograph addict.

One is Schubert's poignant "Unfinished" symphony, superbly recorded by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky. For contrast, I also recommend Tschaikowsky's "Nutcracker Suite," without a trace of melancholy, played by the Philadelphia orchestra when Leopold Stokowski was its conductor.

Of course, when you go shopping for Beethoven records, just shut your eyes and pick any of his symphonies, and if you're especially lucky you'll get the Seventh, or the Ninth or the Fifth. In fact, Bethoven, Brahms and Schubert, to list only a few of the symphonic composers, are enough to provide you with temptation to spend money for records.

If you are a diligent record collector, of course you won't toss away your old recordings, despite the tremendous improvements phonograph companies are making in their products. Put on an old Caruso platter, and you will hear the same velvety, powerful voice that thrilled Metropolitan opera audiences a generation ago.

To Music

NOW to return to the above-mentioned article by "Bill" White, written in a decidedly non-political mood.

"For music is an emotional minx and requires youth," wrote the genial editor. "So, being a magician, she makes youth as she goes. If one keeps music for his mistress for life she will hold in him something gay, something irrepressible, possibly a bit mad but always free, until the end of his days.

"And of the many arts that man has known, music is the oldest and the youngest, the gayest, the most terrible, the dearest and the most devious of them all."

(Continued From Page 2.)

* * * * *

Tuesday Musical

ARTUR SCHNABEL, noted Austrian pianist, will be presented by the Tuesday Musical club at the armory on March 16. It is reported he will play an all-Beethoven program.

The story is told that when Schnabel, now middle-aged, was making one of his first appearances as a boy pianist, an elderly bearded man arose from a far corner of the room and asked: "How can you play all this so correctly?"

The elderly man was none other than Johannes Brahms, of whose compositions Schnabel has become one of the greatest exponents.

Schnabel frequently has said he doesn't in the least mind playing for only a hundred people. However, his recitals, invariably, are sold out to the doors.

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES ADVERTISER

FEB 14 1937

Miss Margaret Lawrence, of Plainfield, who is spending the Winter on Edgehill Street, and Miss Frances Boice, of the Lawrenceville Road, attended the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening in New York City, and will spend the week-end in the apartment of Miss Lawrence's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. James Lawrence. Miss Margaret Lawrence is a member of the faculty of Miss Fine's School.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

FEB 13 1937

The CONCERT

By CHARLES F. COLE

Jascha Heifetz at the Eastman

THERE can be little question that Jascha Heifetz stands alone now on his pinnacle as the great violinist of these times. The large audience which turned out to hear him last night at the Eastman Theater was rewarded with a matchless performance that should go down among their most prized musical memories.

It would be redundant to dwell on Heifetz's comprehensive and well nigh perfect technical equipment. A few years ago, it was the rule, whenever violinists were discussed, to say that Heifetz was the supreme master of violin technic, but that Kreisler was the greater because his music was of the soul, while Heifetz's was coldly perfectionist.

If that ever was the case, it is no longer true. Heifetz's playing last night, when the music called for it, had blazing fire, poetry, imagination and sentiment enough to satisfy the most emotional listener. But it was never exaggerated nor cloying. There were some concessions to popular taste in the second part of his program, but it never descended to triteness nor mere ostentation.

He played the opening "Allegro" by Mozart with the elegance and grace it required. Beethoven's "Sonata No. 3 (E flat)" which came next received the same understanding interpretation, with the rondo given a particularly flashing spontaneity.

The complete resources of the virtuoso were called into play in the Bach "Sonata (C major)" which concluded the first half of the concert and which he played, of course, unaccompanied. It is not exaggerating to say that it was a stupendous feat, one that left Heifetz physically exhausted . . . and the audience as well.

Without a noticeable error, he played the prodigiously taxing and decidedly geometric score with the effect of a quartet. There were four voices in the music, with thirds and sixths and contrapuntal passages, the melody skipping from one voice to another with what might well have been bewildering results. But Heifetz achieved an astonishing unity and logic and clarity to give the music its every due. Although the music is far from being popular fare, it brought thunderous applause.

Coruscating brilliance marked the Saint-Saens "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso" that followed the promenade interval. One of the high moments of the concert, for this listener, was "L'Apres Midi d'un Faune," by Debussy. A lush sensuousness, exquisite tone, imagery and poetic fire suffused its playing, lending to the somewhat decadently erotic music a beauty it possibly does not deserve.

Another exhibition of Heifet's seeming limitless virtuosity came in "Mediterranean" by Bax, with its tricky pizzicato passages. "Sea-Murmurs" by the extravagantly-named Castelnuovo-Tedesco, was another gem of superb tone and descriptive color.

With good reason, the audience gave Heifetz an ovation that lasted for some minutes, and he showed his appreciation by playing four encores in addition to his scheduled program.

His concert, in this reviewer's opinion, stands with that of the Boston Symphony as the two finest events of Rochester's 1936-37 music season.

A good measure of credit for the evening's success goes to Emanuel Bay, piano accompanist. In fact, in the first two numbers on the program, the honors were about equally divided between him and Heifetz, and in the others, his feeling and understanding of the violinist's mood and intentions were almost psychically attuned.

COLORED PAPER

208

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

FEB 10 1937

PIATIGORSKY COMBINES CONCERT TOUR AND HONEYMOON

Cellist Picks Haydn Work As Solo Here

Russian Artist Escaped Revolution by Sale Of Instrument.

By JAMES THRASHER

The nice thing about being a touring concert artist is that you can stay on the job during a honeymoon. That's what the Gregor Piatigorskys are doing.

When the famous Russian cellist arrives in town Monday for his solo appearance with the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday night, he will be accompanied with his bride of a few weeks. She is the daughter of Baron Edouard de Rothschild of Paris.

Mr. Piatigorsky is a familiar favorite with local audiences through his four recital appearances with the Maennerchor, but this will be his first engagement with the orchestra. Since his first American tour in 1929, he has been presented as soloist four times each with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony and Boston and Chicago Symphony Orchestras. He also has appeared with the symphony orchestras in Philadelphia, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Detroit.

Started In Movie House

Mr. Piatigorsky began his career at the age of 9, playing in the motion picture houses of his native city, Ekaterinoslav in the Russian Ukraine. He was his family's main support at the time, and continued in the cinema pit for six years while his fame as a musician spread. Finally, when he was 15, he was offered the position of first cellist at the Moscow Imperial Opera.

The Revolution came, and with it a decline in the Piatigorsky fortunes. Finally, by selling everything he owned—including his cello—the young artist got himself smuggled into Warsaw. After several odd jobs, he substituted for a cellist in the Warsaw Opera, later went to Leipzig, then to Berlin, where he attracted the attention of the noted pianist, Artur Schnabel.

Mr. Schnabel invited him to play in a quartet that included the Berlin Philharmonic's first flutist. Through this acquaintance, Mr. Piatigorsky got an audition with Furtwaengler, Philharmonic conductor, who appointed him first cellist.

Program Announced

From that time his fame spread rapidly. Soon he was forced to resign from the orchestra to fill concert engagements. He has appeared annually in the United States since 1929.

In Indianapolis Mr. Piatigorsky has chosen to play the Haydn Concerto in D Major. Ferdinand Schaefer, who will conduct, has announced the "Leonore, No. 2" Overture by Beethoven; Tschaikowsky's "Capriccio Italien," and Volkmann's Symphony in D Minor for the remainder of the program.

Mr. Schaefer, who wisely has built his programs in the orchestra's formative years to familiarizing his players with standard works, offers a novelty in Tuesday evening's symphony. It is the first of two symphonies by Friedrich Robert Volkmann, a Saxon who lived in the golden musical years of the 19th Century.

Encouraged By Schumann

Born in 1815, Volkmann studied first with his father and later in Freiberk. In 1836 he went to Liepzig where he received Robert Schumann's encouragement toward a musical career. After three years in Prague, he moved to Budapest. Except for four years in Vienna, he remained there until he died in 1883.

Besides the symphonies, he composed six string quartets, a cello concerto, arrangements of Mozart's and Schubert's songs and many miscellaneous works for solo voice and chorus.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TELEGRAM
FEB 12 1937

INFORMAL TALKS ON MUSIC IN HUB

Coincidental with the news that during their forthcoming spring visit to Boston, the Metropolitan Opera Company will present complete performances of the four music dramas comprising Richard Wagner's "Nibelungen Ring" cycle—unheard, as a whole, in Boston for many years—comes the welcome information that Wallace Goodrich, distinguished musician, conductor, and Director of the New England Conservatory of Music, will give two informal talks on the music of the "Ring" Saturday afternoons, Feb. 20 and 27, at 3 o'clock, in Jordan Hall.

An illustration of his remarks which incidentally, will be concerned more wiht purley musical aspects of these Wagnerian operas than with consideration of the stories themselves Mr. Goodrich is fortunate in having at his disposal the services of the New England Conservatory Orchestra: 85 student musicians, whose frequent concerts and radio broadcasts have made them one of the best known orchestral organizations in New England. To students of music, it is of additional interest that throughout these orchestral excerpts from the "Ring" dramas, to be played in demonstration of his remarks, Mr. Goodrich is using the original instrumentation.

On Saturday afternoon, Feb. 20, Mr. Goodrich will devote his program to a consideration of "Das Rheingold" and "Die Walkuere;" while on the 27th he will complete his survey of the "Ring" with comments on "Siegfried" and "Goetterdaemmerung."

The receipts of both concerts are in benefit of the New England Conservatory Sustaining Fund.

By reason of his long and illustrious career as organist conductor and educator, Mr. Goodrich is eminently fitted to make the subject of Wagner intensely interesting. As a young man he attended the Royal Academy of Music in Leipsig, afterwards also studying in Leipsig and Paris. Returning to his natve Boston in 1897, Mr. Goodrich became a faculty member of the New England Conservatory. From 1907 to 1930 he was Dean of the Faculty; and upon the retirement of George W. Chadwick as Director, Mr. Goodrich succeeded to that post. Early in that century Mr. Goodrich was organist at Trinity church, and also held the same post with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was founder and first conductor of the Choral Art Society, and was conductor of the Boston Opera Company for three years. During the war, Mr. Goodrich was active in the organization of army bands. He is the author of "The Organ in France," not last of the reason why, in 1935, the French government created him Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, as fitting reward for his loyal services to French music in America.

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

FEB 13 1937

Phonograph Music Now In Greater Demand, As Fine Recordings Appear

William Allen White Article Suggests Ways To Hear, Enjoy Classics; Gleemen Will Sing In Columbus

By OSCAR SMITH
Beacon Journal Music Editor

SOME years ago William Allen White, the sage of Emporia, wrote a magazine article which revealed him in a far happier vein than when he recently whooped it up for a fellow Kansan, Gov. Alf M. Landon.

* * *

THAT earlier article, "Memoirs of a Three-Fingered Pianist," depicted the various ways for a non-professional to hear and enjoy music. In it White did not stop with the usual consideration of operatic and concert stage music and a mention of radio.

* * *

HE WROTE: "Then with the phonograph he may learn much in his idle hours. This has been my method for three decades: To hear what I could first-hand, to take what I must second-hand and to enjoy it without shame and indeed in real pride."

Artur Schnabel

* * *

A HEALTHY revival of interest in phonograph music of the classical variety is under way today, according to the record dealers. This doesn't mean that there is any decline in the number of radio fans. It means that the music lover who has heard a broadcast of a Beethoven symphony, for example, has decided to own it in record form, so that he may hear it at will.

Not having the space to list all the excellent recordings now available, nevertheless I would like to suggest two new symphonic albums that will enrich the collection of any phonograph addict.

One is Schubert's poignant "Unfinished" symphony, superbly recorded by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky. For contrast, I also recommend Tschaikowsky's "Nutcracker Suite," without a trace of melancholy, played by the Philadelphia orchestra when Leopold Stokowski was its conductor.

Of course, when you go shopping for Beethoven records, just shut your eyes and pick any of his symphonies, and if you're especially lucky you'll get the Seventh, or the Ninth or the Fifth. In fact, Bethoven, Brahms and Schubert, to list only a few of the symphonic composers, are enough to provide you with temptation to spend money for records.

If you are a diligent record collector, of course you won't toss away your old recordings, despite the tremendous improvements phonograph companies are making in their products. Put on an old Caruso platter, and you will hear the same velvety, powerful voice that thrilled Metropolitan opera audiences a generation ago.

To Music

NOW to return to the above-mentioned article by "Bill" White, written in a decidedly non-political mood.

"For music is an emotional minx and requires youth," wrote the genial editor. "So, being a magician, she makes youth as she goes. If one keeps music for his mistress for life she will hold in him something gay, something irrepressible, possibly a bit mad but always free, until the end of his days.

"And of the many arts that man has known, music is the oldest and the youngest, the gayest, the most terrible, the dearest and the most devious of them all."

(Continued From Page 2.)

* * * * *

Tuesday Musical

ARTUR SCHNABEL, noted Austrian pianist, will be presented by the Tuesday Musical club at the armory on March 16. It is reported he will play an all-Beethoven program.

The story is told that when Schnabel, now middle-aged, was making one of his first appearances as a boy pianist, an elderly bearded man arose from a far corner of the room and asked: "How can you play all this so correctly?"

The elderly man was none other than Johannes Brahms, of whose compositions Schnabel has become one of the greatest exponents.

Schnabel frequently has said he doesn't in the least mind playing for only a hundred people. However, his recitals, invariably, are sold out to the doors.

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES ADVERTISER
FEB 14 1937

Miss Margaret Lawrence, of Plainfield, who is spending the Winter on Edgehill Street, and Miss Frances Boice, of the Lawrenceville Road, attended the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening in New York City, and will spend the weekend in the apartment of Miss Lawrence's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. James Lawrence. Miss Margaret Lawrence is a member of the faculty of Miss Fine's School.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
FEB 13 1937

The CONCERT

By CHARLES F. COLE

Jascha Heifetz at the Eastman

THERE can be little question that Jascha Heifetz stands alone now on his pinnacle as the great violinist of these times. The large audience which turned out to hear him last night at the Eastman Theater was rewarded with a matchless performance that should go down among their most prized musical memories.

It would be redundant to dwell on Heifetz's comprehensive and well nigh perfect technical equipment. A few years ago, it was the rule, whenever violinists were discussed, to say that Heifetz was the supreme master of violin technic, but that Kreisler was the greater because his music was of the soul, while Heifetz's was coldly perfectionist.

If that ever was the case, it is no longer true. Heifetz's playing last night, when the music called for it, had blazing fire, poetry, imagination and sentiment enough to satisfy the most emotional listener. But it was never exaggerated nor cloying. There were some concessions to popular taste in the second part of his program, but it never descended to triteness nor mere ostentation.

He played the opening "Allegro" by Mozart with the elegance and grace it required. Beethoven's "Sonata No. 3 (E flat)" which came next received the same understanding interpretation, with the rondo given a particularly flashing spontaneity.

The complete resources of the virtuoso were called into play in the Bach "Sonata (C major)" which concluded the first half of the concert and which he played, of course, unaccompanied. It is not exaggerating to say that it was a stupendous feat, one that left Heifetz physically exhausted . . . and the audience as well.

Without a noticeable error, he played the prodigiously taxing and decidedly geometric score with the effect of a quartet. There were four voices in the music, with thirds and sixths and contrapuntal passages, the melody skipping from one voice to another with what might well have been bewildering results. But Heifetz achieved an astonishing unity and logic and clarity to give the music its every due. Although the music is far from being popular fare, it brought thunderous applause.

Coruscating brilliance marked the Saint-Saens "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso" that followed the promenade interval. One of the high moments of the concert, for this listener, was "L'Apres Midi d'un Faune," by Debussy. A lush sensuousness, exquisite tone, imagery and poetic fire suffused its playing, lending to the somewhat decadently erotic music a beauty it possibly does not deserve.

Another exhibition of Heifet's seeming limitless virtuosity came in "Mediterranean" by Bax, with its tricky pizzicato passages. "Sea-Murmurs" by the extravagantly-named Castelnuovo-Tedesco, was another gem of superb tone and descriptive color.

With good reason, the audience gave Heifetz an ovation that lasted for some minutes, and he showed his appreciation by playing four encores in addition to his scheduled program.

His concert, in this reviewer's opinion, stands with that of the Boston Symphony as the two finest events of Rochester's 1936-37 music season.

A good measure of credit for the evening's success goes to Emanuel Bay, piano accompanist. In fact, in the first two numbers on the program, the honors were about equally divided between him and Heifetz, and in the others, his feeling and understanding of the violinist's mood and intentions were almost psychically attuned.

SCHOOL & SOCIETY
LANCASTER, PA.

SCHOOL AND SOCIETY
WITH WHICH ARE COMBINED THE EDUCATIONAL REVIEW, ESTABLISHED IN 1891, THE TEACHERS MAGAZINE, ESTABLISHED IN 1878, AND THE SCHOOL JOURNAL, ESTABLISHED IN 1874.

Volume 45 SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1937 Number 1155

COORDINATION: A PROPER WATCHWORD FOR THE UNIVERSITY OF TO-MORROW[1]

By DANIEL L. MARSH
PRESIDENT OF BOSTON UNIVERSITY

BEFORE beginning my address, may I not extend to Emory University, to President Cox and his associates in the board of trustees and in the faculty my heartiest congratulations upon this institution's attainment of one hundred years of service. Its epochal move was made when, not satisfied with the glamor of Oxford, it transferred to Druid Hills. Although I understand that these hills bore that ancient appellation before the university set its home here, yet there is something symbolical in the name, with suggestive connotations. The Druids were the real educators, and almost the only educated people, of that far-off Celtic past. They were the preachers and the teachers and the lawyers and the physicians and the chief influence in civil administration. Emory is training their modern counterpart to-day. But, in addition, the Druids were magicians. Some of us think that President Cox is performing that function here, else how has he gotten the money for this amazing development of Emory University? If he will conduct a class on Druid Hills for training in the knack of dextrous achievement of such a magician, he will probably find a large enrolment of college and university presidents! At any rate, I felicitate Emory upon her achieving past, and bid her God-speed and good cheer as she enters her second century.

My subject was announced in the public press as "The University of To-morrow." He would be a rash man who would seriously discuss such a subject; for although in astronomy and other sciences some things are predictable, yet in the university world it is better to follow the advice that James Russell Lowell put into his "Biglow Papers":

> My gran'ther's rule was safer'n 'tis to crow:
> Don't never prophesy—onless ye know.

And no man knows what the university of to-morrow will be. But we can give our judgment as to what it ought to be in some particulars. We can also, if we shrewdly observe, forecast what educational emphasis is likely to be the style in the near future. For there is a vogue in vocabularies from time to time as truly as in ladies' gowns; and educators are as prone to wear the stylish idea as women are to wear stylish headgear.

Experience convinces me that more coordination is needed in university education; and observation shows me a trend toward a larger measure of coordination. Therefore, as the subject of my address I have chosen: "Coordination: A Proper Watchword for the University of To-morrow."

1X —

---

[1] Centennial address at Emory University, December 12, 1936.

SCHOOL & SOCIETY
LANCASTER, PA.

The theme was suggested by a sentence in one of the preliminary announcements of Emory's centennial celebration. In that announcement, after a brief historical statement, it was declared that Emory University offers its one hundred years of experience to the furthering of educational service. Then comes the sentence which gave me my subject, namely: "Already begun is a program of coordinated development for a major university center of the Southeast in Atlanta."

That is a good way to celebrate a hundred years of service. Look back over the road that has been traveled, and rejoice in the progress made, the service rendered and the recognition received; but look back only as a careful automobilist looks into the mirror of his machine, looking back while he still faces the road ahead, and looking back only to see whether it is safe to pull out into the middle of the road and go with greater speed than before.

Our whole educational system, so far as we have a system, needs a larger measure of coordination. American educational institutions are traditionally self-contained. I would be the last person to advocate a rolled-out-flat conformity among our educational institutions; but they have been so jealous of their independent existence that a somewhat haphazard situation confronts us. The public-school system, having started in New England, and having been influenced by the New England "town meeting" psychology, has been retarded by its jealous regard for its local independence. Our higher education has mirrored the development of American government. Public opinion has not yet been consolidated behind a national school system. Indeed, most of the individual states lack an amalgamated public school system from elementary to higher education. No similarity obtains among the different state departments of education. Some states have a dual or even a triple system, fostering public schools, teachers' colleges and universities. Educational institutions have often been founded without any regard for educational needs. Taxpayers' money has frequently been spent in providing public higher education where privately endowed institutions were already answering to every possible need. The founding of tax-supported institutions has sometimes been inspired more by log-rolling politics and vote-getting hopes than by any ideal of public service. The result is rivalries and jealousies and compromises and narrow parochialism and wasteful duplications. The waste of money and energy has become more apparent during the recent depression—and this is one reason for the trend toward coordination.

This tendency toward mutual adjustment, or functioning in harmony, is not confined to our country. British universities, which have in the past been characterized by a more or less angular individualism, are now cooperating—and the measure of cooperation is on the increase. They have, in the last fifteen or twenty years, set up a University Bureau of the British Empire, with offices in London; a Vice-Chancellor's Committee, representing the different universities of Great Britain, which meets regularly at these offices; an Annual Conference of Universities of Great Britain and a Quinquennial Congress of the Universities of the Empire.

In America, the states of Florida, Idaho, Montana, New York and North Dakota have now each a single governing board in control of the entire tax-supported educational system of the state. Montana has unified the work of higher education in separate units in one organic university. New York State has developed coordinating and cooperating agencies, which, I am assured, put college and university education and professional training wholly outside the field of commercial enterprise. This is a consummation devoutly to be desired. America has too long acquiesced in the establishment of institutions that call themselves universities which honestly have no right to the term. We have seen the multiplication of educational institutions established for the financial benefit of proprietors, which solicit students who are fooled into thinking that they receive in these schools education equal to that which they receive in genuine universities.

1X —

But my theme relates not so much to tax-supported and publicly controlled institutions, or to politically directed coordination, as to the privately endowed and privately controlled university. Coordination between universities of this type is only such as public sentiment demands or voluntary agreement accomplishes. I believe that it would be a good thing for students in this country, as was formerly done in Germany, to migrate from one university to another, and from one section of the country to another, and thus get the benefits of new environment and new inspiration. But transfer of students and exchange of professors make some measure of coordination imperative. Such migration is possible only where faculties recognize each other's work. Non-recognition spells non-coordination.

It will doubtless be a long time before we can hope for any sort of general cohesion or uniformity in practise among the non-politically controlled universities of our whole country. It is possible, however, to develop regional coordination. In a recent suggestive and stimulating address at Boston University, Dr. Ernest W. Butterfield, distinguished commissioner of education for the state of Connecticut, advocated a New England university. He showed that New England was a social unit, virile and dominant. Then, after stating the problem that confronts present-day New England, he advocated the establishment of a New England university, and said:

> I have taken this subject because I hope that many New England institutions may feel that their main purpose is to give New England the education which it needs, that production and commerce and home comforts will make New England great, that no one state is large enough to train for all occupations, that the political organization of the several states does not make possible a corporate common unity, but that vocational schools, state-owned or dependent upon endowments and private benefactions, shall accept informal membership as colleges in an unchartered and idealistic New England university.

He then went on to expound his conception of what it would mean to have membership in this "unchartered and idealistic New England university," and concluded by saying that > Boston University, in spite of its limiting name and the denominational handicap of its origin, comes nearer this standard than any other of our institutions and may well serve as a nucleus for the development of this ideal. . . . There is a great place in public education that can be occupied by far-seeing institutions that were privately founded but are publicly minded.

The idea of a regionalist program is new in America, but it is old in France. At the time of the French Revolution, when some were advising the suppression of the University of Toulouse, a clever lawyer of that city advocated a regionalist program which is very much like the comprehensive program of that ancient university to-day. And, by the way, Abraham Flexner and others whose favorite pastime is the damnation of American universities by unfavorable comparison with European universities, because of the "riff-raff in the shape of business, journalism, etc.," in the former, should have their attention directed to the University of Toulouse with her new coordinated faculties and the institutes she scatters over the province: the Observatory, the Electro-technical Institute, the Institutes of Applied Chemistry, Agriculture and Child Welfare—eighteen institutes controlled by this one university.

1X

SCHOOL & SOCIETY
LANCASTER, PA.

And if this is not enough to show the diversity of interest of modern French universities, witness the Brewery School at the University of Nancy and the School of Watchmaking at Besançon. In British universities also one sees this tendency toward technological specialization. For instance, the University of London has a School of Journalism; the University of Leeds provides large equipment for the study of textiles, and the University of Birmingham conducts work in brewing.

Better coordination, or articulation, of high-school work with college work is a further need in this country. The curriculum of the upper years in the high school and the lower years in the college should be treated in a sequential way. The present hiatus between high school and college is bad. There should be a constant flow of work from one to the other instead of a dammed-up or turbulent stream.

In France, collaboration between secondary and higher education is not difficult; for their staffs receive the same training in the universities and in l'École Normale.

The British are further advanced in this respect than we are. Their secondary schools (apart from a few private and voluntary foundations like Eton and Rugby) are, like our own public schools, under the control of local education authorities, with the aid and inspection of the state. But the character and curriculum of secondary education are affected in various ways and to a great degree by the universities. Not only do the universities train the teachers and conduct matriculation examinations for scholarship awards; but they are actually the examining bodies for the secondary schools, prescribing the curriculum on which "certificates" ("passports into a career," they call them) are awarded, and conducting the examinations for "certificates." The control of this system of "passports" gives the universities a tremendous influence in the general scheme of national education.

In America, the problem has become more acute because of the depression. The inability of high-school graduates to find employment or to finance their college education has prompted some communities to add an extra year to the high-school course. This has increased the cost of education just when the public has been hypersensitive about the cost. Further tribute has been laid upon the taxpayer by the establishment of an increasing number of junior colleges. The worst thing about a public tax-supported junior college is that it is too often but little more than a glorified high school. Its best-trained teachers are seldom as well trained or as inspiring teachers as are even the mediocre ones in a good college. The equipment and environment are not as conducive to vigorous intellectual life as in a good college. The student is not thrown into association with the most cultivated of his contemporaries as he is in a good college. Perhaps for non-academically minded students the public junior college is all right, especially if it definitely plans to be a terminal institution. Such a junior college may satisfy the person who is content never to get beyond the intellectual paddock; but if he wants a vision of extended educational pastures, and an opportunity to canter along bridle paths through intellectual parks and to explore the far scholastic country, he will find his opportunities much better in a university college than in a junior college.

But I definitely do not wish to be guilty of that particular type of academic snobbery that prates about "the intellectual aristocracy." Selection for college may be only Calvinistic theology applied to education. If the old-time Calvinists believed that God elected certain persons to eternal salvation, the present-day educational descendants of those old Calvinists arrogate to themselves the functions that their forebears ascribed to God, and select certain persons for the full rich life that education affords. The old idea was an aristocracy of learning in three orders of knighthood: the first was theology; the second, law; the third, medicine. But to-day knighthood flowers in many other fields to which multitudes of young people might be admitted if only parents would take more interest in the education of their children, especially on the high-school level; if high schools would be more careful in the selection of their teachers; if more children in high schools were encouraged to take the regular cultural course instead of being sidetracked to so-called commercial and vocational courses.

IX —

Coordination is needed also among the several departments of a university. The November issue of the Journal of the Association of American Medical Colleges contained "A Report on the Correlation of Medical Aptitude Test Values, Pre-Medical Records, and Freshman Medical Grades for the Class of 1938, at Emory University," by Professor John Venable, of this institution. That study is suggestive of what can be done in the future to effect a proper correlation of the work of the college with the work of the graduate and professional schools.

Faculties in a university develop greater power than isolated faculties possibly can. This idea was well expressed by the great French philosopher, Victor Cousin. The reformers of French education aimed both at centralizing research and at revitalizing the French provinces. But long before the reformers appeared, these two aims had been formulated by Victor Cousin upon the creation of a faculty of medicine at Reims, when he declared:

> It is the intention of the Government to create in France a certain number of major centers of higher education, to become focuses of light for the provinces in which they are placed. Isolated faculties may have their advantages, but they can develop their maximum power only by uniting. A Law Faculty can hardly function without a Faculty of Letters, and a Faculty of Science is at once the basis and completion of a Faculty of Medicine. Thus it is that all human knowledge is bound together, and its parts support one another and impart to those who cultivate them an education both sound and broad, the true illumination of knowledge.

We need a better correlation among the various departments of a university in an academic sense not only, but also in a social and sentimental sense. Loyalty to the university is more important than loyalty to any one department of it, even as the whole is greater than any of its parts.

Our Boston Symphony Orchestra is an example of what is possible under proper management. This band is composed of nearly one hundred musicians, representing the finest soloists which can be obtained. Each man is perfectly competent to conduct the orchestra, arrange the music, stand with his instrument before the audience and play the solo part. Each is an artist, and knows it; yet, for the sake of harmony and the magnificent effect of a great organization, the players sink their personality, take the pitch from the concert master, the tempo from the conductor, and they play as one man.

Coordination of the subjects in a college or university curriculum is also a practical necessity for a full-orbed program of education. Time was when the educated man was an omnibus scholar, a master of the whole sum of human knowledge. But there has been such a vast increase in the body of knowledge in the recent past that its modicum comprehensible to even the greatest mind is but a small segment of the whole. Every principal science has begotten so many other sciences that a recital of them would sound like reading a genealogical chapter out of the Old Testament with modern scientific names substituted for the Hebrew names.

IX —

SCHOOL & SOCIETY
LANCASTER, PA.
FEB 13 1937

Science has become merely a means to give us "domination over matter by calculation." The consequence is that science is not an adequate foundation for educating the whole person. In some centers of research, intense specialization has strangled life out of the liberal arts. The cultural type threatens to become phantasmagorial and the universitas literarum to degenerate into a mere subject for convocational addresses.

The loss of popular interest in Latin and Greek is to be charged against professors of Latin and Greek whose meticulous study of minutiae has attracted attention away from the riches and glory inherent in the classics. Intense graduate training has concerned itself more with the minute subdivisions of a subject and with adding infinitesimally to knowledge than to imparting wisdom. Knowledge broken up into ten thousand fragments does not generate wisdom.

The Greek poets rhapsodized about the friendliness of the sister Muses; but to-day those Muses are victims of jealous rivalries. Disintegration of knowledge is a concomitant of intense specialization. In the present excessive departmentalization of knowledge and multiplication of courses and sub-courses, it is practically impossible for the student to find an organizing principle for constructing a sound educational program. Provincialism in space is bad. All sorts of bigotries and strife result from it. But provincialism in time is equally bad. It is tragical to live only in the present, knowing nothing and caring nothing for the great inheritances of the past. It is only through the means of a correlated curriculum that persons can adequately picture the world in which they live.

The real scholar is a person who possesses not only an inquiring mind, but who at the same time can see facts in their true relationships. The educational world to-day must lay new emphasis upon the education of the whole man. Whatever else you may call it, piecemeal information and uncoordinated particles of knowledge are not education.

Coordination of instruction requires flexibility in the curriculum, technique of curriculum construction and a clear-cut statement of objectives. Within the past year, at Boston University, I received from each professor in our faculty answers to three succinct questions: first, as to what he conceived to be the purpose of Boston University; second, the purpose of the college or school in the university with which he was primarily connected; and third, the purpose of the subject he was teaching or courses he was giving. The professors admitted that it was good for them to face these questions and to formulate answers for another to read. Incidentally, a perusal of the answers was helpful to the president also.

Coordination of the curriculum demands consideration of extra-curricular activities. These activities should be so related to different aspects of the curriculum as to find their stimulus from the classroom itself, being the informal educational processes of the university community. The gymnasium and athletic field should be laboratories for the department of physical education. Football as well as other athletic sports should be under the control of the faculty.

The original connotation of "university" was not as a place, but as an organization of scholars. When a place of higher learning was meant, the term used was "studium." "Studium publicum" or "studium generale" signified a place of study open to all. It is my opinion that a university stadium should be something of a "studium."

Coordination of the university with contemporary life is a further need to-day. We should integrate educational trends with social trends. The university should be the chief exponent of the functional unity of the educational process of the community, taking the leadership in working out an effective correlation and integration of the educational activities of the city. The urban university is saved from anemia by being plunged into the circulation and the throbbing of the everyday life of a great civic community.

The aims of a medieval university were well expressed in the old Oxford remark that a university ought to concern itself only with "the teaching of useless knowledge." The modern university admits that a full-orbed program of education will include the teaching of much that would be classified by medieval Oxford as "useless"; but it must aim chiefly to be useful. It may be likened unto a reservoir of life-giving water: then the positions filled by its graduates are a system of pipes and sluices distributing its flow over the plains of humanity, quickening stunted growth into flower and fruitage. But there is also a seepage and flow of the cultural influence of the university through fissures and conduits of student and faculty contacts—water flowing hidden underground, secretly making the ground green.

My final plea for coordination in a modern university is with the church. Practically every great old college and university in this land had a religious origin. Harvard, the oldest of them all, was named for a preacher, and was founded by the Puritans "to advance learning and perpetuate it to posterity; dreading to leave an illiterate ministry to the Churches, when our present Ministers shall lie in the dust." Yale was founded "to plant and under ye Divine blessing to propagate in this wilderness the blessed reformed Protestant religion in ye purity of its order and worship." Dartmouth was founded by the Congregationalists for the propagation of the Christian faith, and Amherst was established for the purpose of "educating for the gospel ministry young men in indigent circumstances, but of hopeful piety and promising talents." William and Mary was founded "that the church of Virginia may be furnished with a seminary of ministers of the gospel and that the youth may be piously educated in good letters and manners and that the Christian faith may be propagated among the Western Indians to the glory of Almighty God." Brown University and the University of Chicago and others were established by the Baptists; Princeton and the University of Pittsburgh and others, by the Presbyterians; Emory, Duke, Boston University, Northwestern, the Universities of Denver, Syracuse and Southern California, and seventy-five or a hundred other institutions of higher learning were established by the Methodists.

I have used other words from time to time as sidelights on what I mean by coordination. I have spoken of the amalgamation of a public educational system, of the articulation between high school and college, of the correlation of the college and professional schools, of the cohesion and cooperation among the several departments of a university, of the synthesis of subjects, and of the integration of the university program with contemporary life. My auxiliary word for the coordination of church and university is relation. We now speak of "church-related" institutions. The term suggests the state of being mutually or reciprocally connected or interested. It may mean a connection by birth or marriage. It hints at least at some kind of kinship.

This relationship does not necessarily need to be legal—perhaps a traditional or moral relation is better than a legal one. It need not be spectacular to be effective. The relation may be tenuous, yet enduring; obscure, but directive. Sometimes the public has been suspicious of such a relation because of real or imagined sectarian bigotry and intolerance displayed by the institution, or because of the trammelling and

SCHOOL & SOCIETY
LANCASTER, PA.
FEB 13 1937

restricting of the freedom of the college or university by the denomination. The day is past (if it ever existed) when any "church-related" college would think of drawing even the faintest line of demarcation between the service it renders to those of its own church and its service to those of any other church, or of no church. The country no longer fears discrimination on the part of the educational institution.

The church now happily regards its relationship to the university to be one of service. Instead of restricting freedom, the church will leap to the defense of academic freedom if that freedom should be endangered from any quarter.

Education must have freedom. Freedom means to be untrammelled, free from restraint, from fetters. Academic freedom means that each professor or student is free to seek the truth in his own way, to form his own opinions, to arrive at his own conclusions and to announce his own convictions. He is not to be limited by patented dogma, faint-hearted consideration, inherited tradition or acquired prejudices. He does not need to bend the knee to error nor to fawn before flattery nor to cringe before denunciation.

All advancement in human knowledge and all progress in civilization—from alchemy to chemistry, from astrology to astronomy, from wigwams to our modern homes, from fire-signaling to telephones and radios—have been achieved through fidelity to this principle of freedom of research.

Academic freedom is essential to genuine education; but when education boasts of its freedom and glibly quotes the words of Jesus, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," religion reminds education of the responsibility of freedom, quoting the words which Peter had learned of Jesus: "As free, and not using your freedom for a cloak of wickedness, but as bondservants of God." Religion reminds us of the limitations of liberty, the restraint of freedom—not limitations or restraints imposed by some external authority, but by one's own sense of the responsibility of freedom.

The idea of liberty has been perverted, distorted, mystified, until it is confused with license, and freedom with anarchy. False liberty means that man is free to do what he likes; true liberty means that he is free to do what he ought.

Many reciprocal values reside in a properly coordinated relation of church and university: chiefly, religious leadership thus has university training, and education has the synthesis and moral dynamic which a vital and intelligent religion alone can give.

Religion, I say, furnishes the necessary synthesis for fragmentary education. The medieval universities—whether at Bologna, Paris, Oxford, Cambridge, Prague, Heidelberg or elsewhere—were all made up of ecclesiastical philosophy and canon law, together with a desultory inheritance of antiquity in the scheme of the septem artes liberales, coordinated with monastic forms in a community of work and social intercourse.

The modern universities of Europe, and of our own country as well, have been lacking in a common idea of learning. There has been no cohesion of knowledge; no unifying synthesis; no hierarchy of principles under one lordly principle. Universities have been powerful and influential when they have been in surest possession of that coordinating idea. They had it in the unitas intellectus of Thomas Aquinas in the period of scholasticism. They had it in reason in the period of enlightenment. But our scientific age, introduced by the Positivism of Auguste Comte, has left us with a psychology that is behavioristic instead of purposive in character; a philosophy that is naturalistic instead of personalistic; a logic that is analytic instead of synoptic; a knowledge that is fragmentary instead of a deep oneness.

IX

The other value which I mentioned as residing in a properly coordinated church-related university is the sense of moral direction which religion gives. Education implies the accumulation and conveyance of factual knowledge. But religion insists that knowledge alone is not enough. Mathematics may be used to rob a bank; chemistry may be used to kill; penmanship may be used to forge a check; psychology may be used to cheat one's fellows.

Education alone is not enough. Nothing has saddened educators more than the recurrent evidence that the conquering of vice has not kept pace with the conquering of ignorance. Many of the most fiendish criminals have been "educated" according to the ordinary meaning of the term. The conquest of ignorance does not necessarily mean the conquest of poverty and crime. No education is complete that does not give us knowledge plus moral control. Religion energizes as well as inspires education.

As I conceive it, real education means that the individual has been led out into an efficient and rightly integrated personality, at home not only in the actual world in which he lives, but at home also with the ultimate spiritual forces that lie behind it. The living of the full life requires a complex equipment by which one makes adjustments in the spheres of science, the humanities, psychology, contemporary living and all the rest. But to live the fullest life it is essential that this complex equipment should be integrated into a personal religion. Then, and only then, the individual has in his life a center and source of moral authority, a moral dynamic which safeguards character and gives it direction.

small cities, for that matter. The physical planning and construction and the educational designing that went into the Cleveland system may be found in the records. The integrity and good sense that supported that management in this original operation are the abstract things for which this country is crying. This Mr. Williams supplied.

Mrs. Williams, no doubt, introduced her husband to the school business, but, for that matter, they were both socially minded, and with a prosperous manufacturing business in the background, they could indulge their fancies in the social scheme. Mrs. Williams first organized a public school center for crippled children and provided comfortable transportation for them. This school program awakened Mr. Williams's interest. When, a little later, he was invited to become a board member, Mr. Williams accepted and served on the Cleveland Board of Education twenty years—five years in volved. As an assurance of official justice, efficiency and executive foresight, he arranged for independent surveys. Be it said of surveys that he was interested in but two phases of a survey: the competency of the surveying agency and the report. I recall when I came to the superintendent's office how I used to be staggered by the expense of these surveys and very possibly I feared the revelations of some bad slips in management, but he was quietly inexorable and he took a "let the chips fall" attitude. I remarked, "We could organize through our department of research a continuous survey." Mr. Williams remarked without comment, "I believe this is a better way, Mr. Superintendent." It is obvious that neither of us would have survived except for his better way.

The first survey was initiated in 1915–16 when Mr. Edward Bushnell was president and Mr. Williams a member of the board.

209

AKRON, O.
TIMES PRESS
FEB 14 1937

Excellent Schnabel Records Make Pianist No Stranger

WHEN Arthur Schnabel, famous Austrian pianist, comes to Akron next month, he will not come as a stranger to most of Akron's music lovers. The splendid recordings he has made for Victor have introduced him in the eloquent manner that this great artist deserves.

If you are planning to attend the all-Beethoven recital which Mr. Schnabel will present under the auspices of the Tuesday Musical Club March 16, and are not already familiar with the technique and tone that has made this pianist world famous, it is suggested that you stop in one of the phonograph departments and get acquainted with him through one or more of these recordings he has made of the works of Beethoven.

Concerto No. 1 in C Major with London Symphony—M-158.

Concerto No. 1 in B Flat Major with London Philharmonic—M-295.

Concerto No. 3 in C Minor with London Philharmonic—M-194.

Concerto No. 4 in G Major with London Philharmonic—M-156.

Concerto No. 5 in E Flat Major, "Emperor" with London Symphony—M-155.

Mr. Schnabel began to study piano at the age of 5 with the great teacher, Leschititsky, and at 10 began public concert work. He made his debut in the United States in 1921, and has grown phenomenally in popularity since that time. He enjoys the title of foremost living interpreter of Beethoven, and although he occasionally includes Mozart, Schumann, Brahms and other great composers in his repertoire, it is Beethoven that he loves most and plays best.

Tschaikowsky: Symphony No. 4 in F Minor. Played by Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitsky. Victor M-327.

A new recording of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, the F Minor, has just been issued by Victor. It is recorded by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra and is a marked mechanical improvement over the Stokowski album of this symphony made several years ago. In interpretation, as well, this new recording has several advantages to those of us who prefer to have our Tschaikowsky with some slight restraint. Not that Koussevitsky plays him down, but he does a less flamboyant, less lush piece of conducting than does Stokowski in this particular symphony, and a great many music lovers will be glad to supplant their old set with this new one for that reason.

The F Minor is a much happier piece of music than the composer's famous Fifth and Sixth. And although the Fifth with its beautiful theme is perhaps the most beloved of the three, and the Sixth with its pyramics probably the most breathtaking, the Fourth in F Minor has its superlative qualities, also. Written shortly after Tschaikowsky's financial troubles were relieved through the kindness of Nadejda von Meck, this work has optimism and fine spirit, an abundance of melody, humor and virility. It is dedicated to "my best friend"—generally believed to be his benefactor, Mme. von Mec%. She has recently published a book, "Beloved Friend," which is made up largely of the correspondence between herself and the composer.

It is difficult to say which are the high moments of this admirably conducted and recorded piece of music. Possibly one of them is the lovely solo for strings in the latter half of the first movement. There is a contrasting wood-wind, and the accompaniment is done entirely by the tympani. The effect is charming, and rather surprising.

Symphony No. 6, the "Pathetique" has also been recorded under the baton of Serge Koussivitsky. The Fifth is available in a beautifully done recording by Stokowski.

CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER
FEB 14 1937

Famous Violin Virtuoso to Be Heard Here Soon Is Now a Clevelander

BY HERBERT ELWELL

THE fact that Samuel Dushkin is now in a sense a Clevelander gives special interest to his forthcoming appearance with the Cleveland Orchestra, Feb. 25 and 27. Though this famed violinist has a winter residence in Paris, he has made Cleveland his summer home since his marriage to Louise Rorimer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Rorimer of Cleveland, and he does his summer practicing in a cabin workshop on the Rorimer estate in the Chagrin Valley.

HERBERT ELWELL

His first professional appearance here will be at the next regular symphony concerts in Severance Hall, where he will present Stravinsky's violin concerto under the direction of the composer, who will be guest conductor at that time.

For some time Dushkin has been closely associated with Stravinsky. Their meeting in Germany in 1930 and the friendship which sprang up between them is described by Stravinsky in his book, "Chronicle of My Life." They have concertized together in many countries, and strongly reminding one of the artistic collaboration between Brahms and Joachim, or between Mendelssohn and David, they have worked together on violin transcriptions of Stravinsky's compositions and in many ways have profited by each other's counsel.

One of the results of their collaboration was the Violin Concerto, and on the fly-leaf of the printed score is to be found this inscription in French, signed by Stravinsky: "This work was first performed under my direction Oct. 23, 1931, at a concert of the Berlin Rundsunk by Samuel Dushkin, to whom I remain deeply grateful and for the high artistic value of whose playing I have a great admiration."

Dushkin was also the first violinist to perform another outstanding modern composition for violin, Ravel's "Tzigane," introduced by Pierre Monteux in Amsterdam.

A Cosmopolite

Dushkin is truly cosmopolitan, with national ties pulling in several directions. He was born in Russian Poland, but he is an American citizen, for as a boy he was brought to New York and placed under the tutelage of Fritz Kreisler. He also studied with Leopold Auer. The late Blair Fairchild, composer and famous American patron of music, became interested in the young violinist and made it possible for him to spend his summers in Paris. At the age of 14 Dushkin went there to live with Fairchild, and has thus had a very broad international background.

Having concertized since he was a youngster, Dushkin has appeared as soloist with many European orchestras under such conductors as Walter, Arbos, Wolff, Adrian Boult, and Albert Coates. In this country he has played with the Boston Orchestra under ~~Koussevitsky~~, the Philadlphia Orchestra under Stokowski, and the St. Louis Orchestra under Golschmann. He was to have been soloist with the New York Philharmonic this season, but an unfortunate accident necessitated postponement of this engagement.

Copland Here

The name of Aaron Copland should not be strange to readers of this column. Besides numerous previous references to this outstanding American composer, his biographical data has appeared here twice this season, owing to the fact that Rodzinski had twice scheduled his "Dance Symphony" for performance at a Cleveland Orchestra concert. Because of circumstances, presumably unavoidable, this work was not brought to performance here, though Rodzinski intends to conduct it in New York at a concert sponsored by the League of Composers during his guest-conductorship of the New York Philharmonic.

In good time to prepare us for the Stravinsky program by the Cleveland Orchestra next week, Copland comes here to lecture on Stravinsky's music at the Cleveland Museum of Art at 4 this afternoon. He is brought here by the museum in co-operation with the Women's City Club.

Being a capable pianist who was able to present creditably the solo part of his piano concerto when it was given with orchestra under Koussevitsky, he will illustrate his lecture at the piano. Copland has appeared in lecture recitals in numerous American cities. He is lecturer at the New School for Social Research in New York, and in the spring of 1935 he gave a lecture course at Harvard University.

Following the lecture, Arthur W. Quimby will give his regular half-hour recital of organ music in the garden court of the museum at 5:15. He will repeat his February program consisting of works by Buxtehude, Handel, Vierne and Bach.

Russian Music

The choir of St. Theodosius' Russian Orthodox church, under the direction of A. P. Glagolev, will be presented in a concert of Russian choral music at the Cleveland Museum of Art Wednesday evening at 8:15. Forming one of the most distinctive events in the museum musical season, this colorful local choir will present both ecclesiastical music the national folk music of Russia and will appear in their picturesque national costumes.

The first part of the program will contain religious songs by Tschesnokoff, Gretchaninoff, Allemanoff, Kastalsky and Rachmaninoff. Later will come some folk songs. There will be a duet, "Dubinuska," by Tschesnokoff, sung by S. O. Hamburger and Vladimir Boruch. And closing numbers will be choruses from Tschaikowsky's opera, "Cherevichki," and "Roussalka," by Dargomijsky. The accompanist is Vera Zaiats. These musical events at the museum are free to the public.

Bandmaster Mourned

Mention should be made here of the loss to Cleveland music in the lamented passing of Frank P. Russo, bandmaster. Though few may remember the first concert of Russo's Band in the Grays Armory as far back as 1905, there are many who have since enjoyed his concerts in the city parks, the last of which under his direction was given in 1932.

This native of Palermo, Italy, who received high honors for his musicianship in Padua where he studied for eight years, won a wide circle of admirers here and was highly respected by his musical colleagues. He was known as a composer and was at one time highly praised by Sokoloff for the symphonic arrangements he made for Leon Ziporkim, soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra.

His place as leader of the Russo Band has been ably filled by his son, Al Russo, who gave a successful series of concerts in the city parks last summer.

Stars of the Music World

SAMUEL DUSHKIN

AARON COPLAND

A. P. GLAGOLEV

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
FEB 14 1937

W. P. A. Music

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony "Pops" Orchestra and Esplanade concerts, will appear as guest-conductor of the Civic Symphony Orchestra, in Irvine Auditorium, this afternoon at 3.30 o'clock, the concert being one in a series of regular Sunday afternoon events sponsored jointly by the W. P. A. Federal Music Project and the University of Pennsylvania School of Fine Arts.

The program includes the second symphony, in D major, of Johannes Brahms; Mozart's "Impresario" overture; Corelli's suite for string orchestra; Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" overture and Ibert's "Divertissement."

The incidental piano solos in the Ibert work are to be played by G. Lee Berger, Schuylkill Haven pianist.

WORCESTER, MASS.
POST
FEB 15 1937

Stockbridge Estate Offered Symphony

BOSTON, Feb. 15 (AP)—Trustees of the Berkshire Music Festival Corporation came to Boston today to confer with directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over an ~~offer to~~ the symphony of a summer estate in Stockbridge for a summer headquarters.

The offer of Tanglewood estate on the north shore of Mahkeenac Lake was made by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Boston.

21

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Evening Public Ledger
FEB 15 1937

MUSIC—Civic Symphony Orchestra

By SAMUEL L. LACIAR

Arthur Fiedler, of Boston, conductor of the famous "Pop" concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Mr. Fiedler is a member, and of other musical organizations of that city, was guest conductor of the Civic Symphony Orchestra of this city at its regular Sunday concert in Irvine Auditorium of the University of Pennsylvania yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Fiedler presented an interesting and well-balanced program and showed himself to be an orchestral leader of experience, talent and high musicianship. The principal number was the D major symphony of Brahms (No. 2), of which he gave a sensitive and musicianly reading, this being especially the case with the impressive adagio and the beautiful slow scherzo, the two middle movements of the symphony. Mr. Fiedler demonstrated that he knew exactly what he wanted from the orchestra and how to get these results and he received an ovation from the much too small audience which heard the concert.

The novelty of the program was a Divertissement by Jacques Ibert, contemporaneous French composer, which was given for the first time in Philadelphia, although his "Ecales" has been performed here several times. The Divertissement proved to be a witty, sometimes satirical and sometimes jolly piece of music in six short movements, all of which were of much interest.

The "Cortege," for example, opened with a funeral theme and then branched off into processional music of several kinds, the solemn opening being followed by a lively subject, while the first eight notes of Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" from the "Midsummer Night's Dream" music was twice interpolated. The waltz, which followed a modified version of the famous Vienna waltzes of Johann Strauss, was a lively number and the most popular of the six movements, from the viewpoint of the audience.

The other numbers were an introduction, a Nocturne with a remarkable piano introductory part; "Parade," a pompous little number, and a Finale, which strongly resembled a Sousa march in atmosphere. Ibert has used a good deal of the modern idiom both in his harmonization and in his instrumentation, employing such effects as "flutters" on the muted trumpet, et cetera, these generally found in jazz. The Divertissement was cordially received by the audience.

A suite by Corelli, for the strings of the orchestra alone, proved to be a charming number written in the formal style of that composer's period and well interpreted and performed. The other numbers were Mozart's seldom-heard overture to "The Impresario," which opened the concert, and Wagner's "Tannhauser" overture, in the Dresden version, which closed it.

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE
FEB 16 1937

Symphony Orchestra Given Lenox Estate

BOSTON, Feb. 16. — (UP)— "Tanglewood," beautiful 210-acre estate at Lenox and Stockbridge, where Nathaniel Hawthorne penned some of his classics, has been presented outright to the Boston Symphony orchestra as a permanent site for the Berkshire symphonic festivals, it was announced to-day.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
FEB 16 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY IS GIVEN ESTATE

Boston, Feb. 16.—(UP)—"Tanglewood," beautiful 210-acre estate at Lenox and Stockbridge, where Nathaniel Hawthorne penned some of his classics, has been presented outright to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent site for the Berkshire symphonic festivals, it was announced today.

The gift, which has been accepted by the orchestra trustees, was made by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwal Tappan. Mrs. Brooks is a granddaughter of William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant prince, who in 1849 created the famous estate.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
FEB 16 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY TAKES TANGLEWOOD

Accepts 210-Acre Lenox Estate for Summer Concert Site

BOSTON, Feb. 16 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees today announced they had accepted the gift of Tanglewood, 210-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge, exclusive Summer residential resorts for society folk in the East.

The estate, where Nathaniel Hawthorne made his home in the Berkshires and wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales," will be used as a permanent home for the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

It was offered to the orchestra trustees by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, of Brookline.

Its use as a permanent home for the Summer concerts was approved by the Symphonic Festival executive committee at the same time the orchestra trustees announced acceptance of the gift.

Work will be started this Spring on the construction of a suitable enclosure to accommodate five thousand persons, average attendance at the 1936 festival. Executive committee members have launched a program to raise funds for the construction.

The festival this year will be twice as long as in 1936. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give six concerts under direction of Serge Koussevitsky during its course. Music lovers from 25 states, Canada and Europe attended the Summer concerts last season.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
FEB 16 1937

Boston Symphony Accepts Gift Of Lenox Estate For Berkshire Festival

BOSTON, Feb. 16.—(AP)—Boston Symphony orchestra trustees today announced they had accepted the gift of Tanglewood, 210-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge.

The estate, where Nathaniel Hawthorne made his home in the Berkshires and wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales," will be used as a permanent home for the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival

It was offered to the orchestra trustees by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Brookline.

Its use as a permanent home for the summer concerts was approved by the symphonic festival executive committee at the same time orchestra trustees announced the acceptance of the gift.

Work will be started this spring on the construction of a suitable enclosure to accommodate 5,000 persons, average attendance at the 1936 festival. Executive committee members have launched a program to raise funds for the necessary construction.

The festival this year will be twice as long as in 1936. The Boston Symphony orchestra will give six concerts under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky during its course.

Music lovers from 25 states, Canada and Europe attended the summer concerts last season.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
FEB 16 1937

'Tanglewood' Great Stockbridge Estate, Given to Boston Symphony Orchestra

---

PITTSFIELD, MASS
EAGLE
FEB 16 1937

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL'S FUTURE IS ASSURED WITH TANGLEWOOD ACCEPTANCE

Trustees of Boston Symphony Orchestra Announce Acceptance of Gift of 210 Acre Estate in Lenox and Stockbridge From Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Her Aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan — Festival Group Approving Site, Starts Immediately to Raise Building Funds.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, an outstanding success in 1936, is assured a permanent feature of the summer life of this region. The Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees today announced acceptance of the gift of Tanglewood, 210-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge which was offered by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Brookline.

Rich in Tradition

At the same time, the executive committee of the Festival approved the use of Tanglewood as a permanent home for its summer concerts. Tanglewood, rich in tradition, was where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires and where he wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and laid the plot for "The House of Seven Gables." This beautiful estate, off West Street in Lenox, looks across Stockbridge Bowl to Mt. Everett, second highest peak in Massachusetts.

To Raise Funds

In other years, the Festival took place on vacant Berkshire estates. With a permanent site assured, the Berkshire committee recognized the need for a suitable enclosure and set to work immediately to raise the necessary funds. Construction will start this spring on lines that will harmonize with the natural surroundings. It is planned to acommodate an audience of 5000 persons, the average attendance at the 1936 Festival.

The 1937 season will be twice as long as last year. There will be six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky on the Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays of the first two week-ends in August.

Two Groups Meet

A meeting of the two groups concerned was held at the office of Bentley W. Warren, 30 State

Continued From First Page

Street, Boston, president of the trustees of the orchestra. At this meeting were Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the Festival, and her executive committee

Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Stockbridge and Norval H. Busey Jr., of New York and Lenox; John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, former Bell Telephone Company vice-president; Robert E. Wheeler of Great Barrington, George W. Edman and Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield, and Joseph Franz of Stockbridge. Trustees of the orchestra present included Allston Burr, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Henry B. Sawyer, Edward A. Taft, and Mr. Warran.

Mrs. Brooks is the granddaughter of William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant and banker, who in 1849 created the estate where the concerts will be given. On the estate is a notable grouping of gardens, each surrounded by old, closely trimmed hemlock hedges. These gardens will provide a unique open-air foyer for use during intermissions.

The site of Hawthorne's little red cottage, which was burned June 22, 1880, is commemorated by a bronze tablet.

Neighboring Estates

Other notable estates near Tanglewood are owned by Mrs. William Norton Bullard, Mrs. de Heredia, George Lee Higginson and Grenville L. Winthrop.

Residents of 25 States, Canada and Europe made advance reservations for the 1936 Festival, so widely representative as to justify the predictions of the Festival Association that America is no longer content with the winter season of symphony concerts. New England, long known as the summer playground, can now offer an unusual cultural attraction, and the Berkshires as the gateway to New England are ideally located to accommodate these music lovers.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
FEB 16 1937

Boston Symphony Gets Famous Estate In The Berkshires

PITTSFIELD, MASS
EAGLE
FEB 17 1937

Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., will meet with the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith at No. 1 Sutton Place, South, New York, next Wednesday to approve the action of the executive committee with the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for continuing the summer concerts on a permanent basis on the permanent site, Tanglewood in Lenox and Stockbridge. The estate is the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Brookline.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
POST
FEB 17 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY ACCEPTS ESTATE

Scene Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales To Be Site of Summer Festival.

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS
FEB 17 1937

210-Acre Estate Prese For Symphony in Be

Festival Association Starts C Funds to Erect Auditorium to Listeners; Concerts to Be in

---

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
JOURNAL
FEB 17 1937

Estate Goes To Symphony

By Associated Press

BOSTON, Feb. 17.—Boston

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
FEB 17 1937

The Berkshire Prospects.

Interesting news from the Berkshires is that which tells that the historic Tanglewood estate on the

---

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
FEB 17 1937

Music Festival Gets Home

Boston—(AP)—Boston Symphony

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat Chronicle
FEB 17 1937

Orchestra Accepts Tanglewood Estate

Boston —(AP)— Boston Symphony

BANGOR, ME.
COMMERCIAL
FEB 17 1937

Estate Given To Boston Symphony

Boston, Feb. 17 — (AP) — Boston

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
FEB 17 1937

✓

FESTIVAL HOME

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
FEB 17 1937

210-Acre Site For Berkshire Festival Taken

Offer of Tanglewood Estate as Permanent Location Is Accepted by Board

Building Fund Sought

Structure to Seat 5,000 at Six Concerts in August

The trustees of the Boston Sym-

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

FEB 16 1937

Orchestra Gets Old Estate Used By Hawthorne

Tanglewood to Be Scene of Berkshire Festivals

BOSTON, Feb. 16 (UP).—Tangle-

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 17 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY GETS BERKSHIRE SITE

Accepts Gift of Tanglewood—Building of Enclosure to Seat 5,000 Planned

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
BOSTON, Feb. 16.—The trustees

NORWICH. N. Y.
SUN

FEB 17 1937

ACCEPT ESTATE FOR SYMPHONY FESTIVALS

Boston, Feb. 17 (AP) — Boston symphony orchestra trustees yes-

---

N. Y. TELEGRAPH

FEB 17 1937

Boston Symphony Given Big Estate

BOSTON, Feb. 16. — "Tanglewood," beautiful 210-acre estate at

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

FEB 18 1937

Boston Symphony Gets 210-Acre Estate

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

FEB 18 1937

Cause to Blush

BOSTON, Feb. 18 (INS)—A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and an orchestra leader in his own right, Arthur Fiedler was revealed today as unaware of a number he should know by heart.

He blushed when he was asked his telephone number.

"I'll have to look it up in the directory," he explained. "You see, I never have any occasion to call myself up."

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

FEB 18 1937

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will conduct the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festivals of the future in Stockbridge at the 210-acre estate, Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales." The Berkshire mountain residence has been accepted by the Boston trustees and will serve as the festival's permanent home.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS.
NEWS

FEB 19 1937

"The Boston Symphony is diggin itself in more deeply. It has not been endowed with a handsome Berkshire estate as permanent setting fo its summer concerts.

NEWARK, N. J.
STAR EAGLE

FEB 17 1937

2

Off The Record

It was left to Tin Pan Alley to produce "Serenade to a Wealthy Widow," but, without meaning to be profane, an amusing analogy can be drawn between the popular tune and the history of Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor. This magnificent work has just been recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky and released by Victor in Album M-327.

Peter Ilich Tschaikowsky, like many young musicians, was in sore financial straits and his morbid sensitiveness and brooding were reflected in most of his works.

His troubles were heard of by a wealthy widow of the period, one Nadejda von Meck. It is related that with great tact, the lady managed to place herself in the position of patron and established for Tschaikowsky an annual income which relieved him of financial worries.

It was immediately after this happy windfall that Tschaikowsky composed his Fourth Symphony, dedicated in his own words, "to my best friend"—accepted as meaning Mme. von Meck. The symphony itself is striking in its optimism and humor and here is beautifully presented in all of its shades.

In the first of the four movements, Tschaikowsky demonstrates his mood. He sighs—but not with the long-drawn agonies of the Pathetique. Here, rather, is a sigh of relief and peace. This theme is carried through to one of joy and exaltation in the last movement.

Another Victor release that you will find well worth your while is listed as "Stars of the Metropolitan." On five two-sided records you are offered the following operatic treats:

Lawrence Tibbett, singing the "Toreador March" from "Carmen," and "Largo al Factotum" from the "Barber of Seville"; Lily Pons, coloratura soprano, singing the "Caro Nome" from "Rigoletto"; Richard Crooks, tenor, singing "Le Reve" from "Manon"; Helen Jepson, soprano, singing "Depuis Le Jour" from "Louise," and Lauritz Melchoir, tenor, "Die Walkure," Act 1, Secene 3; Lotte Lehman, soprano, "Die Walkure," Act 1, Scene 3; John Charles Thomas, baritone, "Thy Home in Fair Provence," from "La Traviata"; Lucrezia Bori, soprano, "Mi Chiamano Mimi" from "La Boheme," and Giovanni Martinelli, "Celeste Aida" from "Aida."

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS

FEB 19 1937

MITROPOULOS NAMED SYMPHONY'S LEADER FOR NEXT 2 SEASONS

Dimitri Mitropoulos, 40-year-old Greek conductor, composer and pianist, has been engaged to lead the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra the next two seasons, it was announced at a concert of the orchestra Thursday night in Northrop auditorium on the University of Minnesota campus.

Mitropoulos was guest conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra the past two seasons and is the first Greek ever to lead a major orchestra in this country.

Symphony review on page 8.

Symphony Review

By FRANCES BOARDMAN.

Shouts of approval greeted the announcement Thursday evening at the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra's concert in Northrop auditorium, that Dimitri Mitropoulos, recently guest-director of the ensemble, has been engaged as its conductor for two seasons of eighteen weeks each.

Elbert L. Carpenter, president of the Orchestral association, made the announcement, adding that the remainder of the year would be in the hands of a young European composer-conductor whose name would shortly be disclosed.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

FEB 20 1937

Berkshi

'Tanglewood' In Berkshires Festival Site

Insures Continuance of Program Begun in 1936

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

FEB 19 1937

Pittsfield, Mass., Feb. 19, (AP)—Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 19 1937

MITROPOLOUS NAMED MINNEAPOLIS LEADER

Greek Artist Is Selected to Conduct Symphony Orchestra for Next Two Seasons

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 18 (AP).—Dmitri Mitropolous, who two weeks ago was guest conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, will be conductor of the orchestra the next two seasons.

Engagement of Mitropoulous was announced at tonight's symphony concert by E. L. Carpenter, president of the Orchestral Association.

Mitropolous made his American début as a guest conductor for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence, R. I., on Jan. 21, 1936. Three nights later he made his appearance in Boston. Olin Downes, music critic of THE TIMES, then wrote:

"Conducting without score and without baton, and securing a magnificent response from the orchestra, Mr. Mitropolous had a great and legitimate success."

He was born in Athens and began early to study piano. After completing his preliminary education, he went to Berlin and began his studies under the pianist composer, Busoni. He later appeared as piano soloist with orchestras in the leading European cities. A few years ago he became conductor of the orchestra of the Athens Conservatory.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

FEB 19 1937

FESTIVAL HEADS CONSIDER SEATING

May Raise Funds for Structure Seating 5,000 at Summer Berkshire Concerts.

The trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., will meet in New York city next Wednesday to discuss raising of funds in order to build a structure that will accommodate 5,000 listeners at the Boston Symphony orchestra's summer concerts at Stockbridge, according to an announcement by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the corporation. The summer concerts of the Boston orchestra have proven so popular that the question of accommodations for those wishing to hear the famed organization play, has been a pressing one.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

FEB 19 1937

Philharmonic's Audience Hears Mozart 'Jupiter'

Chavez Conducts Fourth Concert, Including Own Work, 'Sinfonia India'

'La Gioconda' Is Given

Gina Cigna and Bruna Castagna Appear in Opera

By Francis D. Perkins

Carlos Chavez conducted his fourth concert with the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night while, at the Metropolitan Opera House, Ponchielli's "La Gioconda" returned to the repertoire after a season's absence. Mr. Chavez, after presenting Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," three dances from Manuel de Falla's ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat" and the entr'acte after the first scene of the fourth act of Moussorgsky's "Khovantchina," closed his program with his own "Sinfonia India," which had been heard here previously only in a radio concert thirteen months ago.

The hardly jocund protagonist of Ponchielli's opera gave Gina Cigna her third role thus far in this house; Bruna Castagna was her successful rival in love, Laura. Anna Kaskas, scheduled to appear as La Cieca, fell ill not long before time for the rise of the curtain, and Doris Doe represented La Gioconda's blind mother in her stead. Among the male principals Giovanni Martinelli, as Enzo, and Virgilio Lazzari, as Alvise, had both sung these roles in the last performance of the work in this house on March 23, 1935; Carlo Morelli represented the maleficent Barnaba.

Mr. Chevez's "Sinfonia India" (or Indian Symphony) presumably derives its title from its use of three melodies of three Indian tribes of northwestern Mexico, and this work, it is pointed out, is the only one by this composer in which Indian melodies are directly quoted. There is no extra-musical program in this music, which has a continuous course of twelve minutes, but yet can be regarded as consisting of three movements of contrasted character. The score calls some unconventional percussion instruments, such as Indian drums, a water gourd and rasps and rattles, which are mainly employed in the middle section of the symphony.

It is here, when the Indian melodies are most simply stated, with these percussion instruments marking the rhythm, that the symphony, on a first hearing, is most appealing and significant; the form of these tunes and their characteristic basic scale could well merit extended discussion. In the lively opening measures there were some hints of Debussy, "La Mer" which had been heard about an hour before, and a listener could also picture Stravinsky's fair at which Petrouchka met his fate; the swift-paced close was more effective in suggesting an Amerindian atmosphere.

Since "La Mer" had been played earlier this season in this same "even" Thursday night series and had also been performed by the Boston Symphony, Mr. Chavez might have been better advised in offering some other major Debussy work, such as "Iberia," instead. Still, his reading of one of the foremost masterpieces contributed by this century up to now provided some of last night's most absorbing minutes. The Mexican conductor's reading was thoroughly integrated and showed a very definite, while individual, interpretative conception of the work. It depicted, indeed, an actual sea in positive and vivid colors rather than "the changing phases of a sea of dreams," to quote the program notes; it made Debussy a painter rather than a mystic. But the picture was engrossing, and there were exceptional power and climax in measures such as the close of the first part and the potent solemnity of the brass chorale in the third. Mr. Chavez scored warm applause after this, and still more extensive ovation after high-spirited, strongly rhythmed performance of the de Falla dances. The orchestra was in very good form.

"La Gioconda" will undoubtedly be repeated, and more can be said on that occasion. Mme. Cigna, succeeding to the role sung by Rosa Ponselle, Florence Easton and others during this opera's run in the last ten years of Mr. Gatti-Casazza's regime, gave a convincing dramatic impersonation of Ponchielli's and Boito's Venetian songstress, judging by the evidence of the first act and the beginning of the last. In "Suicidio" the strong points of the musical interpretation were the control of volume and the use of tonal hues, as well as the dramatic emphasis of the climactic high notes, which were notable for firmness and carrying power. The tone quality, while generally likable, had its unevenness in the aria, but its performance deserved to be ranked as distinguished.

Mme. Castagna sang with notable tonal opulence, and Miss Doe, after her voice was warmed up, did laudable work in "Voce di donna." Mr. Martinelli was in good voice as Enzo, and Mr. Morelli sang commendably as Barnaba, in a characterization not of the most striking type. Messrs. Engelman, Paltrinieri, D'Angelo and Gabor completed the cast of the performance under Mr. Panizza's direction, while the American Ballet appeared for the Dance of the Hours.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
NEWS

FEB 19 1937

Greek Conductor Will Lead Symphony Orch

DIMITRI MITROPOULOS.

First Greek ever to conduct a major American symphony orchestra, Dimitri Mitropoulos has been engaged to lead the Minneapolis orchestra next season.

He was the first of his nationality to be invited to America as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra two years ago.

A few weeks ago he led the Twin Cities orchestra as guest conductor.

Mitropoulos, 42 and unmarried, is scheduled to arrive Saturday at Naples, Italy, to begin a series of European engagements. He is well known on the continent as the leader of the Athens, Greece, symphonhy. He is also a pianist and composer

He is expected to return to the United States Dec. 20 and conduct his first concert in January, 1938. Who will lead the concerts of the 1937 season has not been revealed, but the Minneapolis Symphony association is understood to be negotiating with a "Russian of Italian descent."

NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

FEB 20 1937

BOSTON, Feb 20—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

FEB 19 1937

Symphony Seeks Funds to Erect 5000 Seats

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Feb. 19 (AP)—Miss Gertrude Robinson

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

FEB 20 1937

BOSTON. — (AP) — The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer, Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand. A Symphony hall announcement disclosed Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin symphony in C minor, which it said, has 'political implications.'

212

Koussevitzky Not to Conduct Soviet Work

Shaporin Symphony Next Week Under Direction of Burgin

Post 20/37

A revolutionary symphony for orchestra and chorus by Yuri Shaporin, Soviet composer, will be given its first American performances at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts next Friday and Saturday. The performances will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the orchestra, rather than Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor. And thereby hangs a tale.

The Shaporin Symphony was scheduled to be played last season at the symphony concerts, but its performances were postponed, the assigned reason being failure of the parts to arrive on time. It was generally expected in musical circles that Dr. Koussevitzky would conduct next week. But through a sec-orchestra, and had also expressed himself as liking it. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has played other works by Soviet composers. It may or may not be significant that none of these has been conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Continued on Page 3—Column 5

At one time or another in recent years Burgin has conducted a symphony by Miaskovsky and the First Symphony by Dimitri Shostakovitch. The latter, who composed the notorious opera, "Lady Macbeth of Mzensk," had a falling out with Soviet authorities some time ago on account of the bourgeois tendencies of his music, but he has recently come back into grace, with a promise to behave.

At the Symphony Hall Pops concerts Arthur Fiedler has occasionally introduced novelties from Soviet Russia, including a suite from Shostakovitch's ballet, "The Bolt," and the same composer's Piano Concerto, as well as Mossolov's "Soviet Iron Foundry," in which the hammering of metal is realistically and nosily depicted.

Whatever the reason for Dr. Koussevitzky's refraining from the presentation of Soviet music up to the present time, it is a fact that he left Russia shortly after the 1917 Second Revolution because of what he called "artistic incompatibility." He has never returned, spending his time mostly in Boston and Paris. He has, however, conducted music by Serge Prokofiev, one of Russia's foremost composers, who is now in good standing with Soviet authorities. Again it may or may not be significant that Dr. Koussevitzky has presented none of Prokofiev's recent music, composed in Soviet Russia.

The political implications in Shaporin's Symphony are fairly obvious. The work is in four movements and describes the old Russian past, leading up to the October revolution and subsequent struggle, 1917-20.

The work as a whole is based on songs of the Civil War, and is said to be fatalistic in character. Burgin describes it as "delightfully melodious." It was first performed in Moscow in 1933 and was later played at a B. B. C. Orchestra concert in London in 1935. In the performances next week the chorus will be the Cecilia Society, trained by Arthur Fiedler.

While Dr. Koussevitzky has abstained from Soviet music in his program-making, other American conductors have not followed his lead. Leopold Stokowski, for many years conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, has evinced a lively and active interest in music from the Soviet Union

He was responsible for the first American performances of Shostakovitch's First and Third Symphonies, as well as of the same composer's Piano Concerto. The Third Symphony is the famous "May Day" Symphony, with a chorus based on a revolutionary text. When these words were not only sung but printed in the program-books as well in connection with performances in Philadelphia and New York, there were storms of protest. Stokowski insisted upon his artistic right to present music as art, regardless of the political or economic theories held by its creators.

It must have been more than a coincidence that dictated the phonograph recording of the Shostakovich First Symphony on the day when the U. S. S. R. was recognized by the Roosevelt administration.

As to Shaporin, who is in good standing in the Soviet, he is the son of an illegitimate son of a landowner and a girl serf on the latter's estate. Shaporin is half Russian, one-quarter Ukrainian and one-quarter Czech. His father was an artist.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
FEB 20 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OPENS

Boston, Feb. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer, Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony Hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin symphony in C minor which has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned, said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year,' his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston Symphony ever has played.

These persons further explained that Dr. Koussevitzky has "always prided himself" that he has introduced to Boston audiences "innumerable compositions of contemporary interest."

Burgin said that Koussevitzky, in approving the Shapurin work as musical director of the orchestra, had expressed himself as liking it.

The Shapurin symphony's first movement is descriptive of the Russian revolution, the announcement says, and is entitled "The Past 1917-1920." The finale is triumphant and martial, bearing a title which has been translated "column of route," or "campaign."

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER
FEB 20 1937

Symphony to Play Soviet Number

BOSTON, Feb. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony Hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C Minor which, is said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned, said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
FEB 20 1937

SOVIET SYMPHONY IS SHUNNED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Famous Russian-Born Director Will Be Absent in Boston Performance

Boston, Feb. 20, (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—buit its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C Minor which, it said, has 'political implications.'

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned.

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostavkovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston symphony ever has played.

Soviet Symphony on Friday Next

The Symphony in C minor by the Soviet Russian composer, Yuri Shaporin, will have its first performance on this side of the Atlantic when it is introduced by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next regular pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall. Richard Burgin will conduct this concert. Shaporin's Symphony has political implications. The first movement is descriptive of the Russian Revolution. The Finale is a triumphant and martial music, bearing a title which has been translated "Campaign."

The second movement utilizes Russian dance rhythms, and the third movement is called "Lullaby." A wordless chorus is introduced and the large orchestration is further augmented by a secondary brass choir at the close. Shaporin's Symphony was first performed in Moscow in the spring of 1933, and introduced by the B. B. C. Orchestra in London in 1935.

Mr. Burgin will present on the first part of the program Mozart's Serenade in D major, K. No. 320, which consists of the following movements: Adagio Maestoso, Menuetto, Concertante, Rondo, Andantino, Minuetto, Finale.

Anita Davis-Chase Announces
JORDAN HALL Wed. Eve, Feb. 24, at 8.15
Boston String Quartet
Founded by The New England Conservatory of Music
Assisting Pianist: Jesus Maria Sanroma

A Composer Illustrates Through the Mystery of Musical Language

Sparkling Music of Rimsky-Korsakov and Tschaikovsky a Labor of Love

B. Trans Feb. 20/37

By Redfern Mason

Your poet is the best music critic in the world, not only because he is sensitive beyond ordinary mortals, but because he is himself a creative artist. "Deep calls unto deep." Think how much music we should lack if these has been no Shakespeake, no Goethe, no Keats or Shelley.

So it was fitting that the Boston Symphony should pay its devoirs to Pushkin, that Russian Byron, whose curiously sophisticated irony—so Russians say—escapes all efforts of the translator to do him justice in English.

With Serge Koussevitzky yesterday afternoon's concert must have been a labor of love, for he gave us readings of chapters with which Pushkin inspired Rimsky Korsakoff and Tschaikovsky that were a delight to the audience.

But because the genius of a great poet must be approached with circumstances of grandeur, he opened the concert with the "Coriolanus" overture and the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven. Or perhaps it was contrast that he sought. Whatever the motive the result was happy.

One might have preferred the "Egmont" overture to the "Coriolanus"; but then the Roman leader was an exile, and so was Pushkin. Beethoven too was forever in love, so was Pushkin, though the latter resembled the Faust of Richard Strauss, always seeking "the not impossible she" and always ending the adventure of disillusion.

But in the B flat Symphony there is no disillusion. In it Beethoven seems to have met his "deathless beloved one," and the score is joyous throughout, with only such passing suggestions of discord as serve to prove the old saying that "The falling out of faithful friends is the renewal of love."

Koussevitzky led the symphony with a genial understanding that put us all in a receptive mood. Perhaps the first movement is a trifle prim, as if, when he wrote in strict form, the composer could not doff his scholastic robes. But the slow movement is pure heartsease, and the last two movements are the Beethoven that his devotees admire the most. The master's signature is in the homelike, truly Germanic themes; their treatment is of a kind that your sound musician adores.

So the thanks of all present went out to conductor and orchestra.

To turn to the Rimsky Korsakov of "Tsar Soltan" was like listening to Pushkin's old nurse, after reading Grimm. Her name was Arina, and she told the poet fairy tales which afterwards became of the very essence of his poetry. The peasant was the story teller, the poet the interpreter, and the composer the illustrator through the mystery of music.

There is no greater magician of the orchestra than Rimsky; in his music the instruments seem to talk their native language. We of the audience put off our adult selves and drank in the sparkling music. If it was gay and exuberant, with an oriental tang, in the "Tsar Soltan," it was picturesque with a touch of mockery in the "Coq d'or" music. No wonder the Russian censor would none of it. In his ingenuous way Rimsky was making the Emperor of all the Russias ludicrous. And laughter is something that tyrants dread. They won't let Charley Chaplin's movies be seen in Germany, you know. People might laugh at the Fuhrer.

But all the Russian part of the program was not fairy tale. We listened to the "Letter scene" from "Eugene Onegin," with Olga Averino as the singer.

Pushkin, though a rake, could still dream the ideal, and Tatiana is his embodiment of that ideal. In transmitting her maiden longings into music Tschaikovsky wrote a masterpiece, and in masterly fashion those reeds and strings drew her spiritual picture. It is beautiful music and it was beautifully played.

Miss Averino did her part admirably. The self-conscious technician never for a moment came between the audience and the heroine. We owe her thanks.

PITTSFIELD, MASS
EAGLE
FEB 20 1937

Koussevitzky Not To Conduct Symphony by Soviet Composer

BOSTON, Feb. 20.—When the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer, Yuri Shapurin, the orchestra's famous Russian-born composer, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the podium.

Denied Political Significance

Although there was reported to be some political significance to Dr. Koussevitzky's projected absence, the conductor through a secretary at Symphony Hall declared: "There is no political significance."

Dr. Koussevitzky who appeared with the orchestra last summer at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and who will return for the orchestra's six engagements in the Berkshires this summer, quit Soviet Russia because of "artistic incompatability" soon after the 1917 revolution, and has never returned.

Burgin To Conduct

Richard Burgin, assistant conductor will wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C. Minor.

"Dr. Koussevtizky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston Symphony ever has played.

These persons further explained that Dr. Koussevitzky has "always prided himself" that he has introduced to Boston audiences "innumerable compositions of contemporary interest."

Koussevitzky Likes It

Burgin said that Koussevitzky, in approving the Shapurin work as musical director of the orchestra, had expressed himself as liking it.

The Shapurin symphony's first movement is descriptive of the Russian revolution, the announcement says, and is entitled "The Past 1917-1920." The finale is triumphant and martial, bearing a title which has been translated "Column of Route," or "Campaign."

The music, Burgin said, is based on Russian folk tunes and is "delightfully melodious."

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20 (AP)—Members of both sides in the controversy over enlarging the Supreme Court agreed today there were sufficient Senate opponents to block action indefinitely if they chose filibustering tactics.

Administration leaders, however, expressed doubts that any group of senators, no matter how sizable, would be willing to prevent a vote.

Roosevelt backers continued to predict victory. Opponents were not talking filibuster; they were after enough votes to beat court reorganization, and declared they had almost enough.

Soviet Work

Shaporin Symphony Next Week Under Direction of Burgin

Trans. Feb. 20/37

Continued from Page One

retary he explained that there was no political significance behind his decision to yield the podium to his assistant next week.

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have time to study the score this year," his secretary explained. She added that "he has given many new works this year." As a matter of fact, it is known that he is at present very much engrossed in the study of the Violin Concerto of Alban Berg, Viennese modernist composer, who died a little more than a year ago, just after the completion of this work. At the first American performances the week after next Louis Krasner, Boston violinist and friend of Berg, who wrote the work for him, will be the soloist.

Richard Burgin said that Dr. Koussevitzky had approved the work as musical director of the orchestra, and had also expressed himself as liking it. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has played other works by Soviet composers. It may or may not be significant that none of these has been conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

At one time or another in recent years Burgin has conducted a symphony by Miaskovsky and the First Symphony by Dimitri Shostakovitch. The latter, who composed the notorious opera, "Lady Macbeth of Mzensk," had a falling out with Soviet authorities some time ago on account of the bourgeois tendencies of his music, but he has recently come back into grace, with a promise to behave.

At the Symphony Hall Pops concerts Arthur Fiedler has occasionally introduced novelties from Soviet Russia, including a suite from Shostakovitch's ballet, "The Bolt," and the same composer's Piano Concerto, as well as Mossolov's "Soviet Iron Foundry," in which the hammering of metal is realistically and nosily depicted.

Whatever the reason for Dr. Koussevitzky's refraining from the presentation of Soviet music up to the present time, it is a fact that he left Russia shortly after the 1917 Second Revolution because of what he called "artistic incompatibility." He has never returned, spending his time mostly in Boston and Paris. He has, however, conducted music by Serge Prokofiev, one of Russia's foremost composers, who is now in good standing with Soviet authorities. Again it may or may not be significant that Dr. Koussevitzky has presented none of Prokofiev's recent music, composed in Soviet Russia.

The political implications in Shaporin's Symphony are fairly obvious. The work is in four movements and describes the old Russian past, leading up to the October revolution and subsequent struggle, 1917-20.

The work as a whole is based on songs of the Civil War, and is said to be fatalistic in character. Burgin describes it as "delightfully melodious." It was first performed in Moscow in 1933 and was later played at a B. B. C. Orchestra concert in London in 1935. In the performances next week the chorus will be the Cecilia Society, trained by Arthur Fiedler.

While Dr. Koussevitzky has abstained from Soviet music in his program-making, other American conductors have not followed his lead. Leopold Stokowski, for many years conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, has evinced a lively and active interest in music from the Soviet Union.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

He was responsible for the first American performances of Shostakovitch's First and Third Symphonies, as well as of the same composer's Piano Concerto. The Third Symphony is the famous "May Day" Symphony, with a chorus based on a revolutionary text. When these words were not only sung but printed in the program-books as well in connection with performances in Philadelphia and New York, there were storms of protest. Stokowski insisted upon his artistic right to present music as art, regardless of the political or economic theories held by its creators.

It must have been more than a coincidence that dictated the phonograph recording of the Shostakovich First Symphony on the day when the U. S. S. R. was recognized by the Roosevelt administration.

As to Shaporin, who is in good standing in the Soviet, he is the son of an illegitimate son of a landowner and a girl serf on the latter's estate. Shaporin is half Russian, one-quarter Ukrainian and one-quarter Czech. His father was an artist.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
FEB 20 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OPENS

Boston, Feb. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer, Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony Hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin symphony in C minor which has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned, said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year,' his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston Symphony ever has played.

These persons further explained that Dr. Koussevitzky has "always prided himself" that he has introduced to Boston audiences "innumerable compositions of contemporary interest."

Burgin said that Koussevitzky, in approving the Shapurin work as musical director of the orchestra, had expressed himself as liking it.

The Shapurin symphony's first movement is descriptive of the Russian revolution, the announcement says, and is entitled "The Past 1917-1920." The finale is triumphant and martial, bearing a title which has been translated "column of route," or "campaign."

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER
FEB 2 1937

Symphony to Play Soviet Number

BOSTON, Feb. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony Hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C Minor which, is said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned, said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
FEB 20 1937

SOVIET SYMPHONY IS SHUNNED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Famous Russian-Born Director Will Be Absent in Boston Performance

Boston, Feb. 20, (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—buit its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C Minor which, it said, has 'political implications.'

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned.

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his sceretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostavkovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston symphony ever has played.

Soviet Symphony on Friday Next

The Symphony in C minor by the Soviet Russian composer, Yuri Shaporin, will have its first performance on this side of the Atlantic when it is introduced by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next regular pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall. Richard Burgin will conduct this concert. Shaporin's Symphony has political implications. The first movement is descriptive of the Russian Revolution. The Finale is a triumphant and martial music, bearing a title which has been translated "Campaign."

The second movement utilizes Russian dance rhythms, and the third movement is called "Lullaby." A wordless chorus is introduced and the large orchestration is further augmented by a secondary brass choir at the close. Shaporin's Symphony was first performed in Moscow in the spring of 1933, and introduced by the B. B. C. Orchestra in London in 1935.

Mr. Burgin will present on the first part of the program Mozart's Serenade in D major, K. No. 320, which consists of the following movements: Adagio Maestoso, Menuetto, Concertante, Rondo, Andantino, Minuetto, Finale.

Anita Davis-Chase Announces
JORDAN HALL Wed. Eve, Feb. 24, at 8.15
Boston String Quartet
Founded by The
New England Conservatory of Music
Assisting Pianist: Jesus Maria Sanroma

2/2

A Composer Illustrates Through the Mystery of Musical Language

Sparkling Music of Rimsky-Korsakov and Tschaikovsky a Labor of Love

B. Trans. Feb. 20/37

By Redfern Mason

Your poet is the best music critic in the world, not only because he is sensitive beyond ordinary mortals, but because he is himself a creative artist. "Deep calls unto deep." Think how much music we should lack if these has been no Shakespeake, no Goethe, no Keats or Shelley.

So it was fitting that the Boston Symphony should pay its devoirs to Pushkin, that Russian Byron, whose curiously sophisticated irony—so Russians say—escapes all efforts of the translator to do him justice in English.

With Serge Koussevitzky yesterday afternoon's concert must have been a labor of love, for he gave us readings of chapters with which Pushkin inspired Rimsky Korsakoff and Tschaikovsky that were a delight to the audience.

But because the genius of a great poet must be approached with circumstances of grandeur, he opened the concert with the "Coriolanus" overture and the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven. Or perhaps it was contrast that he sought. Whatever the motive the result was happy.

One might have preferred the "Egmont" overture to the "Coriolanus"; but then the Roman leader was an exile, and so was Pushkin. Beethoven too was forever in love, so was Pushkin, though the latter resembled the Faust of Richard Strauss, always seeking "the not impossible she" and always ending the adventure of disillusion.

But in the B flat Symphony there is no disillusion. In it Beethoven seems to have met his "deathless beloved one," and the score is joyous throughout, with only such passing suggestions of discord as serve to prove the old saying that "The falling out of faithful friends is the renewal of love."

Koussevitzky led the symphony with a genial understanding that put us all in a receptive mood. Perhaps the first movement is a trifle prim, as if, when he wrote in strict form, the composer could not doff his scholastic robes. But the slow movement is pure heartsease, and the last two movements are the Beethoven that his devotees admire the most. The master's signature is in the homelike, truly Germanic themes; their treatment is of a kind that your sound musician adores.

So the thanks of all present went out to conductor and orchestra.

To turn to the Rimsky Korsakov of "Tsar Soltan" was like listening to Pushkin's old nurse, after reading Grimm. Her name was Arina, and she told the poet fairy tales which afterwards became of the very essence of his poetry. The peasant was the story teller, the poet the interpreter, and the composer the illustrator through the mystery of music.

There is no greater magician of the orchestra than Rimsky; in his music the instruments seem to talk their native language. We of the audience put off our adult selves and drank in the sparkling music. If it was gay and exuberant, with an oriental tang, in the "Tsar Soltan," it was picturesque with a touch of mockery in the "Coq d'or" music. No wonder the Russian censor would none of it. In his ingenuous way Rimsky was making the Emperor of all the Russias ludicrous. And laughter is something that tyrants dread. They won't let Charley Chaplin's movies be seen in Germany, you know. People might laugh at the Fuhrer.

But all the Russian part of the program was not fairy tale. We listened to the "Letter scene" from "Eugene Onegin," with Olga Averino as the singer.

Pushkin, though a rake, could still dream the ideal, and Tatiana is his embodiment of that ideal. In transmitting her maiden longings into music Tschaikovsky wrote a masterpiece, and in masterly fashion those reeds and strings drew her spiritual picture. It is beautiful music and it was beautifully played.

Miss Averino did her part admirably. The self-conscious technician never for a moment came between the audience and the heroine. We owe her thanks.

PITTSFIELD, MASS
EAGLE
FEB 20 1937

Koussevitzky Not To Conduct Symphony by Soviet Composer

BOSTON, Feb. 20.—When the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer, Yuri Shapurin, the orchestra's famous Russian-born composer, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the podium.

Denied Political Significance

Although there was reported to be some political significance to Dr. Koussevitzky's projected absence, the conductor through a secretary at Symphony Hall declared: "There is no political significance."

Dr. Koussevitzky who appeared with the orchestra last summer at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and who will return for the orchestra's six engagements in the Berkshires this summer, quit Soviet Russia because of "artistic incompatability" soon after the 1917 revolution, and has never returned.

Burgin To Conduct

Richard Burgin, assistant conductor will wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C. Minor.

"Dr. Koussevtizky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston Symphony ever has played.

These persons further explained that Dr. Koussevitzky has "always prided himself" that he has introduced to Boston audiences "innumerable compositions of contemporary interest."

Koussevitzky Likes It

Burgin said that Koussevitzky, in approving the Shapurin work as musical director of the orchestra, had expressed himself as liking it.

The Shapurin symphony's first movement is descriptive of the Russian revolution, the announcement says, and is entitled "The Past 1917-1920." The finale is triumphant and martial, bearing a title which has been translated "Column of Route," or "Campaign."

The music, Burgin said, is based on Russian folk tunes and is "delightfully melodious."

BOSTON, MASS.
AMERICAN

FEB 2 0 1937

213

Boston Symphony Honors Russian Poet's Memory

By RUTH MARSTERS

Following a week's absence on tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky were extended a warm welcome by the large and familiar Friday audience in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Koussevitzky had designed the program primarily in observation of the one hundredth anniversary of Pushkin's birth. Accordingly the latter half of the concert was devoted to music inspired by the verse of the great Russian poet.

The first to be presented was the Suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan," which includes the ever popular "Flight of the Bumblebee." This music has, in the words of the composer, "an intentionally fairy tale character."

Fanciful, naive, vividly colorful and imaginative, it was happily chosen, and superbly performed.

The Introduction and March from Rimsky Korsakov's Opera, "Le Coq d'Or," was particularly interesting in that this opera will be included in the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera Co.'s Boston season this spring.

The composer's last work, it was censored by the Russian government as a satire against the monarchy, and was therefore immediately translated into French. The Introduction and March however were given their first performance in Moscow shortly before Rimsky-Korsakov's death in 1908.

The Letter Scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Oniegin," enlisted the talents of Olga Averino as soloist.

Equipped with a voice of fine and lovely quality, warmth of personality, and sensitiveness of musicianship, Miss Averino has become a favorite of these audiences through past performances with the orchestra.

On this occasion her performance was all that could be desired until the very end, when unfortunately, she failed to climax the whole with sufficient dramatic intensity.

Dr. Koussevitzky opened the program with Beethoven's "Coriolanus." Overture, following it, in the first part of the program, with Beethoven's Fourth Symphony in B flat major.

The latter serenely joyous work, given a like performance, would prove the highspot of almost any program—which it undeniably did on this occasion.

The program will be repeated at this evening's concert in Symphony Hall.

WORCESTER, MASS.
POST

FEB 2 0 1937

Koussevitzky Shuns Soviet Symphony Work

Assistant Conductor Will Wield Baton at Concert In Boston

BOSTON, Feb. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony Hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin symphony in C Minor which, it said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned, said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky did not have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston Symphony ever has played.

These persons further explained that Dr. Koussevitzky has "always prided himself" that he had introduced to Boston audiences "innumerable compositions of contemporary interest."

FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

FEB 20 1937

Serge Koussevitzky Will Not Conduct Soviet Composition

Boston—AP—The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet Composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C Minor which, it said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding "he has given many new works this year."

At the same ttime, musical observers recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston symphony ever has played.

Burgin said that Koussevitzky, in approving the Shapurin work as musical director of the orchestra, had expressed himself as liking it.

The Shapurin symphony's first movement is descriptive of the Russian revolution, the announcement says, and is entitled "The Past 1917-1920." The finale is triumphant and martial, bearing a title which has been translated "Column of Route," or "Campaign."

LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL

FEB 20 1937

Politics Jump On Baton's Tip

Work of Soviet Composer to Be Boycotted by Russian-Born Conductor

BOSTON, Feb. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A symphony hall announcement disclosed Saturday that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C minor which, it said, has "political implications."

Doctor Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatability," said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Doctor Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, musical observers recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston symphony ever has played.

Burgin said that Koussevitzky, in approving the Shapurin work as musical director of the orchestra, had expressed himself as liking it.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

FEB 20 1937

Koussevitzky Yields Baton On Soviet Composer's Opus

BOSTON Feb. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony Hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony In C Minor which, it was said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incomatibility," and has never returned, said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this yeear."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston Symphony ever has played.

These persons further explained that Dr. Koussevitzky, in approving the Shapurin work as musical director of the orchestra, had expressed himself as liking it.

The Shapurin Symphony's first movement is descriptive of the Russian revolution, the announcement says, and is entitled "The Past 1917-1920." The finale is triumphant and martial, bearing a title which has been translated "Column of Route," or "Campaign."

The music, Burgin said, is based on Russian folk tunes and is "delightfully melodious."

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

FEB 2 0 1937

Boston Symphony to Play Work of Soviet Composer

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Will Turn Baton Over to His Assistant Conductor

Boston, Feb. 20.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A symphony hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin symphony in C minor which, it is said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned, said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

ABSENT LAST YEAR

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston Symphony ever has played.

These persons further explained that Dr. Koussevitzky has "always prided himself" that he has introduced to Boston audiences "innumerable compositions of contemporary interest."

Burgin said that Koussevitzky, in approving the Shapurin work as musical director of the orchestra, had expressed himself as liking it.

IN MARTIAL STRAIN

The Shapurin symphony's ,first movement is descriptive of the Russian revolution, the announcement says, and is entitled "the past 1917-1920." The finale is triumphant and martial, bearing a title which has been translated "Column of Route," or "Campaign."

The music, Burgin said, is based on Russian folk tunes and is "delightfully melodious."

The symphony, which also calls for choral parts, was first performed in Moscow in 1933, and later was played by the British Brodacasting Company orchestra in London in 1935. Burgin also will conduct Mozart's Serenade in D major on the same program.

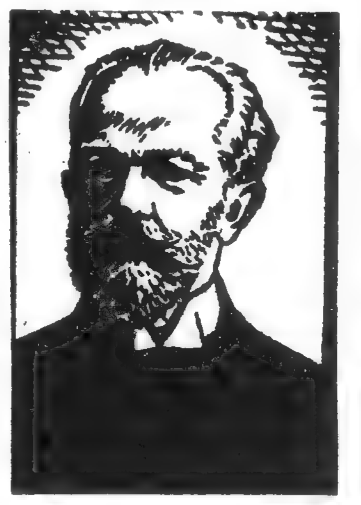
COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN

FEB 2 0 1937

7 8

Off the Record

VICTOR and Columbia and the Random House Publishing Co. have made it possible for us to hold an interesting little Tschaikowsky Festival in our living rooms this month. New records are issued of the Fourth and Sixth Symphonies, and Catherine Drinker Bowen has devised an illuminating, slightly fictionalized account of the important creative years of the Russian composer's life from the incredible correspondence which he carried on with Nadejda Philaretovna von Meck, the benefactress whom he never met.



Not many of us can go into the extravagant transports over Tschaikowsky's music that the wealthy, autocratic widow confided to reams of letter paper. One of the milder excerpts from her correspondence concerns "The Tempest"—"It is impossible to describe the impression it made upon me. For several days I was in a delirium from which I could not emerge." And again (of an unpublished "Marche"): "It is so beautiful that it lifts me, as I had hoped, into that mood of blissful madness in which one can forget all that is bitter and offensive in the world. It is impossible to describe the chaos that reigns in my head and heart when I hear it. A shiver runs through my nerves—I want to sob, to die, I long for another life. . . . I soar above the earth, my temples throb, my heart beats wildly; mist darkens my eyes and I hear only the enchantment of that beautiful music. Dieu, how great is the man who can impart such moments to another soul. . . ."

It is not necessary for us to subscribe to these and other opinions recorded in "Beloved Friend" to enjoy Tschaikowsky's music. For most of us it will not survive as daily fare, which it apparently was for the enthralled Nadejda. But, if not heard too persistently, many of the works remain deeply impressive—for melody, for orchestral color, for workmanship, for highly personal, thoroughly Russian, character.

The two symphonies at hand surely rank among those cherishable works. We could not ask for a more sensitive, sympathetic reading of the Fourth than that which Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Orchestra have recorded for Victor. Technically both performance and recording are beyond question. The director has been keenly alive to all the essential qualities of the music, has made passages dramatic that a lesser man would have made theatrical, has tactfully concealed measures of triteness. In particular the pizzicato movement (one of the most endearing that Tschaikowsky wrote) emerges with spirit and beauty, sounding out like a giant balalaika. The waltz from the String Serenade, Op. 48, occupies the odd side of the set.

The Fourth Symphony was written at the very beginning of the strange game of post office (Peter Ilyich and Nadejda always called it "our symphony"), but the Sixth, the Pathetique, was written after the friendship had as strangely been broken off. The composer conducted its first performance a month before his death in 1893. The present performance has been recorded for Columbia by the Paris Conservatory Orchestra conducted by Philippe Gaubert. That orchestra, obviously, is no such instrument as the Boston, but it is thoroughly competent, the recording is excellent, and M. Gaubert's ideas are sincere and his musicianship sound. It is the true Tschaikowsky that we hear.

* * *

A NEW recording company finds place in the month's lists. But Musicraft Records, Inc., 45 W. 45th-st, New York, has no intention of offering competition to the larger commercial establishments. It seeks an audience of serious musicians by proposing to record works that are neglected in ordinary concert performance and that will be, as well, phonographic "first times." It wishes to emphasize the music itself rather than the virtuosity of some illustrious performer.

Musicraft's first releases are of Mozart's Quartet in B-flat-major, played by the Perole String Quartet, and of Bach's Italian Concerto, played on the harpsichord by Ralph Kirkpatrick. The quartet is one of the last three that Mozart wrote, a concentrated little work of characteristic freshness and clarity of design. Performance and recording are commendable. The gay allegros of the Bach concerto come from Mr. Kirkpatrick's fingers fluently and distinctly, but the inwardness of the miraculous, musing andante seems to elude him. It is something, however, to hear this music on the instrument for which it was written; in spite of occasional imperfect balance and lack of climax, qualities are apparent that the piano loses.

Both these little sets are well worth owning, and future Musicraft releases may be anticipated with pleasure. Any musician could, almost without thinking, list dozens of works now unrecorded that he would gladly own. My own list—but that would take a column, and probably discourage Musicraft in its labors of love.

—R. L. F. M.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST
FEB 20 1937

Koussevitzky Won't Conduct Piece by Soviet Composer

Yields Boston Symphony Baton to Assistant —Denies Any Political Implication

BOSTON, Feb. 20 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony Hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin symphony in C minor, which, it said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

At the same time, musical observers recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston Symphony ever has played.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
FEB 20 1937

Soviet Symphony Listed, Koussevitzky off Stand

Boston—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer, Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony Hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin symphony in C Minor, which, it said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility" and has never returned, said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles nere recalled that last year, when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston Symphony ever has played.

These persons further explained that Dr. Koussevitzky has "always prided himself" that he has introduced to Boston audiences "innunerable compositions of contemporary interest."

The Shapurin Symphony's first movement is descriptive of the Russian revolution, the announcement says, and is entitled "the past 1917-1920." The finale is triumphant and martial, bearing a title which has been translated "column of route," or "campaign."

MONTPELIER, VT.
ARGUS
FEB 20 1937

Boston Will Hear Russian Symphony

BOSTON, Feb. 20, (AP)—The Boston symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet Composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A symphony hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin symphony in C minor which, it said, had "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned.

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostavkovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston symphony ever has played.

BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
FEB 20 1937

KOUSSEVITZKY TO SHUN SOVIET MUSI

Will Not Be in Conductor's Stand When Boston Symphony Plays Shapurin Composition.

BOSTON, Feb. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A symphony hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C Minor which, it said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned, said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shastavkovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston Symphony ever has played.

BALTIMORE, MD.
AMERICAN
FEB 21 1937

Boston Group Lists New Symphony

BOSTON, Feb. 20—(A. P.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL
FEB 20 1937

Koussevitsky Won't Conduct For Soviet Piece

BOSTON, Feb. 20 (AP)—The Boston symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A symphony hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C Minor which, it was said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned, said through a secretary that his projected absence had no "political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year, when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston symphony ever has played.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
FEB 20 1937

KOUSSEVITZKY ABSENT

Director Of Boston Orchestra Not To Be At Concert

BOSTON—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet Composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A symphony hall announcement disclosed Saturday that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C Minor which, it said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
FEB 21 1937

The common undertaking of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festival Association continues to grow. Through the generosity of two well-wishers of the festival project a 210-acre estate has been presented to the Boston Orchestra trustees. The estate, known as Tanglewood, is in Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. Nathaniel Hawthorne lived at Tanglewood and there he wrote his tales of that name.

With a permanent site for the festival assured, a fund will now be raised to build a suitable enclosure to seat 5,000 persons. Serge Koussevitzky will direct his orchestra during the festival. There will be six programs instead of three as last August. They will be held on the Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two week-ends in August.

The idea of the founders of the festival was to develop something that might constitute an American Salzburg. The beginning has been made, convincingly, and with the progress laid down for this year, the advance appears to be slow but assured.

LINCOLN, NEB.
STATE JOURNAL
FEB 21 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO PLAY SOVIET PIECE

Director Koussevitzky Will Yield Baton to Helper in Friday Concert.

BOSTON. (AP). The Boston symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the soviet composer Yuri Shapurin, but its famous Russian born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand. A symphony hall announcement disclosed that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C Minor which, it said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," said thru a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance." "Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary replied, adding "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, musical observers recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two soviet compositions the Boston symphony ever has played.

Burgin said that Koussevitzky, in approving the Shapurin work as musical director of the orchestra, had expressed himself as liking it. The Shapurin symphony's first movement is descriptive of the Russian revolution, the announcement says, and is entitled "The Past 1917-1920." The finale is triumphant and martial, bearing a title which has ben translated "Column of Route," or "Campaign."

BUFFALO, N. Y.
TIMES
FEB 21 1937

Recognition for Buffalo Tenor

To the Editor of The Times:

Having been closely associated with the musical activities and careers of a number of Buffaloians, I wish to offer my sincerest congratulation and best wishes to John W. Priebe, the young American tenor who has been engaged by Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to sing the role of the Evangelist in the Good Friday performance (March 26) of the St. Matthew Passion in Boston. To be selected and to appear in this Bibilcal drama is indeed a great honor for this young Buffalo artist and will no doubt prove a medium for his services from many centers of music in the near future.

With the passing of the great oratoric tenor, Dan Gridley, it has been difficult to find oratorio tenors with the tonal qualities and strength to carry these Biblical dramas to a happy ending.

No doubt his many friends will be present next Tuesday evening, Feb. 23, at which time he appears as soloist with the Buffalo Orchestra of the WPA Federal Music Project, Franco Autori conducting.

We feel mighty proud of the fact that another Buffalonian has been added to the list of artists such as Nina Morgana, Rose Bampton, and Helen Olheim, whose careers we follow with great interest, each one having done her part for the cultural standard of Buffalo and the world. BENNO ROSENHEIMER

* * *

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
FEB 21 1937

Mitropoulos at 40 Boasts Fine Career

BOSTON, Feb. 20. (AP).—A Greek bundle of nerves named Dimitri Mitropoulos is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for the second [redacted] year—and, therein, lies a tale of achievement that rivals that of another new youngster, John Barbirolli, Briton, who at 36 recently signed a three-year contract to lead the New York Philharmonic.

When the bald headed 40-year-old bachelor from Athens took the podium here last year, he was the first of his nationality ever to lead a major symphony in this country.

His colorful mannerisms—he literally dances and skips in rhythm with the orchestra, which he conducts without score or baton—and his able musicianship quickly caught the fancy of Boston concert goers.

From here, Mitropoulos goes West to be guest conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony.

When asked to return to the Hub this year for another two weeks, he became the first guest conductor in the orchestra's 56 years to be invited back within a year of his debut.

The slender Athenian is an able linguist. He speaks English, French, Spanish, German and Dutch in addition to his Greek.

The Dutch came in handy during one rehearsal. Unable to elucidate a technical point in English to one of the horn players, he sized up the musician:

"You're Dutch, aren't you?" he asked.

"Yes," came the surprised answer, and in that language the conductor explained how he wanted his music played.

CONCERTS THIS WEEK

Symphony Hall

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Richard Burgin conducting, at 8:15 tomorrow in the fifth concert of the Monday evening series. Harold Bauer, the noted pianist, will be soloist in the Third Piano Concerto of Beethoven. The Overture to Weber's "Oberon," and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" Suite will be played.

The 17th program of the regular series, at 2:30 Friday and 8:15 Saturday, will also be conducted by Richard Burgin. The program will consist of Mozart's Serenade (K 320), and the Symphony in C minor by the Soviet Russian composer, Yuri Shaporin. The Symphony, which will be heard for the first time on this side of the Atlantic, bears political implications. The first movement describes the Russian revolution; the second brings in Russian dance rhythms; the third is called "Lullaby," and the finale is martial music, entitled "Campaign." A wordless vocal chorus is introduced, and at the end the orchestra is amplified by a secondary brass choir. The Symphony was first performed in Mos-

---

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
FEB 21 1937

Estate Given For Festival

Berkshire Group Gets Historic Site

Special to the Telegram:

BOSTON, Feb. 20. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees have accepted the gift of Tanglewood, 210-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge, which was offered by Mrs. Graham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Brookline, as a result of the outstanding success of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1936.

The executive committee of the festival has approved the use of Tanglewood as the permanent home for its Summer concerts. Tanglewood rich in tradition, was where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires and where he wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and laid in the plot for "The House of the Seven Gables." This beautiful estate, off West street in Lenox looks across Stockbridge Bowl to Mt. Everett, second highest peak in Massachusetts.

The 1937 season will be twice as long as last year. There will be six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky on the Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays of the first two weekends in August.

215

The Symphony And Pushkin

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

IN TRIBUTE to the genius of the Russian poet, Pushkin, the hundredth anniversary of whose death occurs this month, the program of the Boston Symphony concerts this weekend was designed to include music inspired by his works.

Since there has hardly been a Russian composer of importance who has not devised an opera upon Pushkin's verse from the time of Glinka's "Russlan and Ludmilla," to Stravinsky's opera-bouffe, "Mavra," the number of works in this category is far from slight.

Dr. Koussevitzky's selection was such that the audience was both hugely entertained, as evidenced in the gasps of amazement and chuckles of amusement, as well as stirred to another enthusiasm which was expressed in prolonged and exclamatory applause.

* * *

THE SUITE from Rimsky-Korsakov's Opera, "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan," was given, as were the works which followed, such a performance as only a virtuoso orchestra could achieve.

In this, as in the Introduction and March from Rimsky-Korsakov's Opera, "Le Coq d'Or," the fanciful tales of the poet are made more vivid by the imagination of the composer.

There is the difference that while the fairy tale of "Tsar Saltan," is fantasy naively realistic "Le Coq d'Or," though containing more humor than bitterness, is nevertheless satire. While one is rich with melodic emotionalism, the other is subtle and given to innuendo. The orchestration for both is, of course, brilliant with variegated colors.

In Dr. Koussevitzky's reading of the scores the last bit of poetry and color was wrung from them.

Appearing as soloist with the orchestra in the performance of the Letter Scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Oniegin," Olga Averino was warmly received.

Miss Averino's talents are known in Boston through her several appearances with the orchestra in recent seasons. To the singing of this ardent music, she brought both warmth and sensitiveness of interpretation. Her voice is of lovely quality. At Friday afternoon's performance, however, she fell a little short of the dramatic climax which the music demands.

* * *

IN THE first half of the program Dr. Koussevitzky presented two Beethoven works: The "Coriolanus" Overture, and the Fourth Symphony in B flat major.

While the performance of the great tragic Overture was surprisingly matter of fact, both conductor and orchestra brought their best efforts to bear on the Fourth Symphony—with memorable results.

This Symphony into which Beethoven seems to have poured the sunlight of perhaps the most golden period of his life is one that, in our opinion, is heard too seldom.

* * *

RICHARD BURGIN will conduct the Boston Symphony concerts of next week, including the fifth concert of the Monday series in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening.

Harold Bauer will be the soloist on this occasion in the performance of Beethoven's Concerto for Pianoforte in C minor, No. 3.

The program will also include Weber's Overture to "Oberon" and The Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" by Rimsky-Korsakov after "The Thousand Nights and a Night."

Mr. Burgin will conduct the first American performance of the Symphony in C minor by the Soviet Russian composer, Yuri Shaporin at the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Shaporin's Symphony is political in implication. The first movement is descriptive of the Russian revolution; the Finale, martial in spirit, bears a title which has been translated, "Campaign."

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
FEB 21 1937

Offer Estate as Gift To Boston Symphony

Special to The News.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Feb. 20.—An estate of 210 acres near the north shore of Mahkeenac Lake has been offered as a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by its owners, Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Boston. The estate is known as Tanglewood, since it was the site of the cottage in which Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales." If accepted by the orchestra it will probably become the location of the summer headquarters of the musical group.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
FEB 21 1937

In The World Of Music....

By H. Earle Johnson

ASSURANCE, given this week, of a permanent home for the Berkshire Festival, marks an important point in the development of summer music in this country. The Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees announce this week acceptance of the gift of Tanglewood, 210-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge, Massachusetts, by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Brookline. This presentation is made in recognition of the outstanding success of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1936 and as encouragement to its continuance.

Tanglewood, then, will become the permanent home for the summer concerts of the Festival. The site is rich in tradition, for it was here that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires; here he wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and laid the plot for "The House of Seven Gables". The location is one of exceptional beauty for it looks across Stockbridge Bowl to Mt. Everett, second highest peak in Massachusetts.

* * *

The idea of a Berkshire Festival is not new; for several summers an orchestra has provided concerts on various vacant estates, sponsored by residents of the Lenox district. The great impetus toward a permanent home was given last summer by the engagement of the Boston Symphony for three concerts; these were successful beyond all expectations and organization was started to guarantee a similar event for the coming summer. Dr. Koussevitsky visited the committee early in the fall and offered his co-operation, providing certain provisionary arrangements were completed at once; these were executed without delay, and the present magnificent gift of "Tanglewood" opens a new chapter in a story which is likely to be far-reaching in its influence.

* * *

The 1937 season will be twice as long as last year. There will be six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky on the Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays of the first two weekends in August. The committee has set about raising the necessary funds for construction of a shell and for harmonizing the new equipment with the natural surroundings. It is planned to accommodate an audience of 5,000 persons, the average attendance at the 1936 Festival. The committee of the orchestra include: Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the Festival, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Norval H. Busey Jr., John C. Lynch, Robert K. Wheeler, George W. Edman, Milton B. Warner, and Joseph Franz of Stockbridge. Trustees include Allston Burr, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. deWolfe Howe, Henry B. Sawyer, Edward A. Taft, and the chairman, Bentley W. Warren.

Indeed, as the prospectus states, America is no longer content with the winter season of high-standard symphony concerts. New England, known as the summer playground, can now offer an unusual cultural attraction, and the Berkshires as the gateway to New England are ideally located to accommodate these music lovers.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
FEB 21 1937

Koussevitzky Avoids Leading Soviet Music

By Associated Press.

Boston, Feb. 20.—The Boston symphony orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer, Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be absent from the conductor's stand. Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, will wield the baton during the Shapurin symphony, which, it was said, has "political implications." Dr. Koussevitzky quit Soviet Russia soon after 1917 because of "artistic incompatibility."

NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Feb 21—1937

Matters Pertaining to the Boston Symphony

B. Post

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

AS THE Vienna Philharmonic functions in the Austrian capital during the winter and in Salzburg in the summer, so will our orchestra in the future have its winter quarters in Boston, its summer home in the Berkshires. It is no longer news that "Tanglewood," once the estate of Nathaniel Hawthorne, lying in Lenox and Stockbridge, has through the munificence of Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, become the property of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Shortly, work will begin on the erection of a permanent structure, in which these summer concerts will be given, and which acoustically is certain to be much more satisfactory than the tent in which the orchestra played last August. Six concerts will be given in the summer season to come, on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two weeks in August.

As yet, nothing has been said said about the programme, whether they will be general or specific. Why not a festival of Russian music, since our orchestra has in its leader that music's greatest living interpreter? Of late there has been a Russian trend at home, what with "Tsar Saltan," "Coq d'Or" and "Scheherazade," with "Eugene Oniegen" and the "Pathetique," with much Prokofieff and a little Liadov. And at the concerts of next Friday and Saturday a new Russian is in prospect, Uri Shaporin, of the present regime, whose Symphony in C minor will then have its first performances in America. The first movement of this symphony is descriptive of the Russian revolution, the Russian title of the Finale has been variously translated "Column of Route" and "Campaign." Apparently the middle movements have no political implications. In the scoring, a wordless chorus is required, and in the Finale an additional brass choir. This pair of concerts, to be conducted by Richard Burgin, will also offer a Serenade of Mozart.

Mr. Burgin will also conduct the concert tomorrow evening, at which Harold Bauer will be heard for the first time here in the C minor Concerto of Beethoven. Needless to say, neither the pianist nor the piece, individually, is new to the concerts. The programme begins with Weber's "Oberon" Overture and ends with Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade."

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
FEB 23 1937

ACCEPTS GENEROUS GIFT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees today announced acceptance of the gift of Tanglewood, 210-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., which was offered by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Brookline, Mass., as a result of the outstanding success of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1936.

Tanglewood, rich in tradition, was where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkhsires and where he wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and laid the plot for "The House of the Seven Gables."

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 21 1937

MUSIC

Amherst Glee Club Provides Excellent Concert in Plantations Auditorium.—Dr. Koussevitzky Not to Conduct Soviet Work

By G. Y. Loveridge

The Glee Club

L'Heure Exquise..............Poldowski
When I Think Upon the Maidens
Michael Head

Boston, Feb. 20.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first American performance Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A Symphony Hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield he baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C Minor, which, it said, as "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution ecause of "artistic incompatibility," nd has never returned, said through secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have nough time to study the score this ear," his secretary explained, ad- ing that "he has given many new orks this year."

At the same time, persons promi- ent in musical circles here recalled at last year when a symphony by imitri Shostakovich, young Soviet mposer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's ace, and that these two works are e only two Soviet compositions e Boston Symphony ever has ayed.

These persons further explained at Dr. Koussevitzky has "always ided himself" that he has intro- ced to Boston audiences "innum- able compositions of contempo- y interest."

Burgin said that Koussevitzky, in proving the Shapurin work as mu- al director of the orchestra, had pressed himself as liking it.

The Shapurin symphony's first vement is descriptive of the Rus- n revolution, the announcement s and is entitled "The Past, 1917- 0." The finale is triumphant and rtial, bearing a title which has n translated "Column of Route," "Campaign."

he music, Burgin said, is based Russian folk tunes and is "de- tfully melodious."

he symphony, which also calls choral parts, was first performed Moscow in 1933, and later was yed by the British Broadcasting npany orchestra in London in . Burgin also will conduct Moz- s Serenade in D Major on the e program.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
FEB 21 1937

Koussevitzky to Avoid Directing Soviet Score

Boston Symphony to Present Russian Composer's Work

BOSTON, Feb. 20 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first American performance next Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer Yuri Shapurin—but its famous Russian-born director, D. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A symphony hall announcement disclosed today that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin Symphony in C Minor, which, it said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enough time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, musical observers recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet compositions the Boston Symphony ever has played.

The Shapurin symphony's first movement is descriptive of the Russian Revolution, the announcement says, and is entitled "The Past 1917-1920." The finale is triumphant and martial, bearing a title which has been translated "Column of Route" or "Campaign."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
FEB 2 1937

Permanent Home Given For Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony orchestra trustees have announced the acceptance of the gift of Tanglewood, 210-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., which was offered by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Brookline, as a result of the outstanding success of the Berskshire symphonic festival in 1936.

At the same time, the executive committee of the festival approved the use of Tanglewood as a permanent home for its summer concerts. Tanglewood, rich in tradition, was where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires and where he wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and laid the plot of "The House of the Seven Gables." This beautiful estate, off West street in Lenox, looks across Stockbridge Bowl to Mt. Everett, the second highest peak in Massachusetts.

In other years, the festival has been given on vacant Berkshire estates. With a permanent site assured, the Berkshire committee recognized the need for a suitable enclosure and set to work immediately to raise the necessary funds. Construction will start this spring on lines that will harmonize with the natural surroundings. It is planned to accommodate an audience of 5,000 persons, the average attendance at the 1936 festival.

The 1937 season will be twice as long as last year. There will be six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra on the Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two week-ends in August.

* * *

In the World of Music

2/23/37

Harold Bauer and Symphony Play Beethoven

By Redfern Mason

It was a holiday audience that gathered to hear the Boston Symphony last night, and they thoroughly enjoyed a program that had not a really tragic note in it.

Yet the "Oberon" Overture, which opened the program, was composed by a man under sentence of death from tuberculosis. But Weber's imagination was sane and wholesome, and he produced a work which is beloved of directors, of players and of the public.

True. the fairies imagined by Richard Burgin, the urbane and scholarly concert-master of the Symphony, who conducted, may have been sobered by the reading of modern economics, for they were not so light on the foot as tradition has accustomed us to expect. But even fairies are not immune from the influence of the Zeit Geist, and, for all we know, there may have been a depression in Fairyland.

But the relative sobriety of the reading did not prevent our enjoying the exquisite music.

In the "Scheherazade" music, which concluded the concert, Mr. Burgin and his cohorts lent themselves to the magic of the score with a vim. The good artist who played the strain associated with the gracious lady who told the tales and softened the heart of her bloodthirsty lord did his work well, especially in the version of it in which it is both melody and undersong.

Sinbad's ship sailed lightly over the waves; the Indian Ocean alternated between calm and tempest; the Prince and Princess sang their idyll graciously, and the crowds at Bagdad voiced their sentiments in an oriental hubbub. In a word, it was a performance which an audience in holiday mood could and did enjoy.

There was a soloist, the Boston public's old friend, Harold Bauer, and he played the C minor Concerto of Beethoven, a genuinely "gemuthlich" composition, steeped in the romanticism of the earlier phase of the master's work. Only in the concluding Rondo do we get intimations of the Beethoven that was to be. Here he releases himself from the romanticism of his day and, in a genial, half-mocking spirit, says things whose meaning his contemporaries, in all probability, could only divine.

Harold Bauer played like the serious artist he has always showed himself. He neither condescended to the audience nor played the prima donna. For him the music is "the thing," as the play was to Hamlet. He set out to tell us what he thought was in the heart of Beethoven when the concerto was born. He had a message to give us, not a message that can be translated into verbal formulae, but a message that is the expression of a spirit "finely touched."

He and the orchestra were completely at one. There was no hint of the rivalry that is apt to manifest itself between the clavier and the orchestra when the soloist does not rise to the height of his great argument.

Bauer had something important to say. What a poet does with verse, what a painter does with his pigments, Harold Bauer does with the piano, and I have a firm conviction that the public is grateful to him. His performance was the joy of the evening. Musicians and audience were delighted.

SYMPHONY IN FIFTH MONDAY

Harold Bauer Soloist in Beethoven Concerto

Post Feb 23

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Symphony Concert of last evening, the fifth of the Monday series, was conducted by Richard Burgin, and the soloist was no less distinguished a pianist than Harold Bauer. It was once announced that Mr. Bauer would play the Concerto of Schumann, music with which for years he has been peculiarly associated. but he finally chose to perform instead the Third, or C minor, Concerto of Beethoven, in which he had not previously been heard here. The purely orchestral numbers were Weber's Overture to "Oberon" and the "Scheherazade" Suite of Rimsky- Korsakov.

Since the pieces by Weber and Rimsky-Korsakov had already figured in the concerts of this season, discussion of last night's occasion may with propriety be confined to the Concerto of Beethoven. There are two ways with the music of Beethoven's first period, which, despite a few foreshadowings of later styles, this Concerto undoubtedly is. One of them is to read into the music probably more than the composer ever imagined or intended, a process which may prove vastly exciting for the hearer; the other is to reproduce what the composer, in all likelihood, heard in his mind's ear. The one is the romantic approach, the other the classical. The one is an act of recreation, the other of reconstruction. It was this latter, more conservative course which Mr. Bauer and Mr. Burgin pursued last evening. The listener, who had never been subjected to the seductions of the other approach, could easily find this particular performance all-satisfying. By testimony of the warm and protracted applause the greater part of last evening's audience so regarded it.

MUSIC

Her Feb 23

MONDAY SYMPHONY

The fifth concert of the Monday evening series was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, in Symphony Hall last night. Harold Bauer, pianist, was soloist. The program was as follows:

Weber..............Overture to "Oberon"
Beethoven,
Concerto for Pianoforte in C minor. No. 3
Rimsky-Korsakov,
Symphonic Suite. "Scheherazade." Op. 35

It is more than a decade since Harold Bauer has appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The hearty reception with which he was greeted by a large audience last night was evidence that Bostonians have not forgotten his playing. Mr. Bauer proved that he is still master of his instrument. His conception of Beethoven's third piano concerto was obviously very clear in his own mind and he never deviated for an instant from his purpose. It is probable, however, that that conception was not equally clear to Mr. Burgin. Nowhere, except, perhaps, in the final rondo, did the orchestra enter into the spirit of the pianist's interpretation. One can say, of course, with equal justice, that nowhere did the pianist enter into the spirit of Mr. Burgin's interpretation.

The orchestra played the opening tutti in good, straightforward, classic manner. But, from the moment the solo part entered, its role was reduced to a mere accompaniment, and an exceedingly cautious one, at that. For Mr. Bauer's conception of the concerto is an extremely personal one, romantic, and dependent upon almost continual fluctuations of tempo. Mr. Burgin followed these fluctuations as best he could, and was naturally obliged to renounce his own idea of the piece, at least while Mr. Bauer was playing. That Mr. Burgin had ideas of his own was evident in the solo passages by the orchestra. This divergence was particularly apparent in the largo, when the muted strings echo the melody just played by the piano; the orchestra, last night, repeated the notes, but neither with Mr. Bauer's phrasing nor his tempi.

Personally, we prefer Mr. Burgin's interpretation, and feel that Beethoven, in 1800, was still a classicist, even if a somewhat unorthodox one. Such matters are still a question of personal opinion. But we resent being forced to hear both sides of the question simultaneously, in the course of a single piece.

In Scheherazade we find romanticism of another order. It is exoticism of the most pungent variety, and reeks, as Philip Hale once remarked, of "benzoin and the pastils of the harem." It is also a virtuoso piece for the orchestra, and its difficulties, both technical and imaginative, are a real test for any conductor. It should be said to Mr. Burgin's credit, that he surmounted them admirably last night. One's only reason to regret that he was conducting the piece was that one missed the rich sonority of his violin playing in the solo parts.

P. C. A.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

JAN 2 1937

A Greek bundle of nerves named Dimitri Mitropoulos is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the second successive year—and therein lies a tale of achievement that rivals that of another youngster, John Barbirolli, Briton, who at 36 recently signed a three-year contract to lead the New York Philharmonic from which post the great Toscanini retired last year.

* * *

MUSIC

Globe Feb 23

SYMPHONY HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra

Richard Burgin conducted the fifth concert in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Monday series last evening. His program was neatly selected and consisted of the "Oberon" Overture of Weber; Beethoven's Third Piano Concerto, and the "Scheherazade" Suite by Rimsky-Korsakov.

Harold Bauer was the soloist of the evening. The Boston appearances of this eminent artist have of late years been regrettably few. This was, according to the record, his first performance with the Boston Symphony since 1925, and the first time he has played Beethoven's C Minor Concerto with this orchestra.

The work itself has not been overplayed here. More frequent hearings would be welcome to at least one listener. This is not the greater Beethoven, nor it is precisely "early Beethoven." Strong suggestions of Mozartean melody are treated in what was, in 1800, Beethoven's increasingly dynamic manner, with abrupt turns of mood and emphasis.

The qualities of Mr Bauer's artistic individuality are sufficiently known here. Again he was a sympathetic interpreter, but his playing and the orchestral accompaniment unfortunately revealed a lack of that fine coordination which sets the seal upon a truly fine performance. Some entrances for piano were not on the dot, and there were conspicuous differences of time.

Rimsky-Korsakov's richly decorated account of Scheherazade's tales received a finely proportioned reading. This, some of Rimsky's finest music, requires gusto. Mr Burgin and the orchestra provided it in abundance. Weber's overture was marred only by imperfect intonation of the horns, which defect also occurred later in the evening. The last program of this series will be played April 12.

C. W. D.

Hawthorne and the Symphony

The dignity of having enriched human life belongs to those who can act on the strength of creative imagination. Others may see it a century later: they can see it now. Two examples of this have come into dramatic contact at Lenox.

When Nathaniel Hawthorne was living a hardscrabble existence and writing "The House of the Seven Gables" in that little red Berkshire farmhouse 86 years ago, no doubt he hoped, certainly he could not have foreseen, how far the little candle on his writing table would throw its beams. What is quite beyond any expectation he could have had is that the land where it stood would, in 1937, be given as a permanent site for the Summer concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its Berkshire Symphonic Festivals.

The 200-acre estate, once the property of William Aspinwall Tappan, grandfather of one of the donors, Mrs Gorham Brooks, and father of the other, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, is a stade on the way to what may become in the Berkshires an annual festival of music, drama, the dance and other fine arts, as one of our equivalents to Bayreuth, Salzburg and Malvern. In his preface to "The Scarlet Letter" Hawthorne imagines one of his ancestor's abhorrence of him as a writer of tales: "Why, the degenerate fellow might as well be a fiddler!" It is no farther from such a fiddler to the Boston Symphony Orchestra of today than it is from these present beginnings of the Berkshire Festivals to a magnificent permanent foundation.

NEW YORK MIRROR
FEB 23 1937

BOSTON—And picture-go-round whirls to a halt, to tune of Soviet Composer Shapurin's symphony in C minor, which has resulted in Symphony Director Serge Koussevitzky (above) handing over baton to assistant. He refuses to conduct Soviet music. And we'll ride it again tomorrow.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

FEB 23 1937

WON'T CONDUCT SOVIET NUMBER

Koussevitzky to Be Replaced by Burgin for Shapurin Composition

Boston, Feb. 23— (AP) —The Boston Symphony orchestra will give the first American performance on Friday of a symphony by the Soviet composer, Yuri Shapurin—but it's famous Russian-born director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be conspicuously absent from the conductor's stand.

A symphony hall announcement has disclosed that Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, would wield the baton during the Shapurin symphony in C minor which, is said, has "political implications."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who quit Soviet Russia soon after the 1917 revolution because of "artistic incompatibility," and has never returned, said through a secretary that his projected absence had "no political significance."

"Dr. Koussevitzky didn't have enongh time to study the score this year," his secretary explained, adding that "he has given many new works this year."

At the same time, persons prominent in musical circles here recalled that last year when a symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Soviet composer, was presented, Burgin also conducted in Koussevitzky's place, and that these two works are the only two Soviet composition s the Boston symphony ever has played.

These persons explained that Dr. Koussevitzky has "always prided himself" that he has introduced to Boston audiences "innumerable compositions of contemporary interest."

Burgin said that Koussevitzky, in approving the Shapurin work as musical director of the orchestra, had expressed himself as liking it.

The Shapurin symphony's first movement is descriptive of the Russian Revolution, the announcement says, and is entitled "the past 1917-1920." The finale is triumphant and martial bearing a title which has been translated "column of route," or "campaign."

The music, Burgin said, is based on Russian folk tunes and is "delightfully melodious."

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

FEB 24 1937

Boston Programs.

Featured on the programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will be the Symphony in C minor by the Soviet Russian composer Yuri Shaperin, which will have its first American performance. The first movement is descriptive of the Russian revolution. Richard Burgin, to whom Dr. Koussevitzky has entrusted the introduction of a number of other compositions by Soviet musicians, will conduct this one and the rest of the program. In the symphony a wordless chorus is introduced and the orchestra is supplemented by a secondary brass choir. The work was first given in Moscow in 1933 and has been performed by the B. B. C. orchestra in London.

The first part of the program will be devoted to Mozart's Serenade in D major. Evidently there will be contrasts in the music.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
FEB 24 1937

Sixteen of the students at Rogers Hall attended the concert in the supplementary series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Monday evening and heard Harold Bauer, pianist, in the Beethoven C minor Concerto, No. 3. Richard Burgin conducted.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

FEB 24 1937

* * *

News Jottings on Boston Symphony

With the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, the Boston Symphony Orchestra enters the last third of its season. And the waning of the season is bringing with it three events of major importance between now and March 26.

This weekend, the first performance in America will be given of the Choral Symphony, in C Minor, of the Soviet composer, Yuri Shaporin. The orchestra will be assisted by the Cecilia Society, famous mixed chorus of more than a hundred voices, whose conductor is Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Pops and Esplanade Concerts. Mr. Fiedler and the chorus have toiled through many hours of extra rehearsals to ensure a brilliant performance of the rhythmically exacting choral passages of the symphony. Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the orchestra, will lead the performances.

While Mr. Burgin has been working with the orchestra, and Mr. Fiedler with the chorus, for the Shaporin Symphony, Serge Koussevitzky has been studying an even more difficult score. This is the Violin Concerto of Alban Berg, the Austrian modernist who died in December, 1935, just as he completed the work. On Friday and Saturday, March 5 and 6, Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first performance in America. The soloist will be Louis Krasner of Boston, to whom the work is dedicated. His performance of it in Europe have won him high praises.

Meanwhile, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, under the direction of young G. Wallace Woodworth, have been diligently rehearsing for their appearance in the third great event of the next few weeks of the Boston Symphony. This will be the presentation on Good Friday of the mighty "Passion According to St. Matthew" of John Sebastian Bach, under the conductorship of Serge Koussevitzky. This concert will be for the Pension Fund of the orchestra.

The soloists for the Matthew Passion will include Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Kathryn Meisle, contralto; John L. Priebe, tenor; Keith Falkner, bass; and Fritz Lechner, baritone. Dr. V. Ernst Wolff will preside at the harpsichord for accompaniments to tha recitatives.

* * *

2/25/37

THE CHRISTIAN S

Monitor

oing On in

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Yuri Shaporin, Whose Symphony in C Minor for Chorus and Orchestra Will Have Its First American Performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tomorrow Afternoon Under the Direction of Richard Burgin

217

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE
FEB 25 1937

MUSIC MISCELLANY

An Annual Berkshire Festival In Prospect

Through the generosity of two well wishers of the festival project for which the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Festival association have been working, the estate known as "Tanglewood" in Lenox and Stockbridge, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote his "Tanglewood Tales," has been presented to the Boston Symphony trustees. The estate of over 200 acres, given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, has been accepted by the trustees and will become the grounds of an annual summer festival by his orchestra on a larger scale than ever before.

With a permanent site there must now be a permanent building suitable for concerts and in accord with the setting, that will accommodate 5000. The festival committee is now engaged in the work of raising funds for this purpose. The prospects for an annual summer festival in America seem assured by the acquiring of this permanent site.

This year's program will include six concerts by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky as compared to three given last year, which was the first festival of the orchestra. These concerts will take place on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays of the first two weeks in August. The idea of the founders of the festival is to develop an American Salzburg.

American Composers to the Fore

The first Boston performance of Joseph Wagner's "David Jazz" was given by the Bowdoin College Glee club at their concert given at Alumni hall, 84 Exeter street, Wednesday evening, Feb. 24, under their conductor, Frederic Tillotson. Again this same work will be heard in Jordan Hall, March 2, by the Apollo club's performance. Henry Hadley's "San Francisco Suite" was played in Boston, Sunday evening, Feb. 21, by the State Symphony orchestra at the Copley theatre. At this same concert Chadwick's ballad "Lochinvar" was sung by the baritone, Henry Kelley. At the Composers Forum-Laboratory at Repertory hall, Feb. 25, the compositions of Margaret Starr McLain will be featured.

Rossini's Anniversary

Rossini, said to be the most popular dramatic composer of his time (1792-1868), is one of that long list of notables born in February and his "Barber of Seville," by which he is best known, was first produced Feb. 6, 1816, in Rome.

His life story is an interesting one. His father and mother were of the theatre, his mother as a singer and his father of the orchestra. He was a precocious child and at 10 with a soprano voice that charmed was singing and thereby aiding his parents.

With the loss of his voice at adolescence he took up the violoncello but continued piano study, having become an able accompanist, and in manhood he was gifted with a fine baritone voice from which he realized pecuniary profits.

The fact that Rossini for a time dominated the entire musical world bears witness to his great natural genius. Ernest Newman writes that he was "an audacious musical innovator—almost a red revolutionary."

In 1816 he brought out "The Barber of Seville." Its first presentation brought forth excited murmuring, hissing and general dissatisfaction. This opera he had written in 13 days. The second and third performances of the work were received with approval and the composer acclaimed.

"William Tell," brought out in 1829, was a great triumph for the composer, now 37, who virtually retired at this period though his Stabat Mater was produced in 1842. The opera, where he had made his reputation, saw no more of him after 1829 although he lived until 1868.

* * * *

"How Grand Is Opera?" is the title of an interesting article in the March issue of "The Commentator" written by John B. Kennedy.

Do You Know

That 128 of Longfellow's poems have been set to music?

That 498 composers, including Rossini, Gounod, J. L. Hatton, Coleridge-Taylor, Walter Kramer, John Blockway, Carl Busch and Frederick Converse, have written musical compositions for his poems?

That these 128 poems appear in music under 170-odd titles?

That few poets have inspired English song writers more than Longfellow?

E. B. F.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
FEB 25 1937

MUSIC FESTIVAL TRUSTEES ACT

Approve Tanglewood as Permanent Musical Shrine

MEET IN N. Y.

Agreement Drafted With Boston Symphony Trustees for Perpetual Use of Property.

New York, Feb. 25 (AP)—Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, inc., indorsed yesterday the proposal of the festival president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, to make Tanglewood, an estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., a permanent musical shrine.

Mrs. Graham Brooks presented the estate to the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra because of her pleasure in the success of a concert series of 1936.

Trustees of both organizations have drafted an agreement for perpetual use of the property, where Hawthorne once lived in the Berkshires, as a festival center.

At the meeting yesterday August 5, 7 and 8 and August 12, 14 and 15 were selected as dates for the 1937 concert series. Miss Smith announced that several gifts of $1,000 each have been received for the building fund of the festival and the executive committee was authorized to proceed with a membership campaign.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

MUSIC SHRINE PLANNED IN THE BERKSHIRES

New York, Feb. 26 — Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festi-

---

GREENWICH, CONN.
NEWS-GRAPHIC
FEB 26 1937

There's No Propaganda In This Soviet Music!

BOSTON, Feb. 26 (U.P.)—Anyone suspecting that political propaganda might lurk in the words of the Soviet composer Yuri Shaporin's "Symphony in C Minor" is doomed to disappointment.

Rehearsing for today's American premiere of this choral symphony, the famous Cecilia Chorus, which will assist the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was heard in constant action—but not a word was sung.

The singers gave vent to the following sounds: "Ho, oo, oh, ah, oy, yokh, aie-yekh."

It was explained that the composer had decided to use the human voice purely for sound effects, as in the case of the instruments of the orchestra. Hence he found words unnecessary.

WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE
FEB 26 1937

Boston, Feb. 26—Anyone suspecting that political propaganda might lurk in the words of Soviet Composer Yuri Shaperin's "Symphony in C Minor" is doomed to disappointment. Rehearsing for today's American premiere of this choral symphony, the famous Cecilia Chorus, which will assist the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was heard in constant action—but not a word was sung. The singers gave vent to the following sounds: "Ho, Oo, Oh, Ah, Oy, Yokh, Aaie-Yekh." It was explained that composer had decided to use the human voice purely for sound effects, as in the case of the instruments of the orchestra. Hence he found words unnecessary.

SYMPHONY PROGRAMME

The programme for the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to be given in Symphony hall next Friday afternoon and evening will consist of three numbers—Alban Berg's Violin Concerto, which is to have its first hearing in America, Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and Schonberg's orchestration of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat (the "St. Anne" Fugue.)

Berg's Concerto carries with it an interesting story. Louis Krasner, the violinist who is to appear as soloist in the work, approached the Austrian composer in 1935 for a violin concerto. Berg did not at once respond to the idea, but moved by the news of the death of a young girl whom he knew in Vienna, the step-daughter of Gustav Mahler, he became possessed with the music as a memorial piece for his young friend. Berg, who was accustomed to linger over his scores, completed this one in six weeks. A few months later, Berg himself had died. The first performance was at the International Festival at Barcelona, and performances in London, Paris, and Vienna followed—Mr. Krasner taking the solo part in each. The Concerto is based upon the twelve-note system which, as a disciple of Schonberg, Berg has always used, but the scheme is modified by tonal harmonies such as the interpolation of a chorale of Bach.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL MADE PERMANENT

Orchestra Acquires Hawthorne Estate.

An estate in the Berkshire Mountains, rich in beauty and associations, has been presented to the Boston Symphony orchestra and will become the grounds of an annual summer festival by this orchestra on a larger scale than heretofore. The Tanglewood Estate of two hundred acres was presented by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, and accepted by the Orchestra's trustees last Monday.

The estate lies in Lenox and Stockbridge. The Berkshire Festival committee is raising the funds necessary to erect a permanent building suitable for concerts, and in accord with the setting. It will accommodate 5000. The season will consist of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, on Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays of the first two weeks in August.

It was in "Tanglewood" where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived when he wrote his "Tanglewood Tales," and made the first sketches for his novel, "The House of the Seven Gables." The estate, which is beautifully wooded, has a vista across Stockbridge Bowl towards Mt. Everett, the second highest peak in Massachusetts. Its gardens, surrounded by hemlock hedges, will make an open-air foyer for use during the intermissions. The prospects for an annual summer festival in America are considerably enlarged by the assurance of such a site and such a permanent basis.

NEW YORK MIRROR
FEB 26 1937

Plan Tanglewood Center for Music

A GREAT musical festival center is to be established by the Berkshire Symphony Festival, Inc., at Tanglewood, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthorne once lived. A drive membership to raise funds to erect a building on the grounds is now under way.

The festival will be "all-American." The property recently was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, because of outstanding success of the 1936 concert series. Dates for this year's concerts have been set as Aug. 5, 7 and 8, and 12, 14 and 15.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE
FEB 26 1937

Plans Are Started To Make Tanglewood Shrine for Music

Trustees of the Berkshire Sym-

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
FEB 26 1937

Festival Backers Sought

Berkshire Symphonic Membership Drive Opens

The executive committee for the

If It Is Soviet Propaganda It Must Be Code

BOSTON, Feb. 26 (UP)—Anyone suspecting that political propaganda might lurk in the words of the Soviet composer Yuri Shaporin's "Symphony in C Minor" is doomed to disappointment.

Rehearsing for today's American premiere of this choral symphony, the famous Cecilia chorus, which will assist the Boston Symphony orchestra, was heard in constant action—but not a word was sung.

The singers gave vent to the following sounds: "Ho, oo, oh, ah, oy, yorkh, aie-yekh."

It was explained that the composed had decided to use the human voice purely for sound effects, as in the case of the instruments of the orchestra. Hence he found words unnecessary.

No Red Propaganda In Soviet Symphony

Boston, Feb. 26 (UP)—Anyone suspecting that political propaganda might lurk in the words of the Soviet composer Yuri Shaporin's "Symphony in C Minor" is doomed to disappointment.

Rehearsing for today's American premiere of this choral symphony, the famous Cecilia chorus, which will assist the Boston Symphony orchestra, was heard in constant action—but not a word was sung.

The singers gave vent to the following sounds: "Ho, OO, Oh, Ah, Oy, Yokh, Aie-Yekh."

It was explained that the composer had decided to use the human voice purely for sound effects, as in the case of the instruments of the orchestra. Hence he found words unnecessary.

There's No Propaganda In This Soviet Music!

BOSTON, Feb. 26 (U.P.)—Anyone suspecting that political propaganda might lurk in the words of the Soviet composer Yuri Shaporin's "Symphony in C Minor" is doomed to disappointment.

Rehearsing for today's American premiere of this choral symphony, the famous Cecilia Chorus, which will assist the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was heard in constant action—but not a word was sung.

The singers gave vent to the following sounds: "Ho, oo, oh, ah, oy, yokh, aie-yekh."

It was explained that the composer had decided to use the human voice purely for sound effects, as in the case of the instruments of the orchestra. Hence he found words unnecessary.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
FEB 27 1937

The violin concerto which Alban Berg wrote shortly before his death in 1935 will have its first American performance at the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston. Louis Krasner, the violinist, will appear as soloist in the work.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
MAR 7 - 1937

Festival Officers Plan Musical Shrine

TRUSTEES of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., meeting with the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith at her home in New York City, enthu-

ET.C.

Symphony Soloist

Louis Krasner, who will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first American performance of Alban Berg's Violin Concerto next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

The program for the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will consist of three numbers—Alban Berg's Violin Concerto, which is to have its first hearing in America, Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and Schoenberg's orchestration of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat (the "Saint Anne" Fugue).

Berg's Concerto carries with it an interesting story. Louis Krasner, the violinist who is to appear as soloist in the work, approached the Austrian composer in 1935 for a violin concerto. Berg did not at once respond to the idea, but moved by the news of the death of a young girl whom he knew in Vienna, the step-daughter of Gustav Mahler, he became possessed with the music as a memorial piece for his young friend. Berg, who was accustomed to linger over his scores, completed this one in six weeks. A few months later, Berg himself had died. The first performance was at the International Festival at Barcelona, and performances in London, Paris and Vienna followed Mr. Krasner taking the solo part in each. The Concerto is based upon the 12-note system which, as a disciple of Schoenberg, Berg has always used, but the scheme is modified by tonal harmonies such as the interpolation of a chorale of Bach.

FEBRUARY 27, 1937

What's

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Richard Burgin is conducting the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week. For his program of the Friday and Saturday subscription concerts, he has chosen Weber's "Oberon" Overture, Mozart's Serenade in D major (K. 320) and Shaporin's Symphony in C minor for chorus and orchestra. The Mozart, oddly enough, had its first performances at these concerts yesterday; and the Symphony of Yuri Shaporin, Soviet composer, was played for the first time in this country.

It was a well-made program, and the performance was splendid. Mr. Burgin gave a sensitive interpretation of the "Oberon" Overture, without attempting any exaggerated effects. His pace was a thought too quick in the Allegro passages, but otherwise his reading was well proportioned and eloquent.

The Mozart was a delight. This Serenade is in six sections, of which the most appealing are the two concertante movements, an Andante grazioso, and a Rondo, allegro ma non troppo. Here there is enthralling conversation among the flute (Mr. Laurent), the oboe (Mr. Gillet) and the orchestra. The soloists played with amazing grace, agility, beauty of tone and subtlety of phrasing. There were pleasures, too, in the other movements, an Allegro, a Minuetto, an Andantino and a Presto. Mr. Burgin secured a performance of exquisite clarity and just style.

The symphony, of course, was the chief item. In it the orchestra was assisted by the chorus of the Cecilia Society, well trained by Arthur Fiedler. The composer employs the voices without words, and also demands a full-sized orchestra and in addition an extra brass choir. The symphony was excellently played and was warmly applauded by the Friday audience. It will be discussed at length in the Music Page of the Monitor next Tuesday.

L. A. S.

In the World of Music

Trans. - Feb. 23/37

Harold Bauer and Symphony Play Beethoven

By Redfern Mason

It was a holiday audience that gathered to hear the Boston Symphony last night, and they thoroughly enjoyed a program that had not a really tragic note in it.

Yet the "Oberon" Overture, which opened the program, was composed by a man under sentence of death from tuberculosis. But Weber's imagination was sane and wholesome, and he produced a work which is beloved of directors, of players and of the public.

True. the fairies imagined by Richard Burgin, the urbane and scholarly concert-master of the Symphony, who conducted, may have been sobered by the reading of modern economics, for they were not so light on the foot as tradition has accustomed us to expect. But even fairies are not immune from the influence of the Zeit Geist, and, for all we know, there may have been a depression in Fairyland.

But the relative sobriety of the reading did not prevent our enjoying the exquisite music.

In the "Scheherazade" music, which concluded the concert, Mr. Burgin and his cohorts lent themselves to the magic of the score with a vim. The good artist who played the strain associated with the gracious lady who told the tales and softened the heart of her bloodthirsty lord did his work well, especially in the version of it in which it is both melody and undersong.

Sinbad's ship sailed lightly over the waves; the Indian Ocean alternated between calm and tempest; the Prince and Princess sang their idyll graciously, and the crowds at Bagdad voiced their sentiments in an oriental hubbub. In a word, it was a performance which an audience in holiday mood could and did enjoy.

There was a soloist, the Boston public's old friend, Harold Bauer, and he played the C minor Concerto of Beethoven, a genuinely "gemuthlich" composition, steeped in the romanticism of the earlier phase of the master's work. Only in the concluding Rondo do we get intimations of the Beethoven that was to be. Here he releases himself from the romanticism of his day and, in a genial, half-mocking spirit, says things whose meaning his contemporaries, in all probability, could only divine.

Harold Bauer played like the serious artist he has always showed himself. He neither condescended to the audience nor played the prima donna. For him the music is "the thing," as the play was to Hamlet. He set out to tell us what he thought was in the heart of Beethoven when the concerto was born. He had a message to give us, not a message that can be translated into verbal formulae, but a message that is the expression of a spirit "finely touched."

He and the orchestra were completely at one. There was no hint of the rivalry that is apt to manifest itself between the clavier and the orchestra when the soloist does not rise to the height of his great argument.

Bauer had something important to say. What a poet does with verse, what a painter does with his pigments, Harold Bauer does with the piano, and I have a firm conviction that the public is grateful to him. His performance was the joy of the evening. Musicians and audience were delighted.

EXPRESS

Delhi - N.Y.

FEB 26 1937

All Around Delhi

Mrs. Jennie Peck of Walton, who spent a week with her sister, Mrs. Frances Zeh Mason, has returned home.

Among those whom the past week-end holidays brought home for a few days were Miss Marguerite Arnold, who has a position in Albany; Jeffers Richards from Dansville; the Misses Mildred Hoos from Amsterdam, and Isabell Burgin from Berne, teachers; Hugh Dick from Cornell University; Sheldon Edgerton from the University of Rochester, and Miss Jane Curtis from Mt. Holyoke University.

Mrs. R. N. Harvey is home from Bassett hospital, Cooperstown, where she was a patient for a week.

Arthur Thompson returned to his work in Chauncey Stewart's store Wednesday, after a few days enforced vacation due to an attack of influenza.

Mrs. Emma Crossman of Cross Street, has returned home after spending a month with her sister, Mrs. Augusta Damm of 451 Second Avenue, New York City, also visiting her sister, Mrs. J. Ennis, who was a patient for a month in St. Peter's hospital, Brooklyn, where she was operated on for gall stones. Mrs. Ennis is now staying with her daughter, Mrs. R. Felgner, who is a registered nurse and who is caring for her. She is doing very nicely now.

Miss Mary Briggs of Hobart, at one time a Delhi resident, was taken ill Saturday, suffering a heart attack. Mrs. Charles White is caring for her.

Mrs. J. C. Mitchell spent last week in New York.

The Japanese operetta "Miss Cherry Blossom," was presented in Delaware Academy to appreciative audinces on Wednesday evening and last evening. Miss Ruth Krusa directed the music.

Rev. M. C. Adam addressed the Boy Scouts of Margaretville Thursday evening at a Scout rally in the High school building in that village. Demonstrations in first aid and other Scout duties were given and refreshments were served.

Fifty automobiles were burned when fire yesterday destroyed the garage of Dreyfus and Morgan at Delhi. Leslie Thompson was seriously burned.—From Oneonta Star's twenty year ago column, February 23, 1917.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Davis of Binghamton, Mr. and Mrs. William Felton and son of Morristown, N. J., Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Felton and son of Paterson, N. J., and Mr. and Mrs. Roger Diihr of New Paltz were in town Monday, returning from Andes where they had attended the funeral of Mrs. Sarah Felton. Mrs. Alfred Felton is remembered here as Myrtle Collins. Mrs. Diihr, formerly of this villiage, is a granddaughter of the late Mrs. Felton.

Frank M. Gurnsey of Oneonta, manager of the district office of the Dairymen's League, and formerly of this village was the speaker Friday evening before the Laurens Grange at its meeting in Laurens. Mr. and Mrs. Gurnsey were in Afton Saturday evening where he attended a meeting of the directors of the Afton Fair Association.

Charles P. Brady and daughter, Mrs. Marion Townsend, spent Thursday with relatives in Delhi.—Roxbury Cor.

David Shaw, a son of Parker Shaw, Meredith road, got a bad gash in his forehead and other minor injuries when the Chevrolet car he was driving Monday evening struck a rut in a nearby dirt road, got out of control, went over an embankment and overturned. Two young ladies who were riding with Mr. Shaw escaped injury. The car was damaged to some extent and it was brought to J. C. Greene, who repaired it.

The Misses Marjorie and Dorothy Cobbe are sick with tonsilitis at their home on Elm Street. Mrs. Millard Cobbe, having an infection in her nose, is under the care of Dr. Pierson.

Miss Florence Greene, who has been employed in an office in New York, and who has been making her home with her aunt in that city, is now with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Greene, Second Street, for a short vacation. She expects to return to Ryder College to resume her studies in about two weeks.

Mrs. F. M. Humiston and daughter, Miss Sara Humiston, left this week for Daytona Beach, Fla. They will be located at 125 South Ridgewood, Ave., where they were last winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bouton were calling on friends in Fergusonville Sunday.

William Bell, who was laid up for about two weeks due to an attack of quinsy, is again on duty as village mail carrier.

H. J. Keeley is spending the week in Davenport where he has considerable work in his line as a painter and decorator.

Recent callers on Mrs. Margaret Hathaway, who has been confined to her bed since December 1st, were Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Hathaway, daughter Mary, Mrs. Ten Broeck of Deposit, Harvey and Maud Hathaway and Mr. and Mrs. Preston Schall of Cannonsville.

A family reunion was held Sunday at the home of Mrs. Emma Hoos, Second Street. Miss Matilda Hoos of Stapleton, S. I., Ernest J. Hoos, his daughter and a niece, of Liberty, Mrs. Augusta Hoos and Miss Louise Keller of Walton were guests.

Miss Marian Henderson of Meridale, formerly of this village, was in town Tuesday.

Rev. Jackson A. Martin conducted services of prayer and meditation in Christ Church, Walton, from Sunday, February 21st, to Wednesday morning.

The present week was vacation week for the Misses Agnes and Jean MacAdam, teachers in the High school at Maplewood, N. J., also for the Misses Florence Harkness and Irma Newell, who are teaching in South Orange, whose schools are under the same jurisdiction as the Maplewood schools. The Misses MacAdam came to Delhi Saturday evening and were with their sister, Mrs. William M. Thomson, until Tuesday morning when they went to Rochester to visit their niece, Mrs. H. B. Crawford, and to visit the schools there and gain information on special subjects of study. Miss Newell spent her vacation with her brother, Robert Newell, in Rochester, and Miss Harkness was in New York, studying at New York University. Her sister, Mrs. William N. Mable is spending the week with her in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. George E. Judd and son, George, Jr., of Boston, were overnight guests Sunday of his sister, Mrs. Harold Lord, they having spent the week-end with relatives at Walton and Cannonsville. Mr. Judd is manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Symphony Hall, having been connected with that institution for several years

3/8

Two New Works Feature Symphony Program

By RUTH MARSTERS

Richard Burgin, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in his capacity as assistant to Serge Koussevitsky, presented two works new to Boston audiences at yesterday afternoon's concert in Symphony Hall.

The first of these was, surprisingly enough, Mozart's Serenade in D major, (K. No. 320.)

With all due consideration for the nature of this music—which is necessarily light—one cannot still regard it as a particularly interesting or valuable piece of writing.

It could scarcely be compared with Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," for example—music which otherwise is in the same category.

The Serenade in D major is simply one of those pot-boilers which Mozart, as other musicians of his day, was bound to turn out in too great numbers. In addition it was the work of a youth of 23 discontented and depressed by the provincial atmosphere of Salzburg which, in 1779 was decidedly unmusical.

Following this, Mr. Burgin conducted the first American performance of the Symphony in C minor, Op. 11, by the Russian composer, Shaporin.

Though the name is not widely known here, Shaporin is a figure of importance in the post-revolutionary music world of his country.

The Symphony in C is political in implication. In the words of the composer it is intended to describe "the gradual transformation of individual consciousness in the process of acceptance of the Revolution."

The first movement entitled "Legend" portrays the past and the first awakenings to revolutionary consciousness. The last, "Campaign," or "March" as it is variously called, embodies the spirit of martial victory.

The Scherzo is mainly a display of rythmic inventiveness. The slow movement, "Lullaby," introduces the feminine element.

It is a serious work, bodly drawn.

The orchestration is heavy and further sonorities are achieved through the use of a chorus of voices. (The Cecilia Society assisted in the performance most ably.)

Mr. Burgin's reading of the score was essentially dramatic—and the orchestra performed magnificently under his direction.

The program will be repeated at this evening's concert in Symphony Hall.

PITTSFIELD, MASS
EAGLE

FEB 27 1937

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

FEB 27 1937

Berg Concerto on Symphony Program

The program for the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be given in Symphony Hall, Boston, next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will consist of three numbers—Alban Berg's violin concerto, which is to have its first hearing in America, Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Thou Spake Zarathustra," and Schonberg's orchestration of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat (the "Saint Anne" Fugue).

Berg's Concerto carries with it an interesting story. Louis Krasner, the violinist who is to appear as soloist in the work, approached the Austrian composer in 1935 for a violin concerto. Berg did not at once respond to the idea, but moved by the news of the death of a young girl whom he knew in Vienna, the step-daughter of Gustav Mahler, he became possessed with the music as a memorial piece for his young friend. Berg, who was accustomed to linger over his scores, completed this one in six weeks. A few months later, Berg himself had died. The first performance was at the International Festival at Barcelona, and performances in London, Paris, and Vienna followed, Mr. Krasner taking the solo part in each. The Concerto is based upon the 12-note system which, as a disciple of Schonberg, Berg has always used, but the scheme is modified by tonal harmonies such as the interpolation of a chorale of Bach.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAR 1 - 1937

$11,250 IN FESTIVAL FUND

Berkshire Group Gets Pledges to Help Develop Music Center

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Feb. 28.—Building fund subscriptions that total $11,250 have been received by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which will cooperate with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the development of Tanglewood as a festival center.

Those who have pledged $1,000 are Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Norval H. Busey, Lester Roberts and England Brothers. There is one subscription of $4,000.

Festival Has Pledges of $11,250 For Its Building at Tanglewood

Pledges of $1000 each to aid the building fund for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at its permanent home on the Tappan estate, Tanglewood, in Stockbridge and Lenox, have been received from Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington, England Brothers of Pittsfield, Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Egremont, Lester Roberts of the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, Norval H. Busey Jr., of Lee and New York, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Lee and Philadelphia, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of Stockbridge and New York. There is an addition pledge of $4000 and one for $250, bringing the grand total to $11,250.

The Festival trustees are agreed that there shall be no general campaign for funds at this time, but individuals and firms in a position to help with the project are invited to make contributions. They may be sent to the treasurer, John C. Lynch, at Stockbridge, or the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, No. 1 Sutton Place, South, New York.

Newspaper clippings from coast to coast concerning the project of establishing a permanent home at Tanglewood, recently presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston, are being received by the Festival office. Seldom has an undertaking in the Berkshires been received with greater enthusiasm outside the county.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, wrote after the 1936 Festival that permanence of the venture should be assured. He declared that nowhere was there a greater opportunity to build something of national importance than in Berkshire with "the combined efforts of the Berkshire Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Festival Members' List Will Remain Open Till April 1

The membership campaign for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival whose concerts will be held the first two week-ends in August with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as the attraction, has been extended to April 1, because of the recent developments involving acceptance of Tanglewood as a permanent home for the festival.

There will be three concerts each week-end, and a membership will cover either series. Those wishing both series or six concerts will receive a substantial reduction from the subscription price which goes into effect after April 1. One membership provides either three or six tickets depending on where the seats are located. More than half of the boxes have been reserved and paid for.

Community chairmen have been invited to meet Monday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock in Stockbridge at the office of the treasurer, John C. Lynch, to discuss the membership campaign. At this meeting, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, and other officers of the Festival will be in attendance to explain plans for the concerts, plans for the structure to house an audience of 5000 and other details. All chairmen are urged to attend.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

FEB 28 1937

Boston Symphony

Berg Violin Concerto Will Be Played Next Friday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was scheduled to introduce a symphony with chorus by Yuri Shaporin, of Leningrad, to this country last Friday and Saturday under its assistant conductor, Richard Burgin, will give the first American performances of Alban Berg's last major work, his violin concerto, next Friday and Saturday in Symphony Hall. The soloist will be Louis Krasner, who first suggested the idea of this concerto to the composer and played it for the first time in the festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music at Barcelona last April. Serge Koussevitsky's program also will include Strauss's Alpine Symphony.

The next guest conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra during Dr. Rodzinski's absence will be Georges Enesco, appearing next Thursday and Saturday, when he also will be the soloist in the Beethoven violin concerto.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 28 1937

Alban Berg's violin concerto, written shortly before his death in 1935, will have its first American performance in Boston, this Friday afternoon and Saturday night, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky. The program also contains Richard Strauss's "Alpine" symphony and a suite for strings derived from sonatas by Corelli.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

FEB 28 1937

BACKED OWN ORCHESTRA

In pre-war days Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was both conductor and financial backer of his own symphony orchestra in Russia.

2/19

An Editorial on Music by Moses Smith

Trans
Feb 27/37

"The most beautiful and significant piece of music written since the War," wrote Constant Lambert concerning the Violin Concerto of Alban Berg, which will receive its first American performances at the Boston Symphony concerts of next Friday and Saturday, when the solo violinist will be Louis Krasner, Boston violinist, for whom the work was written.

There have been other signs that the swan-song of the composer, who died on Dec. 24, 1935, at the age of fifty, is the most compelling new music heard in European capitals in recent months. Eminent musicians, creative as well as analytical, have praised it in the most enthusiastic language: musicians as different in temperament, schooling and nationality as Lambert, Ernest Newman, Richard Capell, Jacques Ibert, Willi Reich, Willem Pijper, Florent Schmitt, Darius Milhaud and Joseph Marx.

The circumstances surrounding the composition of the Concerto and sundry related facts have been discussed at some length in these columns during the time since Berg died. Reasons of space forbid more than the sketchiest retelling. The outward tale has sufficient resemblance to the origin of the Mozart Requiem and attendant circumstances. Less (as in the case of Mozart) the element of mystery surrounding the stranger who prompted the work, there was the American violinist who urged his friend Berg to write a violin concerto. Berg, at first attracted to the task, let months slip by while little progress was made on the project. Then suddenly he was deeply affected by the death of a dearly beloved friend, young Manon Gropius, daughter of the widow of Mahler and an intimate of the Berg circle. Her death came all the more unexpectedly since she was apparently on the road to recovery from an illness that had caused her great suffering, which she had borne with an almost angelic fortitude.

For Berg, who, as the Dutch composer, Willem Pijper, has so well pointed out, needed a program to achieve his most successful music, this was enough. With feverish intensity, in marked contrast to his customarily deliberate and leisurely workmanship (vide his small list of compositions), he wrote the Concerto, now conceived as a Requiem for Manon Gropius, as the dedicatory line, "Dem Andenken eines Engels" ("To the Memory of an Angel"), in the score attests. Within six weeks the work was finished—as much to the surprise of Berg as to Krasner, as the composer wrote to the violinist at the time. Another few brief months and the composer's life was snuffed out. The parallel with Mozart was more or less completed: what Berg had composed as the requiem for another was his own requiem.

Those who have made cursory examinations of compositions written according to the principles of the twelve-tone system know what stupendous feats of organization they are likely to be. Judged as absolute music, the Berg Violin Concerto (which requires about twenty-five minutes in performance) is almost a miracle of such organization of materials. When it is considered that all the composer's processes have been in the service of a "story," which is wonderfully told the music, the phenomenon indeed takes on aspect of the miraculous.

s program music the Concerto may perhaps t be understood by allusion to the parallel hich Richard Capell has found between it and chubert's song (and quartet-movement), "Death and the Maiden." In Berg's work the Maiden enters first. Her purity is symbolized by the series of tones at the interval of a perfect fifth emerging from the open strings of the solo violin. This motto, which may be examined on the other side of this page, serves also to emphasize the improvisatory character of the violin, in terms of which alone the Concerto may be understood adequately.

This improvisation lasts for eleven measures and constitutes the Introduction. A few measures later the solo violin intones the principal "theme" of the composition, which, in the school of Schoenberg, is a series containing all twelve tones of the chromatic scale (Example 2). This series is artfully constructed so that it grows out of the preceding motto, since alternate notes of the first part of the series constitute the motto itself. Thus we have at once a striking example of the enormous tension imposed by the twelve-tone composers upon themselves. It will be seen, too, that the first nine notes of the series contain a regular minor and major triad—a fact which does much to explain the "tonal" character that so much of the composition has.

The last four notes of the series proper (B, C-sharp, E-flat and F) are the beginning of a whole-tone scale. They are significant not only because of their harmonic implications but even more because they anticipate the employment, in the last section of the Concerto, of the chorale, "Es ist genug," the first four notes of which they parallel in intervallic structure.

The Concerto is in two movements, each of which is, in turn, subdivided into two parts. The first part of the first movement (andante) has the improvisatory character predicted at the start. The second part of the movement is a scherzo with two trios and its lively character is obviously intended to convey an impression of the lightness and joy of the lovable young girl. The twelve-tone system, in the hands of Berg, is not so strait-laced as to prevent the introduction of a theme that takes on eventually the appearance of a Viennese waltz (Ex. 3) or of a Carinthian folk-tune (Ex. 4). It is the dance of the Maiden before Death.

The tempi are reversed in the second movement, and so are the moods. The violin solo part is again improvisatory ("freely, like a cadenza," according to the score). But now the range and flexibility of the instrument are employed to represent the agonized suffering of the Maiden. Soon one hears in the horns the persistent rhythmic figure which is the tread of Death (Ex. 5). There is a fearful struggle, in the course of which the violin pursues a tortuous path perhaps unparalleled in the history of the instrument. The excitement rises until the catastrophe (marked "Hohepunkt" in the score) is reached.

Then it subsides on a long F organ-point in the basses, while the four-note whole-tone motto begins to make its appearance. Thus the listener is quite prepared for the apparent growth, in his presence, of the chorale-theme, "Es ist genug," emerging from the solo violin and (in harmony) the clarinets (Ex. 6 and 7). The words of the chorale, which have been quoted here on another occasion, signalize resignation in the face of death. And it is this burden which occupies the composer for the rest of the Concerto.

Krasner is authority for the remarkable fact that Berg did not build his Concerto on the pregnant hymn-tune. On the contrary, Berg had completed the first movement of the Concerto before he stumbled upon "Es ist genug" in a book of chorales. The original is by an old German church composer, Johann Georg Ahle, and the harmony employed by Berg in the quoted example is exactly that used by J. S. Bach in his arrangement for the cantata, "O Ewigkeit, du Donnerwort." It is significant comment on the twelve-tone system that not only does Bach's harmony sound quite "natural" here, but also Berg avoided the Bachian harmonization of the first verse because it was too acrid for his purpose. Dissonance, we are reminded, was not invented in the twentieth century.

From here on the solo violin sings an elegy for the Maiden, a series of variations on the hymn. An impressive climax is achieved in a quite original fashion: the entire section of upper strings gradually—in successive small groups—join the solo violinist in unison, looking to him for leadership rather than to the conductor. In the same way they dissolve their partnership.

A few more measures and one arrives at the coda, the solo violin still engaged in its requiem-theme. The part gradually rises to the heavenly heights of a high G, the horns produce peacefully an inversion of the whole-tone motto and the strings sound, in a whisper, the opening series of fifths descending into the depths of the bass (Ex. 8). The circle has been completed.

Symphony List
for Next Week

Trans
Feb. 27/37

The program for the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will consist of three numbers—Alban Berg's Violin Concerto, which is to have its first hearing in America, Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and Schonberg's orchestration of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E flat (the "St. Anne" Fugue).

Berg's Concerto carries with it an interesting story. Louis Krasner, the violinist who is to appear as soloist in the work, approached the Austrian composer in 1935 for a violin concerto. Berg did not at once respond to the idea, but moved by the news of the death of a young girl whom he knew in Vienna, the step-daughter of Gustav Mahler, he devoted the music as a memorial piece for his young friend. Accustomed to linger over his scores, he completed this one in six weeks. A few months later, Berg himself had died. The first performance was at the International Festival at Barcelona, and performances in London, Paris and Vienna followed—Mr. Krasner taking the solo part in all. The Concerto is based upon the twelve-note system which, as a disciple of Schonberg, Berg has always used, but the scheme is modified by the interpolation of a chorale of Bach.

GREENFIELD, MASS.
Recorder-Gazette

MAR 4 - 1937

GIVES TO SYMPHONY

PITTSFIELD—(AP)—Mrs. John S. Newbury of Grosse Point Farms, Mich., president of the Detroit Symphony orchestra, today made a substantial donation to the building fund of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The festival will construct an inclosure at Tanglewood, where it plans to conduct six open-air symphony concerts Aug. 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15. The 210-acre estate, presented to the Boston Symphony orchestra, is located in the Berkshire hills between Lenox and Stockbridge. Mrs. Newbury spent her childhood in Stockbridge.

Boston Symphony Honors Pushkin

Prov Jo
Feb 23/37

Pushkin's centenary was observed in the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's sixteenth pair of concerts (Feb. 19-20), which listed three musical items inspired by the poet's works: A Suite from Rimsky-Korsakoff's opera, "Tsar Saltan"; the Letter Scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugen Onégin," sung by Olga Averino, and the Introduction and March from Rimsky's "Coq d'Or." There was more musical meat, however, in the first half of the program, which included the Overture to "Coriolanus" and the Fourth Symphony, by Beethoven.

The symphony was brilliantly performed, with exquisite precision and subtlety of nuance. Only the opening Adagio dragged, as had the slower measures of the overture, which received a rather theatrical performance. But the noble melodies of the symphony's slow movement were nobly sung, with due regard for a sustained tempo and an unflagging legato; and the utterance of the last two movements was unsurpassably lively and graceful. Dr. Koussevitzky did well to revive this symphony after an interval of more than five years. It does not deserve neglect merely because it is surpassed by some of its companions in the series. Treated as Dr. Koussevitzky treats it, it repays hearing fairly often.

It must be confessed that Rimsky's bright orchestrations soundec exceptionally empty after the symphony. Tchiakovsky fared rathe better, for if he lacked Rimsky' color, he had more musical sub stance. "Eugen Onégin" is not th most exciting opera in the worlc nor is the Letter Scene the mos thrilling of lyric episodes, but i served to show us the Byroni aspect of Pushkin's genius, as th Rimsky excerpts showed us th fantastic. To honor the poet thu was an appropriate and a gracefu gesture.

L. A. S.

The Arts in Boston

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Harold Bauer, Whi Will Play Beethoven's C Minor Piano Concerto With the Boston Symphony Orchestra Monday Evening

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

FEB 27 1937

Music

Music Inspired by Pushkin's Works to be Played Here Tuesday by Boston Orchestra. — Olga Averino, Boston Soprano, Will Sing "Letter Scene" from "Oniegin"

A hundred years ago last month, Alexander Pushkin, the great Russian poet, and Baron George d'Anthes a French officer in the Russian army, faced each other with duelling pistols. An anonymous letter to Pushkin had hinted at an affair between his beautiful, intellectually shallow wife and the handsome soldier.

In the duel, Pushkin was mortally wounded. He died two days later, at the age of only 37 years. But, like Keats, Schubert, Mozart and many other geniuses of the arts, he had been able in a brief span to create masterpieces in many forms.

His work in the drama, the story and poetry inspired Russian composers to create some of their finest works, and excerpts from these works will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday night in commemoration of the death of Pushkin. The performance will be given in Metropolitan Theatre, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

On the program is a suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera, "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan." Pushkin used folk tales as the material or basis for many of his poems, and these poems gripped Rimsky-Korsakov strongly. "Tsar Saltan" was made into a libretto for him by Vladimir Bielsky. In 1899 he wrote the music. From the "rather longish preludes to Acts I, II, and IV," as he said later, he decided to make a suite called "Little Pictures to the Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan." The orchestra will play the Allegretto alla marcia, the introduction to Act II, the "Flight of the Bumblebee" and the "Three Wonders," the introduction to the last scene.

Tsar Saltan is one of those fairy-tale rulers who go about incognito listening to the conversations of their subjects. He hears three sisters discussing what they would do if they were married to the Tsar. The youngest says she would bear him a fine heir. He marries her, and allows her two sisters to live with them in his palace. They are envious. Continually scheming and conspiring, they eventually contrive to have the Tsaritsa and her son cast upon the sea in a cask. They drift to a magic island, where the Tsar's son grows up and has many adventures. Wishing to visit his father, he is transformed into a bumblebee, flies to his father's land, and causes some annoyance to the two disappointed sisters. He returns to his island, where the Tsar eventually visits him.

The orchestra will play, and Olga Averino, Boston soprano, will sing, the letter scene from Tchaikovsky's opera "Eugene Oniegin," also drawn from the works of Pushkin. Oniegin is a handsome disillusioned man to whom is introduced Tatiana Larin, a girl of romantic tendency and little experience in the world. She falls in love with him and writes a letter confessing her infatuation. It is this scene, in which the letter is composed, that Miss Averino will sing.

To finish the story, Oniegin coldly turns aside the love of Tatiana, but meets her years afterwards when she is a fashionable lady married to a much older man. Oniegin falls in love with her, and she confesses that her old love for him is reawakened, but she will not yield to his entreaties; she leaves him with abrupt finality.

The first part of the program will be given over to Beethoven. His overture to Collin's "Coriolanus," and his Fourth Symphony will be played.

This symphony, in B-flat-major, was written in 1806. It is said to have been written on commission from Count Oppersdorf, a music lover rich enough to have a small symphony orchestra for his own delight. , Beethoven was working on the C-minor, subsequently published as the Fifth Symphony; but he was seemingly pressed for money—a situation not unusual—and he laid aside the C-minor and worked on the other. It was dedicated to Count Oppersdorf, and Beethoven received a good-sized sum for it. It is related that he did not send the score to the count, but gave it to Prince Lobkowitz for performance. This indefensible act and some similar dealings aroused the anger of Count Oppersdorf and certainly are no credit to Beethoven.

The symphony is in a happy and lyrical mood, and is supposed by some biographers to reflect his sentiments for Theresa von Brunswick, to whom he became engaged in May 1806.

G. Y. L.

Symphony by Soviet Composer Makes Profound Impression on Audience

2/27/37

By Redfern Mason

Richard Burgin took heart of grace and the fairies in Weber's "Oberon" moved with lighter feet at yesterday's concert of the Symphony than they did at the concert on the preceding Monday. In the Mozart Serenade in D, which followed, the beauty of the music awoke in him a purer fantasy, as well indeed it might in any spirit "finely touched." The work is pure Mozart in his most gracious mood. It is aristocratic, of course, fit to grace the wooing of lordly Viennese gentry of a time when the mutterings of the French Revolution were as yet unheard The trumpet passages in the Minuet, the colloquy of flutes in the "Concertante," and the choral antiphonies of the Andantino were undiluted pleasure to the audience.

In the Mozart indeed I think Burgin rose in esteem with the listening assembly. Here he was interpreting the music of one of Nature's aristocrats, not the genius which owes its dignity to a patent from royalty, but that which is superior by virtue of its native dignity.

But the conductor's triumph was yet to come. If the first half of the programme did homage to the upper ten of imperial Vienna, the second half sang the aspirations of insurgent humanity, as represented by Russia of the Bolsheviks.

Our Symphony had the courage to be realistic and to face the fact that, whatever we may think of the Soviet regime, it is a fact that cannot be ignored, for the simple reason that Russia, twenty years ago about the twelfth in the economic hierarchy of nations, is today only second to these United States.

Musically, in certain ways, Soviet Russia is leading the world. The fact that in the country around Moscow alone there have been established three thousand people's choirs, is eloquent proof that, from an aesthetic point of view, salvation may be once more coming to us from the East.

Shaporin's Symphony in C minor, the composer's opus II, is the work, in which Mr. Burgin and the orchestra chose to express the genius of the Soviets. It is an elemental work, of a significance so plain that he who listens may understand, without any help from the program notes. And a curious thing about the score is that devotees of Stravinsky and Schonberg might turn up their noses and call it bourgeois and old-fashioned, were it not so vital and earnest that it is impossible to hear it without being deeply stirred.

Shaporin holds out his hand to Beethoven. Between the "Eroica" and the "Choral" symphonies and the work of this inspired Bolshevik there is a community of passionate fervor. In all three works we hear the people challenging the old order; a chorus that sings purely syllabic melody cries out in grief at things as they are. You hear the lamentation of female voices, there is the angry outcry of rebellious manhood. The passion deepens; there is the feeling of deliberate valor, given direction by martial strains and ryhthms. The spirit of Russian folk song is manifest and the ever intensifying sense of an onward movement which no power in the wrold can withstand.

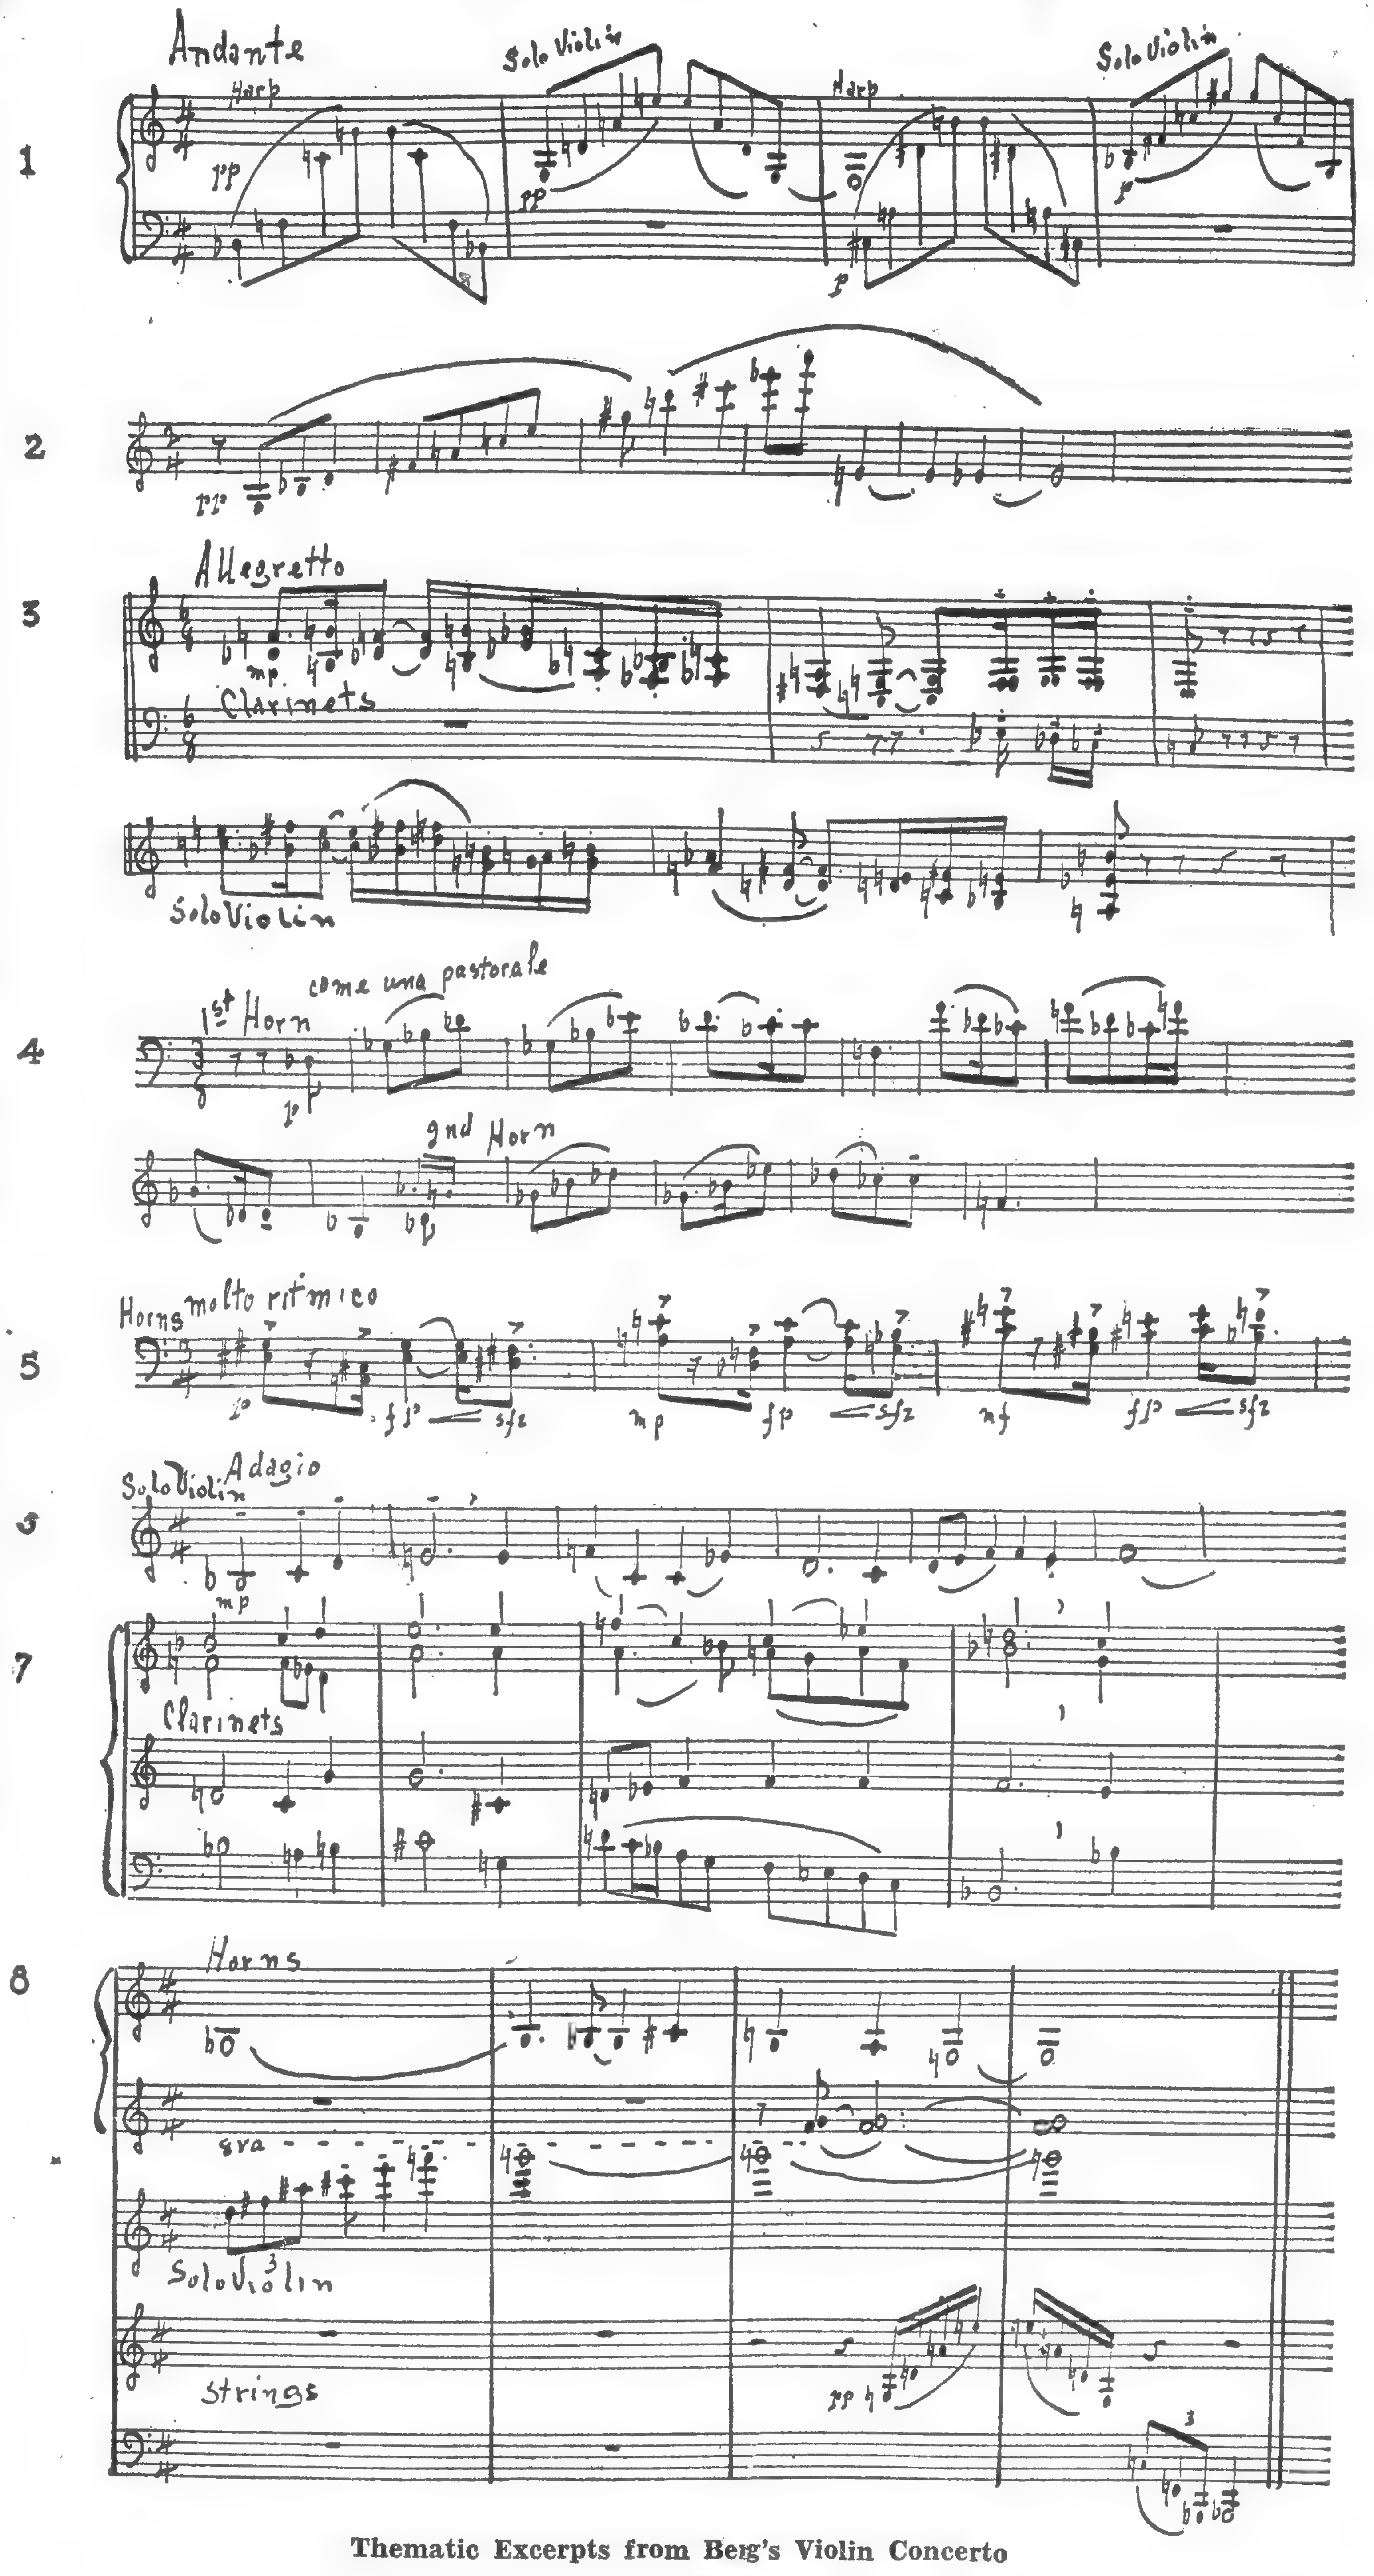
The composer may be wrong in his premisses; but he has the belief that moves mountains. There are paradisaic moments; but it is not the Paradise of the Bible that is meant; it is the Paradise of humanity that has evolved from the primal ooze to triumphant self realization.

The final blending of orchestra and chorus was apocalyptic, and we owe thanks to the men and women of the Cecilia Society who, under the leadership of Arthur Fiedler, did their part so nobly.

Burgin here dropped all his dubious faith in such music as the "Oberon" overture and gave himself to the direction of the Shaporin with an apostolic zeal. His interpretation of the score was the work of a master.

Shaporin may have achieved a "succes de scandale"; but no fair-minded man or woman can deny its beauty. For good or for ill this music will make a mark on the mind of the generation.

To the Memory of an Angel



Thematic Excerpts from Berg's Violin Concerto

Olga Averino to Be Soloist with the Boston Symphony

Providence Journal - Feb. 28/37

Noted Soprano Will Appear in Concert Here Tuesday Night.—Beethoven, Tschaikowski and Rimsky-Korsakoff Works on Program.

THE Boston Symphony Ochestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, returns for its fourth Providence concert of the season in the Metropolitan Theatre, Tuesday night at 8:15 o'clock. The program will be composed of works by Beethoven, Tschaikowski and Rimsky-Korsakoff, with Olga Averino, soprano, as soloist.

Beethoven will occupy the entire first half with his Fourth Symphony and "Coriolanus" overture. Vocal and orchestral excerpts from Russian operas will follow the intermission. They number scenes from Tschaikowski's "Eugene Oniegen" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's suite taken from his "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan." The "books" are by Pushkin. The arrangement of the program and other announcements of the week follow:

Overture to Collin's tragedy, "Coriolanus," opus 62 ....Beethoven Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, opus 60 ....Beethoven
- I Adagio; Allegro vivace
- II Adagio
- III Allegro vivace. Trio. Un poco meno allegro
- IV Finale: Allegro, ma non troppo

Letter Scene from "Eugene Oniegin," Lyrical Scenes (After Pushkin) ....Tschaikowski
Suite from the opera, "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan" (After Pushkin) ....Rimsky-Korsakoff
- I Allegretto alla marcia
- II Introduction to Act II
- III "The Flight of the Bumble-Bee"
- IV "The Three Wonders" (Introduction to last scene)

◆ ◆ ◆

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
FEB 28 1937

* * *

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY and the Boston Orchestra give this symphony a most impressive projection that rivets the attention. Few conductors fathom the inmost emotion-implications of this stirring human document in tone. None brings it to performance as effectively as does the great Boston conductor.

Another of the RCA-Victor Musical Masterpieces Series pregnant with appeal is Faure's A-major sonata for violin and piano played by Jascha Heifetz and Emanuel, respectively, on three 12-inchers. Here is a recording of a chamber music work which should be in the library of every lover of this type of music. Beautiful ensemble performance characterizes its rendition throughout, and Mr. Heifertz further glorifies his art with magnificent and faultless playing.

Other orchestral items of great interest are in the Red Seal category, and embrace Eugen Zador's Hungarian Caprice, played by the Minneapolis Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy on a 12-incher; a D-minor Handel Overture freely transcribed by Leopold Stokowski, which the latter directs through the medium of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and a modern-idiomed orchestra work—Choros—by H. Villa Lobos, who directs the Victor Brazilian Orchestra in the playing of his work.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
MAR 3 - 1937

The acceptance of the Tanglewood estate by the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra assures the continuance of the summer music festivals in the Berkshires. The dates set for the concerts this season are August 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15.

In the vocal domain the aria, This Very Vivid Day, and Lullaby, both from Richard Hageman's opera, Caponsacchi, is giving fine expression by Helen Jepson and an orchestra led by Alexander Smallens. Here is lovely, melodious music of definite appeal.

Marian Anderson, the Philadelphia colored girl, who has come to the fore as one of the outstanding contraltos of the day, sings H. T. Burleigh's arrangement of the spiritual, Go Down Moses, and Florence Price's transcription of My Soul's Been Anchored in the Lord. The piano accompaniments are played by Kosti Vehanen.

Festival Building Fund At Half Way Mark, $12,250

Evening Eagle March 2/37

At the recent of sub-chairmen of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival meetinb yesterday, in the offices of John C. Lynch, the membership lists will not be closed until May 1, instead of April 1, as originally announced. The sub-chairmen were of the opinion the additional month will be of great assistance in securing the necessary quota of 1750 sustaining members.

Gives $1000 for Building

Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller, chairman for Windsor and Berkshire Trail towns, also a member of the board of trustees, enlarged the building fund to $12,250 by a gift of $1000. Before construction is begun, the Festival board wants $25,000.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, of Stockbridge and New York, presided. Mrs. George L. Taylor of Great Barrington reported keen interest in her town. Miss Estelle G. Hutchinson felt Lenox would more than do its part. Business men and townspeople, she said, were alive to the possibilities of the Festival.

Miss Elizabeth Gamwell, chairman for Pittsfield, reported she had received a number of inquiries about the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August. Most of those inquiring desired tickets for all six concerts. Mrs. John C. Lynch said Stockbridge would do just as well as it had done in the past. Miss Margery Whiting of Lanesboro reported much interest there.

Persons desiring memberships need not wait for blanks. They may communicate with local chairmen or write to the office in Stockbridge.

PROVIDENCE, R. I. JOURNAL

FEB 2 8 193

From Pianissimo to Forte with SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY, Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, during Concert Appearance

—Candid Camera Photos by Rogers

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

FEB 2 8 1937

Koussevitzky To Conduct Boston Symphony March 10

Under the baton of the distinguished Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play its second concert of the season here on Wednesday evening, March 10, the important musical occasion bringing to a close the Woolsey Hall Concert Series for 1936-37.

Ranking second to none of the world's greatest orchestras, the Boston organization has naturally been accorded lavish newspaper space wherever they have appeared. But the brilliant conductor who directs the superb body of 110 musicians likewise has his place in the sun when it comes to critical and flattering newspaper comment about the orchestra, —in fact, Dr. Koussevitzky is one of the most widely publicized musical men in the world.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Woolsey Hall on March 10.

Some interesting comment was printed in the program of the Festival at Queen's Hall, London, England, when Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the British Broadcasting Orchestra some time ago.

Said the fluent commentator, in part: "Of that gifted handful of musicians, the great international conductors whose careers are spent for the most part profitably rolling their reputations around the world, few have hitherto borne Russian names. There is, of course, a possible explanation: Less than any European nation has Russia at any time willingly consented to share her artists with other countries, and it may be due to the accident of circumstance that one of the greatest conductors of today should be at the same time a world figure and a Russian . . ."

"Although Koussevitzky took first to conducting at an age much later than does the average student, he is none the less a born conductor, and there are those who declare that he and Toscanini are in a class by themselves However that may be, none will question his right to be regarded as heir-in-chief of the great modern tradition of conducting exercised and bequeathed by Nikisch, one of the previous famous conductors of the Boston Symphony."

"Dr. Koussevitzky's repertory is enormous; as for instance, during his first two years at Boston he conducted 52 concerts without repeating a single item in any one of the programs. His taste, too, is catholic in its widest sense. He based his first preferences upon the thr B's (Bach, Beethoven and Brahms), nourished them on the composers of his native Russia, and has since extended them to embrace practically everything, classical or modern, which is scored for orchestra, providing it is written with sincerity, and deports itself with dignity."

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press

FEB 27 1937

Garden Shrine for Music Arranged for Berkshires

Symphonic Festival Trustees Endorse Program for Tanglewood, Between Lenox and Stockbridge; Funds for Building Sought

Neighboring the Capital District will be a garden shrine to American music.

Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., meeting in New York City recently with its president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, endorsed a plan to establish such a shrine in Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires, was recently given to the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Festival because of the outstanding success of the concerts in 1936. The trustees of both organizations have drafted an agreement for perpetual use of the property as a great Festival center.

The gardens were planned by Mrs. Brooks' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey of Boston. The formal garden, which will be used as an outside foyer, was planted about 1900, with the assistance of their gardener, Alexander McConnachie. The hemlocks for this planting were secured from neighboring woods, which was also the case for the 12 foot hedge, extending 1,200 feet along the front of the grounds. The latter is much older.

Mrs. Dixey was a painter of renown, having exhibited in Paris and other cities. Mr. Dixey was much interested in music though he did not follow this as a career. He conducted the first performance of "Lohengrin" in Boston, which he did in concert form.

It is hoped to make a substantial start on a building, a suitable inclosure, for the concerts this spring, for which the trustees planned today to raise the necessary funds. Miss Robinson Smith reported several gifts of $1,000 each for the building fund.

"I can conceive of no place in this country where a great festival could be more admirably located [illegible] far as tradition and background are concerned. It will be an American festival in New England with a great orchestra from New England conducted by an eminent leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. We should be most happy to have anyone who is interested in our ambition for a great Festival Center in America join us in raising our building fund."

The concert dates were officially established today as Aug. 5, 7 and 8 and Aug. 12, 14 and 15, the first two weekends in the month.

The executive committee was authorized to proceed immediately with a membership campaign. Memberships will be accepted up to April 1. A member is given a substantial reduction in the price for the series of concerts. Information as to memberships, accommodations, roads and other attractions in the Berkshires during the period of the Festival may be secured by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

At the meeting were Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of New York and Stockbridge and Norval H. Busey, Jr. of New York and Lee, Mass., vicepresidents of the Festival; George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mass., the clerk; John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, the treasurer; Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield; Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of New York and Lenox, Mrs. Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of New York and Stockbridge, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller of Cleveland and Windsor, Mass., Prof. Philip Marshall Brown of Washington and Williamstown, Mass and William Bull [illegible] enox.

21

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 28 193

From Pianissimo to Forte with SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY, Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, during Concert Appearance

—Candid Camera Photos by Rogers

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
FEB 28 1937

Koussevitzky To Conduct Boston Symphony March 10

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Woolsey Hall on March 10.

Under the baton of the distinguished Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play its second concert of the season here on Wednesday evening, March 10, the important musical occasion bringing to a close the Woolsey Hall Concert Series for 1936-37.

Ranking second to none of the world's greatest orchestras, the Boston organization has naturally been accorded lavish newspaper space wherever they have appeared. But the brilliant conductor who directs the superb body of 110 musicians likewise has his place in the sun when it comes to critical and flattering newspaper comment about the orchestra, —in fact, Dr. Koussevitzky is one of the most widely publicized musical men in the world.

Some interesting comment was printed in the program of the Festival at Queen's Hall, London, England, when Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the British Broadcasting Orchestra some time ago.

Said the fluent commentator, in part: "Of that gifted handful of musicians, the great international conductors whose careers are spent for the most part profitably rolling their reputations around the world, few have hitherto borne Russian names. There is, of course, a possible explanation: Less than any European nation has Russia at any time willingly consented to share her artists with other countries, and it may be due to the accident of circumstance that one of the greatest conductors of today should be at the same time a world figure and a Russian . . ."

"Although Koussevitzky took first to conducting at an age much later than does the average student, he is none the less a born conductor, and there are those who declare that he and Toscanini are in a class by themselves. However that may be, none will question his right to be regarded as heir-in-chief of the great modern tradition of conducting exercised and bequeathed by Nikisch, one of the previous famous conductors of the Boston Symphony."

"Dr. Koussevitzky's repertory is enormous; as for instance, during his first two years at Boston he conducted 52 concerts without repeating a single item in any one of the programs. His taste, too, is catholic in its widest sense. He based his first preferences upon the three B's (Bach, Beethoven and Brahms), nourished them on the composers of his native Russia, and has since extended them to embrace practically everything, classical or modern, which is scored for orchestra, providing it is written with sincerity, and deports itself with dignity."

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press
FEB 28 1937

Garden Shrine for Music Arranged for Berkshires

Symphonic Festival Trustees Endorse Program for Tanglewood, Between Lenox and Stockbridge; Funds for Building Sought

Neighboring the Capital District will be a garden shrine to American music.

Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., meeting in New York City recently with its president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, endorsed a plan to establish such a shrine in Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires, was recently given to the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Festival because of the outstanding success of the concerts in 1936. The trustees of both organizations have drafted an agreement for perpetual use of the property as a great Festival center.

The gardens were planned by Mrs. Brooks' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey of Boston. The formal garden, which will be used as an outside foyer, was planted about 1900, with the assistance of their gardener, Alexander McConnachie. The hemlocks for this planting were secured from neighboring woods, which was also the case for the 12 foot hedge, extending 1,200 feet along the front of the grounds. The latter is much older.

Mrs. Dixey was a painter of renown, having exhibited in Paris and other cities. Mr. Dixey was much interested in music though he did not follow this as a career. He conducted the first performance of "Lohengrin" in Boston, which he did in concert form.

It is hoped to make a substantial start on a building, a suitable inclosure, for the concerts this spring, for which the trustees planned today to raise the necessary funds. Miss Robinson Smith reported several gifts of $1,000 each for the building fund.

"I can conceive of no place in this country where a great festival could be more admirably located far as tradition and background are concerned. It will be an American festival in New England with a great orchestra from New England conducted by an eminent leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. We should be most happy to have anyone who is interested in our ambition for a great Festival Center in America join us in raising our building fund."

The concert dates were officially established today as Aug. 5, 7 and 8 and Aug. 12, 14 and 15, the first two weekends in the month.

The executive committee was authorized to proceed immediately with a membership campaign. Memberships will be accepted up to April 1. A member is given a substantial reduction in the price for the series of concerts. Information as to memberships, accommodations, roads and other attractions in the Berkshires during the period of the Festival may be secured by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

At the meeting were Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of New York and Stockbridge and Norval H. Busey, Jr. of New York and Lee, Mass., vicepresidents of the Festival; George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mass., the clerk; John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, the treasurer; Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield; Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of New York and Lenox, Mrs. Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of New York and Stockbridge, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller of Cleveland and Windsor, Mass., Prof. Philip Marshall Brown of Washington and Williamstown, Mass and William Bull enox.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 28 1937

222

World Honors to One Who Epitomized

Pushkin Centenary Stimulating Fresh Enthusiasm for Him

Acclaimed at 10, He Crammed Artistry Into Short Life Before Duellist's Bullet Cut Short Its Fervor.

BY GEORGE HENRY LOVETT SMITH

NOT only the Russian-speaking world, but indeed the whole literary globe is celebrating this month the 100th anniversary of the death of the Russian poet Pushkin.

Two forces are behind the observance, but neither of them is capable of stirring up the veritable volcano of enthusiasm that has poured its burning lava over the civilized map. The Soviet government, finding it necessary to reverse a tentative opinion that Pushkin was a friend of the czar, the ruling classes, the bourgeoisie, therefore anathema to all good proletarians, has discovered that his greatness cannot be denied on any grounds, and that a campaign to establish him as the common heritage of Russian people, as a formative influence on modern Russian culture and language, can have none but salutary results.

Thus many new editions of the works have been printed, critical studies have appeared by the dozen, illustrations have been made, music has been composed, and Pushkin hours on the government broadcasting system organized. No possible tribute to the poet has been overlooked: each eulogy, of course, showing the skill, the wisdom and the enlightened energy of the eulogizer.

NOSTALGIC HOMAGE

In America, as in many other countries, the expatriated White Russians, having lost all hope of returning to their native soil, take the pleasure and the responsibility of the anniversary upon their eager shoulders, rejoicing in the belief that the Soviet has been forced to acknowledge the power of the old Russian tradition.

Striving to bring the works of the poet before a general public, the energy of these two elements has also kindled a belated interest in Pushkin that has been stifled by the inadequacy of the translations of his verse as well as the comparative inaccessibility of the Russian language.

The numerous English versions appearing in honor of the anniversary year have shown both that the problem of translation is not solved, and that the vigor and richness of the original, its racy simplicity and elegant directness, beggar English. But they also impress us with their inability to be ignored: we must accept them till we can taste of the Russian itself, or till some equal artist plays King James to a needy scripture.

This magnificence and greatness, this mastery that we perceive in Pushkin, more than justify all the efforts of the popularizers, and the musical works inspired by his poetry and prose—as well as the paintings and sculpture—are equally rewarding explorations. "The Fairy Tale of the Czar Saltán" and "Eugene Oniegin"—which appear on the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tuesday evening program in Providence—are both based on texts by Pushkin. They are played in his memory.

A countryman of the poet has exclaimed that "Pushkin is our all," and it is true that no author has so characteristically embodied the essential spirit of his native land. Indeed the very essence of Russian genius is in Pushkin; his work contains the epitome of all that Russians have ever thought or felt: and it is this amazing universality, this strange ability to encompass every human emotion and idea that is so impressive about the man. No Russian seems able to discuss any moral subject without some quotation from Pushkin, no Russian to refer to the simplest poetical experience without thinking or sensing some sentiment long become a part of his nature through love of Pushkin's work.

As the perfect representation of the Russian spirit, he may be considered to be the finest product of the great wave of creative enthusiasm that swept Russia from the end of the Seventeenth Century under the aegis of Peter the Great.

Peter was an innovator and a scientist who realized that Russia must orient herself sufficiently to absorb the technique that the world was creating more and more rapidly for the building of ships, the planning of campaigns, the simplification and enlargement of everyday life.

This wave of creative expansion and Westernization gathered momentum under the enlightened Catherine who realized the necessity of lending the strongest propulsive force to the already fruitful efforts of Peter and preserved her vision in her inscription on Peter's statue in St. Petersburg, "To Peter the First, Catherine the Second."

AFTER SHE HAD DIED

Catherine's efforts to found a culture to crown Peter's desires for Russia came to an unsuspected fulfillment only after her death, for Pushkin was not born till 1799—three years after the Empress' death. Had she been able to double her allotted span of years, what a future she would have seen for her deliberate attempt to found a literature and a culture!

Like Dante, Pushkin wrote in a popular language which was as yet hardly fixed in its modern form and character. By the strength, the ease, and the perfection of his writing in this vernacular recently descended from old Church Slavic he at once set the modern Russian literary language and established its best usage. Dante had done as much for Italian some five centuries earlier.

But not only would Catherine have seen the dignifying of the native tongue, and the appearance of the most perfect expression possible to it, she would have witnessed the founding of a Russian nationalistic school of music, based by Pushkin's friend Glinka on the inspiration of the poet's first really ambitious work, "Russlan and Ludmilla." This work and Glinka's earlier opera "A Life for the Czar," may be called the first steps in the advance of modern Russian music.

But how many of the great Russian composers have found inspiration in the constant spring of Pushkin's genius! Dargomijsky's "The Stone Guest": Rimsky-Korsakov's "Mozart and Salieri," "Czar Saltan," and "The Golden Cockerel"; Moussorgsky's "Boris Godounov;" Cesar Cui's "The Captain's Daughter." All these are based on tales of Pushkin.

So also are Chaikovsky's "Eugene Oniegin," "Pique Dame," "Mazeppa," and "Voyvode." Rachmaninoff's "The Miser Knight" and "Aleko." as well as Stravinsky's opera buffa "Mavra," are set to these intriguing tales. It is difficult to discover a Russian composer who has not been tempted to compose songs to Pushkin's exquisite lyrics.

Alexander Sergeievich Pushkin was born in Moscow, June 6, 1799. His father's family was descended from a long line of officials in the government who were not without royal blood; his mother's grandfather was the son of an Abyssinian prince brought to Russia at the request of Peter the Great. This maternal ancestry was reflected in his full lips and swarthy complexion, but it seems to have amused rather than disturbed him as there are numerous references to it in his letters and poems where he calls himself "an ugly offspring of the Negroes."

His early education was obtained mostly from the books in his father's library in which he read widely and without ordered design, and from his nurse Arina Rodiovna who is said to have initiated him into that extraordinary realm of Russian folklore of which he is greatest literary exponent.

After attending the Lyceum for six years, he went to St. Petersburg to accept a minor position in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. At once the dominant characteristics of his whole life began to appear in an endless round of dissipation, passion, and poetry. Despite his continual stream of affairs, he managed to complete his first sizable poem "Russlan and Ludmilla," and found himself famous almost over the alleged night. This at the age of 21.

But this ease of existence could not last, and he found himself in exile for association with dangerous revolutionary organizations. For nearly seven years he was forced to remain away from the capital, and upon his return to Moscow in 1826 he was placed under a silken surveillance which was never slackened till his death.

PISTOLS FOR TWO COFFEE FOR ONE

Even his marriage, calculated to restore an order and sympathy to a fatigued life, proved unsuccessful because of the insufficient spiritual insight of his beautiful wife. Rushing into a duel with characteristc Byronic rebelliousness at an anonymous note accusing his wife of inconstancy, he was wounded and died after only slightly wounding his opponent, the young French officer Baron George d'Anthes, who has won eternal condemnation for destroying so precious a life which had reached but its 38th year.

It is probable, however, that d'Anthes had no remote idea of the extraordinary quality of the man with whom he was pointing pistols, for his ignorance of Russian deprived him of the ability to understand the works of the poet, and there can be no doubt about the attitude of Petersburg society to a rather dissolute poet whose wife was accused of intimacy with the Czar.

When the shot was fired, however, immortality began, and at once the whole city realized what tragedy had come to its door. D'Anthes was forced to flee to France, thousands of copies of "Eugene Oniegin" sold at once, and the poet was quickly buried in the midst of a popular uprising.

It is a testimonial to the taste and the inspiration of all those concerned in his funeral that the tombstone was chiseled to bear the inscription "To Pushkin." No other unnecessary words defaced the smooth surface. Five months before he had written:

> "A monument, not built with > human hands,
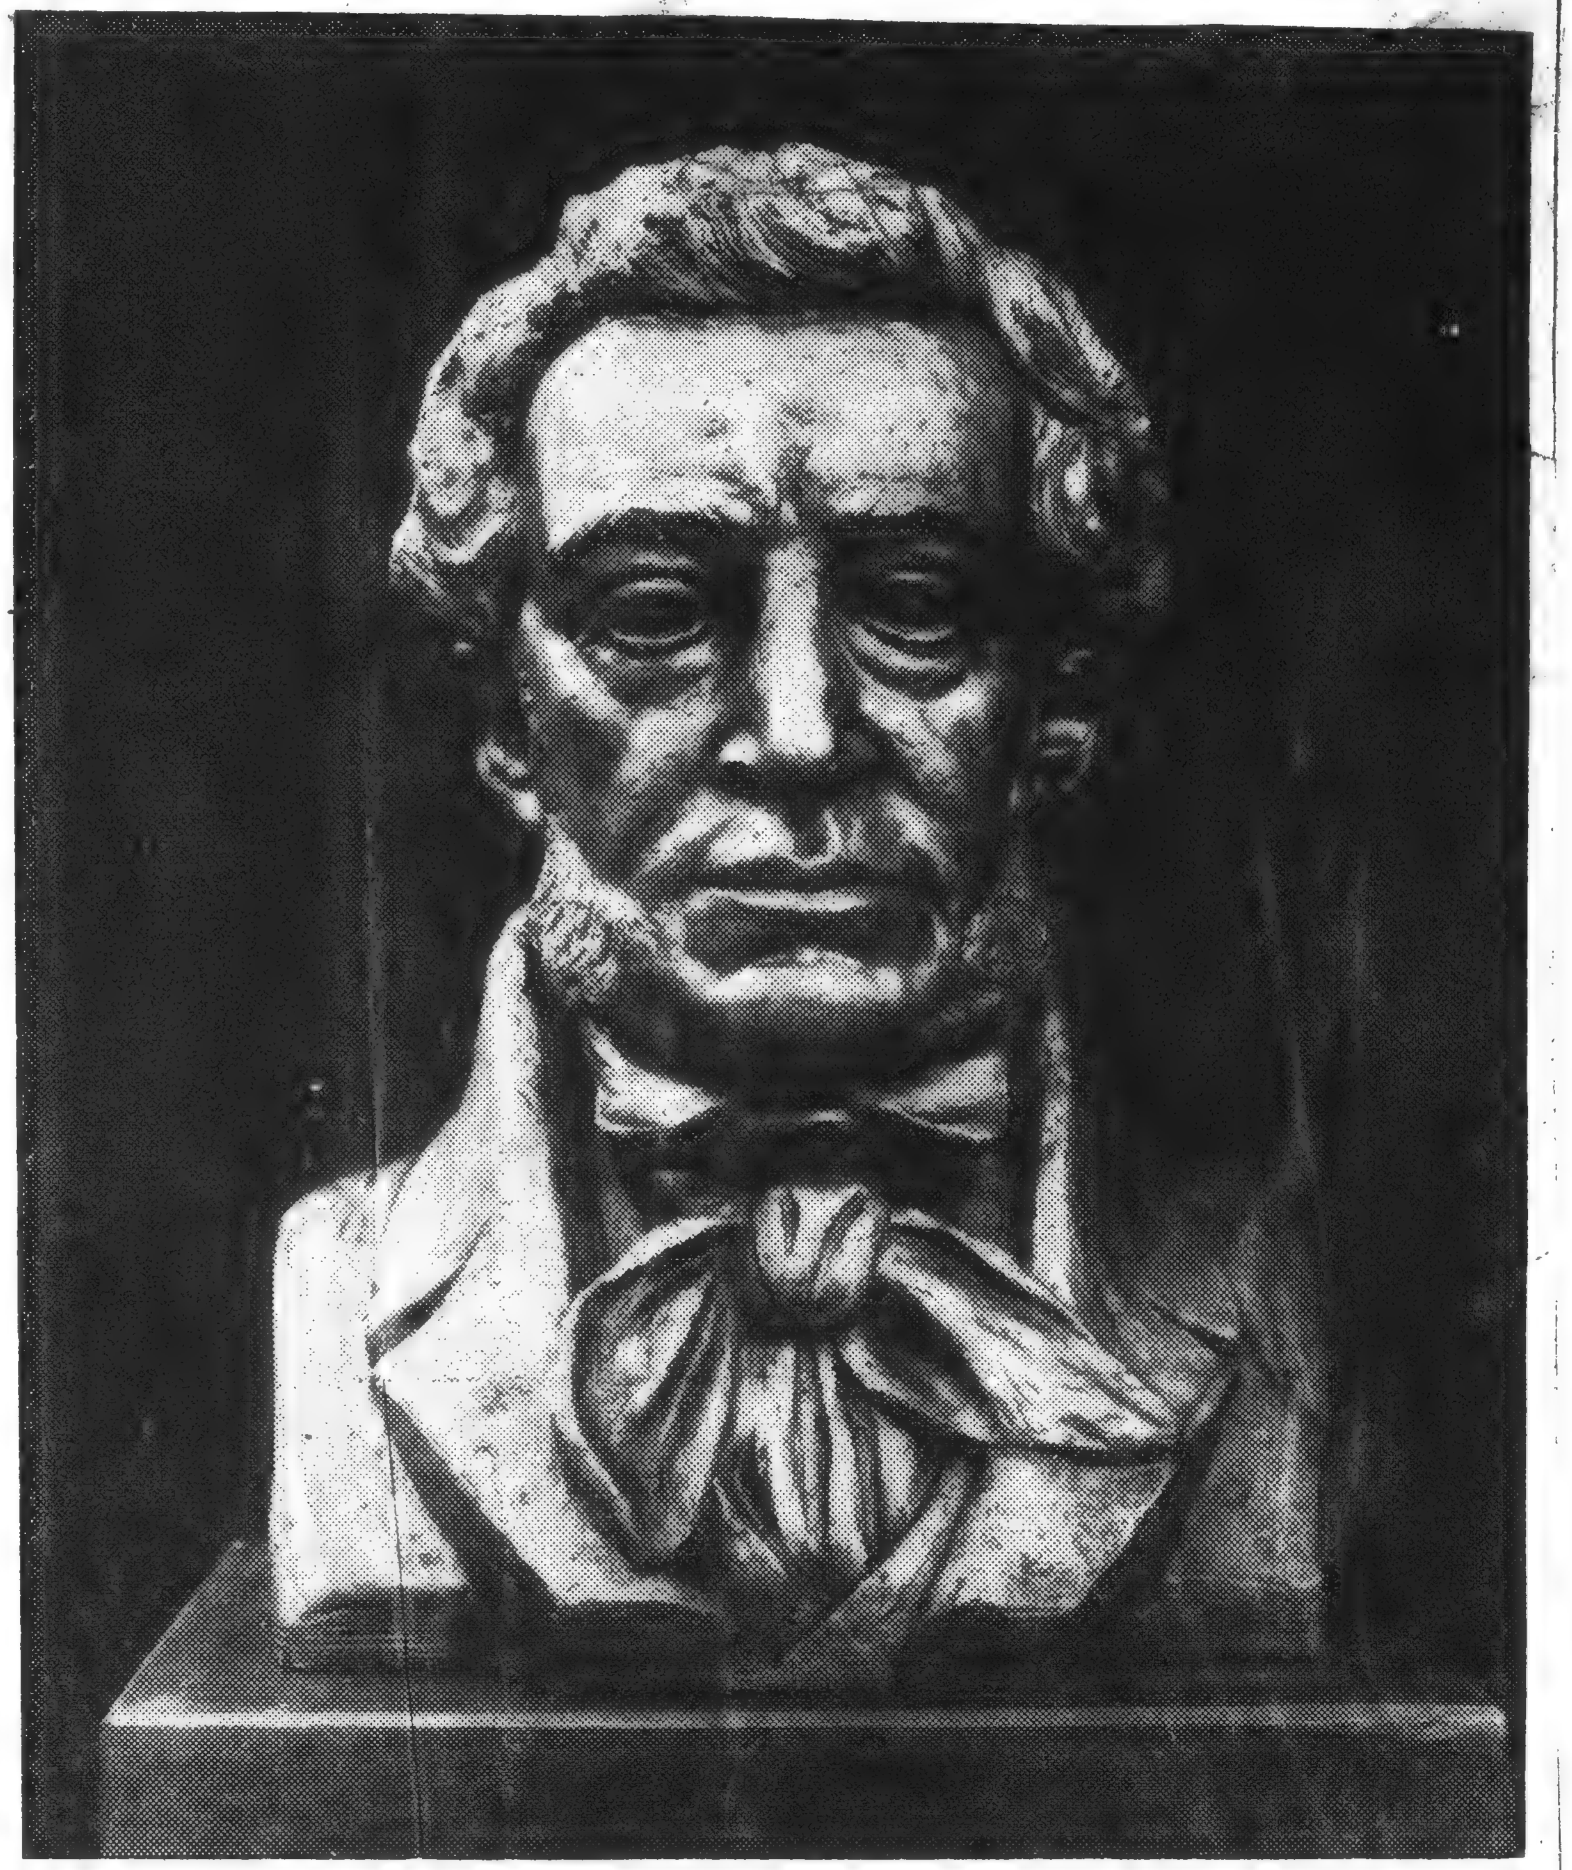
> I have erected to myself."

This he never doubted, or that Russia would remember him as its most inspired genius.



Pushkin. A bust of the poet recently completed by Madame Koussevitzky, wife of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is on exhibition in Symphony Hall, Boston.

223

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

MAR 2 - 1937

TANGLEWOOD TO BE MUSIC SHRINE FOR BERKSHIRE FESTIVAI

NEW YORK, March 2—Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., meeting with the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith at her home, 1 Sutton Place, South, in New York city recently enthusiastically endorsed the proposal to make Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., a great musical shrine in America.

Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires, was recently given to the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Festival because of the outstanding success of the concerts in 1936. The trustees of both organizations have drafted an agreement for perpetual use of the property as a great Festival center.

The gardens were planned by Mrs. Brooks' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey, of Boston. The formal garden, which will be used as an outside foyer, was planted about 1900, with the assistance of their gardener, Alexander McConnachie. The hemlocks for this planting were secured from neighboring woods, which was also the case for the 12 foot hedge, extending 1200 feet along the front of the grounds. The latter is much older.

Mrs. Dixey was a painter of renown having exhibited in Paris and other cities. Mr. Dixey was much interested in music, though he did not follow this as a career. He conducted the first performance of "Lohengrin" in Boston which he did in concert form.

It is hoped to make a substantial start on a building, a suitable inclosure, for the concerts this spring, for which the trustees planned today to raise the necessary funds. Miss Robinson Smith reported several gifts of $1,000 each for the building fund, and board members agreed to contract others who might be willing to assist.

The concert dates were officially established today as August 5, 7 and 8 and August 12, 14 and 15, the first two weekends in the month.

The executive committee was authorized to proceed immediately with a membership campaign. Membership will be accepted up to April 1. A member is given a substantial reduction in the price for the series of concerts. Information as to memberships, accommodations, roads and other attractions in the Berkshires during the period of the Festival may be secured by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

At the meeting were Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, of New York and Stockbridge and Norval H. Busey, Jr., of New York and Lee, Mass., vice presidents of the Festival; George W. Edman, of Pittsfield, Mass., the clerk; John C. Lynch of Stockbride, the treasurer; Milton B. Warner, of Pittsfield; Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn, of New York and Lenox, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, of New York and Stockbridge, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller, of Cleveland and Windsor, Mass., Prof. Philip Marshall Brown, of Washington and Williamstown, Mass., William Bull of Lenox.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

MAR 4 - 1937

Festival Center Up In The Berkshires Meets Approval

PITTSFIELD, March 4—Mrs. John H. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony orchestra, holding there is no reason why there should not be established a great festival center in America, comparable to those in Europe, today sent a donation to the building fund of the Berkshire symphonic festival.

Mrs. Newberry, whose home is in Grosse Point Farms, Mich., wrote that she is completely in sympathy with the plan to locate such a great center at Tanglewood, 210-acre estate given to trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappen of Boston. It was at Tanglewood that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires.

Mrs. Newberry, who spent her childhood in Stockbridge, entertained Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra, during the orchestra's visit to Detroit in December. She also attended the concerts in the Berkshires last summer. The festival dates for 1937 are Aug. 5, 7 and 8, and Aug. 12, 14, and 15.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

MAR 1 - 1937

Moment Musicale

By MAUD WELIN

A program of Welsh music will be sung by the Schenectady Welsh Glee Club as part of the St. David's Day celebrations to be held March 6 in the Masonic Temple, Scotia. Mrs. Esther Short of Albany will be the soloist. Among choral numbers of Welsh inspiration "Harlech," "Myfanwy" and "Bryn Calfaria" will be offered. D. J. Woolcock directs the singers and Lloyd is accompanist.

TRUSTEES of the Berkshire Festival, Inc., have indorsed the proposal to make Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., a great musical shrine in America. Nathaniel Hawthorne once lived on the estate which was recently given to the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston, as a permanent home for the Festival.

The gardens were planned by Mrs. Brooks' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey of Boston. The formal garden, planted about 1900, will be used as an outside foyer. The hemlocks for this planting were secured from neighboring woods, as was also the 12 foot hedge, extending 1,200 feet along the front of the grounds.

Mrs. Dixey was a painter of renown, having exhibited in Paris and other cities. Mr. Dixey was much interested in music, although he did not follow it as a career. He conducted the first performance of "Lohengrin" in Boston, which was given in concert form.

It is hoped to make a substantial start on a building for the concerts this Spring. The concert dates were officially established today as August August 5, 7 and 8, and August 12, 14 and 15, the first two week-ends in the month.

A membership campaign is under way. Memberships will be accepted up to April 1 and afford a substantial reduction in the price for the series of concerts. Information may be secured by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

MAR 4 - 1937

Notable Boston Symphony Program for Next Week

Bringing the Woolsey hall concert series of the present season to a brilliant close the Boston Symphony Orchestra will come to Woolsey hall next Wednesday evening. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famed conductor of the great organization of one hundred and ten musicians, has arranged an unusually attractive program for the occasion, which will feature the Symphony No. 6 in B. minor, Opus 74, of Tchaikovsky. This is the famous "Pathetic," the most widely played work of the great composer, and its inclusion on the local program will cause widespread interest.

The evening of fine music will open with Liadov's Symphonic Picture, "From the Apocalpse," a dramatic piece of program music which is filled with associations of the orthodox Greek church, with themes based upon its ritual. The second number will be the prelude to Moussorgsky's opera, "Khovanstchina," another picture in tones which in the opera prepares the listener to behold dawn upon the Red Square in Moscow where soldiers are barracked. Serge Prokofieff, the only living composer whose music is included on this program, will be represented by his early "Scythian Suite, Ala and Lolli." Prokofieff has chosen his subject from a legendary barbaric people of pre-historic Russia, and the selection is in three movements.

The aforementioned Tchaikovsky symphony will occupy the entire second half of the program, and serve as a fitting finale to one of the finest series of concerts this city has ever enjoyed.

WATERTOWN, N. Y.
TIMES

MAR 5 - 1937

DETROIT MUSIC BACKER GIVES TO BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL FUND

Pittsfield, Mass., March 5. (U.P.)—Mrs. John H. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony orchestra, holding there is no reason why there should not be established a great festival center in America comparable to those in Europe, today sent a donation to the building fund of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Mrs. Newberry, whose home is in Grosse Point Farms, Mich., wrote that she is completely in sympathy with the plan to locate such a center at Tanglewood, 210 acre estate given to trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappen of Boston. It was at Tanglewood that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires.

The festival dates for 1937 are Aug. 5, 7 and 8 and Aug. 12, 14 and 15.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

MAR 3 - 1937

Russian Soprano Shares Boston Symphony Plaudits

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fourth concert of its Providence season at the Metropolitan Theatre last evening, with Serge Koussevitsky conducting. Olga Averino, soprano, was the soloist of the evening and both orchestra and singer were in splendid form and did justice to a well planned program.

The first half of the program was devoted to Beethoven and included his Overture to Collin's Tragedy, "Coriolanus," Op. 62 and Symphony No. 4 in B-flat Major, Op. 60. The overture was noteworthy for the vigor of the attack on the bold opening chords, the delicacy of phrasing in the first theme and the sustained singing quality of the second theme. 'Cellos and violas were especially fine and contributed a well-balanced volume of tone which made the background for the repartee between reeds in turn and violins. The overture set the mood well for the happy exhilarating music of the Fourth Symphony.

Beethoven's Fourth was first performed in Vienna in March of 1807. After 130 years it retains its freshness and energy and in the hands of such competent interpreters it becomes a vivid proof that music which is truly great belongs to all ages. The symphony is written in four movements, and the only part having any trace of sadness is the opening adagio. The gayety of the allegro vivace is well contrasted and this music is Beethoven in a holiday mood. The second movement, adagio with its beautiful melodic line has in it more of serenity than of any deep emotion. The graceful accompaniment figure, with its persistent rhythmic pattern was well played. The third movement presented what in Beethoven's day was a novelty in symphonic construction, in that the trio appears twice instead of once. The finale is fast and affords an excellent opportunity to appreciate the skillful bowing of the string section and the fine technique of the wood-winds, as they went gaily through the joyful interpretation to this symphony which is not too frequently heard.

Music by Tchaikovsky and Rimsky-Korsakov made up the second half of the program. Mme. Averino sang the letter scene from "Eugene Onegin," a portion of Tchaikovsky's lyrical scenes (after Pushkin.) Seldom will the music of the great Russian be heard under more favorable circumstances. Mme. Averina has been a member of the Moscow Imperial Opera Company and is the god-daughter of Modest Tchaikovsky, the composer's brother. In her native Russian she sang this beautiful scene which is the confession of the romantic young heroine's infatuation for the hero of the poem. Mme. Averina has a voice of lovely lyric quality and she gave a most artistic interpretation to the song. The power of her dramatic ability together with the fervor and devotion of Koussevitsky's accompaniment made their letter scene one long to be remembered. It was altogether the Russia of Tchaikovsky's time, which was heard and the plaintive beauty of the song lingers.

Rimsky-Korsakov's suite from "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan"

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

MAR 3 - 1937

Music

Boston Symphony Orchestra Pleases Large Audience with Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Rimsky-Korsakov. Miss Averino is Soloist. — Pushkin Centenary Marked by Music He Inspired

By G. Y. Loveridge

One of the most enjoyable concerts of the season was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, in Metropolitan Theatre last night.

The program was well-selected and well-arranged, and the playing was superb. A large audience gave such vigorous approval that Dr. Koussevitzky four times caused the orchestra to rise and share in the applause. Olga Averino, Boston soprano who appeared as soloist, was likewise heartily applauded.

Beethoven, Tchaikovsky and Rimsky-Korsakoff were the composers drawn upon. Their account seems never to run out or even to get low; musically they are always in funds.

The overture to "Coriolanus," with which the program began, presented Beethoven as a painter of character and event in tone. One sensed here, with succinct completeness, the struggle within the soul of the doughty Roman, who may or may not have led the Volscians against his countrymen, who may or may not have been deterred from vengeance by his wife and his mother—and who may or may not, for that matter, have ever lived. The historians seem not to agree. But he lives with convincing certainty in this music. As it was played last night it was dramatically compelling, and the fact that if one had no clue to its meaning one might build a different story around it does not alter its essential grip upon the emotions.

* * *

The Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, is not so often played as some of the eight others. One finds here not the Beethoven so frequently permitted to thunder and rage at the public in the C-minor, but a jolly and sometimes sweetly melancholy fellow, akin to the Milton of "L'Allegro." Everything seems springtime-in-the-country, with some broad country humor.

The melodious and unhurried introduction sets the tone for the whole work, and presently there follows more lively and vigorous material, with the strings making merry, the bassoons capering.

Dr. Koussevitzky put happiness and pastoral serenity into his reading. It was good to enjoy the company of Beethoven when he was not in his heroic mood, when, so to speak, he was resting on the oars, enjoying the secenery and letting the race of life go hang.

The skillful blending of tone-colors, the constantly-pleasant atmosphere, the joyous rhythm were delightful, and the sheer brilliance and precision of the playing could hardly have been surpassed. The last chord of the finale precipitated a long outburst of applause.

According to our score card, as the sporting writers say, the full orchestra took two bows, at Dr. Koussekitzky's invitation.

* * *

After intermission came the Russians. One can depend on the Russians to get out everything there is in stock, from bass viol to celesta, and, furthermore, to know what to do with them once they have been got out.

The letter scene from "Eugene Oniegin" was sung by Miss Averino with considerable dramatic intensity. At the outset, the orchestra eclipsed the solo voice on two occasions, but this matter was smoothly adjusted for the remainder of the scene. Miss Averino's voice was strong and flexible, and was artistically managed, although it cannot be said that she conveyed the full intensity of Tatiana's conflict. Perhaps it is too much to expect this to be done in a concert performance, without assistance of costume, scenery and dramatic action. Miss Averino's lower tones were rich and moving, and her higher ones, while not always even, frequently attained a clear, lyric quality. The orchestra joined the audience in applauding the singer.

* * *

The final number, a suite from the Rimsky-Korsakoff opera "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan," was inspired by the work of Pushkin, as was "Oniegin." The music was played in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the death of Pushkin.

This suite was probably as acceptable to the listeners as anything played during the evening. It was lively, it was elaborately orchestrated, it was beautifully played, and it contained at least one item." The Flight of the Bumble-bee," that was very familiar.

The sprightly rhythm of the march, the brilliant fortes of the introduction to Act II, put everybody in the mood for the brief and breathless virtuosity of the bumble-bee. The expert droning of the strings of this marvelous orchestra was almost painful, and the tremendous technique of flute and clarinet—and everybody else for that matter—brought laughter and applause. With opulent sonority of "The Three Wonders" brought the evening to an invigorating end.

The program:

Beethoven....Overture to Collin's Tragedy, "Coriolanus," Op. 62
Beethoven....Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, Op. 60
  I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
  II. Adagio
  III. Allegro vivace. Trio. Un poco meno allegro
  IV. Finale: Allegro, ma non troppo
Tchaikovsky....Letter Scene from "Eugene Oniegin," Lyrical Scenes (After Pushkin)
Rimsky-Korsakoff....Suite from the Opera "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan" (After Pushkin)
  I. Allegretto alla marcia
  II. Introduction to Act II
  III. The Flight of the Bumble-Bee
  IV. The Three Wonders.

Z24

In the World of Music

Trans Mar 3

Berkshire Takes Action on Festival Project

By Redfern Mason

Development of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, so successful in 1936, into a great festival that will make the Berkshires as outstanding as the great festival centers of Europe is now being considered by the festival organization and a group of business men in the county.

Representative business men of Berkshire met yesterday afternoon with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at her home in Stockbridge, to discuss the reactions to the 1936 festival, to consider whether the time is ripe for further development of the festival idea and to discover whether there is sufficient sentiment in favor of the festival, it will be continued.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and George E. Judd, manager, were in the Berkshires earlier in the week and it was because of this visit that the conference was colled.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky will come to Berkshire next year for six concerts instead of three as given this year as the beginning of the plan. Six concerts constitute the first condition of their returning. The second condition is that, a hall be built to replace the tent. To meet these conditions, it is the consensus of the festival executive committee, which coincides with that of Dr. Koussevitzky, that a permanent home must be found, and a long range plan adopted to achieve the aim of making Berkshire as outstanding in America as the great festival centers of Europe.

Miss Robinson Smith explained to the group that the long range plan, if adopted, must have the support of the leading businessmen of the Berkshire community who have sufficient imagination and vision to realize its possibilities. The long range plan will include the six concerts next year with more developments each year.

Several men expressed their conviction that the festival this year had been of tremendous value to the whole Berkshire region. They believe that a real festival will be established somewhere in this country and realize that Berkshire has the opportunity to become the pioneer.

In a statement issued today, Miss Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, urged that persons who intend to become patrons and members of the 1937 festival do so at once.

She said: "In view of the possibilities of the future, obviously the decision of the board of trustees will depend largely on the response of members and patrons. We must give an answer to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra not later than Nov. 1 With the bigger plan in mind, naturally memberships and patrons become our only capital. We cannot, therefore, give an affirmative answer unless we have a substantial response.

"May I repeat that if there are six concerts next year, sustaining members and patrons will be able to buy tickets for additional concerts at the same price. Sustaining memberships are $5 for one or two tickets depending on location, for three concerts. Patrons pay $75 for boxes with six chairs for three concerts.

"We are not asking members and patrons to commit themselves for six concerts—only three. Inquiries and memberships may be addressed to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge, Mass."

UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH

MAR 5 - 1937

MRS. NEWBERRY HELPS MUSIC FESTIVAL FUND

Michigan Woman Approves the Berkshire Building Project

Pittsfield, Mass.— (U.P.) —Mrs. John H. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, holding there is no reason why there should not be established a great festival center in America, comparable to those in Europe, yesterday sent a donation to the building fund of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Mrs. Newberry, whose home is in Grosse Point Farms, Mich., wrote that she is completely in sympathy with the plan to locate such a great center at Tanglewood, 210-acre estate given to trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappen of Boston. It was at Tanglewood that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires.

Mrs. Newberry, who spent her childhood in Stockbridge, entertained Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Orchestra, during the orchestra's visit to Detroit in December. She also attended the concerts in the Berkshires last summer. The festival dates for 1937 are Aug. 5, 7 and 8 and 12, 14 and 15.

Other donations to the building fund have been made by Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Mr. and Mrs. Norval H. Busey, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Llodgett of New York and the Berkshires, Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers of Lenox and Miami Beach, Fla., Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Kelton B. Miller, Simon and Daniel England of Pittsfield, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee, and Lester Roberts of Lenox and Eustis, Fla.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

MAR 4 - 1937

Berkshire Symphonic Fund Grows

Mrs. Newberry, Head of Detroit Orchestra, Sends Check to Tanglewood

Pittsfield, Mass., March 4 (UP). — Mrs. John H. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, holding there is no reason why there should not be established a great festival center in America, comparable to those in Europe, today sent a donation to the building fund of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Mrs. Newberry, whose home is in Grosse Point Farms, Mich., wrote that she is completely in sympathy with the plan to locate such a great center at Tanglewood, 210-acre estate given to trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappen of Boston. It was at Tanglewood that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires.

Mrs. Newberry, who spent her childhood in Stockbridge, entertained Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra, during the orchestra's visit to Detroit in December. She also attended the concerts in the Berkshires last summer. The festival dates for 1937 are Aug. 5, 7 and 8, and Aug. 12, 14 and 15.

Other donations to the building fund have been made by Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Mr. and Mrs. Norval H. usey, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of New York and the Berkshires, Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers of Lenox and Miami Beach, Fla., Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Kelton B. Miller, Simon and Daniel England of Pittsfield, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee, and Lester Roberts of Lenox and Eustis, Fla.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

MAR 4 - 1937

Editorial Comment

A Generous Gift and Good Auspices

The success of the third Berkshire Symphonic Festival last Summer has resulted in the gift of a 200-acre estate in Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., as a permanent site for the Boston Symphony's Summer concerts. The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the executive committee for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival announced a few days ago their acceptance of this generous gift and a campaign to raise funds for building an inclosure for the concerts has begun.

It is a happy circumstance and auspicious, many will feel, that the future site of the Berkshire festivals is Tanglewood, an estate laid out in 1849 by William Aspinwall Tappan, grandfather of one of the donors, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, and father of the other, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. It was here in a little red cottage that burned down nearly 50 years ago that Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and first related his "Tanglewood Tales."

In "The Flowering of New England" Van Wyck Brooks pictures Mrs. Hawthorne making tracings from Flaxman's outlines on the dull yellow painted chairs and tables of this vanished cottage while Hawthorne told the children stories that explained the drawings. Tanglewood, as the children called it, was a wild spot in the woods close by, where they all went for picnics in the Summer and Autumn of Hawthorne's sojourn in Lenox.

Miss Sedgwick, aging novelist and resident in Lenox in Hawthorne's time, said of Lenox, Brooks tells us, "En France tout arrive." And it was true that everything happened at Lenox or Pittsfield or Stockbridge; every one came their in Summer; the high fashion and nearly all of those worthies, celebrities, men of small or great genius who were making American art known for the first time abroad—Hawthorne, and his neighbor, Melville, chief among them, in retrospect, at least. From Tanglewood the genius of Hawthorne offered the world such fine things of imagination and spirit as are by no means extinct in Lenox today, it seems; affording a powerful genius loci for all the arts.—NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

MAR 5 1937

Aid Berkshire Music Festival With Donations

Detroit Symphony Head Sees Need of Great Center in America

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Mar. 5—(UP) —Mrs. John H. Newberry, President of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, holding there is no reason why there should not be established a great festival center in America, comparable to those in Europe, today sent a donation to the building fund of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Mrs. Newberry, whose home is in Grosse Point Farms, Mich., wrote that she is completely in sympathy with the plan to locate such a great center at Tanglewood, 210-acre estate given to trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappen of Boston. It was at Tanglewood that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires.

Mrs. Newberry, who spent her childhood in Stockbridge, entertained Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra during the concerts in the Berkshires last Summer. The festival dates for 1937 are August 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15.

Other donations have been made by Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Mr. and Mrs. Norval H. Busey, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of New York and the Berkshires, Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers of Lenox and Miami Beach, Fla., Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Kelton B. Miller, Simon and Daniel England of Pittsfield, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee and Lester Roberts of Lenox and Eustis, Fla.

Berkshire Festival Plans Develop

Times March 5 '37

Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., meeting with the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith at her home, 1 Sutton place, South, in New York city yesterday, enthusiastically endorsed the proposal to make Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., a great musical shrine in America.

Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires, was recently given to the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the festival because of the outstanding success of the concerts in 1936. The trustees of both organizations have drafted an agreement for perpetual use of the property as a great festival center.

The gardens were planned by Mrs. Brooks's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey of Boston. The formal garden, which will be used as an outside foyer, was planted about 1900, with the assistance of their gardener, Alexander McConnachie. The hemlocks for this planting were secured from neighboring woods, also for the twelve-foot hedge, extending 1200 feet along the front of the grounds.

Mrs. Dixey was a painter of renown, having exhibited in Paris and other cities. Mr. Dixey was much interested in music, though he did not follow it as a career. He conducted the first performance of "Lohengrin" in Boston, in concert form.

It is hoped to make a substantial start on a building, a suitable inclosure, for the concerts this spring, and the trustees planned yesterday to raise the necessary funds. Miss Robinson Smith reported several gifts of $1000 each for the building fund, and board members agreed to contact others who might be willing to assist. She added:

"I can conceive of no place in this country where a great festival could be more admirably located so far as tradition and background are concerned. It will be an American festival in New England with a great orchestra from New England conducted by an eminent leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. We should be most happy to have anyone who is interested in our ambition for a great festival center in America join us in raising our building fund."

The concert dates were officially established today as Aug. 5, 7 and 8 and Aug. 12, 14 and 15, the first two week-ends in the month.

The executive committee was authorized to proceed immediately with a membership campaign. Memberships will be accepted up to April 1. A member is given a substantial reduction in the price for the series of concerts. Information as to memberships, accommodations, roads and other attractions in the Berkshires during the period of the festival may be secured by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

At yesterday's meeting were Miss Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia of New York and Stockbridge and Norval H. Busey, Jr., of New York and Lee, Mass., vice presidents of the festival; George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mass., the clerk; John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, the treasurer; Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield; Mrs. Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of New York and Lenox, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd of Philadelphia and Lee, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of New York and Stockbridge, Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller of Cleveland and Windso,r Mass.; Professor Philip Marshall Brown of Washington and Williamstown, Mass.; William Bull of Lenox.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

MAR 4 - 1937

Berg Concerto Thursday

Alban Berg's last completed work, a concerto for violin, is to be introduced to New York next Thursday evening when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, returns to Carnegie Hall. The soloist will be Louis Krasner. Also on the program are Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and the "Thus Spake Zarathustra" of Richard Strauss.

For the orchestra's Carnegie Hall matinee of the following Saturday a Russian program has been selected, comprising Liadoff's "From the Apocalypse," the prelude to Moussorgsky's opera "Khovantchina," Prokofieff's Scythian Suite" and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony.

* * *

voice sounded surprisingly fresh ... of the "Goetter-

---

which the com-

Except for a few details of overemphasis and wilfulness in tempos, Koussevitzky's performance of Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony with the Boston Symphony (Victor: five records, $10) is refreshingly and effectively straightforward. The recording is excellent in fidelity and sonority, but I am disturbed by the reverberations in the empty hall in which it was made, and by the fact that when instruments play softly they seem to recede into the distance. And what it is that will lead a recording manager and a conductor, in the year 1936, to destroy the formal balance of the third movement by cutting out seventy-five measures in order to get the movement all on one side and the entire work all on nine sides, and this in order to use for a Tchaikovsky waltz the tenth side that might have been used for the third movement—this, with some other mental processes manifested in recording, is beyond my comprehension.

point in adding that the music is dull. B. H. HAGGIN

please mention The Nation

Nation Mar 6 '37

Alban Berg's Violin Concerto at Symphony with Krasner as Soloist

Trans

March 6/37

By Moses Smith

The program played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky yesterday afternoon and to be repeated this evening is unusually artful and unified. It begins with Arnold Schoenberg's opulent orchestral transcription of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in E-flat. Then comes the final testament of Alban Berg, his Violin Concerto, in first American presentation, with Louis Krasner, Boston violinist, as the soloist. To end, there is the Strauss tone-poem, "Also sprach Zarathustra."

The performance of the Bach-Schoenberg music was as magnificent yesterday as the setting, which may displease the Bach purists but pleases the present writer and the vast majority of listeners. The Strauss tone-poem has long been a tour de force of Dr. Koussevitzky and his virtuoso ensemble. But for at least one person in the audience the mild hysteria and banalities of many of the Straussian measures sounded especially cheap after the sensitively polished though deeply emotional music of Berg.

There is no need to enter again into a discussion of the origin of the Concerto or of its technical and formal elements. The important thing here is that the performance justified one's high hopes. Here is a masterpiece of our times, a significant contribution not only to the literature of violin concertos but also to the entire body of symphonic music. We have been told again and again—and perhaps justly—that the music of our time is ephemeral, that the melodic basis is for the most part lacking in contemporary composition and that, as a consequence, very few works of this day will survive. I believe that the Berg Concerto is one of these works—and it is in lonely company. Berg is here, perhaps even more than in his small list of other compositions, an exquisite meldist. If Substantive value is the important thing in music, Berg was probably the finest composer of our generation.

The remarkable thing is that this melodic material should come from a composer who writes according to complicated and highly organized twelve-tone system of Schoenberg, a system which has been repeatedly described as ingenious but unaesthetic. I do not say that the beauty of Berg's melodic line is perceptible on first hearing of a work like the Violin concerto. But I believe that a person with open ears, who has heard this strange music repeatedly (as, thanks to the imperfect phonograph, I have), cannot escape the conviction that it is great music just as certainly as masterpieces of the past.

Certain beauties a performance like yesterday's conveys to the general public hearing it for the first time and having no especial interest in preparing itself by study. With his masterly orchestral skill, amounting to genius, Berg has been most successful in establishing moods which affect even the untutored. Berg has, too, a subtle, refined harmonic sense, even though, like a good Schoenbergian, he is a contrapuntist to begin with.

As a result the listener who has taken the elementary pains to equip himself with the story behind this Concerto cannot fail to be moved by the close correspondence between the music and the tragical history of Manon Gropius, for whom the Concerto is a requiem. For once, it may be said parenthetically, the literary program of a musical composition is of its very essence. That is why, very likely, the Concerto was received by yesterday's audience with evidence of interest as well as of some pleasure, and why the applause was sufficient to bring the conductor as well as the soloist back on the stage several times after the performance.

Another reason lay in the character of the performance, which did honor to Mr. Krasner, for whom the Concerto was written, to Dr. Koussevitzky and to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. If I had a single reservation about the performance it was that, with all its extraordinary intensity, it did not at times traverse the wide spaces of Symphony Hall. The auditorium seemed at moments too large for the work. A previous guess that the Concerto is essentially a chamber work, was frequently confirmed. At any rate, it is to be hoped that in the section where the upper strings join the soloist in unison in singing Manon's elegy will be sounded more fully this evening.

But otherwise the performance was of a character not only to justify one's faith in the work but also to make one proud to be present at the first American presentation. Mr. Krasner played the difficult, complicated solo part with the devotion of an artist and an initiate. So absorbed was he in the music that it is almost sacrilegious to mention his remarkable violinism, which exhibited him as a first-rate performer. Rather than compare him with other violinists it would be more accurate to say that if the Concerto was written for him (as it was) he deserved it.

Mr. Krasner's intensity was matched by that of Dr. Koussevitzky, who at last, after many months, had evidently found a significant novelty to absorb his energies and enthusiasm. Never in recollection has he seemed so intent, so entirely un-self-conscious as in yesterday's performance of the Concerto. Between him and Krasner there was the most intimate and profound rapport: for both, the performance took the aspect of a religious rite. And the orchestra played beautifully.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAR 6 - 1937

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

AR 6 - 1937

'Fiddler' at Smokers Here Now Soloist for Symphony

KRASNER ACCLAIMED IN BERG CONCERTO

Gives American Premier of Piece He Played in Europe

By G. Y. Loveridge

Louis Krasner, who in boyhood "fiddled" at smokers, dances and other entertainments in this city, was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston yesterday afternoon and will be again tonight. He is presenting for the first time in America the violin concerto of the late Alban Berg, written at the violinist's request and recently played by him in London, Vienna, Barcelona and Paris.

Luck, talent, work and generous assistance all had a part in Mr. Krasner's rise from Providence dance halls to the international concert stage. Yesterday he received the applause of the large audience and the orchestra and the congratulations of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Several persons from Rhode Island were in the audience, which pleased Mr. Krasner, but some of those who would have liked particularly to hear him on this important occasion could not be there. His mother, Mrs. Sarah Krasner, of 185 Jewett street, is ill. Mrs. O. T. Howe of this city, who enabled him to study at the New England Conservatory of Music and in Europe, also is ill. His father is dead. But his wife, whom he married recently in Vienna, was present.

LOUIS KRASNER

International Concert Violinist Recalls Boyhood Appearances as a "Fiddler" With Boxers, Dancers and Others at Smokers, Dances and Entertainments in Providence.

In one of the artists' rooms in Symphony Hall, Mr. Krasner outlined the story of his career. He said:

"One night, when I was a boy, I played at an entertainment at the Turks Head Club. I think there was a box-fight on before he and a dancer afterward. Something of that sort. Among the men who heard me was Dr. Hussey (Dr. Frederic V. Hussey, of 151 Taber avenue). He asked me to stay until after the show. So I did and I played for him and some other men. He gave me a card and asked me to come to his office, so I did a few days later and then he took me to see Mrs. Howe and to play for her. Mrs. Howe went with me to Boston to play for Mr. Chadwick at the conservatory. Mrs. Howe made it possible for me to study in Boston and later in Europe until I could begin concertizing.

Continued on Page 9, Column 3

"When I was a boy I played anywhere I could to earn a dollar. Hotels, amateur nights. I played at Rhodes once."

Mr. Krasner has spent most of his time in Europe giving concerts. His wife is a violinist and pianist and was a member of a well known quartet in Vienna. It is her first visit to this country.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

MAR 6 - 1937

Koussevitzky to Give All Russian Program

AN ALL Russian program is announced by Serge Koussevitzky for the concert to be given in Woolsey hall, New Haven, next Wednesday evening.

The Russian conductor will open the program with Liadov's Symphonic picture, "From the Apocalypse," a dramatic piece which is filled with associations of the orthodox Greek church and themes based upon its ritual. The second number will be the Prelude to Moussorgsky's opera, "Khovanstchina," another picture in tones which in the opera prepares the listener to behold dawn on the Red Square in Moscow where soldiers are barrack-

---

Providence Fiddler Now Is Concert Star

Louis Krasner Presents New Concerto With Boston Orchestra

LOUIS KRASNER

A young man who used to fiddle in Providence dance halls and at smokers is presenting a new concerto in Boston today.

He is dark, solemn-looking Louis Krasner, son of Mrs. Sarah Krasner, 185 Jewett street, whose violin playing between a prize fight and a dance act at a smoker one night gave him the chance for a concert career.

Krasner is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston tonight after playing the violin concerto of Alban Berg, composed at Krasner's request, for the first time in America in Boston last night. He has just returned from a tour of London, Vienna, Barcelona and Paris, where the Berg concerto met with huge success.

Boston critics who heard Krasner play his friend's work yesterday saw in it the elements of a great piece of music, but they want to hear it again, they say, before they can judge its full power. Krasner, who once played at hotels and amateur nights here, says it will stand the test of time with the greatest music.

Only regrets of the violinist—his days as a fiddler are long since past—is that the persons most vital to his career were unable to witness his triumphant return to America, his first appearance in this country since he began concertizing. Both his mother and Mrs. O. T. Howe, who made it possible for him to study in Boston and then in Europe, were ill today.

Krasner's wife, whom he married in Vienna, was present last night. She smiled as her musician husband recalled the night in Providence that changed his career. It was at a smoker in the Turk's Head Club, he said, and a Providence man in the audience was impressed with the young fiddler and sent him to Mrs. Howe, who in turn sent him to Boston and Europe to study.

The Berg concerto, based on the 12-tone scale, is considered by Mr. Krasner to be a masterpiece. It is very difficult, both for soloist and for orchestra, and yet it is not essentially a display piece for the violin. Nor is there much immediate glory in introducing a work of this kind to the public, because it is not in the accepted manner and is hard to grasp.

But Mr. Krasner, who knows the music better than anybody else in the world, believes that it will endure when most of what is being written today will inevitably be forgotten.

TROY, N. Y.
TIME RECORD

MAR 6 - 1937

'CELLIST, PIANIST PLAN SKIDMORE CONCERT MONDAY

Jean Bedetti, Jesus Sanroma of Boston Symphony in Recital at Saratoga Springs.

A recital will be given by Jean Bedetti, 'cellist, and Jesus Sanroma, pianist, at Skidmore College at Saratoga Springs Monday evening. Both Mr. Bedetti and Mr. Sanroma play in the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Born at Lyons, France, Mr. Bedetti received his musical education at the Paris Conservatory of Music. While still in his 'teens, he gave many concerts in Europe and became 'cello soloist at the Opera Comique in Paris. When Pierre Monteaux became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1918 he brought Mr. Bedetti to this country to fill the post of solo 'cellist, a position he still holds. Mr. Bedetti is professor of 'cello at the University of Puerto Rico.

Mr. Sanroma was born in Puerto Rico and is a graduate from the New England Conservatory of Music where he won the Mason and Hamblin piano prize. He is official pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Leo Litwin will accompany Mr. Bedetti at the piano.

The program they will present will be as follows:

"Suite Ancienne"	J. B. Breval
Allegro
Adagio
Rondo
"Toccata"	Frescobaldi
Mr. Bedetti
"Adante con Variazioni in F Minor"	Haydn
"Italian Concerto"	Bach
Allegro
Andante
Presto
Mr. Sanroma
"Arioso"	J. S. Bach
"Sibellenlu"	Delune
'Goyescas"	Granados
'Allegro"	N. Boulanger
Mr. Bedetti
'Ritual Fire Dance	Falla
'La Cathedrale Engloutie"	Debussy
"Cantique"	Liszt
Mr. Sanroma
'Sonata Op. 19 for Piano and 'Cello"	Rachmaninoff
1. Lento-Allegro moderato
2. Allegro scherzando
3. Andante
4. Allegro mosso
Mr. Bedetti and Mr. Sanroma.

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD

MAR 6 - 1937

'CELLIST, PIANIST PRESENT SKIDMORE CONCERT MONDAY

JEAN BEDETTI, JESUS SANROMA OF BOSTON SYMPHONY IN RECITAL.

A recital will be given by Jean Bedetti, 'cellist, and Jesus Sanroma, pianist, at Skidmore College at Saratoga Springs Monday evening. Both Mr. Bedetti and Mr. Sanroma play in the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

ETC.—LIKE ABOVE

Stockbridge Festival Founder Tells of Her Great Ambition

Trave March 8/37

By Redfern Mason

Now that everybody is talking about the Stockbridge Festival, it is time to tell about the dwellers in that Sleepy Hollow of the Berkshires who have inspired the directorate of the Boston Symphony with a wider conception of its usefulness.

The founder of this movement is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, who lives as retired a life in the lovely Stockbridge country as her mercurial disposition will allow.

I find her seated by the fire in her placid home, which is a group of dwellings that seem to have increased and multiplied as it were by instinct. After the usual ceremonious exchanges we plunge into the subject that is in both our hearts.

"It's about time that Europe discovered America," observed Miss Smith; "We've been discovering Europe long enough."

"It's about time they got over thinking our women are all 'dollar Prinzessins' and our men Rockefellers," I admit. "The visit of Toscanini with the Philharmonic must have wakened them up. Europe has no orchestra as good as our Boston Symphony and no opera with as good artists as the Met."

"I spend part of each year abroad," says Miss Smith, "and if I'm not mistaken, the French are undergoing an attack of aesthetic growing pains. That's why I want them to know about our Stockbridge Festival. Already the big steamship companies are asking questions. Tell me how we can turn European noses Westward, instead of towards Salzburg and Bayreuth."

An Original Slant

"Give your festival an original slant of some kind," I suggest. "Don't you think it would be a good idea if our music had an American accent, something like Mark Twain in 'Tom Sawyer' or Walt Whitman in his 'Leaves of Grass.' "

A dawning frown crossed my hostess's face. "If American music is good," she said emphatically, "I'd like them to hear it; but I shrink from subjecting people to the work of our frenzied experimentalists. After all, Bach and Beethoven, Cesar Franck and Moussorgsky, Schubert and Brahms, all the classics in a word, are our classics as well as theirs, and we must not deprive ourselves of them."

"And you want the great music-hungry people of these United States to hear them here at home? Why not initiate them into the spirit of the great choral masters? Borrow an idea from the Welsh Eisteddfod. There isn't a cottage in Wales that does not shelter a singer."

"Now you've got it!" cries the New England idealist. "Think of the long nights of our Massachusetts winter, the tedium of them. Think what it would do for thousands of people if every village within fifty miles of Stockbridge had a choral group of its own, each studying good music, to come together at our festival, with a man like Koussevitzky to direct them. Think of the enthusiasm it would arouse, the artistic pride it would kindle in thousands of hearts. Everyone is a musician at heart, you know, if only in a small way."

Koussevitzky Inspired

"Is Mr. Koussevitzky benevolently inclined towards the idea? I inquire.

"Man! he's inspired with it. For all his devotion to perfection—and nothing short of perfection will satisfy him—he is aflame with the ideal of awakening the artist that slumbers in the hearts of America's millions."

"It had to come," I ruminate, "and you quiet, reserved, cautious New Englanders seem the people to do it."

Miss Smith laughs joyously. "You should know my committee," she exclaims; "there are millionaires; there are soberminded members of the chambers of commerce; there are solid tradesmen, and we have an inspired newspaper man, George Edmund, for publicist. They didn't bite immediately the project was broached; they nibbled at it; but today it has taken possession of them, and all the powers of indifference can't stand against them."

"And the uncomfortable realities of finance," I suggest.

"It will cost us some $120,000 to put up the shed—I wish you could find another name—and we can only spend about $20,000 this year. But we count on the enthusiasm engendered by the August festival to raise the balance. Now let us go and look over the estate."

The car speeds through the keen morning air toward that Tanglewood where Hawthorne planned the story of "The House of the Seven Gables." The home the author lived in has gone; but a tablet tells where he dwelt, and the magic of the countryside is as real as it was when he was here in the flesh.

The silver birches flash by like snow-clad nymphs; the pine needles cover the ground with a russet carpet; the hedgerow tells of old-time seclusion. It is a gently rolling countryside and it seems to be dreaming dreams of yesterday, when the early settlers dwelt peacefully with the Indians. "You must take care of the place where our forefathers sleep," said the chief of those days. This the Tanglewood people have done, and a year or two ago a descendant of the chief who exacted the promise came back, bringing with him the chalice that had been part of the Christian worship of those far off days.

Atmosphere of Reverie

An atmosphere of reverie envelopes the region and the great, rather Rococo house, which crowns the knoll, near the spot where the festivals have been held, looks down on the ice-covered lake which they call "The Bowl."

My companion sighs contentedly as we stroll over the grounds, picturing, in imagination, the scene to be enacted here a few months from now, when people from all parts of America and from Europe come to hear the spell which Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony cast over the smiling earth.

"In the heart of every man and woman there is a yearning for beauty," says my companion, thinking aloud; " 'Man does not live by bread alone'; the things of the spirit are as necessary to him as are the things of the body. We must put beauty into men's lives, or, better still, we must bring out the beauty which lies dormant in our human nature. Can't you imagine the notes of the 'Pastoral' Symphony filling this landscape with song that is like itself? Or the 'Eroica' awakening a dream of heroism as glorious as that which was dreamed by our ancestors?"

"Why not invite the Chanteurs de Saint Gervaise over here?" I suggest. "Your neighbor, Mrs. Coolidge, did as much for the literature of the string quartet."

"Or that glorius chorus of business men from Vienna," chimes in Miss Smith, "or, better still, our American lads from Harvard and Yale and Princeton? Let us make this spot a place of pilgrimage to the one God whom all worship, the God of beauty."

And so we vied with each other in enthusiasm. Meanwhile there is a job for "folks like you and me." It will cost you a trifle of ten dollars for a ticket which will admit to all of the six concerts in August. They will be held on the evenings of Thursday, Friday and Saturday in two successive weeks. What better way to entertain your guests if you are staying in the neighborhood? You can have all the golf and tennis you want, and devote the evenings to refreshment of the spirit with that sweetest of all the wines of the earth, the wine of music.

MUSIC

Herald March 6/37

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 18th regular concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The soloist was Louis Krasner, violinist. The program was as follows:

Prelude and Fugue in E flat for organ, arranged for orchestra by Arnold Schoenberg .... Bach Concerto for violin and orchestra ..... Berg
"Also Sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem Op. 30 .... Strauss

Dr. Koussevitzky is a conductor who has an alert and inquisitive mind for modern music of importance. His catholicity of taste is remarkable, so that Boston has often been the first in this country to hear a score that is soon acclaimed in other cities. He has done a real service in securing the first American performance of Alban Berg's concerto. There are many, no doubt, who honestly dislike Berg's music, for its nature is certainly uncompromising. For example, we could not bring ourselves to like the "Lulu" Suite, played here a few seasons ago. But the Violin Concerto in our own opinion is quite another matter. The work is undeniably both sincere and original, and it made a deep impression on us.

It is unfortunate that it should be called a "concerto," for it makes no pretense of adhering either to the classical or any other subsequent form of concerto. Nor does it go back to the concerto grosso idea of Handel. It is more plausibly a tone poem or requiem without words, in which the violin is by far the most important voice. Because of the atonal harmony—if one may use the expression—the work may well have been obscure in form also to many in the audience. But the score has been very clearly planned, as further performances would unquestionably prove. It is not an easy work to listen to for the first time; and probably the departure of several people in the middle of the performance was conclusive evidence of the difficulties of appreciation. Yet the rewards are there for those who will sympathetically listen.

Berg's principles of composition may stem from the ideas of Arnold Schoenberg, but his inspiration is his own. The entirely natural way in which the chorale is led up to, the mysterious voices in the orchestra contrasted with the melodic line of the violin, the poignancy of the sorrow in the slow movements—these are qualities which are part of the distinction of the Concerto. The composer has a great deal to say; and his technique of saying it is both very personal and absolutely sure. This Concerto should be heard soon again, for it has many fine qualities as a work of art.

Mr. Krasner's playing was extraordinarily sensitive. The phrasing of the difficult solo part was executed with the greatest refinement. The tone was also beautiful. Indeed Mr. Krasner deserved much more applause than he got. The orchestral performance was equally sympathetic. Dr. Koussevitzky obtained an accompaniment (to use an inadequate word) that was a marvel of subtlety. The applause for the Concerto was uneven, showing the sharply divided opinion.

Why Dr. Koussevitzky has such an affection for Schoenberg's monstrous arrangement of this Bach Prelude and Fugue is a mystery to us. It is over-elaborate to the point of vulgarity. The scoring of the fugue, where everything is sacrificed to a long crescendo, is the antithesis of the way Bach should sound. Schoenberg may deserve his intellectual reputation; but this kind of arrangement is like Dryden's rewriting of Chaucer and Shakespeare. It is a ghastly piece of work.

The concert ended brilliantly with a superb performance of Strauss's tone poem. "Zarathustra" along with "Don Juan," is the tone poem of Strauss that best bears frequent repetition. Morever in yesterday's concert its lushness was not out of place as a contrast to the austerity of Berg.

SYMPHONY PLAYS NEW CONCERTO

Post March 6/37

Louis Krasner, Violinist, in Novelty by Alban Berg

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Since orchestral programmes nowadays so easily resolve themselves into the well-worn and the hardly-worth-wearing, a significant novelty, even a significant revival, becomes an event of importance. The significant novelty, the rarer of the two, was present at the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon in the first American performance of Alban Berg's Concerto for Violin.

MR. KRASNER'S SUGGESTION

Few pieces have had so dramatic a background. It was Louis Krasner of this city, the only one to play the Concerto so far, who suggested to Berg that he essay a work in that form, but the inspiration of the piece, as we commonly say, was the death of the composer's young friend, Manon Gropius, daughter of the widow of Gustav Mahler, who endured the agonies of her affliction with heroic fortitude. The Concerto bears the dedication, "To the Memory of An Angel," and a Chorale of Bach, "It Is Enough," is utilized at the close of the work.

Four months after the Concerto was finished, in December, 1935, Berg was dead. Yet before ever he began it he expressed the wish that his next piece should receive its first American performance from Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra, so impressed was he with the accounts of the conductor's reading of the suite from his opera "Lulu."

In Twelve-Tone System

Since Berg was a pupil of Schoenberg, Dr. Koussevitzky appropriately began his programme with the elder master's transcription for orchestra of Bach's organ Prelude and Fugue in E-flat major. Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra" brought the end.

Berg's music, cast for the most part in the Schoenbergian 12-tone system, must have perplexed many a listener yesterday, although it is hard to see how any could fail to sense that the music was written in deep sincerity. After it, the tone-poem of Strauss may have brought to one listener a comforting directness of appeal, to another a painful relapse into the obvious. At the beginning of the century, however, this music of Strauss, then as much the last word as that of Berg seems today, caused the excited and baffled Huneker to say that it should be heard by an audience of poets, musicians and madmen. Today it would almost seem that the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker could comprehend it, so straightforward do Strauss' themes appear, so clear even is the structure of the music, despite the polyphonic complexity of the writing.

Berg just now is caviar to the general. The avoidance of tonality in the older sense—and how steadfastly Strauss clings to it!—gives the Austrian's music an amorphous character. You may feel that the melodies are often of a poignant expressiveness, that the orchestral colors are subtle and beautiful, but harmony and key as we were brought up to consider them are simply not there, at least until the Chorale makes its almost incongruous appearance.

With Strauss, to continue the comparison, the theme is simpler than the structure: with Berg the structure might be more readily grasped than the theme. Play on the piano at random the 12 different tones which make the "series" with which all the Schoenbergians work, and you are reminded a little of Scarlatti's "Cat's Fugue." Play the same 12 tones as Strauss uses them for the subject of his fugato "Of Science," and their harmonic implication is clear as daylight.

Exhilaration of Strauss

Fortunate yesterday were those who could be both moved and impressed by Berg and stirred and exhilarated by Strauss in this most brilliant and resplendent of his tone-poems. The performance of "Zarathustra" from any point of view was one upon which superlatives might well be exhausted. The Concerto seemed to receive from Dr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra and Mr. Krasner, the intense, finely felt expressiveness which it calls for and requires. Mr. Krasner's role was not that of virtuoso in the usual sense, but of celebrant and priest.

The Concerto should surely be heard again, and as soon as possible, that we may more nearly make its idiom our own.

MUSIC

Mar 6 Globe

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Violin Concerto by the late Alban Berg, a score which may prove to be among the most notable of the time, was given its first performance in America at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. Dr Serge Koussevitzky conducted. The soloist was Louis Krasner, who has played at all previous performances of the work in Europe, and upon whose request Berg composed what turned out to be his artistic farewell to earth. The program began with Schoenberg's orchestral transcription of the Prelude and Fugue in E-flat (the latter popularly known as the "St Anne's Fugue") by J. S. Bach. After intermission came that redoubtable creation of Richard Strauss, the tone poem "Thus Spake Zarathustra."

The touching account of circumstances surrounding the composition of Berg's Concerto has been sufficiently told: the untimely death of Manon Gropius, 18-year-old daughter of Mahler's widow—Berg's sorrow at the loss of this esteemed young friend—and the composer's own death a short time after the piece had been finished.

If a first hearing left one listener not so much moved as he had expected to be, that may be charged to the fact of excessive anticipation aroused by reports of European performances. For this is a work by a man of great talent, perhaps the only composer whose manipulation of the 12-tone system evolved by Schoenberg has been equaled by those qualities requisite in any artist: imagination and emotional intensity. Schoenberg himself, with all his vast theoretical learning, has perhaps never made a true work of art from his own materials, since in him intellect far predominates over warmth of heart.

But this Concerto does not reveal completely, at one performance, all its aspects of beauty. Few great works of art do reveal all their secrets immediately. This reviewer is frank to say that a just estimate will for him be possible only after future hearings—for which he devoutly hopes.

The external details are simple—two movements, each divided into contrasting halves with corresponding differences of tempo—a concerted style far removed from the procedure of the traditional concerto—little display of the solo instrument. Berg's imaginative use of 12 independent tones within the octave is the key to his artistic rank. He has secured a wealth of melodic expression; the essential dissonance lends a wealth of harmonic color, but the prevailing mood is subdued, elegiac, and there is no confused welter of unrelated sonorities. Indeed, the texture might be termed crystal-clear.

Perhaps this is, in its own way, as patently music of death as the final movement of Mahler's "Song of the Earth." Berg, however, seems to have found a means of expression by eschewing pronounced rhythm and constructing his phrases in such a way that they seem to have no shape. This results in static, amorphous music, and to one listener constitutes a barrier to immediate appreciation of the whole.

Mr Krasner's sensitive playing, his excellent tone, were deeply enjoyable. The performance as a whole seemed to be admirable, better that those of Schoenberg and Strauss, in fact, when the orchestra played a little coarsely.

Schoenberg's transcription of the Prelude and Fugue is one of the least successful attempts at renovating Bach. The general effect of his scoring is fragmentary, the imitation of organ timbres is commonplace, and his decorative touches at dynamic climaxes are not far from tawdry.

No amount of argument over the lack of taste in such portions of "Thus Spake Zarathustra" as the "dance-song," can really dim the magnificence of the tone poem. Purely as music, "Thus Spake Zarathustra" is dazzling. Once again Dr Koussevitzky's sympathetic reading swept all before it.

The orchestra goes to New York this coming week. At the concerts of March 19 and 20, Nicolai Berezowsky will conduct from manuscript his Symphony No. 3, Op 21. Dr Koussevitzky wil conduct the "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn, and the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius.

C. W. D.

227

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

MAR 7 - 1937

Boston Symphony At Woolsey Wednesday

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final Woolsey Hall Series concert of the season in Woolsey Hall Wednesday evening.

PRESENTING a concert that will have a wide public appeal the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to Woolsey Hall Wednesday evening in the concluding concert of the season's Woolsey Hall Concert Series. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, famed conductor of the distinguished organization of one hundred and ten musicians, has arranged an all-Russian program for the occasion, which will have as its feature offering the Symphony No. 6 in B minor, "Pathetic," Opus 74, of Tchaikovsky. This work is the outstanding work of the great composer, and music-lovers from far and wide should be attracted through the opportunity of hearing the great work performed by the famous Boston orchestra.

Liadov's Symphony Picture, "From the Apocalypse" will open the evening of great music. This is a dramatic piece of program music which is filled with associations of the orthodox Greek church, with themes based upon its ritual. The second number will be the prelude to Moussorgsky's opera "Khovanstchina," another picture in tones which in the opera prepares the listener to behold the dawn upon the Red Square in Moscow where soldiers are barracked. Serge Prokofieff, the only living composer whose music is included on this program, will be represented by his early Scythian Suite, "Ala and Loli." Prokofieff has chosen for his subject, a legendary barbaric people of pre-historic Russia. The movements are entitled: The Adoration of Veles and Ala, The Enemy God and the Dance of the Black Spirits, Night, and the Glorious Departure of Loli and the Procession of the Sun.

The entire second half of the program is given over to the Tchaikovsky work, which is in four movements: I. Adagio. Allegro non troppo, II. Allegro con grazia, III. Allegro molto vivace, IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso.

This season's Woolsey Hall Series has met with the greatest success in the history of these famous musical occasions that are presented once a month during the fall and winter season, this substantially indicating the host of devotees who desire to hear the finest music and see the outstanding performers on the concert stage. With the exception of a very few tickets Woolsey Hall was entirely sold out on subscription last October prior to the opening concert of the present season, and hundreds of orders were received only to be turned back because of the lack of suitable locations.

Although the New Haven concert-going public naturally furnishes the bulk of the audience that attends the Woolsey concerts their number is augmented by persons from throughout this section of the state, with some subscribers coming from as far as fifty and sixty miles away.

This season's schedule opened with a concert in October by Fritz Kreisler, violinist. Next came the Boston Symphony for its fall concert in November, to be followed by the Don Cossack Russian Male Chorus in December. January saw Lotte Lehmann of the Metropolitan Opera, and February brought the great Josef Hofmann, pianist.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAR 7 - 193

BOSTON SYMPHONY WILL PLAY FRIDAY

Koussevitzky Will Give Fourth Concert of the Season at Brooklyn Music Academy

ENESCO RECITAL TUESDAY

Program by Yon and a Cathedral Choir Ensemble Tonight at the Arion Society Clubhouse

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give its fourth Brooklyn concert of the season on Friday at 8:30 P. M., at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The program will consist of Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont" and Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, and Rimsky-Korsakov's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade."

The concert series is sponsored by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which Edward C. Blum is president; the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which E. Huntington Woodman is chairman, and the Brooklyn Committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport is acting chairman.

Mrs. Charles R. Gay will be the hostess in the committee box. The box holders will include Mrs. Mary Childs Draper, Mrs. David C. Johnson, Miss Helen Jones uinn, Mrs. Joseph A. Bennett, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, and Colonel and Mrs. R. E. Beebe.

Mrs. Edward C. Blum is chairman of boxes; Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, membership chairman, and Miss Virginia Marvin, chairman of the Junior League Comitte. Members of the Junior League Committee include Miss Phyllis Barnes, Mrs. Theodore Fitz Randolph, Miss Louise Goetze, Miss Arrietta Smith, Mrs. Hollis K. Thayer, Miss Vatherine Van Brunt and Miss Edith Warren.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAR 7 - 1937

Boxholders for Boston Symphony Concert on Friday Evening

Mrs. Charles R. Gay will be the hostess in the committee box at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's fourth appearance in Brooklyn at the Academy of Music on Friday evening. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct. Other box holders will be Mrs. Mary Childs Draper, Mrs. David C. Johnson, Miss Helen Jones Quinn, Mrs. Joseph A. Bennett, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, Col. and Mrs. R. E. Beebe, of Fort Hamilton, and the Associate Alumnae of Adelphi Academy, Mrs. Roy M. Hart, president. The program will be divided between the music of two composers—Beethoven and Rimsky-Korsakov. The first part will consist of Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," and the same composer's Symphony No. 4. The closing work will be Rimsky-Korsakov's Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade," based on the Arabian Night tales, the Russian composer's familiar masterpiece which exacts the utmost powers of a full virtuoso orchestra. The April concert will be the final one of the 51st season of the orchestra in Brooklyn. The series is given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which Edward C. Blum is president of the board of trustees; the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which R. Huntington Woodman is chairman, and the Brooklyn Committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman, and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport is acting chairman.

In the interest of the Brooklyn season Mrs. Blum is chairman of boxes, Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, membership chairman, and Miss Virginia Marvin, chairman of the Junior League Committee. Members of the Junior League Committee include Miss Marvin, Miss Phyllis Barnes, Mrs. Theodore Fitz Randolph, Miss Louise Goetze, Miss Arrietta Smith, Mrs. Hollis K. Thayer, Miss Catherine Van Brunt and Miss Edith Warren.

* * *

Music Notes and Comment

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, returning from a week's visit to New York and other cities, will give the fourth concert of the Tuesday afternoon series in Symphony Hall on March 16, and the 19th regular pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 19 and 20.

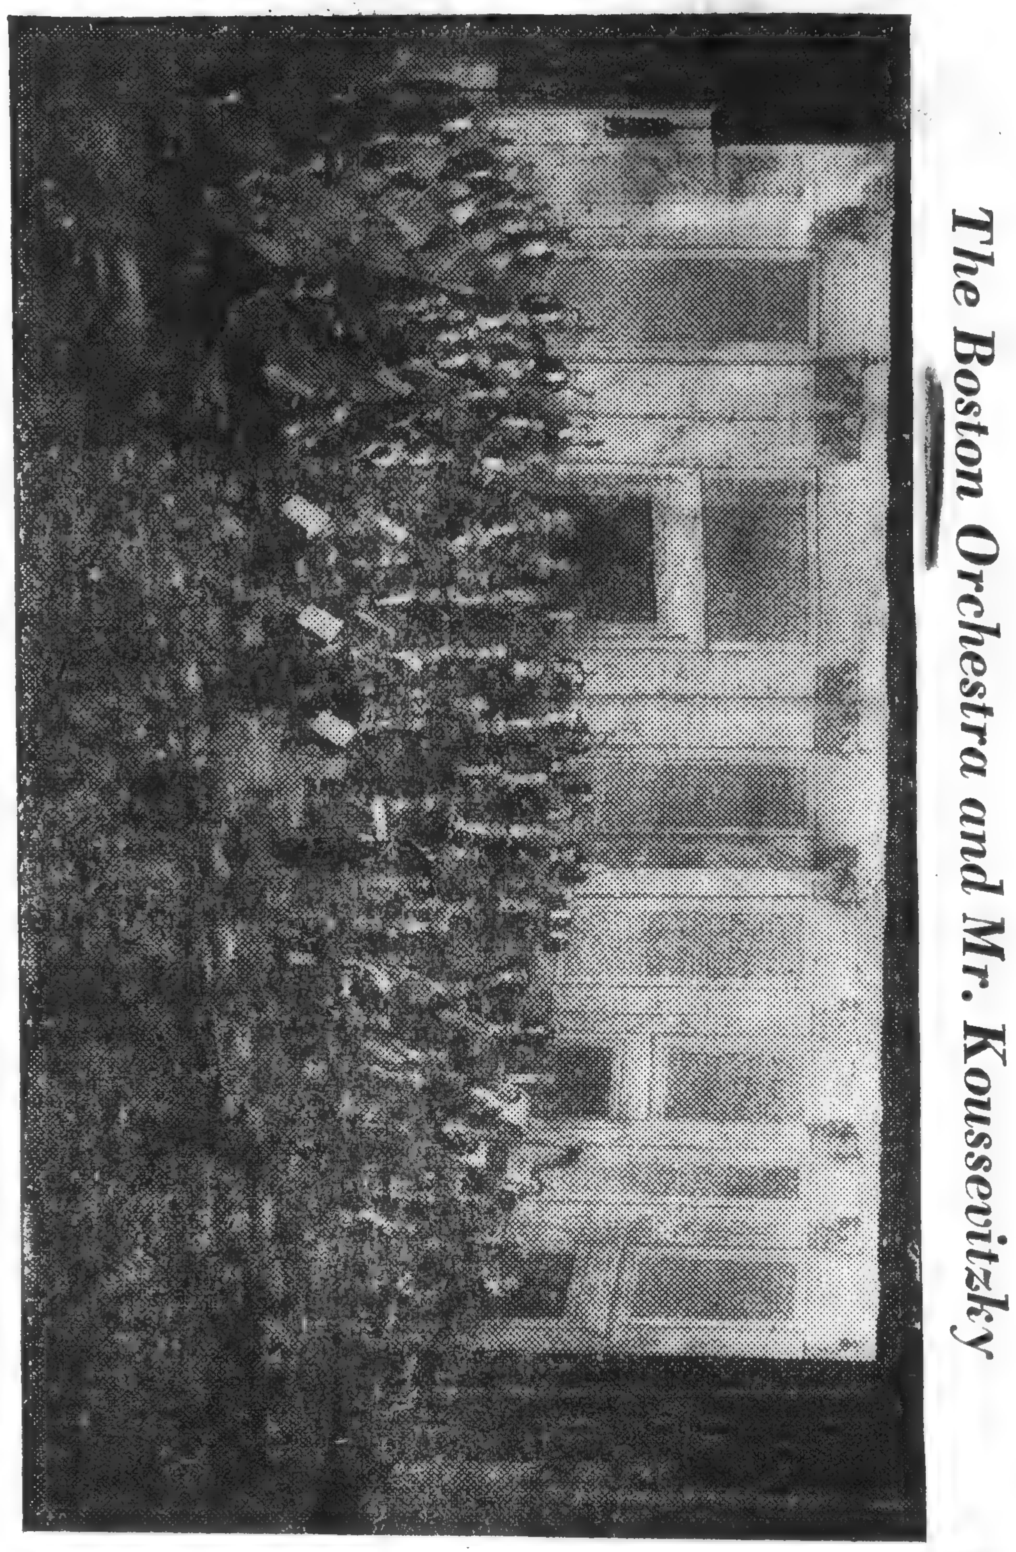
Dr Serge Koussevitzky announces the following program for the Tuesday afternoon concert: Grieg's "Peer Gynt," Suite No. 1; the second movement, entitled "Gretchen," from Liszt's "Faust Symphony"; and the Fourth Symphony of Brahms.

At the Friday and Saturday concerts, the new Third Symphony of Nicolai Berezowsky will have its first Boston performance. The composer will conduct from the manuscript score. Dr Koussevitzky will conduct Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, and the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius.

◆ ◆ ◆

Bach's "Passion According to St Matthew," the revival of which last Spring was one of the events of the season, will be repeated in a single performance for the benefit of the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on Good Friday. The performance will be given in Symphony Hall on March 26, in two parts. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will be assisted by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, and the following soloists: Jeannette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle, John L. Priebe, Keith Falkner, Fritz Lechner, and Dr V. Ernst Wolff.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
MAR 7 - 1937



As they appear on the stage of the Academy of Music Friday night.

The Boston Orchestra and Mr. Koussevitzky

Among the Soloists in This Week's Musical Events

Fayer, Vienna

Alfredo

ho makes her American debut tomorrow at the Metropolitan Opera Hous

Krasner, playing Alban Berg's violin concerto with the Boston Symphony Thursday night in Carnegie Hall

---

Berg Music Makes Debut in Carnegie

Heard Between Beethoven and Strauss Masterpieces.

By PITTS SANBORN.

Unfortunately for Alban Berg's concerto it made its local debut in Carnegie Hall last evening between the [illegible] pleas[illegible] of Beethoven's Fo[illegible] Symphony and the apocalyp[illegible] of the "Thus Spake Zara[illegible] of Richard Strauss. In spite of the fact that it is Berg's last legacy to the world, composed shortly before his death [illegible] December [illegible]3, [illegible] already [illegible] in dimness between the glories that flanked it on the program.

This work, in two movements, was inspired by the untimely death of Manon Gropius and is inscribed "To the Memory of an Angel." Manon Gropius was the youthful daughter of the second marriage of the lady who previously had been Frau Gustav Mahler and who now is Frau Franz Werfel. A victim of infantile paralysis, she died in great pain, which she bore bravely. In view of Berg's reaction, the irreverent might add it is lucky we die but once.

* * *

Performed First Last Year.

The concerto, for violin and orchestra, was performed for the first time on April 19, 1936, at the festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music held in Barcelona. Then as now the violinist was Louis Krasner. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, together with Mr. Krasner, introduced the work to America last week in Boston. The same forces were engaged in yesterday's performance.

After a single hearing I would rather pass the buck to the future with a promise to consider the thing more in detail if ever I happen to hear it again, which seems altogether unlikely.

Last night the Berg who wrote it appeared to cast longing eyes from the twelve-tonal exile of the Schoenberg desert at the flesh-pots of the diatonic Egypt, and odds and ends of poignancy flecked the dry pages of the geometric design. It was like coming across pressed violets and buttercups in a volume of Euclid.

* * *

Little Enthusiasm Shown.

Mr. Krasner sustained his part in the performance—the part that tends toward the sentimental—with devoted earnestness, and Mr. Koussevitzky shepherded his men through their part as though salvation were at stake. The audience, however, showed little enthusiasm.

Beethoven's symphony was played with surpassing euphony and a vivid stressing of contrasts. The Adagio has been more poetically set forth. The Strauss tone-poem suffered in places from over-impetuosity, but as sheer sound it had indisputable magnificence.

World Tele [illegible]
12/37

228

Concerto by Alban Berg

By Ruth Marsters

Post March 7/37

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY'S return to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening after a brief absence from these concerts was warmly greeted by the usual capacity audience.

The program presented on these occasions was such as to stimulate both thought and enthusiasm.

The performance of the opening work, Schoenberg's arrangement of Bach's Organ prelude and Fugue in E flat left, to be sure, on Friday afternoon, something to be desired.

In both the massive prelude and the triple fugue (said to be the most perfect of its kind) the orchestra lacked its usual solidity and precision—a fact upon which all of the conductor's determined effort prevailed not. (The performance was probably quite otherwise on Saturday evening.)

Since Schoenberg's arrangement of the Bach score was first introduced to these concerts in 1930 it has become part of the established repertoire of the orchestra. And rightly so.

In his orchestral version of the great work Schoenberg was studiously faithful to the original thought and peculiarly sensitive in the handling of orchestral color.

Strings, woodwind, brass, xylophone, harp, timpani, triangle, cymbals, glockenspiel and celestra, are here used in a manner which, while lending the greatest effectiveness to thematic material, and making translucent the contrapuntal web, still embodies the characteristic qualities of the organ registers.

Following this, Alban Berg's Violin Concerto was given its first American performance—Louis Krasner distinguished Boston musician at whose instigation the work was written, appearing as soloist.

Mr. Krasner's conception of the score is obviously authentic, and the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's keenly sensitive supervision gave a performance of that excellence of caliber which we have been lead to expect from this organization.

The violin concerto, written shortly before his death, is the only music Alban Berg has left in this form.

Though it was Mr. Krasner who suggested its composition, the inspiration for work was derived from the sad occasion of the death of the lovely young Manon Gropius, daughter of Gustav Mahler's widow.

The concerto was brought to completion in July, 1935, after six weeks of intensive work upon it, and is inscribed "To the Memory of an Angel."

It was written in two parts, each of which is divided into two sections: Andante, Allegretto; Allegro, Adagio.

The first part is descriptive of the character and personality of the beloved Manon. There is a wistful quality in this music—as tender as the first crocus of spring. And there is also—barely perceptible—a faint and fragile tinge of exoticism.

The second part opens with a cadenza for the solo instrument which leads to a dramatic climax depicting the "struggle with death."

The closing Adagio is elegiac and is based on a chorale by Ahle which had been used on another occasion by Bach. (Cantata, "O Ewigheit, du Donnerwort.").

The music soars in a last anguish of grief and is quiet. All the more moving has Concerto proved because of its association with Berg's own death which occurred in December of the same year.

ESTATE OFFERED TO SYMPHONY

Summer Headquarters Would Be Provided on Lake In Stockbridge

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

STOCKBRIDGE, Feb. 14—Historic Tanglewood on the north shore of Mahkeenac Lake has been offered by its owners, Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Boston to the Boston Symphony orchestra for summer headquarters and for development by the Berkshire Music Festival Corporation.

Brave Girl Inspired Violin Concerto "To Memory of Angel," Played Here

Mar 7

BY LANING HUMPHREY

Great musical compositions and great heart stories about great composers seem bound to come from Vienna through the years. Often, however, fact becomes fictionized by legend, as succeeding generations of romantic Viennese re-tell stories of Beethoven and Schubert.

But the true facts of one of the greatest stories ever connected with a musical masterpiece by a celebrated Viennese composer have just been brought back from the Austrian capital by a Boston man. He is the violinist, Louis Krasner.

LOUIS KRASNER

Last night and Friday afternoon, at Symphony Hall, musical public and critics lavished praises on the solo performance of Krasner in the Violin Concerto of Alban Berg. They acknowledged as a true modern masterpiece the composition itself, which Krasner assisted Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give its first two performances in America.

The composer had dedicated the Concerto to the Boston violinist. Indeed, it was Krasner who had caused him to think of writing a work in that form, which he never had attempted before. But a whole real life drama took place between the suggestion and the accomplishment. It reads like a literary creation, but every detail of it is true.

Louis Krasner's Story

Let Louis Krasner tell the story. He mingled warmth of heart and understanding of soul with the dazzling violin technicalities of Berg's music. But he is a stickler for facts as against romantic enlarging on facts in the story behind the music. And so here at last we have one musical narrative from Vienna that is not inextricably entwined with legend.

"I was in Vienna on a musical pilgrimage," Krasner related in a quiet nook of Symphony Hall. "Naturally on the watch for new music for the violin, I sought out the city's most famous composer, Alban Berg.

"Berg confessed that he had never written anything for solo violin. 'I have not composed anything to display either violin or any other solo instrument,' he said.

"I argued with him that each master—as he certainly was—had shown his powers in at least one violin concerto. We talked of his other works, his opera, "Wozzek," and the orchestral suite from his uncompleted opera, "Lulu."

Talked of Concerto

He spoke dejectedly of how unusual it was to find a conductor who could bring out the true qualities of his music, instead of letting it go as a mass of perplexities. I told him of the remarkably sympathetic performances I had heard given of his Suite from "Lulu" by Koussevitzky. Berg brightened at that. Finally, he said that he would like above all to have Koussevitzky give the first performance in America of his next work. He wasn't at all sure that that would be a violin concerto. But he promised to keep it in mind.

"Although Berg was a very shy individual, he began to be seen at concerts of string instruments. His interest in the violin seemed to be increasing tremendously. Finally he told me that he probably would attempt a violin concerto. However, first he would have to acquire a good idea. Then he would need about a year to work it out. There the matter seemed due to rest indefinitely.

"Suddenly a sad piece of news put Berg in a fever of inspiration. A young girl whom he had watched grow up had died after apparently beginning to recover from a year's illness. She was Manon Gropius, daughter of the widow of the composer, Gustav Mahler.

The elite of Vienna's artistic, literary and musical life attended the soirees held in the Gropius home. That was one place where Berg would go. Manon, a beautiful and charming girl, endeared herself to all, especially Berg.

"It was a deep shock to Berg when Manon was stricken with infantile paralysis, at the age of 17.. For 11 months she suffered terribly, but she was so courageous and gracious that Berg took heart. He and everyone else believed she was recovering—only to hear of her death.

"News of the tragedy inspired Berg with the idea of writing a Violin Concerto as a memorial to Manon. Although usually he was extremely slow in composition, six weeks later he wrote to me:

"'Yesterday I brought the composition of the Violin Concerto to its close. If you are perhaps astonished, I am still more so.'

"The manuscript which Berg sent to me with the letter bore the title, 'To the Memory of an Angel.' I know there is no doubt that that meant to the memory of Manon Gropius.

His Curious End

"He was taken to a hospital. A carbuncle had become dangerous.

"On the 23d of December, the composer's condition was at a low ebb. He mentioned the fact, however, that 23 always had been a lucky number for him. He told the doctor that he felt he would recover if he survived the twenty-third hour. When he asked to see the time, the doctor managed to set a timepiece forward to midnight—the twenty-fourth hour, of course. Happy to see that he had lived well past the twenty-third hour, Berg dropped happily to sleep. He died within 20 minutes.

"At the beginning of the Concerto, Berg represents the lightness and gaiety of Manon. Then comes a fateful forboding. You seem to hear the tread of death. Finally an old German chorale of resignation,

'It is enough . . . Now, good night, O World!'

"And so Berg, in writing 'To the Memory of an Angel,' also composed his own requiem.

"Just before his passing, Berg showed the nobility of his character in a striking way—which involved the Concerto. In Vienna it had been proposed that the new Concerto be entered as Austria's contribution to the festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music at Barcelona. Berg said the opportunity should be given to a younger man—he being 50—and one who needed to be introduced. When Berg died, the Vienna committee sent the Concerto to Barcelona. There I first played it in public. The audience showed such enthusiasm for the music that the conductor, Hermann Scherchen, held up the manuscript so that it might be applauded in the absence of the composer."

N.Y. Tribune March 13/37

MUSIC

By LAWRENCE GILMAN

Alban Berg's Memorial Concerto for Violin Heard at Boston Symphony Concert

Fourth evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Carnegie Hall. Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky; soloist, Louis Krasner, violinist.

PROGRAM

1. Beethoven,
   Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60
2. Berg..Concerto for Violin and Orchestra
   I. Andante—Allegretto
   II. Allegro-Adagio
   (First performance in New York)
   Soloist: Louis Krasner

Intermission

3. S auss,
   Tone Poem, "Thus spake Zarathustra"
   y after Friedrich Nietzsche) Opus 30

Manon Gropius

The "Angel" in whose memory Berg wrote his violin concerto

ALBAN BERG'S much discussed concerto for violin was introduced to New York Thursday evening at the Boston Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall, after having stirred up a vast amount of controversy in various capitals of Europe. From which it will be inferred that the Concerto must have a history.

* * *

It has. The work was written at the suggestion of the Boston violinist Louis Krasner (who played the solo part Thursday night). Mr. Krasner thought it would be nice if the famous composer of the operas "Wozzeck" and "Lulu" would compose a piece for his use, and he broached the subject to Berg in the spring of 1935. Berg was then engrossed with the unfinished score of "Lulu," and his interest in the concerto idea seems to have languished.

But in May of that year a personal tragedy stirred profoundly his sensibilities. A young and talented girl of eighteen named Manon Gropius, whose mother had been Gustav Mahler's widow, died in Vienna after a long and agonizing illness, which she endured with singular courage and serenity.

* * *

Berg was devotedly attached to her, and the effect upon him was at once shattering and emotionally releasing. He applied himself to the composition of the violin concerto, which he now conceived as a threnody for his young friend. It became in his mind, and in its spirit and content, a tribute to the memory of the nature which had seemed to him so lovable and rare. He is said to have fashioned the Allegretto of the first part as a tonal portrait of Manon Gropius. The tortured Allegro holds the precipitation of his anguish and despair. The final Adagio—tenderly musing and serene—is an elegy. On the manuscript is inscribed the dedication, Dem Andenken eines Engels ("To the memory of an Angel").

Shortly after he had completed the instrumentation, Berg himself died at Vienna, leaving a memory of gentleness and ardor and sincerity which might well be envied by greater geniuses and lesser men.

It would be easy to romanticize the concerto, to sentimentalize it out of existence; and this, indeed, is in process of accomplishment. Berg, an honest artist, deserves a better fate. The imaginative basis of this music is genuinely affecting, and only the incurably hard-boiled could fail to be moved by the circumstances that surrounded the work's creation, and the thoughts that conditioned it. The pathos of early death speaks from the few fine pages of the score, and leaves its mark upon us. But one cannot help wishing that the tenderness and the grief that lie upon the music at its best might have been kept impersonal, anonymous, with something of the grave aloofness that makes Ravel's "Pavane for a Dead Infanta," for example, so lastingly poignant.

Berg's complete simplicity of approach, his entire aesthetic integrity, are above suspicion. There was never, one is convinced, an honester artist, nor one more sensitive and responsive. But something in his last year had relaxed the fibre of his musical thinking, made it flaccid and conventional and trite. The Berg of "Wozzeck," of certain moments in "Lulu"—searing, astringent, firm-textured—is not in the music of this concerto. Instead, we get for the most part the ancient clichés of atonality and "twelve-tonalism," the stale odor of spilt modernity, sweetish left-overs from the Schonbergian pastry-shop.

There is nothing older than a modernity that has dated, that has turned from impulse to formula. Berg seems to have said his say in "Wozzeck" and in certain scenes of "Lulu." Barring a few moments of deep and genuine poignancy in the closing pages of the Violin Concerto, the treasurable Berg of earlier years is absent from this score.

* * *

Berg has used in his final Adagio a chorale from Bach — the last chorale of the sixtieth Cantata, "O Ewigkeit, du Donnerwort," based on a seventeen-century melody of Ahle's. The words of the chorale, "Es ist genug: Herr, wenn es dir gefällt," are deeply apt and touching in this association; but Berg should have been wise enough to leave the music of Sebastian alone. The comparison between Bach's modernity and Berg's is disastrous. Bach contains everything — modernity and timelessness, newness and everlastingness. His harmonization of the chorale is far more telling and alive and piercing in its modernity than anything in Berg's own writing. A Viennese critic, Herr Willi Reich, says that Berg has quoted "the original harmony of the classic prototype." Herr Reich is mistaken. But perhaps it is just as well. If Berg had quoted literally in his concerto Bach's original harmony, we should be wondering even more at his temerity in quoting Bach at all.

* * *

It remains to be said that Mr. Louis Krasner, for whom the concerto was written, played it Thursday night with infinite devotion and incredible skill. As a feat of memory alone the achievement was miraculous. Mr. Koussevitzky and his superlative orchestra provided him with an accompaniment the beauty and solicitude of which were in themselves a tribute to the memory of Alban Berg.

In Boston

Monitor Mar 6/37

Alban Berg's Violin Concerto had its first American performance yesterday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. It was the central item of the eighteenth program of the season, which will be repeated this evening in Symphony Hall. Louis Krasner, Boston violinist for whom the concerto was written, was the soloist, as he had been in previous performances in Barcelona, London, Vienna and Paris.

The concerto was preceded by the Schönberg transcription of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in E flat, and followed by Strauss's "Also Sprach Zarathustra." This was brilliant program-making—relating the classic, the romantic and the so-called "atonal" schools of music, just as Berg had done in the score round which the program was constructed.

Through the efforts of a portion of the audience, concerto and soloist had a good reception. This is not music to make an immediate popular appeal. Yet it has been highly praised by distinguished European critics, both in the columns of this newspaper and elsewhere. It has even been called a turning point in the history of music. It is hardly that. It is really a logical continuation of romantic music in the line from Wagner through Strauss and Mahler. But it does emphasize the continuity of that line. By fitting an old German chorale used by Bach into the 12-tone system, Berg may have removed the terror from "atonality." At any rate, he has proved that atonality, like the lock on the cell door in "Beggar on Horseback," never was there at all.

It is characteristic that Berg should have used the concerto form for a piece of program music, just as he used sonata form, the fugue, the passacaglia and so on in his opera, "Wozzeck." Schönberg's mission seems to have been to introduce the twelve-tone system; Berg's, to demonstrate its connection with the history of music and its adaptability to romantic as well as strictly formal expression.

The "argument" as well as the music of this concerto is evidence that the most conspicuously successful member of the Schönberg school was a true South-German romantic. Written in memory of a young girl, it celebrates her goodness and charm, and sings a threnody for her. Since Berg passed on shortly after finishing it, comparison with the circumstances of the composition of Mozart's Requiem has been made.

All this has surrounded the work with sentimental associations, to which, indeed, it readily lends itself as music. At times it gets onomatopoetic. At one point we were embarrassed by being reminded of the fate of "Till Eulenspiegel." In the Allegro of his second movement, Berg is not far from bathos, that ever-present danger of the romantic. But the chorale is impressive, and so is the conclusion.

The performance was an artistic victory for conductor and orchestra as well as soloist. L. A. S.

CHARLES A. ELLIS DEAD

Was Symphony Orchestra Manager 33 Years

Post Mar 10

Friend and companion and one-time manager of Sergei Rachmaninoff, Fritz Kreisler, Walter Damrosch, Nellie Melba, Geraldine Farrar and the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Adams Ellis, 82, died yesterday at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel where he had made his home for some years. He was the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from its inauguration until his retirement in April, 1918.

Born in 1855 in South Boston, Mr. Ellis was graduated from English High School and worked for Major Henry Lee Higginson who appointed him manager of the orchestra to succeed A. P. Peck, who was manager of the Music Hall on Hamilton place. In 1885, Mr. Ellis was appointed sole manager of the orchestra.

A trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music, Mr. Ellis was known as a friend to hundreds of the famous artists that came to Boston to play. At one time, according to friends, he ran an opera company with Walter Damrosch. Among Mr. Ellis' most prized treasures, according to his friends, was a gold cigar box with the facsimile signatures of half a dozen famous musicians.

He is survived by his sister-in-law, Mrs. Florence Ellis, wife of his late brother, George H. Ellis; Mrs. Henry W. Patterson of Wayland, a cousin, Mrs. Frederick Hyde of Port Angeles, Wash.; Mrs. Charles Harvey of New York, and Carl Adams of Worcester. He will be buried from the chapel of Forest Hills Cemetery, Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

BOSTON SYMPHONY HAILED BY HEARERS

Koussevitzky Directs One of Most Brilliant Concerts of Orchestra's Career

229

BERG CONCERTO IS GIVEN

Krasner, American Violinist Who Suggested Work to Composer, Appears as Soloist

By OLIN DOWNES

N.Y. Times Mar 12/37

The concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, last night in Carnegie Hall, must rank, because of the material of the program and the quality of the performances, among the most brilliant exhibitions that this distinguished instrumental body has given in this city.

The compositions presented were in themselves of unusual significance; the interpretations bore witness again to the unsurpassed qualities of the band, as they also testified to the versatility and the constantly ripening mastery of its leader. That the New York public is well aware of these things was shown by the audience that packed the hall and made every performance the occasion for the most enthusiastic demonstrations.

The program presented a highly interesting and provocative novelty, the violin concerto of Alban Berg, of which the solo part was played by Louis Krasner, an American, who suggested to Berg, in 1935, the composition of this work, and who has acted as its particular exponent in Europe and America from the time of its first performance at Barcelona, April 19, 1936, at the festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music.

Concerto Is an Elegy

The concerto has an extremely romantic history, which is not as that of other concerti for solo instruments. It is in sum an elegy for the youthful Manon Gropius, the daughter of Mahler's widow, a young woman to whom Berg was "tenderly devoted," and it is the only work of the kind that Berg ever attempted.

Manon Gropius died in May of 1935, and Berg, who had previously been indifferent to the idea, took up the composition of the concerto. He worked upon it furiously, finished it in six weeks and dedicated the score "To the memory of an angel." This was in July of 1935. Berg was putting the finishing touches upon the instrumentation in December of that year when he developed the blood infection which brought him to his end at midnight of Dec. 23 of the same year.

The concerto is in two parts, which was subdivided.

"It was observed," says Mr. Burke in his program notes, recounting the Barcelona performance, "that Alban Berg, the avowed disciple of Schoenberg and the faithful exponent of the twelve-tone system, whose opera, 'Wozzeck' had won far more attention than any work of Schoenberg, reverted in his last complete score, composed at 50, to such time-honored tonal anchors as the common triad and the square-cut cadences of a Bach chorale."

This chorale of Bach, "Es ist genug," is used in the last part of the concerto, after the long and free cadenza of the violin with punctuation by the orchestra, which, to Richard Capell, has the "unmistakable significance" of "the living creature's struggle with death." Upon the chorale Berg weaves his own variations. In the first movement is "a scherzo-like movement which introduces a Viennese waltz theme and a lilting Carinthian folksong. It has been said to recall the lightness and gaiety of Manon."

Audience Is Enthusiastic

This writer, at a first hearing, does not find himself in sympathy with the music. This is the record of a preliminary impression, not of a formed opinion about a work by a composer of indisuptable gifts and extremely subtle craftsmanship. It is to be recorded that a considerable part of the audience applauded the concerto loudly and long and called soloist and conductor repeatedly back to the stage, and that persons of sensitive musical taste found the music uncommonly beautiful.

The present commentator only concurs with this reaction where the later pages of the final movement are concerned. He finds the composer's initial ideas, and their idiom, forced and involved. No doubt, this style had become so native with Berg as to be his habitual musical speech. There need be no question of the sincerity and conviction of his expression. It may become clearer and more communicative in days in store. Just now it all seems to be essentially artificial and false in theory.

The cadenza-like movement, which has been explained by the thought of the struggle between life and death, ends with a passage not unremindful in color and dramatic inflection of the music of dissolution in Richard Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration." The loud whacks of the drum, the roars of the orchestra, seem unduly realistic and out of kelter with the prevailing style of the composition. The final pages have unmistakably tenderness and intensity of feeling.

If the work itself is of dubious or debatable quality the performance was not. It was tribute alike to soloist, conductor and orchestra. This is immensely difficult music. It was interpreted with astonishing eloquence and precision in execution.

The changing and interlocking rhythms, delicate balances of polyphony and sheer virtuosity of brain and of hand that they necessitate constitute a task for the most consummate musicians. There is every probability that the performance was ideally after the composer's wishes.

Message Well Interpreted

Much could be said of his harmonic scheme in its various ramifications and in its relation to Bach's choral, but these disquisitions can be postponed till a time of greater familiarity with the score. Certainly the soloist, Dr. Koussevitzky, and his men had done nobly the duty of artists in making as clear and beautiful as they might the message of an exceptional creative individuality.

The Berg concerto, as the important novelty of the occasion, has been discussed at some length, and yet, properly speaking, it is not half the tale of the concert. There was an opening performance of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, ideal in beauty and proportion.

The greatest depth is found, in terms of the profoundest simplicity, in the introduction of the symphony and in the slow movement. But every measure of this modest composition is a work of art, which was presented with the scale of sonorities and the transparency of style by which only could it be properly communicated. With another conductor this might have been merely the deed of an admirable scholar conversant with the usages of Beethoven's early period. With Dr. Koussevitzky and his men it was re-creation.

Richard Strauss's "Zarathustra" ended the concert. It is very remarkable to realize the belated popularity and public appreciation of this, one of the last Strauss scores to meet with general recognition. Dr. Koussevitzky's performance is the second in New York this season and there soon will be a third.

The end of "Zarathustra" is so mystical and remote that some find it anti-climactic after the mad climax of the Night-Wanderer's Song. But lo! last night the audience remained to applaud furiously long after the last enigmatical C of the plucked basses had sounded.

Lesson in Interpretation

And here, if it had been needed, was a lesson as to the manner in which a truly imaginative and intuitive interpreter, confronted with various creative manifestations, changes his style.

The interpretation was broadly rhapsodic, of a stupendous breadth in the introduction and of a truly Nietzschean frenzy. It was furious, proud, Dionysiac and bitter, too—on occasion bitter as gall, and entirely mad, like so much of the music. The trumpets that screamed over the void as the bell tolled and the orchestra ran fairly amok are not to be quickly forgotten.

Dr. Koussevitsky treated certain tempi and details in ways of his own, and by a grand sweep and a head-long impetus, once the dance song had been propounded, fairly flung the music from the instruments. If he ignored a few niceties it was fortunate rather than otherwise. He could afford to do so, so far as technique was concerned, with his virtuoso orchestra, and it is utterly essential that the sardonic laughter and the extravagant fantasy of the piece should be so flung forth, without calmness or reservation. And this result was secured in spite of the inadequate functioning, for some reason or other, of the organ, an important feature of the score.

And the music? It remains unconquerably vast and magnificent. Sometimes the composer uses marble, sometimes clay. Nothing stultifies his purpose or clouds his vision, until we too are caught up and overwhelmed by his power.

Berg's Violin Concerto Heard

Louis Krasner Appears as Soloist in Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra.

By W. J. HENDERSON.

N.Y. Sun – Mar 12/37

The fourth evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city took place last night in Carnegie Hall. There was much diversity in the program. It began with Beethoven's B flat symphony, continued with one of the latest products of the advanced musical thought of Germany and then, making a reactionary movement, concluded with the "Also sprach Zarathustra" of Richard Strauss.

Great expectations preceded the second number, the violin concerto of Alban Berg, celebrated composer of "Wozzek" and "Lulu," for the Continental press had spread its glorifications from Vienna to Copenhagen. The audience bestowed upon it the resolute applause of perplexed minds and went forth into the corridors to submerge itself in speculation. Alban Berg's violin concerto had its first American performances at the home concerts of the Boston orchestra of March 5 and 6. The composition of this work was undertaken in 1935 at the suggestion of Louis Krasner, the violinist who came to this country to play it and who has so far been its only interpreter. The concerto was created as a lament over the early death of Manon Gropius, daughter of Mahler's widow. Berg had a sincere affection for the young maiden and he inscribed his score "To the Memory of an Angel." He worked at its composition feverishly and completed it in six weeks. He had not finished the details of the orchestration when fatal illness seized him and carried him off in December, 1935.

The concerto is in two parts, each divided into two sections. An introductory andante leads to an allegro which is of light and animated character and utilizes a waltz theme and a Carinthian folk song. The second part is developed on a cadenza for the solo instrument. "The music is relieved by an intermezzo," to quote the program notes; "it rises to an intense climax and then gradually subsides." The finale is elegiac a lament for the dead girl, and this introduces the old chorale, "It Is Enough," used by Bach in the cantata "O Ewigkeit, du Donnerwort." One recalls the immortal air of Mendelssohn's "Elijah." "It is enough; Lord, now take away my life."

Since Berg is the apostle of the Schoenberg theories it is not surprising that he founds this composition on the twelve-tone scale of that inventor. But as the work unfolds itself it becomes evident that Berg's chief concern was not with a demonstration of the possibilities of a system. He has not hesitated to utilize Austrian folk song and Bach chorale in his attempt to voice his own deeply felt emotion. Let us confess at once that these quotations were for us buried in a mass of orchestration and contrapuntal cross references. The composer could not escape the prescriptions of his method.

There can be no question that the concerto is one of the most important contributions to the stock of what is called "modernistic" music. It is made with accomplished craft and its cunningly devised instrumentation aids in every moment to present the new and still strange harmonies in their most alluring disguises. There is more than that to be said for the composition. It has episodes of musical illusion; that is, they sound almost beautiful to those who can conceive of musical beauty only as existing in its older manifestations. But even those to have not yet learned to enjoy the new music must perceive that the work is consistent in development, that its feeling is sustained, and that its lyric line, though entirely different from the typical line of the romanticists, is clearly drawn and ably projected. One qualification of this statement must be made, inasmuch as the orchestration frequently drowns the solo voice and obscures the proportions of the composition.

The concerto is decidedly unbeautiful according to the standards which have prevailed in music for several centuries and which the progressives declare can no longer be upheld. It has sincerity in places and communicative force in these, but for the disinterested listener, not bound to adherence to a school or a style, it must surely present many minutes of insignificant melodic progressions and harmonic sequences more commendable for ingenuity than for constructive or expressional effect.

Ernest Newman confessed to a feeling that this work would be a historic document. With this the present writer agrees. It will be quoted in future periods as a striking example of the singular trends of this extraordinary musical transition through which we are now passing. But that it will gain and keep a place for one, two or three centuries beside other historical documents which refuse to retire to library shelves, but persist in remaining living testimonials to the genius of their composers, we do not believe.

If it demonstrates a progress in the art, it is a progress from healthy, frank and candid expression of spontaneous ideas to artificial embalming of thought, laboriously conceived and developed and already clouded with the shadow of decay. The work was played with consummate skill by the orchestra and with praiseworthy devotion by Mr. Krasner, a violinist of skill and assuredly of great faith.

It does not seem imperative to enter into a description of the performances of the other two works. They are familiar friends, and those who did not attend the concert will know that they were safe in the hands of Mr. Koussevitzky and his famous ensemble.

SITE IS ENCHANTING, SAYS KOUSSEVITZKY

Conductor, Trustees View Berkshire Festival Tract

Special Dispatch to the Globe

Globe Mar. 16/37

PITTSFIELD, March 15—"Wonderful!" exclaimed Dr Serge Koussevitzky, dynamic conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as he took one last look at Tanglewood, before departing for Boston today accompanied by Madame Koussevitzky.

Dr Koussevitzky, members of the board of trustees of the orchestra and the executive committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival spent all morning wading through the snow at the 210-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, presented as a permanent home for the festival by Mrs Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappen of Boston.

Several possible sites for the proposed building were studied carefully by the group and the available facilities in the house and other buildings on the estate were considered with a view to adapting them to the needs of the festival.

Standing on the elevation near the house and taking in the panorama of Stockbridge Bowl and distant mountains, Dr Koussevitzky was ecstatic as he flung out his arms if to embrace the view: "We can make beautiful music here. Here is the place for an American festival."

Times

UNDAY, MARCH 14,

BOSTONIANS PLAY PROKOFIEFF SUITE

Koussevitzky Conducts Work, Still a Provocative One, at Carnegie Hall

CHEERS AND JEERS MINGLE

All-Russian Program Includes Tschaikovsky, Moussorksky and Liadoff Symphonies

By OLIN DOWNES

Although Prokofieff's "Scythian Suite" had been heard a number of times in this city previous to its performance by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, and although the piece is vintage of 1914, it nevertheless provoked a rather amusing demonstration. A derisive cry, in a feminine voice, of "Oh, oh", after the last measure was followed by cheers from the other camp and by prolonged applause from the majority in the audience.

Mr. Prokofieff, for these considerable years a bad boy of modern music, may thus congratulate himself that he is emphatically in the running, before the public and the press. His comparatively early score has not lost the power to stir up dissension which it emphatically possessed twenty-odd years ago.

The performance of this music was simply another tribute in the form of inescapable evidence to the remarkable finish and brilliancy of the orchestra and the authority of the conductor who has made it what it is today. The music retains much of its bite, if it is no longer as amazing to those acquainted with its details as it was in an earlier day.

Still Provokes Sensation

In spite of the phenomenal advances, or, as some would say, the phenomenal harmonic licence that composers permit themselves today, this "Scnthian Suite" still provokes a sensation. How long it will endure as a work of art sufficient unto itself, or whether it will appear to the next generation as a very interesting and talented exhibition of a certain phase of modern composition remains to be seen.

But Mr. Prokofieff's banner of those days, "touqours de l'audace," has not been lowered, and is not lowered an inch in this score. He composes therein with prodigious audacity, brilliancy and self-confidence.

The program, consisting entirely of Russian music, began with the "symphonic picture," "From the Apocalypse," by Liadoff, continued with Meussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovantchine," and ended with Tschaikovsky's "Symphonie pathetique."

This latter performance impressed one as somewhat fused in detail and a little mannered, as though the piece had been played so often by the same conductor and band—as indeed it has—that leader and men were a trifle satiated with it, and had, therefore, altered a traditional detail here and there in order to afford themselves a little variety of experience.

Worthy of Its Title

The same time could have been devoted to less familiar music, and not all people in a symphonic-minded audience are afraid of novelty, or at least reasonable variety.

There are, on the other hand, certain justifications for another hearing of the work. The symphony remains astonishingly expressive and original. And it shows, incontrovertibly and tragically, that Tschaikovsky, when he died at the age of 53, was just entering his great period as a symphonist.

The "Pathetique" is one of the few works in which a composer really did something quite new and yet worthy of the title "symphonic" in the treatment of the form. There are no parallels, in form or content, in other symphonies, to the five-four second movement, the nightmarish march-scherzo, the threnody which makes the finale. It remains immortal and searing music.

230

Berg Concerto Is Heard in New York

B. Tran. Mar 15/37

Alban Berg's Concerto was played by the Boston Symphony on Friday night. As in Boston the work has been received with marked diversity of opinion.

Writing in the Herald Tribune, Lawrence Gilman says:

"Berg's complete simplicity of approach, his entire aesthetic integrity, are above suspicion. There was never, one is convinced, an honester artist, nor one more sensitive and responsive. But something in his last years had relaxed the fiber of his musical thinking, made it flaccid and conventional and trite. The Berg of "Wozzeck," of certain moments in "Lulu"—searing, astringent, firm-textured—is not in the music of this concerto. Instead, we get for the most part the ancient cliches of atonality and "twelve-tonalism," the stale odor of spilt modernity, sweetish left-overs from the Schonbergian pastry-shop.

"Barring a few moments of deep and genuine poignancy in the closing pages of the Violin Concerto, the treasurable Berg of earlier years is absent from this score.

"The pathos of early death speaks from the few fine pages of the score, and leaves its mark upon us. But one cannot help wishing that the tenderness and the grief that lie upon the music at its best might have been kept impersonal, anonymous, with something of the grave aloofness that makes Ravel's "Pavane for a Dead Infanta," for example, so lastingly poignant."

Here is the view of Olin Downes, as set forth in the Times.

"This writer, at a first hearing, does not find himself in sympathy with the music. This is the record of a preliminary impression, not of a formed opinion about a work by a composer of indisputable gifts and extremely subtle craftsmanship. It is to be recorded that a considerable part of the audience applauded the concerto loudly and long and called soloist and conductor repeatedly back to the stage, and that persons of sensitive musical taste found the music uncommonly beautiful.

"The present commentator only concurs with this reaction where the later pages of the final movement are concerned. He finds the composer's initial ideas, and their idiom, forced and involved. No doubt, this style had become so native with Berg as to be his habitual musical speech. There need be no question of the sincerity and conviction of his expression. It may become clearer and more communicative in days in store. Just now it all seems to be essentially artificial and false in theory.

"The cadenza-like movement, which has been explained by the thought of the struggle between life and death, ends with a passage not unremindful in color and dramatic inflection of the music of dissolution in Richard Strauss's 'Death and Transfiguration.' The loud whacks of the drum, the roars of the orchestra, seem unduly realistic and out of kelter with the prevailing style of the composition. The final pages have unmistakably tenderness and intensity of feeling."

Pitts Sanborn is more drastic:

"Unfortunately for Alban Berg's concerto it made its local debut in Carnegie Hall last evening between the perfect pleasings of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and the apocalyptic opening of the 'Thus Spake Zarathustra' of Richard Strauss. In spite of the fact that it is Berg's last legacy to the world, composed shortly before his death on Dec. 23, 1935, it already fades away in dimness between the glories that flanked it on the program."

The veteran William J. Henderson takes a more judicial stand:

"The concerto is decidedly unbeautiful according to the standards which have prevailed in music for several centuries and which the progressives declare can no longer be upheld. It has sincerity in places and communicative force in these, but for the disinterested listener, not bound to adherence to a school or a style, it must surely present many minutes of insignificant melodic progressions and harmonic sequences more commendable for ingenuity than for constructive or expressional effect.

CHARLES ELLIS IS DEAD AT 81

Recruited First Boston Symphony for Major Higginson in 1881

DIRECTED CAREERS OF MANY ARTISTS

Charles A. Ellis, 81, who recruited the first Boston Symphony orchestra in 1881 and acted as manager of that great musical organization until 1918, died yesterday at the Ritz Carlton Hotel, where he had lived since his retirement from business several years ago. Funeral services will be held at the Forest Hills chapel tomorrow at 2:30 P. M.

Although during his long career he managed many of the world's outstanding musicians, Mr. Ellis regarded as his most important achievement the carrying out of the orders of the late Major Henry L. Higginson 56 years ago to "go out and get an orchestra." He assembled 75 musicians from Boston and New York, and during its initial season the Boston Symphony orchestra played to capacity houses of 2400 persons in the old Music Hall, Winter street and Hamilton place, where the Orpheum Theater now stands.

FRIEND OF OPERA STARS

To the many stars who were under his management at various times, he was friend, teacher, adviser and even banker. Among them were Madame Nellie Melba, Ignace Paderewski, Geraldine Farrar, Fritz Kreisler and Rachmaninoff. Only last week Geraldine Farrar came to Boston to sing to him in his hotel room. He is affectionately remembered in the autobiographies of Madame Melba, Paderewski and others.

He was drafted from business by Major Higginson to take charge of the symphony orchestra of which Georg Henschel was the first director and conductor. Recalling those pioneer days in an interview several years ago, Mr. Ellis said:

"There were a number of people

(Continued on Page Eleven)

(see above Right)

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, MARCH 15, 1937

CHARLES ELLIS IS DEAD AT 81

Recruited First Boston Symphony for Major Higginson in 1881

(Continued from First Page)

who were skeptical about the success of Major Higginson's enterprise. Even some of his best friends feared, and enemies hoped, that it would not be permanently successful. There were many who declared that the love of symphonic music was affectation.

"They said that Henschel had caught the town and it was fashionable to attend the concerts, but that after a while the attendance would dwindle away. I am happy to say that the record of more than 50 years has changed this forecast."

BUSINESS TRAINING

He was born in South Boston, the son of George W. Ellis and Clarinda (Adams) Ellis. His father was president of the South Boston Savings Bank and when the son graduated from the English High School he entered the employ of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Co. as an accountant. His sound business training led to his selection as manager of the orchestra.

The part he played in the success of the infant organization has been mentioned by several historians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including M. A. de Wolfe Howe, who wrote:

"Since that time he has managed all the affairs of the orchestra—a task of great labor, including attention to contracts, to the whims and difficulties of musicians, their discipline when not in concerts and rehearsals, the business of traveling, which was great, and the details for preparation for concerts all over the country. Any record of the organization which omitted a full acknowledgment of what it owes to Mr. Ellis would fall far short of completeness."

One of his most difficult journeys was that to the San Francisco exposition in 1915. George W. Stewart, musical director of the exposition, had made arrangements with several famous European orchestras, but the outbreak of the World War made it impossible for these to fulfill their contracts. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, at that time under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, was engaged for 12 concerts to be played on 12 successive days.

"To the surprise of everyone and particularly the managers of the exposition, the concerts not only paid for themselves, but left a margin of profit," Mr. Ellis said later. "In that respect they made a better showing than any other department of the exposition."

He was for many years associated with Walter Damrosch in the management of opera companies, and at one time was mentioned as director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York.

Taken by Death

CHARLES ELLIS

Mar. 15

Recent

Charles Ellis, Long Manager of Symphony

Got First Players for Boston Orchestra—Handled Famous Musicians

Funeral services for Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1881 to 1918, who died yesterday at the Ritz Carlton Hotel where he lived since his retirement several years ago, will be held tomorrow at 4 P. M. in the Forest Hills Cemetery Chapel.

During his long association with the musical world, Mr. Ellis managed such world figures as Ignace Paderewski, Madame Nellie Melba, Geraldine Farrar, Fritz Kreisler and Rachmaninoff. To them he was not only a banker and business adviser but also a friend and confidante.

He was born in South Boston eighty-one years ago, a son of George W. Ellis and Clarinda Adams Ellis. After his graduation from the Boston English High School, he entered the employ of the Calumet and Hecla Mining Company as an accountant. Shortly after, however, he was drafted from business by the late Major Henry L. Higginson, who ordered the young man to "go out and get an orchestra." Thus was organized one of the greatest musical organizations in the country which, during its first season, played to capacity houses in the old Music Hall where the Orpheum Theater now stands.

His efforts in behalf of the orchestra were highly commended time and time again by historians writing about the Boston Symphony Orchestra. M. A. de Wolfe Howe wrote: "Any record of the organization which omitted a full acknowledgment of what it owes to Mr. Ellis, would fall far short of completeness."

Mr. Ellis was for many years associated with Walter Damrosch in the management of opera companies. He at one time was mentioned as a candidate for the directorship of the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York.

In a telegram sent to the Transcript today by Geraldine Farrar, the following tribute was paid Mr. Ellis: "In the passing of Charles A. Ellis, it seems fitting on behalf of my family and myself that I give voice to public expression of the affection and esteem we held this friend. His services in behalf of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are too well known for extended comment. . . Since early youth I have especial reasons to signal his friendship and encouragement in my own career. His unfaltering loyalty and integrity will be attested as well by a large circle of those who will share this inadequate tribute to a rare character that enjoyed all the virtues."

Symphony Programs, Other Music Notes

Adv Mar. 14

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in more than the usual number of concerts during the ensuing week.

The program of the fourth in the series of Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall will be devoted to music by Grieg, Liszt and Brahms.

The Norwegian composer will be represented by the first "Peer Gynt" Suite, consisting of Morning Mood, Ase's Death, Anitra's Dance, and In the Hall of the Troll King. "Gretchen," from Liszt's "Faust Symphony," will also be heard and the program will close with Brahms' Fourth Symphony in E minor.

On Thursday evening in Sanders Theater, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in a program which includes, Mozart's Symphony in A major, K. No. 201; Alban Berg's Violin Concerto, and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade."

The program of the regular pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will open with Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony in G. major.

Nicolai Berezowsky will conduct the performance of his Third Symphony (from manuscript.)

Dr. Koussevitzky will devote the last half of the program to music of Sibelius: The Seventh Symphony and the tone poems, "The Swan of Tuolona" and "Finlandia."

* * *

BACH'S setting of the Passion According to St. Matthew will be performed on Good Friday, March 26, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky, conducting, for the benefit of the Pension Fund.

---

the singular trends of this extraordinary musical transition through which we are now passing. But that it will gain and keep a place for one, two, or three centuries beside other historical documents which refuse to retire to library shelves, but persist in remaining living testimonials to the genius of their composers, we do not believe."

SYMPHONY IN 4TH TUESDAY

Grieg's "Peer Gynt" First Number on List

Post Mar 17

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Not for many years, since 1909 to be act, had the first "Peer Gynt" suite of Grieg been played in Symphony Hall at anything but a Pop Concert, but yesterday afternoon it appeared as the first number on the programme prepared by Dr. Koussevitzky for the fourth concert of the current Tuesday series. Since this series is currently dedicated to music composed in the 19th century, and since Grieg loomed large in its later years, there was temporary justification for the conductor's choice.

Once at a pension fund concert of a deliberately popular nature Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra brought to virtuoso performance the "Valse Triste" of Sibelius, likewise the property of the Pops in these days, and yesterday, although their opportunity was less great, they did similar service for this music to "Peer Gynt." It was hard to realize yesterday that some of us had once taken these ingenuous pieces seriously, so naive did they seem, especially when Dr. Koussevitzky conducted them as carefully and as grandly as though he were engaged on something really important.

For the rest the concert fell to the "Gretchen" movement from Liszt's "Faust Symphony" and the Fourth Symphony of Brahms, and after the mincing music of Grieg not only Brahms but Liszt seemed "deep stuff" indeed. Since both these numbers had been played at the regular concerts of the season, it is necessary to refer to yesterday's performance of them only as a repetition of past achievements.

MUSIC

TUESDAY SYMPHONY

By Alexander Williams

B. Herald Mar. 17/37

The fourth concert in the Tuesday series by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The program was as follows:

Grieg ...."Peer Gynt" Suite No. 1
Liszt......"Gretchen," second movement from "A Faust Symphony"
Brahms....Symphony No. 4 in E minor Op. 98

There is a good deal of the common-place in Grieg's music alongside of much that is unaffectedly lovely. In this Suite Anitra's dance comes as a rather vulgar anti-climax after the dignity of the music for Aase's Death. Of course, one may argue that Ibsen's poem abounds in abrupt changes of mood and dips into many aspects of life and that consequently it would be foolish to write music that did not suit the action. But there are nowadays hundreds of people who know Grieg's music to one that has read Ibsen's remarkable poem. The Suite must be considered apart from its original purpose, and there is good music in it. A fine performance, such as yesterday's, can make it undeniably effective.

The second volume of Newman's Life of Wagner now gives us the information that the pompous choral finale of Liszt's Faust Symphony was added at the suggestion of the Princess of Sayn-Wittgenstein, whose influence on Liszt was unwholesome. There seems no reason why one should not go further, as Dr. Koussevitzky did yesterday, and give a single movement. The "Gretchen" Andante has always been considered to contain the best pages in the score—or at least those of profoundest inspiration, since the Mephistopheles movement is highly ingenious. There is in truth lovely music for Gretchen; but to us the movement is at times desperately tedious. There is so much repetition that the movement becomes cloying. On the other hand, it must be admitted that it stands well alone, as a tone poem; and one does not have to have knowledge of the themes of the first movement to appreciate it.

A splendid performance of the Brahms Fourth Symphony brought the concert to an end. This is for some Brahms' greatest symphony, an opinion to which we willingly subscribe. Possibly he has written more beautiful slow movements and more effective scherzos; but the first movement and the finale are Brahms at the summit of his powers.

The final concert of this series will be given Tuesday, April 6.

230

Berg Concerto Is Heard in New York

Post Mar 15/37

Alban Berg's Concerto was played by the Boston Symphony on Friday night. As in Boston the work has been received with marked diversity of opinion.

Writing in the Herald Tribune, Lawrence Gilman says:

"Berg's complete simplicity of approach, his entire aesthetic integrity, are above suspicion. There was never, one is convinced, an honester artist, nor one more sensitive and responsive. But something in his last years had relaxed the fiber of his musical thinking, made it flaccid and conventional and trite. The Berg of "Wozzeck," of certain moments in "Lulu"—searing, astringent, firm-textured—is not in the music of this concerto. Instead, we get for the most part the ancient cliches of atonality and "twelve-tonalism," the stale odor of spilt modernity, sweetish left-overs from the Schonbergian pastry-shop.

"Barring a few moments of deep and genuine poignancy in the closing pages of the Violin Concerto, the treasurable Berg of earlier years is absent from this score.

"The pathos of early death speaks from the few fine pages of the score, and leaves its mark upon us. But one cannot help wishing that the tenderness and the grief that lie upon the music at its best might have been kept impersonal, anonymous, with something of the grave aloofness that makes Ravel's "Pavane for a Dead Infanta," for example, so lastingly poignant."

Here is the view of Olin Downes, as set forth in the Times.

"This writer, at a first hearing, does not find himself in sympathy with the music. This is the record of a preliminary impression, not of a formed opinion about a work by a composer of indisputable gifts and extremely subtle craftsmanship. It is to be recorded that a considerable part of the audience applauded the concerto loudly and long and called soloist and conductor repeatedly back to the stage, and that persons of sensitive musical taste found the music uncommonly beautiful.

"The present commentator only concurs with this reaction where the later pages of the final movement are concerned. He finds the composer's initial ideas, and their idiom, forced and involved. No doubt, this style had become so native with Berg as to be his habitual musical speech. There need be no question of the sincerity and conviction of his expression. It may become clearer and more communicative in days in store. Just now it all seems to be essentially artificial and false in theory.

"The cadenza-like movement, which has been explained by the thought of the struggle between life and death, ends with a passage not unremindful in color and dramatic inflection of the music of dissolution in Richard Strauss's 'Death and Transfiguration.' The loud whacks of the drum, the roars of the orchestra, seem unduly realistic and out of kelter with the prevailing style of the composition. The final pages have unmistakably tenderness and intensity of feeling."

Pitts Sanborn is more drastic:

"Unfortunately for Alban Berg's concerto it made its local debut in Carnegie Hall last evening between the perfect pleasings of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and the apocalyptic opening of the 'Thus Spake Zarathustra' of Richard Strauss. In spite of the fact that it is Berg's last legacy to the world, composed shortly before his death on Dec. 23, 1935, it already fades away in dimness between the glories that flanked it on the program."

The veteran William J. Henderson takes a more judicial stand:

"The concerto is decidedly unbeautiful according to the standards which have prevailed in music for several centuries and which the progressives declare can no longer be upheld. It has sincerity in places and communicative force in these, but for the disinterested listener, not bound to adherence to a school or a style, it must surely present many minutes of insignificant melodic progressions and harmonic sequences more commendable for ingenuity than for constructive or expressional effect.

"Ernest Newman confessed to a feeling that this work would be a historic document. With this the present writer agrees. It will be quoted in future periods as a striking example of the singular trends of this extraordinary musical transition through which we are now passing. But that it will gain and keep a place for one, two, or three centuries beside other historical documents which refuse to retire to library shelves, but persist in remaining living testimonials to the genius of their composers, we do not believe."

CHARLES ELLIS IS DEAD AT 81

Recruited First Boston Symphony for Major Higginson in 1881

DIRECTED CAREERS OF MANY ARTISTS

Charles A. Ellis, 81, who recruited the first Boston Symphony orchestra in 1881 and acted as manager of that great musical organization until 1918, died yesterday at the Ritz Carlton Hotel, where he had lived since his retirement from business several years ago. Funeral services will be held at the Forest Hills chapel tomorrow at 2:30 P. M.

Although during his long career he managed many of the world's outstanding musicians, Mr. Ellis regarded as his most important achievement the carrying out of the orders of the late Major Henry L. Higginson 56 years ago to "go out and get an orchestra." He assembled 75 musicians from Boston and New York, and during its initial season the Boston Symphony orchestra played to capacity houses of 2400 persons in the old Music Hall, Winter street and Hamilton place, where the Orpheum Theater now stands.

FRIEND OF OPERA STARS

To the many stars who were under his management at various times, he was friend, teacher, adviser and even banker. Among them were Madame Nellie Melba, Ignace Paderewski, Geraldine Farrar, Fritz Kreisler and Rachmaninoff. Only last week Geraldine Farrar came to Boston to sing to him in his hotel room. He is affectionately remembered in the autobiographies of Madame Melba, Paderewski and others.

He was drafted from business by Major Higginson to take charge of the symphony orchestra of which Georg Henschel was the first director and conductor. Recalling those pioneer days in an interview several years ago, Mr. Ellis said:

"There were a number of people

(Continued on Page Eleven)

(see above Right)

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, MARCH 15, 1937

CHARLES ELLIS IS DEAD AT 81

Recruited First Boston Symphony for Major Higginson in 1881

(Continued from First Page)

who were skeptical about the success of Major Higginson's enterprise. Even some of his best friends feared, and enemies hoped, that it would not be permanently successful. There were many who declared that the love of symphonic music was affectation.

"They said that Henschel had caught the town and it was fashionable to attend the concerts, but that after a while the attendance would dwindle away. I am happy to say that the record of more than 50 years has changed this forecast."

BUSINESS TRAINING

He was born in South Boston, the son of George W. Ellis and Clarinda (Adams) Ellis. His father was president of the South Boston Savings Bank and when the son graduated from the English High School he entered the employ of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Co. as an accountant. His sound business training led to his selection as manager of the orchestra.

The part he played in the success of the infant organization has been mentioned by several historians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including M. A. de Wolfe Howe, who wrote:

"Since that time he has managed all the affairs of the orchestra—a task of great labor, including attention to contracts, to the whims and difficulties of musicians, their discipline when not in concerts and rehearsals, the business of traveling, which was great, and the details for preparation for concerts all over the country. Any record of the organization which omitted a full acknowledgment of what it owes to Mr. Ellis would fall far short of completeness."

One of his most difficult journeys was that to the San Francisco exposition in 1915. George W. Stewart, musical director of the exposition, had made arrangements with several famous European orchestras, but the outbreak of the World War made it impossible for these to fulfill their contracts. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, at that time under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, was engaged for 12 concerts to be played on 12 successive days.

"To the surprise of everyone and particularly the managers of the exposition, the concerts not only paid for themselves, but left a margin of profit," Mr. Ellis said later. "In that respect they made a better showing than any other department of the exposition."

He was for many years associated with Walter Damrosch in the management of opera companies, and at one time was mentioned as director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York.

Taken by Death

CHARLES ELLIS

Mar 15

Recent

Charles Ellis, Long Manager of Symphony

Got First Players for Boston Orchestra—Handled Famous Musicians

Funeral services for Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1881 to 1918, who died yesterday at the Ritz Carlton Hotel where he lived since his retirement several years ago, will be held tomorrow at 4 P. M. in the Forest Hills Cemetery Chapel.

During his long association with the musical world, Mr. Ellis managed such world figures as Ignace Paderewski, Madame Nellie Melba, Geraldine Farrar, Fritz Kreisler and Rachmaninoff. To them he was not only a banker and business adviser but also a friend and confidante.

He was born in South Boston eighty-one years ago, a son of George W. Ellis and Clarinda Adams Ellis. After his graduation from the Boston English High School, he entered the employ of the Calumet and Hecla Mining Company as an accountant. Shortly after, however, he was drafted from business by the late Major Henry L. Higginson, who ordered the young man to "go out and get an orchestra." Thus was organized one of the greatest musical organizations in the country which, during its first season, played to capacity houses in the old Music Hall where the Orpheum Theater now stands.

His efforts in behalf of the orchestra were highly commended time and time again by historians writing about the Boston Symphony Orchestra. M. A. de-Wolfe Howe wrote: "Any record of the organization which omitted a full acknowledgment of what it owes to Mr. Ellis, would fall far short of completeness."

Mr. Ellis was for many years associated with Walter Damrosch in the management of opera companies. He at one time was mentioned as a candidate for the directorship of the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York.

In a telegram sent to the Transcript today by Geraldine Farrar, the following tribute was paid Mr. Ellis: "In the passing of Charles A. Ellis, it seems fitting on behalf of my family and myself that I give voice to public expression of the affection and esteem we held this friend. His services in behalf of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are too well known for extended comment. . . Since early youth I have especial reasons to signal his friendship and encouragement in my own career. His unfaltering loyalty and integrity will be attested as well by a large circle of those who will share this inadequate tribute to a rare character that enjoyed all the virtues."

Symphony Programs, Other Music Notes

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in more than the usual number of concerts during the ensuing week.

Adv Mar 14

The program of the fourth in the series of Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall will be devoted to music by Grieg, Liszt and Brahms.

The Norwegian composer will be represented by the first "Peer Gynt" Suite, consisting of Morning Mood, Ase's Death, Anitra's Dance, and In the Hall of the Troll King. "Gretchen," from Liszt's "Faust Symphony," will also be heard and the program will close with Brahms' Fourth Symphony in E minor.

On Thursday evening in duct the performance of his Third Symphony (from manuscript.)

Dr. Koussevitzky will devote the last half of the program to music of Sibelius: The Seventh Symphony and the tone poems, "The Swan of Tuolona" and "Finlandia."

* * *

BACH'S setting of the Passion According to St. Matthew will be performed on Good Friday, March 26, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky, conducting, for the benefit of the Pension Fund.

SYMPHONY IN 4TH TUESDAY

Grieg's "Peer Gynt" First Number on List

Post Mar 17

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Not for many years, since 1909 to be act, had the first "Peer Gynt" suite of Grieg been played in Symphony Hall at anything but a Pop Concert, but yesterday afternoon it appeared as the first number on the programme prepared by Dr. Koussevitzky for the fourth concert of the current Tuesday series. Since this series is currently dedicated to music composed in the 19th century, and since Grieg loomed large in its later years, there was temporary justification for the conductor's choice.

Once at a pension fund concert of a deliberately popular nature Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra brought to virtuoso performance the "Valse Triste" of Sibelius, likewise the property of the Pops in these days, and yesterday, although their opportunity was less great, they did similar service for this music to "Peer Gynt." It was hard to realize yesterday that some of us had once taken these ingenuous pieces seriously, so naive did they seem, especially when Dr. Koussevitzky conducted them as carefully and as grandly as though he were engaged on something really important.

For the rest the concert fell to the "Gretchen" movement from Liszt's "Faust Symphony" and the Fourth Symphony of Brahms, and after the mincing music of Grieg not only Brahms but Liszt seemed "deep stuff" indeed. Since both these numbers had been played at the regular concerts of the season, it is necessary to refer to yesterday's performance of them only as a repetition of past achievements.

MUSIC

TUESDAY SYMPHONY

By Alexander Williams

B Herald Mar 17/37

The fourth concert in the Tuesday series by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The program was as follows:

Grieg ...."Peer Gynt" Suite No. 1
Liszt......"Gretchen," second movement from "A Faust Symphony"
Brahms....Symphony No. 4 in E minor Op. 98

There is a good deal of the common-place in Grieg's music alongside of much that is unaffectedly lovely. In this Suite Anitra's dance comes as a rather vulgar anti-climax after the dignity of the music for Aase's Death. Of course, one may argue that Ibsen's poem abounds in abrupt changes of mood and dips into many aspects of life and that consequently it would be foolish to write music that did not suit the action. But there are nowadays hundreds of people who know Grieg's music to one that has read Ibsen's remarkable poem. The Suite must be considered apart from its original purpose, and there is good music in it. A fine performance, such as yesterday's, can make it undeniably effective.

The second volume of Newman's Life of Wagner now gives us the information that the pompous choral finale of Liszt's Faust Symphony was added at the suggestion of the Princess of Sayn-Wittgenstein, whose influence on Liszt was unwholesome. There seems no reason why one should not go further, as Dr. Koussevitzky did yesterday, and give a single movement. The "Gretchen" Andante has always been considered to contain the best pages in the score—or at least those of profoundest inspiration, since the Mephistopheles movement is highly ingenious. There is in truth lovely music for Gretchen; but to us the movement is at times desperately tedious. There is so much repetition that the movement becomes cloying. On the other hand, it must be admitted that it stands well alone, as a tone poem; and one does not have to have knowledge of the themes of the first movement to appreciate it.

A splendid performance of the Brahms Fourth Symphony brought the concert to an end. This is for some Brahms' greatest symphony, an opinion to which we willingly subscribe. Possibly he has written more beautiful slow movements and more effective scherzos; but the first movement and the finale are Brahms at the summit of his powers.

The final concert of this series will be given Tuesday, April 6.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra

B. Globe
Mar 17/37

What magic there is in a performance, by a first-rank orchestra, of a composition hackneyed by frequent mediocre playings! The "Peer Gynt" Suite, No. 1, by Edvard Grieg, has long suffered from overwork on popular programs until its charm has become tarnished. But it does contain a good deal of good melody, as Dr. Koussevitzky and the gentlemen of the Boston Symphony proved at the fourth Tuesday concert yesterday afternoon.

It must be years since this suite was played by this orchestra; the last occasion upon a "regular" program was away back in 1909—28 years ago! Grieg's talent was essentially that of a miniaturist, and his gifts were more for flowing melody and for a refined use of conventional chromatic harmony than for innovations of any sort. Grieg probably never wrote anything which will survive as an example of what once was novel. But he did create a bulk of music in smaller forms, which will continue to please by their gracious melodies. The "Peer Cynt" suites are among them.

The remainder of the program consisted of the "Gretchen" movement from the "Faust" Symphony of Liszt, and Brahms' Fourth Symphony. The slow movement from what is perhaps Liszt's greatest symphonic conception, has long been recognized as truly great music. But does it make the effect which it should when played by itself? After all, Liszt had definite reason to call the movements "three character pictures." The sweet, gentle Gretchen stands out more vividly if contrasted, as when the entire work is played, with ardent Faust and mocking Mephistopheles.

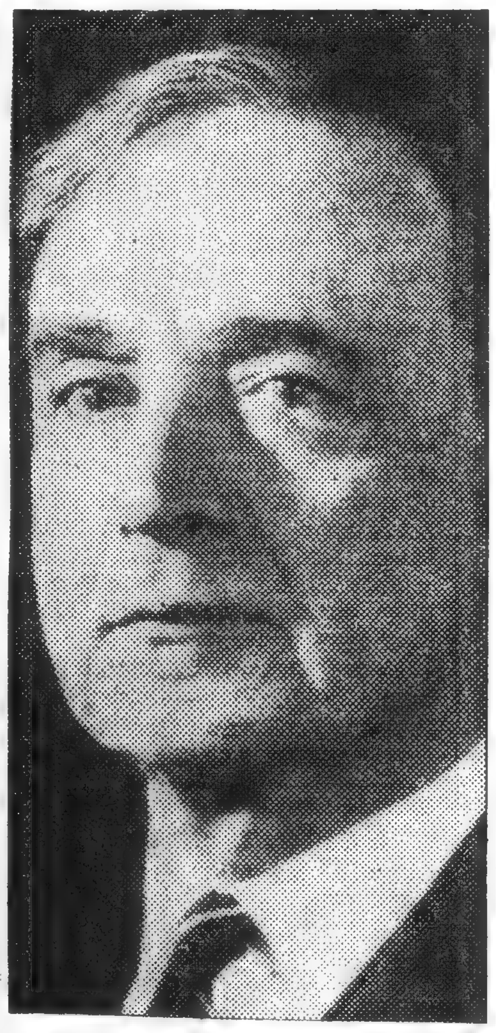
The orchestra was in excellent form throughout the afternoon, save for a little coarseness in Brahms' Symphony. The next concert of this series will come April 6.

C. W. D.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAR 11 1937

Conductor



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
Boston Symphony Orchestra

Roulades and Cadenzas

Continued from pages 88-146

they are the same group of the faithful who ten years ago were genuflecting before Brahms and telling us that his music was "better than it sounds." Now you hear them reciting the Sibelius litany in every entr'acte:

He is cold.
He is hard.
He is austere.
He is plain.
He is angular.
He is spare.
He is impersonal.
He is ascetic.
He is forbidding.
He is Finnish.

Then they talk for hours of rugged mountain crags, pine forests, barren wastelands, ghosts of Northern spirits. All these stock clichés obscure the real Sibelius rather than explain him. His symphonies are not to be described by catch phrases nor understood by pondering over word-pictures. Like anything of real value, they yield themselves only to him who knows them through and through.

* * *

To understand them well, it is necessary to hear them often and to get over that feeling of unusualness with which they first fall on the ears. As Ernest Newman has rightly observed: "Once this sense of strangeness has been overcome, the hold of Sibelius upon the average intelligent person increases in proportion as the works become known to him. It is only the first step that costs."

Naturally, this first step should be taken under the proper guidance; that is, performances which do justice to the works should be heard. This is not as easy as it would appear. First of all, many conductors are not in sympathy with Sibelius. They find it more advantageous to perform works with which they can better display their own personalities. Therefore, his greater symphonies are seldom played. Second, interpreters who sincerely try to understand his scores often fail because they approach them through music already familiar to them. This is fatal, as Sibelius is original, unique, and utterly unlike any other musician who ever lived before him. He is not derivative and, moreover, the Sibelius symphonies do not play themselves. Often they cannot be played even by excellent orchestras, quite capable of getting off Beethoven, Brahms, or Wagner. Without seeming specially difficult when they are well performed, they require long and careful preparation and an uncommon interpretive insight.

The best Sibelius performances in our country today are given by Serge Koussevitzky, who has remarkable ~~intuitive~~ gifts and who learned the scores from men in his orchestra who had formerly played in the Helsinki Symphony, often under the composer himself. Not for every symphony, but for most, Koussevitzky's readings may be taken as authoritative.

For the reason that they play Sibelius as if he were Brahms or Mahler, German conductors cannot touch his greater pages. Stokowski is inclined to make them theatrical and to overstate the composer's individual patterns. In his recording of the Fourth Symphony, Stokowski distorts certain passages beyond all recognition, retarding the tempi, laying on heavy orchestral coloring, and putting in expression marks where none exist. In the Scherzo, he fails to observe that the tempo is plainly marked allegro molto vivace; his choice of a slower time completely changes the meaning. In the final movement he introduces large bells, which have a place in Tosca or Tchaikovsky, but not in Sibelius. Not only is the passage sounded an octave lower than it is written in the score, but the sensational climax here produces an effect extraneous to the whole structure of the composition. The printed page contains only the word glocken, but Sibelius never used such bells when he himself conducted the symphony.

Robert Kajanus, Sibelius' fellow-countryman, who did the most to make his music known in early years and who conducted many recordings for the Sibelius Society, knew the correct tempi and had the right feeling for the music, as he studied it with Sibelius. But, unfortunately, he was not a conductor of the first rank and when he made these records he was a sick man. Neither he nor Sibelius was satisfied with them.

* * *

In view of the loud shouting, surprisingly little has been done to secure adequate performances of the great Sibelius masterpieces. It is no wonder that the old man himself, sitting alone amidst his clump of trees north of Helsinki, wonders if his much heralded success in America means anything, if there really are many here who understand and love his music.

Unfortunately, only a very few can sit down with his scores and be stimulated to even greater enjoyment by the black dots on the music paper than by ordinary performances. Also, for them, this has been expensive and not easy. Only in the last year or two have miniature partiturs of his best symphonies been available.

To that extent that listeners do understand and appreciate his symphonies, it does them credit. For no other music written in our time has so much to say or says it so well. Sibelius himself stated the case clearly when he said to his German music publisher that whereas other modern composers were engaged in manufacturing cocktails, he offered the public pure cold water.

As time goes on, his music will be more thoroughly understood and more genuinely appreciated. Exactly how important will be

Continued on page 150

ESQUIRE
CHICAGO, ILL.

MAR - 1937

Roulades a

Appraising th who belongs n
but to all pla

by CARLE

Throughout Scandinavia and the English-speaking world, the discerning toast the name of Jean Sibelius. They acclaim him as one of their own, a Viking among men, a free spirit uncontaminated by Levantine prophets. In his music, they find an open door to their ancestral memory. Through it they gain a glimpse of that lost world of what-might-have-been, had the upsweep of Mediterranean cultures been turned back . . . had their pagan forefathers been allowed to go their own way and express their own thoughts in art. For Sibelius' music harks back to the Edda, the sagas, and the runes. It is a conversation of Odin and Thor in our time. And, with it, Sibelius has become the musical Redeemer of an ancient faith, the Nordic word made sound.

Among continentals, this is not understood. For them, Sibelius speaks a strange language. His symphonies say little. The Latin, the Slav, and the Teuton long ago slammed shut the doors to their ears, ex-

they couldn't be h

So it has rem
cousins and ourse
for the lonely Fin
done nobly.

The English st
ready thirty yea
making trips to L
down the Island
and made over agreeing authori
Ernest Newman a
resources to give had enough spa
make him the e
Gramophone Con
ness, created a Si
records on subsc

We got hold
before the outbre
ship reporters di landed, convince musical Messiah

PLAIN DEALER

FEB 28 1937

A Review of Suggested Music for the Home

BY STEWART MATTER

STRAVINSKY — Concerto for violin; Samuel Dushkin with the Lamoreaux Orchestra, directed by the composer. Brunswick.

The first in the new classical series of the Brunswick Co. to reach our hands is the widely discussed violin concerto of Igor Stravinsky. Of particular interest is the fact that it was programmed this past week by the Cleveland Orchestra with Dushkin and Stravinsky in the same roles.

Mr. Dushkin does a marvelous performance of the work; the fact that he and Stravinsky for so long have been such intimate friends assures us of an authentic reading. The recording standard is of the best, with the somewhat open hall effect which lends such a feeling of naturalness; the tone fidelity and balance are excellent.

TSCHAIKOWSKY—Symphony No. 4 in F minor, opus 36, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Victor set 327.

TSCHAIKOWSKY—Symphony No. 6 in B minor, opus 74 (Pathetique); the Paris Conservatory Orchestra, direction of Philippe Gaubert. Columbia set 277.

The sudden revival of interest in the work of Tschaikowski has prompted two of the companies to bring out major works at the same time. The new biography, "Beloved Friend," by Bowen and von Meck, the performance of unusual compositions of the Russian master in New York, the talk created by the praise Stravinsky heaped on Tschaikowsky in his recent autobiography, have all been instrumental in bringing back to our attention a man who was considered morbid and unfit for the intelligent listener.

I cannot ask for a finer conception of the magnificent "Fourth" than is this by Koussevitzky; heroic, grandiose, but always within control, each bit carefully drawn, the phrasing superb. I find fault only with the balance in spots, for the woodwinds do not seem to balance with the strings and the brasses. It certainly is a question of microphone placement, for the orchestra was balanced in the recent recordings they made of "Zarathustra," Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony" and Schubert's "Unfinished."

The string section of this organization is the finest in the country and one hearing of the pizzacato section in the third movement will bring you to your feet. The waltz from the String Serenade is used to fill out the final side; this is the last word in string recording. A wide range recording, so do not turn up the volume and go far from your set.

In the case of the "Pathetique", conductors too often overstress the emotional element; it is enough to play the notes, and what Tschaikowsky has written gives emotion a-plenty. Gaubert is to be applauded for the restraint he uses, when a Gallic nature would seem to call so loudly for "interpretation." Unfortunately, the Paris Orchestra does not stack up with the other major orchestras of the world; the brasses are thin and the woodwinds deplorably so. It happens that the solo clarinet is unusually fine, but, I cannot hear the bass clarinet. And too, the winds are off pitch in a number of places. The lack of body of tone detracts from the effectiveness of the piece, but then it is better than the other existing versions, so we must accept it for the present.

PURCELL—Dido and Aeneas: Roy Henderson, Nancy Evans and famous soloists, Charles Kennedy Scott's A Capella Singers, the Boyd Neel String Orchestra under the direction of Clarence Raybould. Decca records 25573-79.

Repressed from English Decca, this admirable set of records is now within the reach of everyone. An excellent recording of England's first and still the greatest opera, by outstanding British artists. The score is followed literally, for only a small string orchestra is used, the chorus is a capella, and a harpsichord of the period retains the flavor. This is the first time we have had any decent representation of the opera, and every educational institution should grasp the opportunity to add this set to its library.

COLUMBUS, GA.
LEDGER

MAR 12 1937

✓ "TANGLEWOOD," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote the Tanglewood Tales, located in the Berkshire mountains is to be the permanent home of the Boston Symphony. This estate of over 200 acres, known as the Dixey estate, is the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks (nee Dixey) and her aunt, Miss Mary Tappan. A building to cost around $25,000 is to be erected to seat 5,000 and the gardens of the estate, surrounded by ancient hemlock hedges, will provide natural promenades during intermissions. Dr. Serge Konssevitzsky is the conductor of the Boston Symphony.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Bo. Globe
Mar. 17/37

What magic there is in a performance, by a first-rank orchestra, of a composition hackneyed by frequent mediocre playings! The "Peer Gynt" Suite, No. 1, by Edvard Grieg, has long suffered from overwork on popular programs until its charm has become tarnished. But it does contain a good deal of good melody, as Dr Koussevitzky and the gentlemen of the Boston Symphony proved at the fourth Tuesday concert yesterday afternoon.

It must be years since this suite was played by this orchestra; the last [illegible] upon a "regular" program [illegible] back in 1909—28 years ago! Grieg's talent was essentially that of a miniaturist, and his gifts were more for flowing melody and for a refined use of conventional chromatic harmony than for innovations of any sort. Grieg probably never wrote anything which will survive as an example of what once was novel. But he did create a bulk of music in smaller forms, which will continue to please by their gracious melodies. The "Peer Gynt" suites are among them.

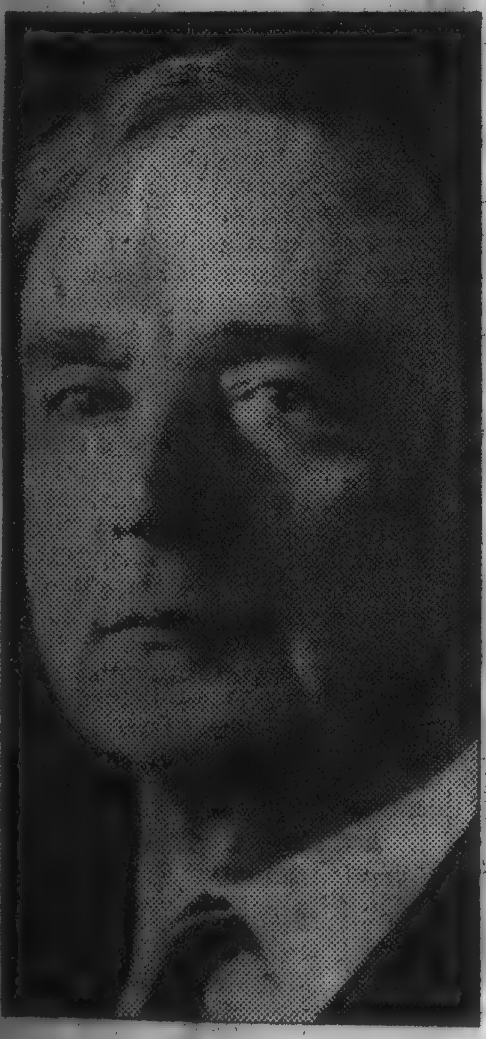
The remainder of the program consisted of the "Gretchen" movement from the "Faust" Symphony of Liszt, and Brahms' Fourth Symphony. The slow movement from what is perhaps Liszt's greatest symphonic conception, has long been recognized as truly great music. But does it make the effect which it should when played by itself? After all, Liszt had definite reason to call the movements "three character pictures." The sweet, gentle Gretchen stands out more vividly if contrasted, as when the entire work is played, with ardent Faust and mocking Mephistopheles.

The orchestra was in excellent form throughout the afternoon, save for a little coarseness in Brahms' Symphony. The next concert of this series will come April 6.

C. W. D.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MAR 1 1 1937

Conductor



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
Boston Symphony Orchestra

231

ESQUIRE

Roulades and Cadenzas

Continued from pages 88-146

they are the same group of the faithful who ten years ago were genuflecting before Brahms and telling us that his music was "better than it sounds." Now you hear them reciting the Sibelius litany in every entr'acte:

He is cold.
He is hard.
He is austere.
He is plain.
He is angular.
He is spare.
He is impersonal.
He is ascetic.
He is forbidding.
He is Finnish.

Then they talk for hours of rugged mountain crags, pine forests, barren wastelands, ghosts of Northern spirits. All these stock clichés obscure the real Sibelius rather than explain him. His symphonies are not to be described by catch phrases nor understood by pondering over word-pictures. Like anything of real value, they yield themselves only to him who knows them through and through.

* * *

To understand them well, it is necessary to hear them often and to get over that feeling of unusualness with which they first fall on the ears. As Ernest Newman has rightly observed: "Once this sense of strangeness has been overcome, the hold of Sibelius upon the average intelligent person increases in proportion as the works become known to him. It is only the first step that costs."

Naturally, this first step should be taken under the proper guidance; that is, performances which do justice to the works should be heard. This is not as easy as it would appear. First of all, many conductors are not in sympathy with Sibelius. They find it more advantageous to perform works with which they can better display their own personalities. Therefore, his greater symphonies are seldom played. Second, interpreters who sincerely try to understand his scores often fail because they approach them through music already familiar to them. This is fatal, as Sibelius is original, unique, and utterly unlike any other musician who ever lived before him. He is not derivative and, moreover, the Sibelius symphonies do not play themselves. Often they cannot be played even by excellent orchestras, quite capable of getting off Beethoven, Brahms, or Wagner. Without seeming specially difficult when they are well performed, they require long and careful preparation and an uncommon interpretive insight.

The best Sibelius performances in our country today are given by Serge Koussevitzky, who has remarkable intuitive gifts and who learned the scores from men in his orchestra who had formerly played in the Helsinki Symphony, often under the composer himself. Not for every symphony, but for most, Koussevitzky's readings may be taken as authoritative.

For the reason that they play Sibelius as if he were Brahms or Mahler, German conductors cannot touch his greater pages. Stokowski is inclined to make them theatrical and to overstate the composer's individual patterns. In his recording of the Fourth Symphony, Stokowski distorts certain passages beyond all recognition, retarding the tempi, laying on heavy orchestral coloring, and putting in expression marks where none exist. In the Scherzo, he fails to observe that the tempo is plainly marked allegro molto vivace; his choice of a slower time completely changes the meaning. In the final movement he introduces large bells, which have a place in Tosca or Tchaikovsky, but not in Sibelius. Not only is the passage sounded an octave lower than it is written in the score, but the sensational climax here produces an effect extraneous to the whole structure of the composition. The printed page contains only the word glocken, but Sibelius never used such bells when he himself conducted the symphony.

Robert Kajanus, Sibelius' fellow-countryman, who did the most to make his music known in early years and who conducted many recordings for the Sibelius Society, knew the correct tempi and had the right feeling for the music, as he studied it with Sibelius. But, unfortunately, he was not a conductor of the first rank and when he made these records he was a sick man. Neither he nor Sibelius was satisfied with them.

* * *

In view of the loud shouting, surprisingly little has been done to secure adequate performances of the great Sibelius masterpieces. It is no wonder that the old man himself, sitting alone amidst his clump of trees north of Helsinki, wonders if his much heralded success in America means anything, if there really are many here who understand and love his music.

Unfortunately, only a very few can sit down with his scores and be stimulated to even greater enjoyment by the black dots on the music paper than by ordinary performances. Also, for them, this has been expensive and not easy. Only in the last year or two have miniature partiturs of his best symphonies been available.

To that extent that listeners do understand and appreciate his symphonies, it does them credit. For no other music written in our time has so much to say or says it so well. Sibelius himself stated the case clearly when he said to his German music publisher that whereas other modern composers were engaged in manufacturing cocktails, he offered the public pure cold water.

As time goes on, his music will be more thoroughly understood and more genuinely appreciated. Exactly how important will be

Continued on page 150

11x

ESQUIRE
CHICAGO, ILL.
MAR - 1937

Roulades a

Appraising the who belongs n
but to all pla

by CARLE

THROUGHOUT Scandinavia and the English-speaking world, the discerning toast the name of Jean Sibelius. They acclaim him as one of their own, a Viking among men, a free spirit uncontaminated by Levantine prophets. In his music, they find an open door to their ancestral memory. Through it they gain a glimpse of that lost world of what-might-have-been, had the upsweep of Mediterranean cultures been turned back . . . had their pagan forefathers been allowed to go their own way and express their own thoughts in art. For Sibelius' music harks back to the Edda, the sagas, and the runes. It is a conversation of Odin and Thor in our time. And, with it, Sibelius has become the musical Redeemer of an ancient faith, the Nordic word made sound.

Among continentals, this is not understood. For them, Sibelius speaks a strange language. His symphonies say little. The Latin, the Slav, and the Teuton long ago slammed shut the doors to their ears, ex-

they couldn't be b

So it has rem
cousins and ourse
for the lonely Fin
done nobly.

The English st
ready thirty yea
making trips to L
down the Island
and made over
agreeing authori
Ernest Newman a
resources to give
had enough spa
make him the e
Gramophone Con
ness, created a Si
records on subsc

We got hold
before the outbre
ship reporters di
landed, convince musical Messiah

PLAIN DEALER
FEB 28 1937

A Review of Suggested Music for the Home

BY STEWART MATTER

STRAVINSKY — Concerto for violin; Samuel Dushkin with the Lamoreaux Orchestra, directed by the composer. Brunswick.

The first in the new classical series of the Brunswick Co. to reach our hands is the widely discussed violin concerto of Igor Stravinsky. Of particular interest is the fact that it was programmed this past week by the Cleveland Orchestra with Dushkin and Stravinsky in the same roles.

Mr. Dushkin does a marvelous performance of the work; the fact that he and Stravinsky for so long have been such intimate friends assures us of an authentic reading. The recording standard is of the best, with the somewhat open hall effect which lends such a feeling of naturalness; the tone fidelity and balance are excellent.

TSCHAIKOWSKY—Symphony No. 4 in F minor, opus 36; the Boston Symphony Orchestra, direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Victor set 327.

TSCHAIKOWSKY—Symphony No. 6 in B minor, opus 74 (Pathetique); the Paris Conservatory Orchestra, direction of Philippe Gaubert. Columbia set 277.

The sudden revival of interest in the work of Tschaikowski has prompted two of the companies to bring out major works at the same time. The new biography, "Beloved Friend," by Bowen and von Meck, the performance of unusual compositions of the Russian master in New York, the talk created by the praise Stravinsky heaped on Tschaikowsky in his recent autobiography, have all been instrumental in bringing back to our attention a man who was considered morbid and unfit for the intelligent listener.

I cannot ask for a finer conception of the magnificent "Fourth" than is this by Koussevitzky; heroic, grandiose, but always within control, each bit carefully drawn, the phrasing superb. I find fault only with the balance in spots, for the woodwinds do not seem to balance with the strings and the brasses. It certainly is a question of microphone placement, for the orchestra was balanced in the recent recordings they made of "Zarathustra," Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony" and Schubert's "Unfinished."

The string section of this organization is the finest in the country and one hearing of the pizzacato section in the third movement will bring you to your feet. The waltz from the String Serenade is used to fill out the final side; this is the last word in string recording. A wide range recording, so do not turn up the volume and go far from your set.

In the case of the "Pathetique" conductors too often overstress the emotional element; it is enough to play the notes, and what Tschaikowsky has written gives emotion a-plenty. Gaubert is to be applauded for the restraint he uses, when a Gallic nature would seem to call so loudly for "interpretation." Unfortunately, the Paris Orchestra does not stack up with the other major orchestras of the world; the brasses are thin and the woodwinds deplorably so. It happens that the solo clarinet is unusually fine, but, I cannot hear the bass clarinet. And too, the winds are off pitch in a number of places. The lack of body of tone detracts from the effectiveness of the piece, but then it is better than the other existing versions, so we must accept it for the present.

PURCELL—Dido and Aeneas; Roy Henderson, Nancy Evans and famous soloists, Charles Kennedy Scott's A Capella Singers, the Boyd Neel String Orchestra under the direction of Clarence Raybould, Decca records 25573-79.

Repressed from English Decca, this admirable set of records is now within the reach of everyone. An excellent recording of England's first and still the greatest opera, by outstanding British artists. The score is followed literally, for only a small string orchestra is used, the chorus is a capella, and a harpsichord of the period retains the flavor. This is the first time we have had any decent representation of the opera, and every educational institution should grasp the opportunity to add this set to its library.

COLUMBUS, GA.
LEDGER
MAR 1 2 1937

"TANGLEWOOD," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote the Tanglewood Tales, located in the Berkshire mountains is to be the permanent home of the Boston Symphony. This estate of over 200 acres, known as the Dixey estate, is the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks (nee Dixey) and her aunt, Miss Mary Tappan. A building to cost around $25,000 is to be erected to seat 5,000 and the gardens of the estate, surrounded by ancient hemlock hedges, will provide natural promenades during intermissions. Dr. Serge Konssevitzky is the conductor of the Boston Symphony.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra

Mar 17/37

What magic there is in a performance, by a first-rank orchestra, of a composition hackneyed by frequent mediocre playings! The "Peer Gynt" Suite, No. 1, by Edvard Grieg, has long suffered from overwork on popular programs until its charm has become tarnished. But it does contain a good deal of good melody, as Dr. Koussevitzky and the gentlemen of the Boston Symphony proved at the fourth Tuesday concert yesterday afternoon.

It must be years since this suite was played by this orchestra; the last [illegible] upon a "regular" program [illegible] back in 190[illegible]—28 years ago! Grieg's talent was essentially that of a miniaturist, and his gifts were more for flowing melody and for a refined use of conventional chromatic harmony than for innovations of any sort. Grieg probably never wrote anything which will survive as an example of what once was novel. But he did create a bulk of music in smaller forms, which will continue to please by their gracious melodies. The "Peer Gynt" suites are among them.

The remainder of the program consisted of the "Gretchen" movement from the "Faust" Symphony of Liszt, and Brahms' Fourth Symphony. The slow movement from what is perhaps Liszt's greatest symphonic conception, has long been recognized as truly great music. But does it make the effect which it should when played by itself? After all, Liszt had definite reason to call the movements "three character pictures." The sweet, gentle Gretchen stands out more vividly if contrasted, as when the entire work is played, with ardent Faust and mocking Mephistopheles.

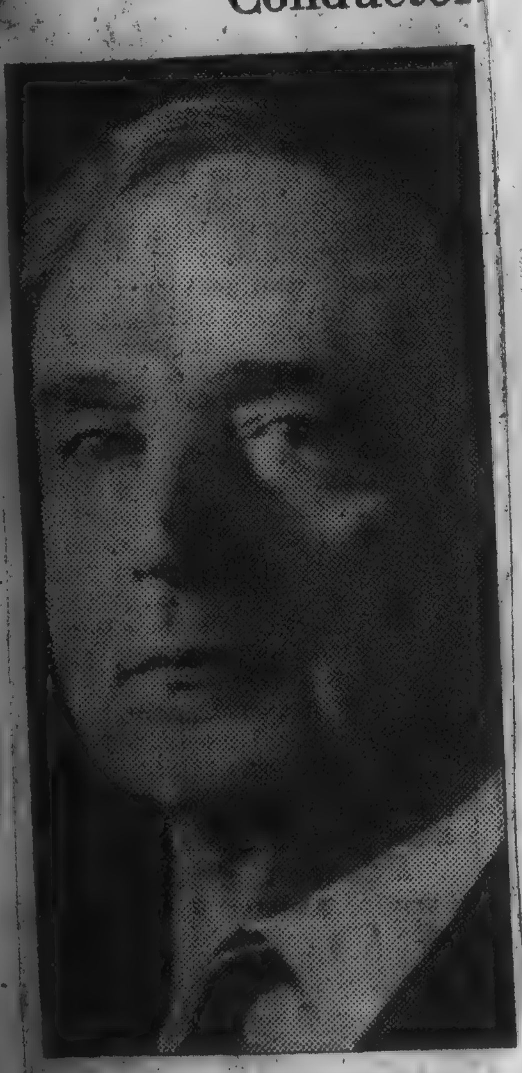
The orchestra was in excellent form throughout the afternoon, save for a little coarseness in Brahms' Symphony. The next concert of this series will come April 6.

C. W. D.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAR 1 1 1937

Conductor



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
Boston Symphony Orchestra

231

Roulades and Cadenzas

Continued from pages 88-146

they are the same group of the faithful who ten years ago were genuflecting before Brahms and telling us that his music was "better than it sounds." Now you hear them reciting the Sibelius litany in every entr'acte:

He is cold.
He is hard.
He is austere.
He is plain.
He is angular.
He is spare.
He is impersonal.
He is ascetic.
He is forbidding.
He is Finnish.

Then they talk for hours of rugged mountain crags, pine forests, barren wastelands, ghosts of Northern spirits. All these stock clichés obscure the real Sibelius rather than explain him. His symphonies are not to be described by catch phrases nor understood by pondering over word-pictures. Like anything of real value, they yield themselves only to him who knows them through and through.

* * *

To understand them well, it is necessary to hear them often and to get over that feeling of unusualness with which they first fall on the ears. As Ernest Newman has rightly observed: "Once this sense of strangeness has been overcome, the hold of Sibelius upon the average intelligent person increases in proportion as the works become known to him. It is only the first step that costs."

Naturally, this first step should be taken under the proper guidance; that is, performances which do justice to the works should be heard. This is not as easy as it would appear. First of all, many conductors are not in sympathy with Sibelius. They find it more advantageous to perform works with which they can better display their own personalities. Therefore, his greater symphonies are seldom played. Second, interpreters who sincerely try to understand his scores often fail because they approach them through music already familiar to them. This is fatal, as Sibelius is original, unique, and utterly unlike any other musician who ever lived before him. He is not derivative and, moreover, the Sibelius symphonies do not play themselves. Often they cannot be played even by excellent orchestras, quite capable of getting off Beethoven, Brahms, or Wagner. Without seeming specially difficult when they are well performed, they require long and careful preparation and an uncommon interpretive insight.

The best Sibelius performances in our country today are given by Serge Koussevitzky, who has remarkable ~~intuitive~~ gifts and who learned the scores from men in his orchestra who had formerly played in the Helsinki Symphony, often under the composer himself. Not for every symphony, but for most, Koussevitzky's readings may be taken as authoritative.

For the reason that they play Sibelius as if he were Brahms or Mahler, German conductors cannot touch his greater pages. Stokowski is inclined to make them theatrical and to overstate the composer's individual patterns. In his recording of the Fourth Symphony, Stokowski distorts certain passages beyond all recognition, retarding the tempi, laying on heavy orchestral coloring, and putting in expression marks where none exist. In the Scherzo, he fails to observe that the tempo is plainly marked allegro molto vivace; his choice of a slower time completely changes the meaning. In the final movement he introduces large bells, which have a place in Tosca or Tchaikovsky, but not in Sibelius. Not only is the passage sounded an octave lower than it is written in the score, but the sensational climax here produces an effect extraneous to the whole structure of the composition. The printed page contains only the word glocken, but Sibelius never used such bells when he himself conducted the symphony.

Robert Kajanus, Sibelius' fellow-countryman, who did the most to make his music known in early years and who conducted many recordings for the Sibelius Society, knew the correct tempi and had the right feeling for the music, as he studied it with Sibelius. But, unfortunately, he was not a conductor of the first rank and when he made these records he was a sick man. Neither he nor Sibelius was satisfied with them.

* * *

In view of the loud shouting, surprisingly little has been done to secure adequate performances of the great Sibelius masterpieces. It is no wonder that the old man himself, sitting alone amidst his clump of trees north of Helsinki, wonders if his much heralded success in America means anything, if there really are many here who understand and love his music.

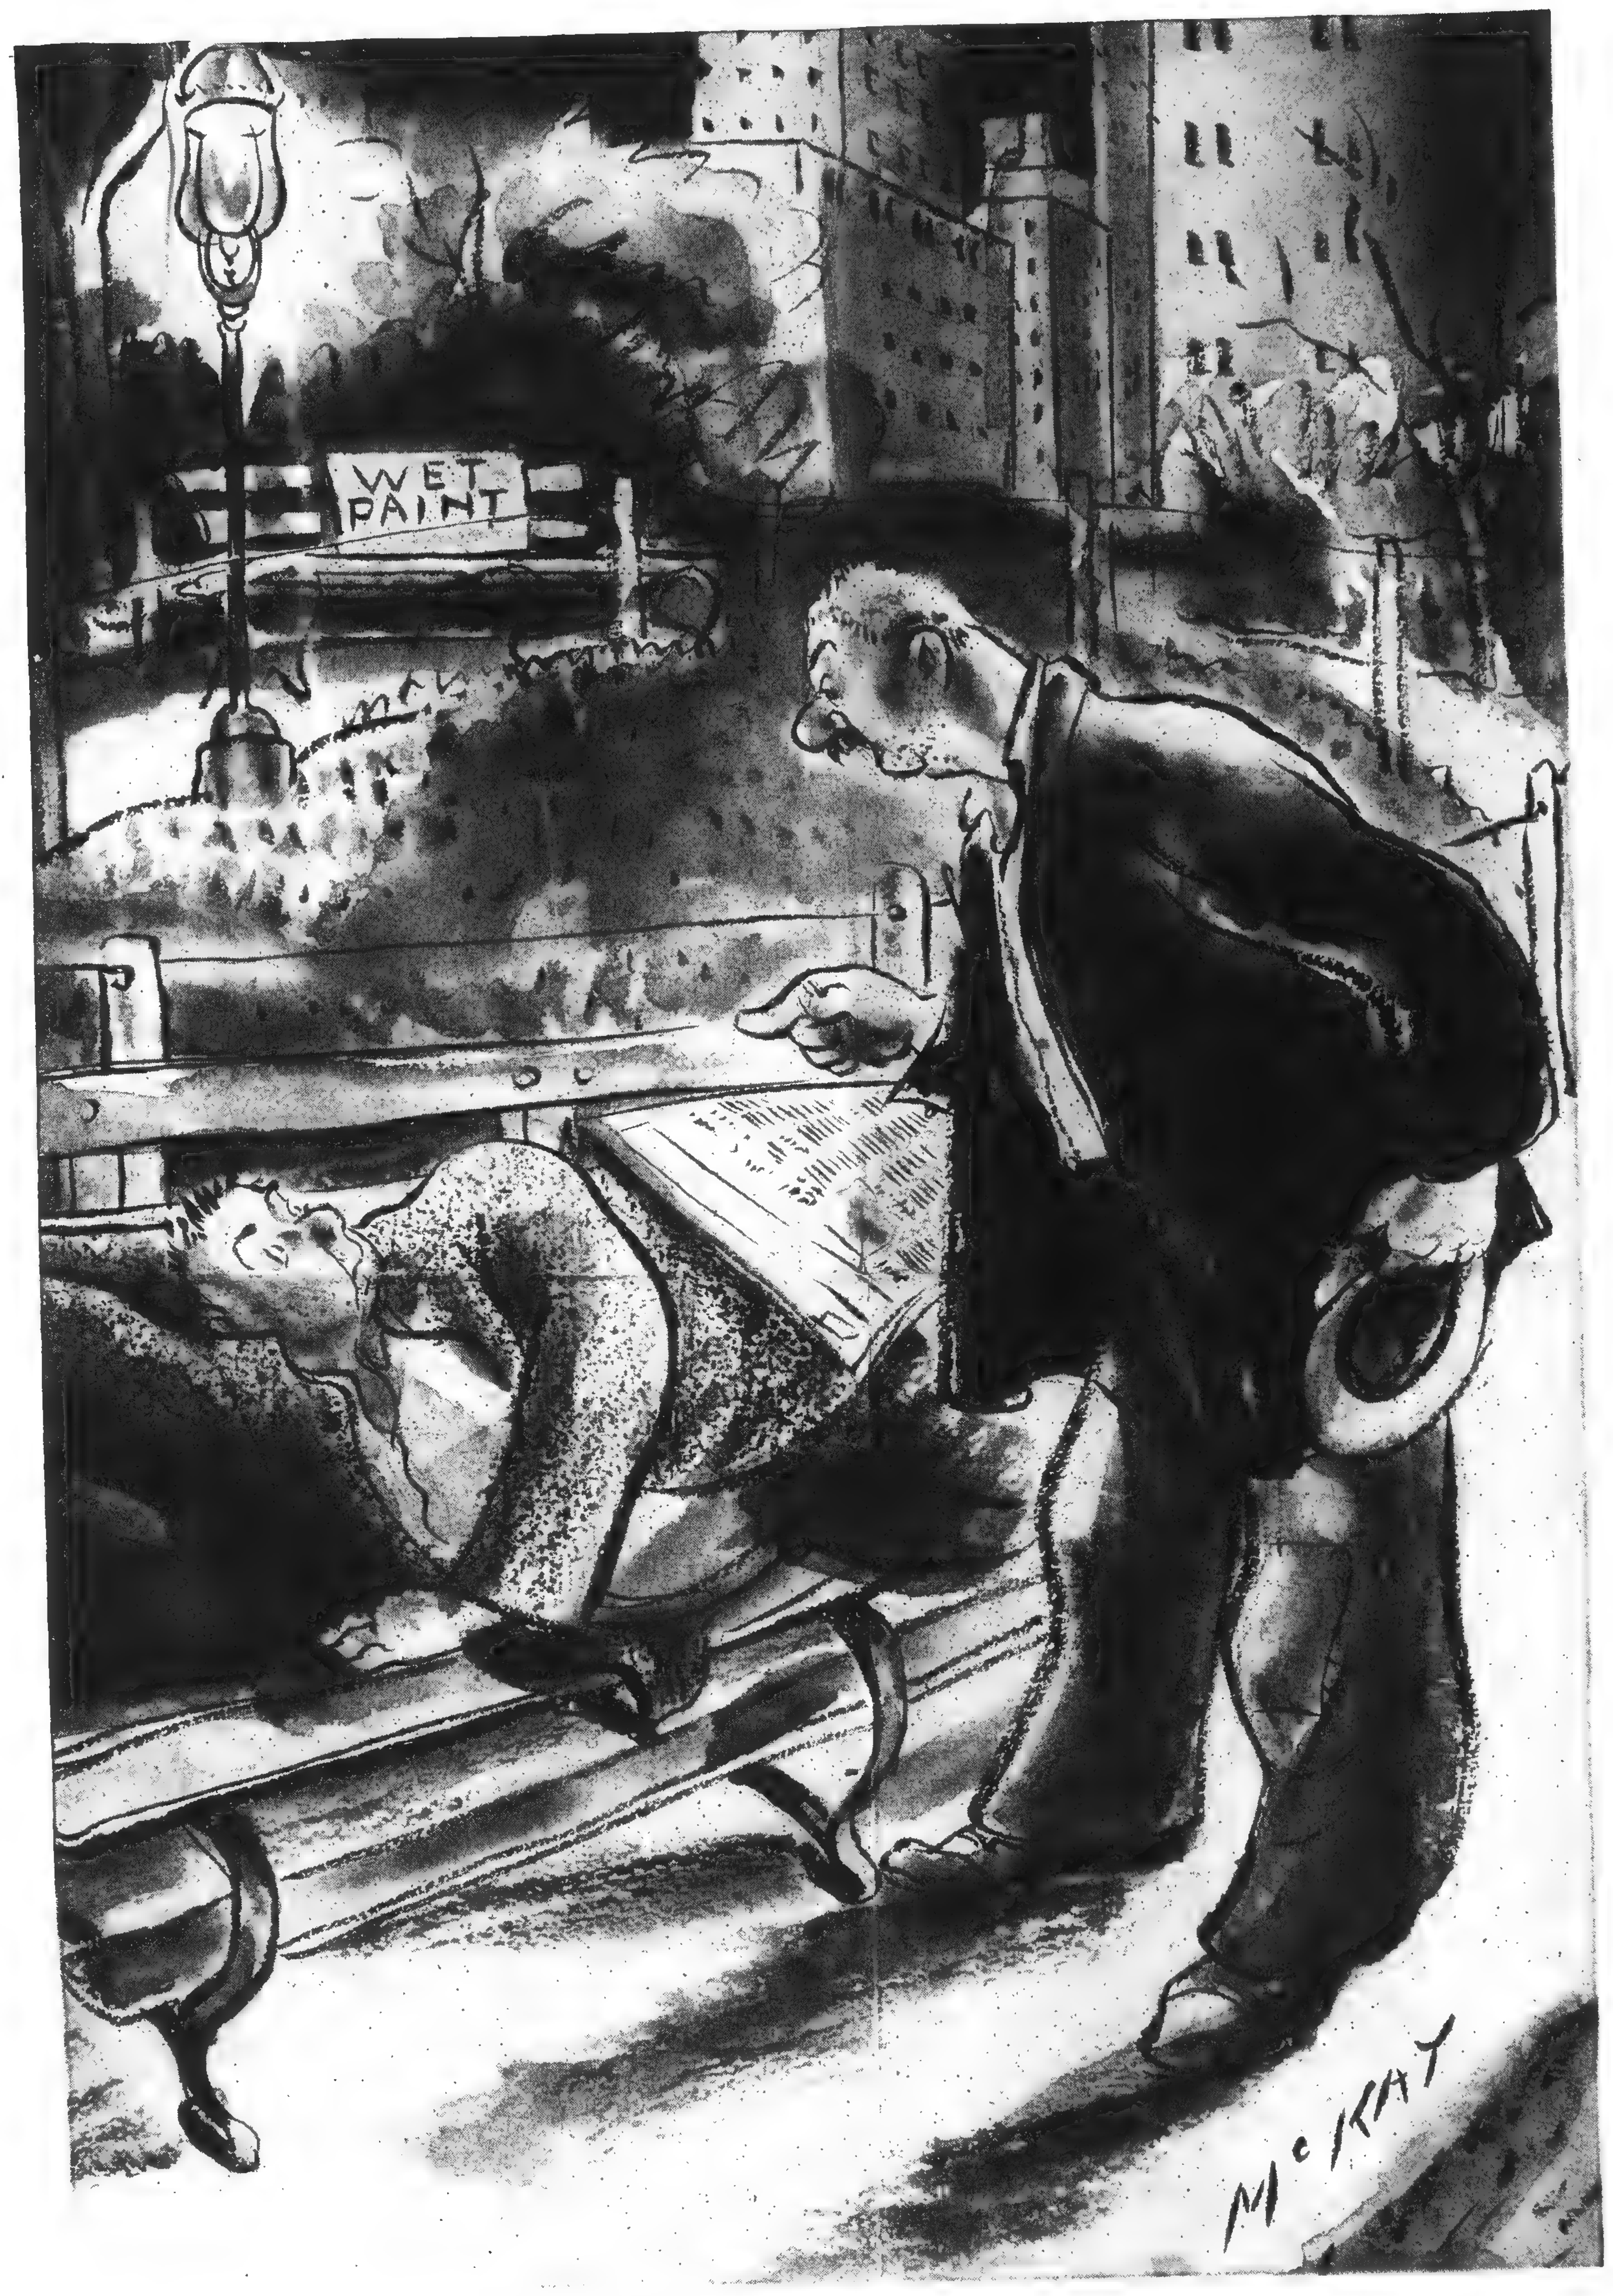
Unfortunately, only a very few can sit down with his scores and be stimulated to even greater enjoyment by the black dots on the music paper than by ordinary performances. Also, for them, this has been expensive and not easy. Only in the last year or two have miniature partiturs of his best symphonies been available.

To that extent that listeners do understand and appreciate his symphonies, it does them credit. For no other music written in our time has so much to say or says it so well. Sibelius himself stated the case clearly when he said to his German music publisher that whereas other modern composers were engaged in manufacturing cocktails, he offered the publi pure cold water.

As time goes on, his music wil be more thoroughly understoo and more genuinely appreciated Exactly how important will b

Continued on page 15

11x



"Could you put me up for tonight? I'm having my place renovated" placement, for the orchestra was balanced in the recent recordings they made of "Zarathustra," Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony" and Schubert's "Unfinished."

---

The string section of this organization is the finest in the country and one hearing of the pizzacato section in the third movement will bring you to your feet. The waltz from the String Serenade is used to fill out the final side; this is the last word in string recording. A wide range recording, so do not turn up the volume and go far from your set.

Berkshire mountains is to be the permanent home of the Boston Symphony. This estate of over 200 acres, known as the Dixey estate, is the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks (nee Dixey) and her aunt, Miss Mary Tappan. A building to cost around $25,000 is to be erected to seat 5,000 and the gardens of the estate, surrounded by ancient hemlock hedges, will provide natural promenades during intermissions. Dr. Serge Konssevitzky is the conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Roulades and Caden

Appraising the genius of Sibelius who belongs not only to Finland but to all places and all times

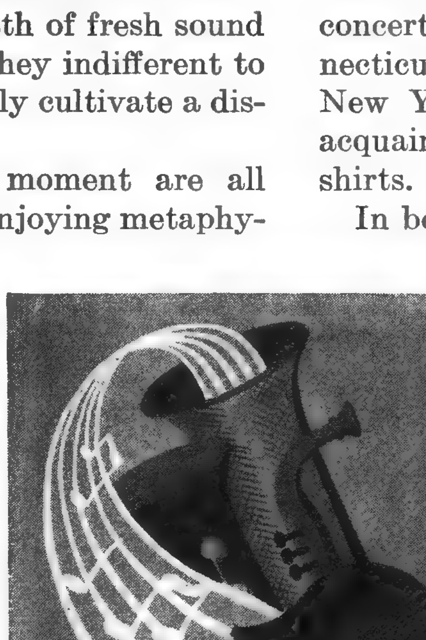
by CARLETON SMITH

▪ MUSIC ▪

THROUGHOUT Scandinavia and the English-speaking world, the discerning toast the name of Jean Sibelius. They acclaim him as one of their own, a Viking among men, a free spirit uncontaminated by Levantine prophets. In his music, they find an open door to their ancestral memory. Through it they gain a glimpse of that lost world of what-might-have-been, had the upsweep of Mediterranean cultures been turned back . . . had their pagan forefathers been allowed to go their own way and express their own thoughts in art. For Sibelius' music harks back to the Edda, the sagas, and the runes. It is a conversation of Odin and Thor in our time. And, with it, Sibelius has become the musical Redeemer of an ancient faith, the Nordic word made sound.

Among continentals, this is not understood. For them, Sibelius speaks a strange language. His symphonies say little. The Latin, the Slav, and the Teuton long ago slammed shut the doors to their ears, exactly as they do the compartments on their trains . . . and not a breath of fresh sound can get in. Not only are they indifferent to other cultures, they actively cultivate a dislike for them.

The Germans at the moment are all wound up in themselves, enjoying metaphysical constipation. Besides, they have known from the beginning that anyone born without benefit of their spermatozoa could never write a symphony: the Teutonic peoples alone possess the secret of large-scale music construction. It is, as always, Deutschland uber alles. Moreover, no one ever heard of a great composer who didn't write fugues, if only to show that he could.



The Austrians are still wallowing in Mahler and sentimentalizing over Bruckner. For them, Sibelius is not full-bellied enough. They hear nothing gemütlich in his sparse, economical harmonies. And where are his development passages?

The Italians don't go in for symphonies. They can't find the tune. The French, if they must hear music, prefer Debussy or Massenet—something light, in any case. It never occurs to the Russians to play the music of a former subject people. They have Tchaikovsky, anyway, and just now they're so hoarse from rah-rah-ing for the classics, they couldn't be bothered with anything less.

So it has remained for our unmusical cousins and ourselves to take up the torch for the lonely Finn. And, so help me, we've done nobly.

The English stole the march on us. Already thirty years ago, they had Sibelius making trips to London and touring up and down the Island while they dined and fêted and made over him. Such frequently disagreeing authorities as Rosa Newmarch, Ernest Newman and Cecil Gray pooled their resources to give him a build-up. He has had enough space in English journals to make him the envy of movie stars. The Gramophone Company, with an eye to business, created a Sibelius Society and sold his records on subscription and by the guinea.

We got hold of Sibelius only once, just before the outbreak of the World War. Our ship reporters did their stuff and before he landed, convinced him he was the coming musical Messiah. During a month's stay here he took in Niagara Falls, conducted a concert of his own music in Norfolk, Connecticut, spent some miserable, hot days in New York, visited Boston and made the acquaintance of our best musical stuffed shirts.

In between times, Yale conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Music honoris causa. Ex-President Taft was on hand to congratulate him and when the ceremony began, the orchestra played Finlandia. What was said on that occasion is only another instance of the density and lack of perception of real values existing in our academic institutions. It was then recorded:

"Doctor Jean Sibelius has by his inspired, intensely national music captivated his own country, Germany, and England already for a long time. When he came to America to conduct the first performance of a symphonic poem, he found that his fame had preceded him. At the very beginning of his career, owing to his works, his power and originality, he has become one of the most conspicuous composers now living. What Wagner did for the ancient German legends, Doctor Sibelius has in his own magnificent way done for the Finnish myths in Finland's national epos. He has translated the Kalevala into the international language of music."

It is undoubtedly remarkable that Yale bestirred itself at all and certainly it would be expecting too much of the professors to ask that they evidence a more profound understanding of his music. His Fourth Symphony had at that time been published for more than three years and had been enthusiastically received in five English cities. But Yale was still in his early programmatic period.

One or two of the critics, be it said to their credit, displayed a far keener insight. After the Norfolk concert, which included among other things the then new tone-poem, Oceanides, the incidental music to Adolf Paul's King Christian II, Pohjola's Daughter and the inevitable Finlandia, Henry Edward Krehbiel wrote: "During the last fifteen years I have felt three times that I was in the presence of a world genius: when Richard Strauss first with the New York Philharmonic and later with the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed his own compositions, and later when Arturo Toscanini in 1910 in the Boston Opera House directed an unforgettable performance of Tristan and Isolde; and lastly when, by the courtesy of Mr. Carl Stoeckel, I had the privilege of hearing Jean Sibelius from Finland direct nine of his old and new compositions on June 4th, 1914."

* * *

It has taken twenty years for this notion of Sibelius' genius to percolate inside the heads of metropolitan concert-goers. His great contemporary and senior by one year, Richard Strauss, had much earlier and more widespread acceptance. That is to be expected, considering the difference in their music. Strauss paints in richer colors and uses more instruments, which makes his music sound impressive right off. His tone poems obviously shake the heavens and plumb the depths. Their titles say so: Ein Heldenleben, Don Juan, Also Sprach Zarathustra, Death and Transfiguration.

And when Strauss had finished injecting fresh hormones into the orchestral body, he and his librettists hunted out subjects in the nether regions hitherto unvisited by music. While it lasted, this was all damned exciting. In addition, Strauss had a flair for astonishing the natives. He not only clothed his musical figures sensuously and luxuriously, but he unclothed his heroines. When he wrote music to which the dancing Salome was to discard all her veils, Mary Garden and the Chicago police kept his name in headlines for months. Sibelius had no such publicity. Neither had he inherited an established name. Half your neighbors still think Richard Strauss the "waltz king."

Despite the fact that we musically unwashed Anglo-Saxons have made the Sibelius name, its importance grows steadily. Heidelberg University got around to sending

Continued in center of page 146

11x

---

by catch phrases nor understood by pondering over word-pictures. Like anything of real value, they yield themselves only to him who knows them through and through.

* * *

To understand them well, it is necessary to hear them often and to get over that feeling of unusualness with which they first fall on the ears. As Ernest Newman has rightly observed: "Once this sense of strangeness has been overcome, the hold of Sibelius upon the average intelligent person increases in proportion as the works become known to him. It is only the first step that costs."

Naturally, this first step should be taken under the proper guidance; that is, performances which do justice to the works should be heard. This is not as easy as it would appear. First of all, many conductors are not in sympathy with Sibelius. They find it more advantageous to perform works with which they can better display their own personalities. Therefore, his greater symphonies are seldom played. Second, interpreters who sincerely try to understand his scores often fail because they approach them through music already familiar to them. This is fatal, as Sibelius is original, unique, and utterly unlike any other musician who ever lived before him. He is not derivative and, score, but the sensational climax here produces an effect extraneous to the whole structure of the composition. The printed page contains only the word glocken, but Sibelius never used such bells when he himself conducted the symphony.

Robert Kajanus, Sibelius' fellow-countryman, who did the most to make his music known in early years and who conducted many recordings for the Sibelius Society, knew the correct tempi and had the right feeling for the music, as he studied it with Sibelius. But, unfortunately, he was not a conductor of the first rank and when he made these records he was a sick man. Neither he nor Sibelius was satisfied with them.

* * *

In view of the loud shouting, surprisingly little has been done to secure adequate performances of the great Sibelius masterpieces. It is no wonder that the old man himself, sitting alone amidst his clump of trees north of Helsinki, wonders if his much heralded success in America means anything, if there really are many here who understand and love his music.

Unfortunately, only a very few can sit down with his scores and be stimulated to even greater enjoyment by the black dots on the music paper than by ordinary ment from the "Faust" Symphony of Liszt, and Brahms' Fourth Symphony. The slow movement from what is perhaps Liszt's greatest symphonic conception, has long been recognized as truly great music. But does it make the effect which it should when played by itself? After all, Liszt had definite reason to call the movements "three character pictures." The sweet, gentle Gretchen stands out more vividly if contrasted, as when the entire work is played, with ardent Faust and mocking Mephistopheles.

---

The orchestra was in excellent form throughout the afternoon, save for a little coarseness in Brahms' Symphony. The next concert of this series will come April 6.

C. W. D.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MAR 1 1 1937

Conductor

CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER
FEB 28 1937

A Review of Suggested Music for the Home

BY STEWART MATTER

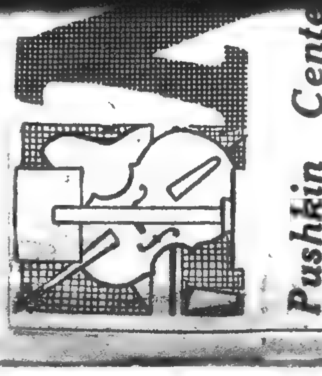
STRAVINSKY — Concerto for violin; Samuel Dushkin with the Lamoreaux Orchestra, directed by the composer. Brunswick.

The first in the new classical series of the Brunswick Co. to reach our

In the case of the "Pathetique" conductors too often overstress the emotional element; it is enough to play the notes, and what Tschaikowsky has written gives emotion

---

PROVIDENC
JOURNA
FEB 27



Pushkin Cente
Symphony
Averin

A hundred years a
Alexander Pushkin, t
sian poet, and Baron G a French officer in the faced each other pistols. An anonym
Pushkin had hinted a
tween his beautiful, shallow wife and the dier.

In the duel, Pushkin wounded. He died t
at the age of only 37 y
Keats, Schubert, Moz
other geniuses of the
been able in a brief masterpieces in many

His work in the dr
and poetry inspired posers to create some works, and excerpts works will be played Symphony Orchestra
night in commemorati of Pushkin. The perf
be given in Metropol with Dr. Serge Kouss ducting.

On the program is Rimsky-Korsakov's
Fairy Tale of Tsar Sal used folk tales as the basis for many of his these poems gripped R
kov strongly. "Tsar made into a libretto for imir Bielsky. In 1899
music. From the "rathe ludes to Acts I, II, and I later, he decided to called "Little Pictures Tale of Tsar Saltan."
tra will play the Allegr cia, the introduction t
"Flight of the Bumble
"Three Wonders," the
to the last scene.

Tsar Saltan is one o tale rulers who go ab listening to the convers subjects. He hears thre cussing what they wou were married to the Tsa est says she would bea heir. He marries her, a two sisters to live with palace. They are enviou ly scheming and cons eventually contrive t
Tsaritsa and her son c sea in a cask. They dri island, where the Tsar' up and has many adve
ing to visit his father, formed into a bumbleb

ESQUIRE
CHICAGO, ILL.
MAR - 1937

16

Roulades and Cadenzas

Continued from page 88

him an honorary degree this winter, though, judging by similar activities of the Nazis, this may be interpreted merely as a political gesture intended to increase cultural friendship with Finland, rather than as a sincere recognition of Sibelius. Whatever the contemporary judgment, it is my guess that when the Straussian meteor is nearing the horizon, the Sibelius star will still be climbing toward the zenith.

The accomplished German master has been more concerned with externals, the Finn with the inner message. The orchestrator puts little in much, the symphonist much in little. As Sibelius himself says, "Strauss is actuel . . . modern, for this time. I, abstract . . . all times, all places!"

But there is nothing to be gained from setting Sibelius against Strauss. They are mutually exclusive talents. Each satisfies a different need.

* * *

The growth of the Sibelius cult with us has been phenomenal. Ten years ago the name was known only by Valse Triste and Finlandia, which today no musician above brass-band tastes would admit liking. Last season New York Philharmonic Symphony listeners, comprising our most distinguished radio audience, gave Sibelius more votes than any other composer, living or dead. And this, with Toscanini not conducting his music, and with Beethoven getting twenty and Wagner fifty performances to his one.

The present rage for Sibelius here and in England is not due, as continental music authorities are convinced, to unconscious national politics. That they think we, having no Mozart, Beethoven, or Brahms of our own, are anxious to promote a composer from some small and politically insignificant country is evidence only of their own chauvinism.

The relative prominence accorded Sibelius by us is not the result, either, in any final sense, of a natural tendency on the part of critics to pick a "dark horse" and run him up so they can take credit for discovering him.

For ten years a leading conductor and an active critic have been campaigning for him. Both have made pilgrimages to Finland. Much shouting has been done in the press and the learned periodicals. Various brands of rah-rah have been used, and all opposition has been promptly squelched. Toscanini, who doesn't relish the Sibelius music, seldom conducted his important scores and, naturally, the maestro's bootlickers took their cue from him. But with his retirement from our local scene, that became ancient history.

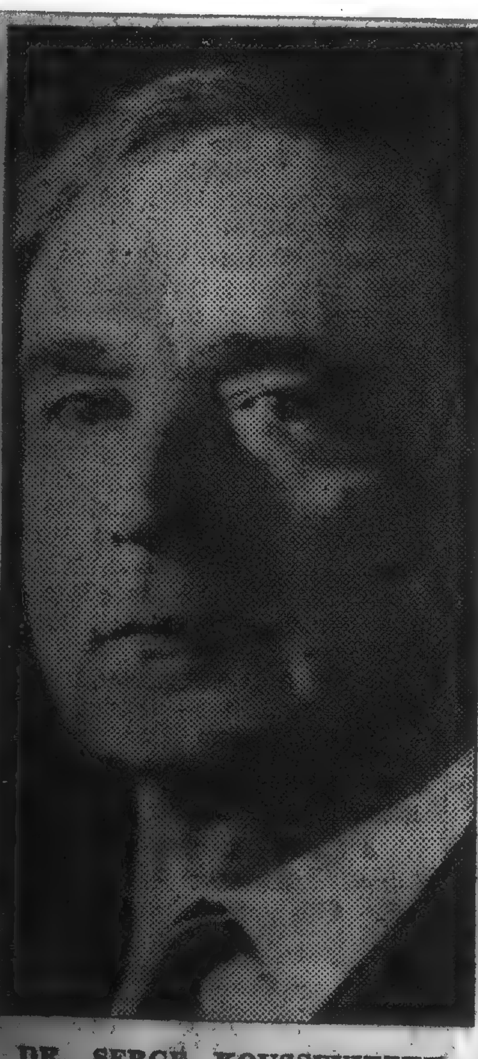
The Sibelians hold full sway again. And when those in the know begin to nod, the outer circles are not long in catching on. Right now, dowagers from Boston to Washington who couldn't tell you the number of his symphonies pass out a Sibelius sales talk with every cocktail. In their circles a confession that you don't understand Sibelius is tantamount to admitting musical imbecility.

Lecturers concentrate on Sibelius, and music appreciation books are being revised to feature him. He has now been successfully anointed and canonized.

Self-appointed disciples spread his gospel at every concert. Yes,

Continued on page 148

11x



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
Boston Symphony Orchestra

231

Roulades and Cadenzas

Continued from pages 88-146

they are the same group of the faithful who ten years ago were genuflecting before Brahms and telling us that his music was "better than it sounds." Now you hear them reciting the Sibelius litany in every entr'acte:

He is cold.
He is hard.
He is austere.
He is plain.
He is angular.
He is spare.
He is impersonal.
He is ascetic.
He is forbidding.
He is Finnish.

Then they talk for hours of rugged mountain crags, pine forests, barren wastelands, ghosts of Northern spirits. All these stock clichés obscure the real Sibelius rather than explain him. His symphonies are not to be described by catch phrases nor understood by pondering over word-pictures. Like anything of real value, they yield themselves only to him who knows them through and through.

* * *

To understand them well, it is necessary to hear them often and to get over that feeling of unusualness with which they first fall on the ears. As Ernest Newman has rightly observed: "Once this sense of strangeness has been overcome, the hold of Sibelius upon the average intelligent person increases in proportion as the works become known to him. It is only the first step that costs."

Naturally, this first step should be taken under the proper guidance; that is, performances which do justice to the works should be heard. This is not as easy as it would appear. First of all, many conductors are not in sympathy with Sibelius. They find it more advantageous to perform works with which they can better display their own personalities. Therefore, his greater symphonies are seldom played. Second, interpreters who sincerely try to understand his scores often fail because they approach them through music already familiar to them. This is fatal, as Sibelius is original, unique, and utterly unlike any other musician who ever lived before him. He is not derivative and, moreover, the Sibelius symphonies do not play themselves. Often they cannot be played even by excellent orchestras, quite capable of getting off Beethoven, Brahms, or Wagner. Without seeming specially difficult when they are well performed, they require long and careful preparation and an uncommon interpretive insight.

The best Sibelius performances in our country today are given by Serge Koussevitzky, who has remarkable ~~intuitive~~ gifts and who learned the scores from men in his orchestra who had formerly played in the Helsinki Symphony, often under the composer himself. Not for every symphony, but for most, Koussevitzky's readings may be taken as authoritative.

For the reason that they play Sibelius as if he were Brahms or Mahler, German conductors cannot touch his greater pages. Stokowski is inclined to make them theatrical and to overstate the composer's individual patterns. In his recording of the Fourth Symphony, Stokowski distorts certain passages beyond all recognition, retarding the tempi, laying on heavy orchestral coloring, and putting in expression marks where none exist. In the Scherzo, he fails to observe that the tempo is plainly marked allegro molto vivace; his choice of a slower time completely changes the meaning. In the final movement he introduces large bells, which have a place in Tosca or Tchaikovsky, but not in Sibelius. Not only is the passage sounded an octave lower than it is written in the score, but the sensational climax here produces an effect extraneous to the whole structure of the composition. The printed page contains only the word glocken, but Sibelius never used such bells when he himself conducted the symphony.

Robert Kajanus, Sibelius' fellow-countryman, who did the most to make his music known in early years and who conducted many recordings for the Sibelius Society, knew the correct tempi and had the right feeling for the music, as he studied it with Sibelius. But, unfortunately, he was not a conductor of the first rank and when he made these records he was a sick man. Neither he nor Sibelius was satisfied with them.

* * *

In view of the loud shouting, surprisingly little has been done to secure adequate performances of the great Sibelius masterpieces. It is no wonder that the old man himself, sitting alone amidst his clump of trees north of Helsinki, wonders if his much heralded success in America means anything, if there really are many here who understand and love his music.

Unfortunately, only a very few can sit down with his scores and be stimulated to even greater enjoyment by the black dots on the music paper than by ordinary performances. Also, for them, this has been expensive and not easy. Only in the last year or two have miniature partiturs of his best symphonies been available.

To that extent that listeners do understand and appreciate his symphonies, it does them credit. For no other music written in our time has so much to say or says it so well. Sibelius himself stated the case clearly when he said to his German music publisher that whereas other modern composers were engaged in manufacturing cocktails, he offered the public pure cold water.

As time goes on, his music will be more thoroughly understood and more genuinely appreciated. Exactly how important will be

Continued on page 150

11x

Roulades and Cadenzas

Continued from pages 88-146-148

his place and what his label will be, the public and the historians of the twenty-second century will have the pleasure of determining.

We are now too near him to make any positive evaluations. We know only that his music is his own, that each symphony is a definite landmark in the natural development of his musical nature, that no two are alike. In each of them, he has made an honest statement of a profound conviction, said something that was important to him and that he could not hold back. His symphonies were not the result of a determination to write something.

With each symphony, he started afresh . . . from the beginning, not knowing himself where he was going. He has let his small "inner voice" have its say. And that ability to be himself has been his greatest asset, as it is the greatest asset of any artist.

He has also been fortunate in being richly gifted: he is certainly the most colorful musical personality as well as the most profound thinker in music of our time. Not only has he explored the depths of human emotion, not only are his greatest works full of his struggle with the problems of existence (like Bach and Beethoven and every great composer, with the exception possibly of Mozart, he has turned out at times second-rate and inconsequential tripe, bearing his hallmark but not to be placed alongside his symphonies); but they are the expressions of a luminous and highly sensitive imagination.

Ideas come to Sibelius on a ray of sunshine reflected in the water . . . from a streak of blue across his lake . . . falling with a dead leaf . . . hopping with a bird. And they still come. Today he spends hours alone in the woods around his house, walking and thinking. Then he does his actual composition. Only later is it sketched out. "I write very easily, write very much," he says. "Only I accept very little these days."

The highly individual quality of Sibelius' imagination has made his works hard to classify. Is he romanticist? Realist? Modernist? Classicist? Is he a poet of nature? Is he a nationalist?

This last question has disturbed many. I have watched Finnish workers in Northern Michigan cry when hearing his music, saying it made them lonely, reminded them of home . . . and this, even when they did not know they were hearing the music of Sibelius. Undoubtedly, there is something intangible in Sibelius' nature, something that makes him a Finnish personality on every page of his music. It may be that the scenery inside his mind is not dissimilar to the scenery outside. Nature has meant much to him, and yet his music is not adequately described as either "descriptive" or "national."

To classify him or to analyze his music is not important. If you are interested, there are long descriptions to be read, varying according to the background and susceptibilities of the writer. But, as Sibelius has said, "They speak for themselves, not for me."

As to structure and form, there is also much that is new and difficult to pigeon-hole. Through all of them, the thought and orchestral timbre are organic and indivisible. The color changes from phrase to phrase even as the facial expression of a sensitive man changes momentarily with fleeting thoughts. Here is a new conception of orchestration and also of form. What some listeners are still apt to think of as a gift for orchestral tone-coloring, revealed, for instance, in the music of Ravel or Respighi or Rimsky-Korsakoff, is by comparison only an external mechanical dexterity, merely the brilliant arrangement of piano music for instruments . . . the "laying on" of effective shades and timbres over more or less obvious rhythmic patterns.

Also, with Sibelius, the old ideas of form go by the board. No longer is theme A followed by theme B, with A brought back again and the whole developed according to a pre-conceived plan. In his symphonies unity and continuity are achieved by much more subtle means. And yet, they are achieved. His works are not padded or lacking in coherence. His huge climaxes are always the natural outgrowth of his material rather than the mere piling up of sounds. You come away from hearing any one of his later symphonies with the conviction that what he has to say could not be said in any other, not to mention any better, way. The form and color are bone and blood of a living being.

If his masterful and original musicianship disturbs you, as indeed it does many . . . if it gives you no satisfaction . . . if you resent the fact that it is unlike the old classics, that it perhaps raises questions and does not answer them, then either you have not heard his music often enough or Sibelius simply is not for you.

Do not be sure that it is not, until you have explored each of his symphonies thoroughly and persistently. You may be missing the biggest mountain and the grandest perspective of all. The climbing is to be done only with the scores themselves. They are the best guidebooks. Failing them, you must depend on occasional performances and on the recordings, whose shortcomings will be all too readily apparent.

In the end, whether you like Sibelius or not is a matter of taste, or perhaps even more of mood. But in these years after our noble experiment, the best all-around drink at the musical bar is likely to be the Sibelius glass of pure cold water ⋕

11x

I cannot ask for a finer conception of the magnificent "Fourth" than is this by Koussevitzky; heroic, grandiose, but always within control, each bit carefully drawn, the phrasing superb. I find fault only with the balance in spots, for the woodwinds do not seem to balance with the strings and the brasses. It certainly is a question of microphone placement, for the orchestra was balanced in the recent recordings they made of "Zarathustra," Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony" and Schubert's "Unfinished."

The string section of this organization is the finest in the country and one hearing of the pizzacato section in the third movement will bring you to your feet. The waltz from the String Serenade is used to fill out the final side; this is the last word in string recording. A wide range recording, so do not turn up the volume and go far from your set.

LEDGER
MAR 12 1937

"TANGLEWOOD," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote the Tanglewood Tales, located in the Berkshire mountains is to be the permanent home of the Boston Symphony. This estate of over 200 acres, known as the Dixey estate, is the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks (nee Dixey) and her aunt, Miss Mary Tappan. A building to cost around $25,000 is to be erected to seat 5,000 and the gardens of the estate, surrounded by ancient hemlock hedges, will provide natural promenades during intermissions. Dr. Serge Konssevitzsky is the conductor of the Boston Symphony.

232

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

FEB 27 1937

MUSIC

Pushkin Centennial to be Observed by Boston Symphony Orchestra Here Tuesday.—Olga Averino, Soprano, Will be Soloist.

A hundred years ago last month, Alexander Pushkin, the great Russian poet, and Baron George d'Anthes a French officer in the Russian army, faced each other with duelling pistols. An anonymous letter to Pushkin had hinted at an affair between his beautiful, intellectually shallow wife and the handsome soldier.

In the duel, Pushkin was mortally wounded. He died two days later, at the age of only 37 years. But, like Keats, Schubert, Mozart and many other geniuses of the arts, he had been able in a brief span to create masterpieces in many forms.

His work in the drama, the story and poetry inspired Russian composers to create some of their finest works, and excerpts from these works will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday night in commemoration of the death of Pushkin. The performance will be given in Metropolitan Theatre, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

On the program is a suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera, "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan." Pushkin used folk tales as the material or basis for many of his poems, and these poems gripped Rimsky-Korsakov strongly. "Tsar Saltan" was made into a libretto for him by Vladimir Bielsky. In 1899 he wrote the music. From the "rather longish preludes to Acts I, II, and IV," as he said later, he decided to make a suite called "Little Pictures to the Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan." The orchestra will play the Allegretto alla marcia, the introduction to Act II, the "Flight of the Bumblebee" and the "Three Wonders," the introduction to the last scene.

Tsar Saltan is one of those fairy-tale rulers who go about incognito listening to the conversations of their subjects. He hears three sisters discussing what they would do if they were married to the Tsar. The youngest says she would bear him a fine heir. He marries her, and allows her two sisters to live with them in his palace. They are envious. Continually scheming and conspiring, they eventually contrive to have the Tsaritsa and her son cast upon the sea in a cask. They drift to a magic island, where the Tsar's son grows up and has many adventures. Wishing to visit his father, he is transformed into a bumblebee, flies to his father's land, and causes some annoyance to the two disappointed sisters. He returns to his island, where the Tsar eventually visits him.

The orchestra will play, and Olga Averino, Boston soprano, will sing, the letter scene from Tchaikovsky's opera "Eugene Oniegin," also drawn from the works of Pushkin. Oniegin is a handsome disillusioned man to whom is introduced Tatiana Larin, a girl of romantic tendency and little experience in the world. She falls in love with him and writes a letter confessing her infatuation. It is this scene, in which the letter is composed, that Miss Averino will sing.

To finish the story, Oniegin coldly turns aside the love of Tatiana, but meets her years afterwards when she is a fashionable lady married to a much older man. Oniegin falls in love with her, and she confesses that her old love for him is reawakened, but she will not yield to his entreaties; she leaves him with abrupt finality.

The first part of the program will be given over to Beethoven. His overture to Collin's "Coriolanus," and his Fourth Symphony will be played.

This symphony, in B-flat-major, was written in 1806. It is said to have been written on commission from Count Oppersdorf, a music lover rich enough to have a small symphony orchestra for his own delight. Beethoven was working on the C-minor, subsequently published as the Fifth Symphony; but he was seemingly pressed for money—a situation not unusual—and he laid aside the C-minor and worked on the other. It was dedicated to Count Oppersdorf, and Beethoven received a good-sized sum for it. It is related that he did not send the score to the count, but gave it to Prince Lobkowitz for performance. This indefensible act and some similar dealings aroused the anger of Count Oppersdorf and certainly are no credit to Beethoven.

The symphony is in a happy and lyrical mood, and is supposed by some biographers to reflect his sentiments for Theresa von Brunswick, to whom he became engaged in May 1806.

G. Y. L.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

MAR 6 - 1937

KOUSSEVITZKY TO OFFER LAST ALBAN BERG OPUS

The Violin Concerto of Alban Berg, the last completed work of the composer of "Wozzek," will have its first New York performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, Louis Krasner soloist, at Carnegie Hall, Thursday evening, March 11. The program on that occasion also contains Strauss's "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and the Beethoven Fourth Symphony.

At the matinee concert, Saturday, March 13, Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct an all-Russian program consisting of Liadov's "From the Apocalypse"; the Prelude to Moussorgsky's opera "Kovantchina"; Prokofieff's "Scythian Suite," and the Tchaikovsky "Pathetic" Symphony.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAR 3 - 1937

MUSIC

Large Audience Enjoys Fine Performance by Boston Symphony Orchestra.—Pushkin Centenary Observed—Olga Averino is Soloist

By G. Y. Loveridge

One of the most enjoyable concerts of the season was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, in Metropolitan Theatre last night.

The program was well-selected and well-arranged, and the playing was superb. A large audience gave such vigorous approval that Dr. Koussevitzky four times caused the orchestra to rise and share in the applause. Olga Averino, Boston soprano who appeared as soloist, was likewise heartily applauded.

Beethoven, Tchaikovsky and Rimsky-Korsakoff were the composers drawn upon. Their account seems never to run out or even to get low; musically they are always in funds.

The overture to "Coriolanus," with which the program began, presented Beethoven as a painter of character and event in tone. One sensed here, with succinct completeness, the struggle within the soul of the doughty Roman, who may or may not have led the Volscians against his countrymen, who may or may not have been deterred from vengeance by his wife and his mother—and who may or may not, for that matter, have ever lived. The historians seem not to agree. But he lives with convincing certainty in this music. As it was played last night it was dramatically compelling, and the fact that if one had no clue to its meaning one might build a different story around it does not alter its essential grip upon the emotions.

* * *

The Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, is not so often played as some of the eight others. One finds here not the Beethoven so frequently permitted to thunder and rage at the public in the C-minor, but a jolly and sometimes sweetly melancholy fellow, akin to the Milton of "L'Allegro." Everything seems springtime-in-the-country, with some broad country humor.

The melodious and unhurried introduction sets the tone for the whole work, and presently there follows more lively and vigorous material, with the strings making merry, the bassoons capering.

Dr. Koussevitzky put happiness and pastoral serenity into his reading. It was good to enjoy the company of Beethoven when he was not in his heroic mood, when, so to speak, he was resting on the oars, enjoying the secenery and letting the race of life go hang.

The skillful blending of tone-colors, the constantly-pleasant atmosphere, the joyous rhythm were delightful, and the sheer brilliance and precision of the playing could hardly have been surpassed. The last chord of the finale precipitated a long outburst of applause.

According to our score card, as the sporting writers say, the full orchestra took two bows, at Dr. Koussekitzky's invitation.

* * *

After intermission came the Russians. One can depend on the Russians to get out everything there is in stock, from bass viol to celesta, and, furthermore, to know what to do with them once they have been got out.

The letter scene from "Eugene Oniegin" was sung by Miss Averino with considerable dramatic intensity. At the outset, the orchestra eclipsed the solo voice on two occasions, but this matter was smoothly adjusted for the remainder of the scene. Miss Averino's voice was strong and flexible, and was artistically managed, although it cannot be said that she conveyed the full intensity of Tatiana's conflict. Perhaps it is too much to expect this to be done in a concert performance, without assistance of costume, scenery and dramatic action. Miss Averino's lower tones were rich and moving, and her higher ones, while not always even, frequently attained a clear, lyric quality. The orchestra joined the audience in applauding the singer.

* * *

The final number, a suite from the Rimsky-Korsakoff opera "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan," was inspired by the work of Pushkin, as was "Oniegin." The music was played in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the death of Pushkin.

This suite was probably as acceptable to the listeners as anything played during the evening. It was lively, it was elaborately orchestrated, it was beautifully played, and it contained at least one item." The Flight of the Bumble-bee," that was very familiar.

The sprightly rhythm of the march, the brilliant fortes of the introduction to Act II, put everybody in the mood for the brief and breathless virtuosity of the bumble-bee. The expert droning of the strings of this marvelous orchestra was almost painful, and the tremendous technique of flute and clarinet—and everybody else for that matter—brought laughter and applause. With opulent sonority of "The Three Wonders" brought the evening to an invigorating end.

The program:

Beethoven....Overture to Collin's Tragedy, "Coriolanus," Op. 62
Beethoven....Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, Op. 60
  I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
  II. Adagio
  III. Allegro vivace, Trio. Un poco meno allegro
  IV. Finale: Allegro, ma non troppo
Tchaikovsky....Letter Scene from "Eugene Oniegin," Lyrical Scenes (After Pushkin)
Rimsky-Korsakoff....Suite from the Opera "The Fairy Tale of Tsar Saltan" (After Pushkin)
  I. Allegretto alla marcia
  II. Introduction to Act II
  III. The Flight of the Bumble-Bee
  IV. The Three Wonders.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

MAR 6 - 1937

The Violin Concerto by Alban Berg, the last completed work of the composer of "Wozzeck," will have its first New York performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, and Louis Krasner soloist, in Carnegie Hall next Thursday evening, March 11, at 8:45. This will be the fourth and last visit but one of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Saturday afternoon concert is at 2:30.

In addition to Berg's Concerto, at the evening concert Mr. Koussevitzky will present Richard Strauss's tone poem "Thus Spake Zarathustra." Beethoven's Fourth Symphony in B flat major will open the program. A program consisting entirely of Russian music is announced for the matinee: Liadov's symphonic picture, "From the Apocalypse", the Prelude to Moussorgsky's opera "Khovanstchina"; Prokofieff's "Scythian Suite," and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony No. 6.

The Violin Concerto had its first American performance in Boston on March 5. Louis Krasner the violinist who is to appear as soloist in the work, approached the Austrian composer in 1935 for a violin concerto. Berg did not at once respond but, moved by the news of the death of a girl of eighteen, the stepdaughter of Gustav Mahler, he became possessed with the music as a memorial piece for his young friend. A few months later, and before the year was up, Berg himself had died. The first performance was at the International Festival at Barcelona, and performances in London, Paris and Vienna followed—Mr. Krasner taking the solo part in each. The Concerto is based upon the twelve-note system which, as a disciple of Schonberg, Berg has always used, but the scheme is modified by tonal harmonies such as the interpolation of a chorale of Bach.

FRANCA SOMIGLI

Who makes her debut in "Madama Butterfly" on Monday evening.

LOUIS KRASNER

Photo by Fayer of Vienna, Dorland and House.

Violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Thursday evening.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

MAR 10 1937

Boston Programs.

The performance of the Alban Berg violin concerto, with Louis Krasner as the soloist, was well received by Boston Symphony audiences last week and by the critics. The latter felt that future hearings will create an even more favorable impression.

The soloist is well known in Boston to which city he came from Providence for musical study, which he supplemented abroad. In his early days in Providence he played wherever and whenever he could get a job.

The concerto will be featured on the programs which the Boston Symphony orchestra will play on its tour to Northampton and New York this week. There will be no symphony concerts in Boston. For the supplementary matinee next Tuesday Dr. Koussevitzky has set the "Peer Gynt" Suite of Grieg, No. 1., the Gretchen movement from Liszt's "Faust Symphony" and the Fourth Symphony of Brahms in E minor. At the regular concerts next week the Third Symphony of Nicolai Berezowsky will have its first Boston performance with the composer conducting.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
133 MAR 6 - 1937

Boston Hears Violin Concerto Of Alban Berg

Its First U. S. Playing Draws Critic's Praise, but Some Listeners Walk Out on It

Louis Krasner Is Soloist

Orchestra Also Presents 'Also SprachZarathustra'

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, March 5.—Alban Berg's violin concerto was played for the first time in America in this afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall with Louis Krasner as the soloist. Schoenberg's arrangement of a Bach prelude and fugue in E flat and Strauss's "Also sprach Zarathustra" were the other numbers. Of the new concerto, the "Boston Herald" reviewer wrote as follows:

"Dr. Koussevitzky is a conductor who has an alert and inquisitive mind for modern music of importance. His catholicity obtained is remarkable, so that Boston has often been the first in this country to hear a score that is soon acclaimed in other cities. He has done a real service in securing the first American performance of Alban Berg's concerto. There are many, no doubt, who honestly dislike Berg's music, for its nature is certainly uncompromising.

"For example, we could not bring ourselves to like the 'Lulu' suite, played here a few seasons ago. But the violin concerto, to our own opinion, is quite another matter. The work is undeniably both sincere and original, and has made a deep impression on us.

"It is unfortunate that it should be called a 'concerto,' for it makes no pretense of adhering either to the classical or any other subsequent form of concerto. Nor does it go back to the Concerto Grosso idea of Handel. It is more plausibly a tone poem or requiem without words, in which the violin is by far the most important voice. It is not an easy work to listen to for the first time; and probably the departure of several people in the middle of the performance was conclusive evidence of the difficulties of appreciation. Yet the rewards are there for those who will sympathetically listen.

"Berg's principles of composition may stem from the ideas of Arnold Schoenberg, but his inspiration is his own. The entirely natural way in which the chorale is led up to, the mysterious voices in the orchestral contrasted with the melodic line of the violin, the poignancy of the sorrow in the slow movement—these are qualities which are part of the distinction of the great concerto. The composer has a great deal to say; and his technique of saying it is both very personal and absolutely sure. This concerto should be heard soon again, for it has many fine qualities as a work of art.

"Mr. Krasner's playing was extraordinarily sensitive. The phrasing of the difficult solo part was executed with the greatest refinement. The tone was also beautiful. Indeed, Mr. Krasner deserved much more applause than he got. The orchestral performance was equally sympathetic. Mr. Koussevitzky obtained an accompaniment that was a marvel of subtlety. The applause for the concerto was uneven, showing sharply divided opinion."

SOUTH BEND, IND.
NEWS-TIMES
MAR 7 - 1937

Music' Shrine At Tanglewood Goal Of Group

Home Of Hawthorne In Berkshires Given To Festival Society.

NEW YORK, March 6.—(Special)—Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Incorporated, meeting with the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith at her home, 1 Sutton Place, South, in New York city recently, enthusiastically endorsed the proposal to make Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., a great musical shrine in America.

Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the Berkshires, was recently given to the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the festival because of the outstanding success of the of concerts in 1936. The trustees of both organizations have drafted an agreement for perpetual use of the property as a great festival center.

The gardens were planned by Mrs. Brooks' parents, Mr. and Mrs Richard C. Dixey of Boston. The formal garden, which will be used as an outside foyer, was planted about 1900, with the assistance of their gardener, Alexander McConnachie. The hemlocks for this planting were secured from neighboring woods, which was also the case for the 12-foot hedge, extending 1,200 feet along the front of the grounds. The latter is much older.

Mrs. Dixey was a painter of renown, having exhibited in Paris and other cities. Mr. Dixey was much interested in music, though he did not follow this as a career. He conducted the first performance of "Lohengrin" in Boston, which he did in concert form.

It is hoped to make a substantial start on a building, a suitable inclosure, for the concerts this spring, for which the trustees planned to raise the necessary funds. Miss Robinson Smith reported several gifts of- $1,000 each for the building fund, and board members agreed to contact others who might be willing to assist. She added:

"I can conceive of no place in this country where a great festival could be more admirably located so far as tradition and background are concerned. It will be an American festival in New England with a great orchestra from New England conducted by an eminent leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky. We should be most happy to have anyone who is interested in our ambition for a great festival center in America join us."

The concert dates were officially established as August 5, 7 and 8 and August 12, 14 and 15, the first wo week ends in the month.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
MAR 1 1 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY WINS HIGH PRAISE IN CONCERT HERE

Few concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra have revealed so much of loftiness as that given last evening to conclude the Woolsey Series. The tonal magnificence, so justly associated wth the Bostonians, has never been more evident than in the program of Russian music which Doctor Koussevitsky prepared to honor the centenary of Pushkin's brth. Liadow, Moussorgsky, Prokofieff, and Tchaikovsky are but a few of the more prominent members of the nationalist groups who responded to the imaginative tales of this great poet of the people.

The works represented last evening, however, are connected in no way directly with Pushkin, but are rather representative of the different styles within the Russian group (excepting the master, Rimsky-Korsakov) and they serve to present a brilliant picture in the several forms of Tone Poem, Suite, Prelude, and Symphony. The apocalyptic picture from the tenth chapter of the Revelation of St. John is but one of the many dramatic episodes which cry out for musical portrayal; strange, indeed, that so few composers have responded to the dramatic contextus of the Bible for subject material! Pagan rites and ceremonies have been frequent bases for tone-painting, but the sacred narrative awaits the master hand of an imaginative musician. Liadov's "From the Apocalypse" is a brief and convincing expression of a highly challenging scriptural passage.

Of especial interest was the first presentation of a major work by the contemporary, Serge Prokofieff, whose Scythian Suite, "Ala and Lolli," (Opus 20) was set forth with a breath-taking splendor. The comparison is inevitably with the "Daphnis and Chloe" by Ravel, since the subjects are not too remote for musical purposes. Prokofieff succeeds in making an orchestra of normal size blaze forth in an extraordinary volume of sound when his purpose demands so much, as does the unparalleled Procession of the Sun comprising the close of this work. The barbarous splendor is more inherent in the tradition of Russian music than in that of the suave Frenchman; yet, at times one wishes for a little less of the untempered brass. Never does one detect any obvious striving for effect, however, which characterizes some of the over-laden scores of other modernists.

"Ala and Lolli" is intricate music, but withal exceptionally transparent; the instrumental effects — deriving naturally from Rimsky-Korsakov and the composer's earlier fellow Russians—are natural in their employment and not once do they fall short of direct effect. The third section, "Night" contains the only lapse in the unity and coherence of the entire suite. As for the playing, nothing was lacking of the amazing mastery of effect which has made this orchestra unsurpassed in the field of contemporary music; the score was more perfectly set forth last evening than when it was given in Boston three weeks ago. Fortunate, indeed, is the living composer who is served so well!

If the sophisticates were accustomed to hearing their Tschaikovsky played under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, it is likely there would be less sneering at these symphonies. Stravinsky has been considered deciddly queer since confesing to a great admiration for the lonely Peter Ilish who poured out his passion in music rather than in living. The extent of liberty which a conductor (or, orchestra may take with these scores is generally over-estimated; listeners have encouraged the liberties, with the result that the composer would doubtless be greatly ashamed were he to hear his own scores interpreted throughout the worl dby those whose feelings are permitted to run quite out-of-bounds.

Dr. Koussevitsky's penchant for speed is an asset to the Sixth Symphony, commonly known as the "Pathetique," for the brisk movement holds the music from disintegration and renders the motion true and manly. As treated with respect, and with full understanding of the score, Tschaikovseky's orchestration becomes a remarkable lesson in economy, striking effect, and absolute mastery of detail. To hear the Sixth Symphony as delivered last evening, is to experience the ultimate in the presentation of this tyep of music. In brief, there is no reason to suppose that any orchestra can challenge the supremacy of the Boston aggregation in any of the works of the Russian school.

H. EARLE JOHNSON.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
MAR 1 0 1937

MODERN MUSIC PLAYED HERE

Boston Symphony in Berg Concerto Moves Some of Large Audience

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the sensitive and masterly direction of Serge Koussevitzky played last night in John M. Greene hall to a house divided against itself. The dissension arose over the presentation of the Alban Berg violin concerto, a decidedly modern composition which has been received not wholly favorably elsewhere. The comments it occasioned here were reminiscent of those made about Wagner or Debussy selections when they too were consideerd by some to be unintelligible and discordant. As they have been lately accepted and admired, so will some of what we call "modern writings" be acclaimed by future generations. We lack the perspective and the familiarity with them to be entirely fair in our criticisms.

It is evident that Dr. Koussevitzky believes his Northampton listeners sufficiently intelligent and receptive to be willing or even eager to hear these new compositions. He may then be unaware that there are those who prefer to relax and dream while hearing old, familiar strains, and who vehemently rebuke him for offering works which they cannot understand.

The reviewer will be forgiven, no doubt, for asking how these protestors ever expect to understand modern music if they do not hear it, and how better to hear it than when played by one of the greatest orchestras in the world.

In the Berg cocnerto as played last evening, moods strangely moving seemed somehow to shine through the maze of harmonic intricacies. Its formal structure is based upon the unfamiliar twelve-tone scale, in which the open strings of the violin are the most important notes. For this reason it is a perfect medium for the violin solo, in which Louis Krasner so admirably distinguished himself in last night's concert.

Open arpeggios introducing the twelve-tone scale began the andante, and solos everywhere conversed with the solo violin. The mood was one of gentle emotion. The allegretto, including a Viennese waltz theme, was of happy, lilting gracefulness. A blare of dissonance, with the harsh tum-tum of the drums and the low groans of the strings, brought in the allegro movement. Following rhythmic and dynamic exhilaration, the soloist played a difficult and magnificent violin cadenza, displaying the remarkable agility of his technique. The brash noise returned as the cadenza continued to a less turbulent conclusion. In the adagio the ethereal quality of the Bach chorale "Es Ist Genug" was enhanced by the modernisms added to it. Later the soloist played an independent theme while other instruments took up the chorale. The coda gave the concerta a peaceful conclusion.

The now serene, now joyous Beethoven Symphony No. 4 opened the program. It was palyed with straightforward sincerity which fully displayed its formal perfection.

Strauss' tone poem, "Also Sprach Zarathustra," was eloquent programme music. In last night's performance it reached magnificent climaxes of terrific dynamic proportion, and by contrast realized the most infinitesimal pianissimos.

Although Dr. Koussevitzky never gives encores, the audience lingered at the close of the concert to give prolonged applause. This was somewhat in contrast to the behavior of a Boston audience recently, when a program including the Berg concerto occasioned a premature exodus on the part of many. Whether last night's listeners applauded because of or despite the Berg number is, of course, problematical.—H. L. L.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAR 1 2 1937

Berg Music Makes Debut in Carnegie

Heard Between Beethoven and Strauss Masterpieces.

By PITTS SANBORN.

Unfortunately for Alban Berg's concerto it made its local debut in Carnegie Hall last evening between the perfect pleasings of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and the apocalyptic opening of the "Thus Spake Zarathustra" of Richard Strauss. In spite of the fact that it is Berg's last legacy to the world, composed shortly before his death on December 23, 1935, it already fades away in dimness between the glories that flanked it on the program.

This work, in two movements, was inspired by the untimely death of Manon Gropius and is inscribed "To the Memory of an Angel." Manon Gropius was the youthful daughter of the second marriage of the lady who previously had been Frau Gustav Mahler and who now is Frau Franz Werfel. A victim of infantile paralysis, she died in great pain, which she bore bravely. In view of Berg's reaction, the irreverent might add it is lucky we die but once.

* * *

Performed First Last Year.

The concerto, for violin and orchestra, was performed for the first time on April 19, 1936, at the festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music held in Barcelona. Then as now the violinist was Louis Krasner. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, together with Mr. Krasner, introduced the work to America last week in Boston. The same forces were engaged in yesterday's performance.

After a single hearing I would rather pass the buck to the future with a promise to consider the thing more in detail if ever I happen to hear it again, which seems altogether unlikely.

Last night the Berg who wrote it appeared to cast longing eyes from the twelve-tonal exile of the Schoenberg desert at the flesh-pots of the diatonic Egypt, and odds and ends of poignancy flecked the dry pages of the geometric design. It was like coming across pressed violets and buttercups in a volume of Euclid.

* * *

Little Enthusiasm Shown.

Mr. Krasner sustained his part in the performance—the part that tends toward the sentimental—with devoted earnestness, and Mr. Koussevitzky shepherded his men through their part as though salvation were at stake. The audience, however, showed little enthusiasm.

Beethoven's symphony was played with surpassing euphony and a vivid stressing of contrasts. The Adagio has been more poetically set forth. The Strauss tone-poem suffered in places from over-impetuosity, but as sheer sound it had indisputable magnificence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAR 1 3 1937

Symphony Program Features Beethoven

A dramatically-paced and well articulated performance of Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, in which contrasts were shrewdly handled, opened the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Brooklyn Academy of Music last night. Serge Koussevitzky, directing, then repeated the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven, heard on Thursday evening in Carnegie Hall.

As concluding number the orchestra played Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade," and the audience reveled in the wealth of gorgeous sound and vivid instrumental effects that Mr. Koussevitsky drew from his men. A well-balanced, well-played and well-applauded program. L. B.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
MAR 12 1937

Music of the Day

By B. H. HAGGIN

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony in Alban Berg Violin Concerts—Louis Krasner Is the Soloist

The concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at Carnegie Hall last night began with a performance of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony. This permitted one to hear and to delight in the refinement and balance of tone, the precision, that are outstanding in the playing of the orchestra under Mr. Koussevitzky. But his mood seemed to impel him in a direction contrary to that of the music. The music that Beethoven marks Adagio because it achieves its effect when played slowly, Mr. Koussevitzky played Andante—with movement—with result that neither the hushed inroduction to the first movement nor the poignant second movement achieved its effect. And the first and third movements which Beethoven marks Allegro vivace—very lively—r. Koussevitzky took deliberately. Moreover, in the wonderful passage in the second movement in which the melody of the clarinet is wreathed in ascending figures of the strings, the wreath obscured the melody it wreathed.

Beethoven's symphony was followed by the Violin Concerto of Alban Berg. The idea of such a work was suggested to Berg by the violinist Louis Krasner, who played the solo part last night; the stimulus to actual activity—to unprecedentedly sustained and intense activity, for Berg—was the death of the young aughter of Gustav Mahler's widow. motion, then, caused Berg to compose this work; emotion caused him, however, to compose in the only way he could; and this way produced a ork which is incapable of affecting e listener as a requiem should, d which conveys, as Berg's music ways does, only warpedness of sen- mind, and talent. chestra, conductor, and soloist ht to the performance of the competence and devotion. e concert ended with Strauss' Spake Zarathustra."

From Harvard Crimson of March 3

HE HARVARD CRIMSON

The Music Box

Wellesley College Orchestra to Play Early Music in Paine Hall

Malcolm Holmes will conduct the Wellesley College Orchestra in a concert at Paine Hall tonight. The program consists of rarely played music dating from the sixteenth to the eighteenth centuries and opens with Studentenmusik Suite No. 2 by Johann Rosemuller (1620-1684). Also to be heard are Bach's Concerto for two violins in D minor; Gluck's Sinfonia to the ballet-pantomime, "Don Juan"; Bach's Cantata No. 202, "Weichet nur, betruebte Schatten"; Two Instrumental Pieces by King Henry VIII; and Gretry's Overture to "Le Rival Confident." The music is certainly unusually interesting and gives further proof of the admirable energy which Mr. Holmes has constantly shown both with the Pierian Sodality and the Wellesley Orchestra.

Symphony Concerts

Alban Berg's Violin Concerto will be played by Louis Krasner in its first American performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at this week's concerts. Berg, a disciple of the famous exiled German composer, Schoenberg, wrote this particular work while deeply affected by the death of one of his closest friends, Manon Gropius, the stepdaughter of Gustav Mahler. This concerto, while a requiem for her, is also the composer's swan-song for he died soon after. A great reputation has preceded this last effort of Berg, and it should prove significant.

Schoenberg's orchestration of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E flat will also be performed as well as one of Dr. Koussevitzky's favorite pieces, "Thus Spoke Zarathustra" by Richard Strauss.

A reminder that the Boston Symphony Orchestra's season is far from over will not be amiss at this time. Tickets for the remaining quarter of the Saturday evening series in Symphony Hall may be obtained for the very low rate of ten dollars.

From Harvard
Crimson 9 March 1

The

VOL. CVII. No. 121.

The Music Box

Gladys Swarthout Will Give Recital Sunday; Symphony Is Away

The ensuing week is singularly lacking in musical events. The Boston Symphony is on tour, treating New York with the latest Berg Violin Concerto which Dr. Koussevitzky presented here last week-end, and Symphony Hall will be empty except for Sunday afternoon when Gladys Swarthout, mezzo-soprano of opera, radio, and motion picture fame, will give a recital.

She has been described by the New York Times as "lovely to look at and heaven to hear". However that may be, she has chosen a program which runs the gamut of musical history and comes out rather breathless at the end with a "Wild Song" by Olive Durgan. The recital should give Miss Swarthout ample occasion to prove the abilities so lavishly accorded her by reviewers.

Bach's magnificent Passion According to St. Matthew is to be performed once this year by essentially the same forces as were heard last season. Good Friday (March 26) has been chosen, appropriately enough, for the date and it is hoped that the Glee Club which is the bulwark of the performance will get the good house it deserves. Incidentally, there are still some seats available for the remaining quarter of the Symphony season at a very low rate. These seats include subscription privileges for next year and certainly offer an unusual opportunity to begin the very worthwhile "Symphony habit". Inquiries should be made at Symphony Hall in Boston.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAR 12 1937

BOSTON SYMPHONY HAILED BY HEARERS

Koussevitzky Directs One of Most Brilliant Concerts of Orchestra's Career

BERG CONCERTO IS GIVEN

Krasner, American Violinist Who Suggested Work to Composer, Appears as Soloist

By OLIN DOWNES

The concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, last night in Carnegie Hall, must rank, because of the material of the program and the quality of the performances, among the most brilliant exhibitions that this distinguished instrumental body has given in this city.

The compositions presented were in themselves of unusual significance; the interpretations bore witness again to the unsurpassed qualities of the band, as they also testified to the versatility and the constantly ripening mastery of its leader. That the New York public is well aware of these things was shown by the audience that packed the hall and made every performance the occasion for the most enthusiastic demonstrations.

The program presented a highly interesting and provocative novelty, the violin concerto of Alban Berg, of which the solo part was played by Louis Krasner, an American, who suggested to Berg, in 1935, the composition of this work, and who has acted as its particular exponent in Europe and America from the time of its first performance at Barcelona, April 19, 1936, at the festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music.

Concerto Is an Elegy

The concerto has an extremely romantic history, which is not as that of other concerti for solo instruments. It is in sum an elegy for the youthful Manon Gropius, the daughter of Mahler's widow, a young woman to whom Berg was "tenderly devoted," and it is the only work of the kind that Berg ever attempted.

Manon Gropius died in May of 1935, and Berg, who had previously been indifferent to the idea, took up the composition of the concerto. He worked upon it furiously, finished it in six weeks and dedicated the score "To the memory of an angel." This was in July of 1935. Berg was putting the finishing touches upon the instrumentation in December of that year when he developed the blood infection which brought him to his end at midnight of Dec. 23 of the same year.

The concerto is in two parts, which was subdivided.

"It was observed," says Mr. Burke in his program notes, recounting the Barcelona performance, "that Alban Berg, the avowed disciple of Schoenberg and the faithful exponent of the twelve-tone system, whose opera, 'Wozzeck' had won far more attention than any work of Schoenberg, reverted in his last complete score, composed at 50, to such time-honored tonal anchors as the common triad and the square-cut cadences of a Bach chorale."

This chorale of Bach, "Es ist genug," is used in the last part of the concerto, after the long and free cadenza of the violin with punctuation by the orchestra, which, to Richard Capell, has the "unmistakable significance" of "the living creature's struggle with death." Upon the chorale Berg weaves his own variations. In the first movement is "a scherzo-like movement which introduces a Viennese waltz theme and a lilting Carinthian folk-song. It has been said to recall the lightness and gaiety of Manon."

Audience Is Enthusiastic

This writer, at a first hearing, does not find himself in sympathy with the music. This is the record of a preliminary impression, not of a formed opinion about a work by a composer of indisuptable gifts and extremely subtle craftsmanship. It is to be recorded that a considerable part of the audience applauded the concerto loudly and long and called soloist and conductor repeatedly back to the stage, and that persons of sensitive musical taste found the music uncommonly beautiful.

The present commentator only concurs with this reaction where the later pages of the final movement are concerned. He finds the composer's initial ideas, and their idiom, forced and involved. No doubt, this style had become so native with Berg as to be his habitual musical speech. There need be no question of the sincerity and conviction of his expression. It may become clearer and more communicative in days in store. Just now it all seems to be essentially artificial and false in theory.

The cadenza-like movement, which has been explained by the thought of the struggle between life and death, ends with a passage not unremindful in color and dramatic inflection of the music of dissolution in Richard Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration." The loud whacks of the drum, the roars of the orchestra, seem unduly realistic and out of kelter with the prevailing style of the composition. The final pages have unmistakably tenderness and intensity of feeling.

If the work itself is of dubious or debatable quality the performance was not. It was tribute alike to soloist, conductor and orchestra. This is immensely difficult music. It was interpreted with astonishing eloquence and precision in execution.

The changing and interlocking rhythms, delicate balances of polyphony and sheer virtuosity of brain and of hand that they necessitate constitute a task for the most consummate musicians. There is every probability that the performance was ideally after the composer's wishes.

Message Well Interpreted

Much could be said of his harmonic scheme in its various ramifications and in its relation to Bach's choral, but these disquisitions can be postponed till a time of greater familiarity with the score. Certainly the soloist, Dr. Koussevitzky, and his men had done nobly the duty of artists in making as clear and beautiful as they might the message of an exceptional creative individuality.

The Berg concerto, as the important novelty of the occasion, has been discussed at some length, and yet, properly speaking, it is not half the tale of the concert. There was an opening performance of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, ideal in beauty and proportion.

The greatest depth is found, in terms of the profoundest simplicity, in the introduction of the symphony and in the slow movement. But every measure of this modest composition is a work of art, which was presented with the scale of sonorities and the transparency of style by which only could it be properly communicated. With another conductor this might have been merely the deed of an admirable scholar conversant with the usages of Beethoven's early period. With Dr. Koussevitzky and his men it was re-creation.

Richard Strauss's "Zarathustra" ended the concert. It is very remarkable to realize the belated popularity and public appreciation of this, one of the last Strauss scores to meet with general recognition. Dr. Koussevitzky's performance is the second in New York this season and there soon will be a third.

The end of "Zarathustra" is so mystical and remote that some find it anti-climactic after the mad climax of the Night-Wanderer's Song. But lo! last night the audience remained to applaud furiously long after the last enigmatical C of the plucked basses had sounded.

Lesson in Interpretation

And here, if it had been needed, was a lesson as to the manner in which a truly imaginative and intuitive interpreter, confronted with various creative manifestations, changes his style.

The interpretation was broadly rhapsodic, of a stupendous breadth in the introduction and of a truly Nietzschean frenzy. It was furious, proud, Dionysiac and bitter, too—on occasion bitter as gall, and entirely mad, like so much of the music. The trumpets that screamed over the void as the bell tolled and the orchestra ran fairly amok are not to be quickly forgotten.

Dr. Koussevitsky treated certain tempi and details in ways of his own, and by a grand sweep and a head-long impetus, once the dance song had been propounded, fairly flung the music from the instruments. If he ignored a few niceties it was fortunate rather than otherwise. He could afford to do so, so far as technique was concerned, with his virtuoso orchestra, and it is utterly essential that the sardonic laughter and the extravagant fantasy of the piece should be so flung forth, without calmness or reservation. And this result was secured in spite of the inadequate functioning, for some reason or other, of the organ, an important feature of the score.

And the music? It remains unconquerably vast and magnificent. Sometimes the composer uses marble, sometimes clay. Nothing stultifies his purpose or clouds his vision, until we too are caught up and overwhelmed by his power.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST
MAR 12 1937

WORDS AND MUSIC

Boston Symphony Offers Violin Concerto Premiere

Work of Late Alban Berg, the Atonalist, Played by Louis Krasner, Who Suggested Elegy on Dead Youth

By SAMUEL CHOTZINOFF

The Boston Symphony came to Carnegie last night with first performance of a Violin Concerto by the late Alban Berg, a work which that celebrated atonalist finished in July of 1935, some months before his death. Suggested by the violinist Louis Krasner (who played it last night) the concerto was inspired by the death of the eighteen-year-old Manon Gropious, the daughter of Gustav Mahler's widow and a dear friend of Berg's. The manuscript was dedicated "To the Memory of an Angel."

The elegiac character of the concerto is further established by the inclusion of an old chorale, "Es ist Genug," which Bach incorporated in one of his cantatas. The concerto is in two parts and each part is in two sections. The presence of a Viennese waltz theme and a Carinthian folk song are, presumably, attempts at a portrait of the unfortunate young lady. Mr. Ernest Newman, after hearing the concerto in London, found that in it the composer had made overtures to tonality, a terrifying accusation with which an Austrian musicologist, a Herr Reich, took issue. Their divergent views are set down at some length in the Boston Symphony's program notes and may be perused by those who would learn the difference between Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

It is curious that, notwithstanding the sentimental origin and the pathetic program of the work, its performance last night left the Boston's local audience remarkably cold. Whether atonal or no it is an arid composition, often ugly in its melodic and harmonic sequences, and rather obvious in its structure. The solo portions are, at least at a first hearing, innocent of that quality which old-fashioned people still call beauty, nor do they suggest the sorrow of death or the melancholy of bereavement. It is presumed that Mr. Krasner, a well-equipped violinist, played it well, since he was the originator and remains the accredited exponent of the concerto, and is, perhaps, the sole owner of the performing rights.

Beethoven's B flat Symphony and Strauss'es "Also Sprach Zarathustra" were the less controversial matters of the evening. Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent orchestra outdid itself in the matters of polish and intonation in the Symphony, yet in my opinion the good doctor's interpretation failed to account for the esteem in which the composition is generally held. If the adjectives "nimble, lively, joyous" of Berlioz, and Sir George Grove's declaration that "the movements fit in their places like limbs and features of a lovely statue; and full of fire and invention as they are, all is subordinated to conciseness, grace and beauty" be true, then the Russian conductor's fast tempo in the "Adagio" and the slow tempo in the third movement worked against the realization of these attributes. For this writer the work came through more like a "regular" and unimaginative exercise in the sonata form than like the "Greek Maiden" among Beethoven symphonies.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEW YORK JOURNAL
MAR 12 1937

Music in Review -:

The Violin Concerto by Alban Berg was heard here for the first time last evening at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert. It was played by Louis Krasner, the artist who first urged the composer to write in this form, and who subsequently has had the honor to introduce this new addition to violin literature in the capitals of Europe and now here.

The concerto is of sentimental as well as novel interest. It is the last completed work of Berg, best known in America as the composer of the opera "Wozzek." In the Spring of 1935 Krasner approached Berg in Vienna with the suggestion that he write a concerto for violin. The suggestion did not meet with ready acceptance. Berg's later opera, 'Lulu," still lay unfinished on his desk. He had other plans and told the violinist not to expect a concerto for at least a year.

But in the month of May fate stepped in to bend his course. He received word of the death of a young girl, Manon Gropius, daughter of Mahler's widow. Berg had been much attached to young Manon. She had shown great promise for the stage. Her death affected him with a keen sense of loss, and on an impulse the idea of composing the violin concerto as a sort of requiem for his young friend took shape in his mind.

Berg was always the most deliberate of workers, but now he wrote with feverish intensity, and in six weeks he could write to Krasne that the concerto was ready. Th manuscript was inscribed "To th memory of an angel." The nex few months were spent on the orchestration, and as he was finishing the last details late in December of that year a sudden illness brought death to Berg at the age of 52.

The concerto, wherever heard so far, first in Barcelona at the International Festival, and then in London, Paris, and Vienna, and has been hailed as a remarkable composition, yet since hearing it one wonders if the eminent foreign critics meant what they wrote.

Although the composer represents so much that is ultra-modern, he turned for the final Adagio of the concerto to an old chorale, "It is Enough" and builds the closing pages into a moving elegy. Berg even takes over Bach's harmonization (Bach had used this same theme for one of his sacred cantatas) and then proceeds with variations which grow into an impassioned climax, followed by a peaceful ending.

When the playing stopped no one was sure that it was the end until Mr. Koussevitzky laid down his baton. Then there was some polite applause.

Mr. Koussevitzky opened the concert with the Beethoven Fourth Symphony and closed with "Also Sprach Zarathustra" by Strauss.

The opera audience last night was simply carried away by Bidu Sayou in the title role of

---

Trib Mar 17

Charles A. Ellis

The death of Charles A. Ellis on Sunday took from the world a rare gentleman whose ideals and standards of business ethics were so high as to seem almost unattainable but who won by those very principles a most enviable place in the world of music and the friendship of a host of people. Since his retirement from active business in the concert field Mr. Ellis never lost interest in music itself and was to be seen in his usual seat at many concerts. He was warmly interested in any new venture of artistic worth, and was always ready to encourage and help the things which stood for the best in music.

His kindness was a virtue one seldom meets with in life. In discussions Mr. Ellis always took the part of the "under dog" and would find reasonable excuse for what others might criticize. During the past ten years my work has taken me to many towns and cities and whether in Buffalo, Cincinnati or Kansas City, I had only to mention the name of Charles Ellis to call forth a tribute to his rare ability, his kindliness and above all his integrity. No words are adequate to express my deep admiration and affection for the kindly gentleman and loyal friend who has been released from his long illness, after a life rich in accomplishments. May those of us who knew him well hold fast to the ideals which were his.

ANITA DAVIS CHASE

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
MAR 13 1937

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD IN 4TH CONCERT

Program, an Excellent One, Features Rimsky—Korsakov's "Scheherezade"

Rimsky-Korsakov's fantastic and colorful symphonic suite, "Scheherezade," based on the "Thousand and One Nights," was played last night with a combination of extraordinary flair and determination by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under George Koussevitzky. It was the fourth of the five concerts the Boston orchestra is to give at the Academy of Music this season.

The program was an excellent one. The first half consisted of Beethoven's Overture to Goethe's "Egmont" played with quite the proper amount of dignity and depth, and Beethoven's Fourth Symphony in B-flat Major, which ever seems lighter and happier than we are wont to expect from the usually grandiose master composer. It may be said that the orchestra's or rather Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of each of them was distinguished.

But even the great Beehoven had to yield in the matter of acclaim to the Russian composer's bizarre musical translation of the Arabian Nights. As concentrated playing by the hard-worked string section was called for, Koussevitzky was enabled to prove his mettle. The orchestration, much too complicated and unconventional for easy exposition, also required that the Boston orchestra work under an uncompromising baton, which it did.. "Scheherazade" is so novel that it must not be repeated too often. It might be better if the task were relegated to Koussevitzky alone.

BLANK PAGE

Shipman's Scrap Book
FOR DUPLICATE ORDER NUMBER 911
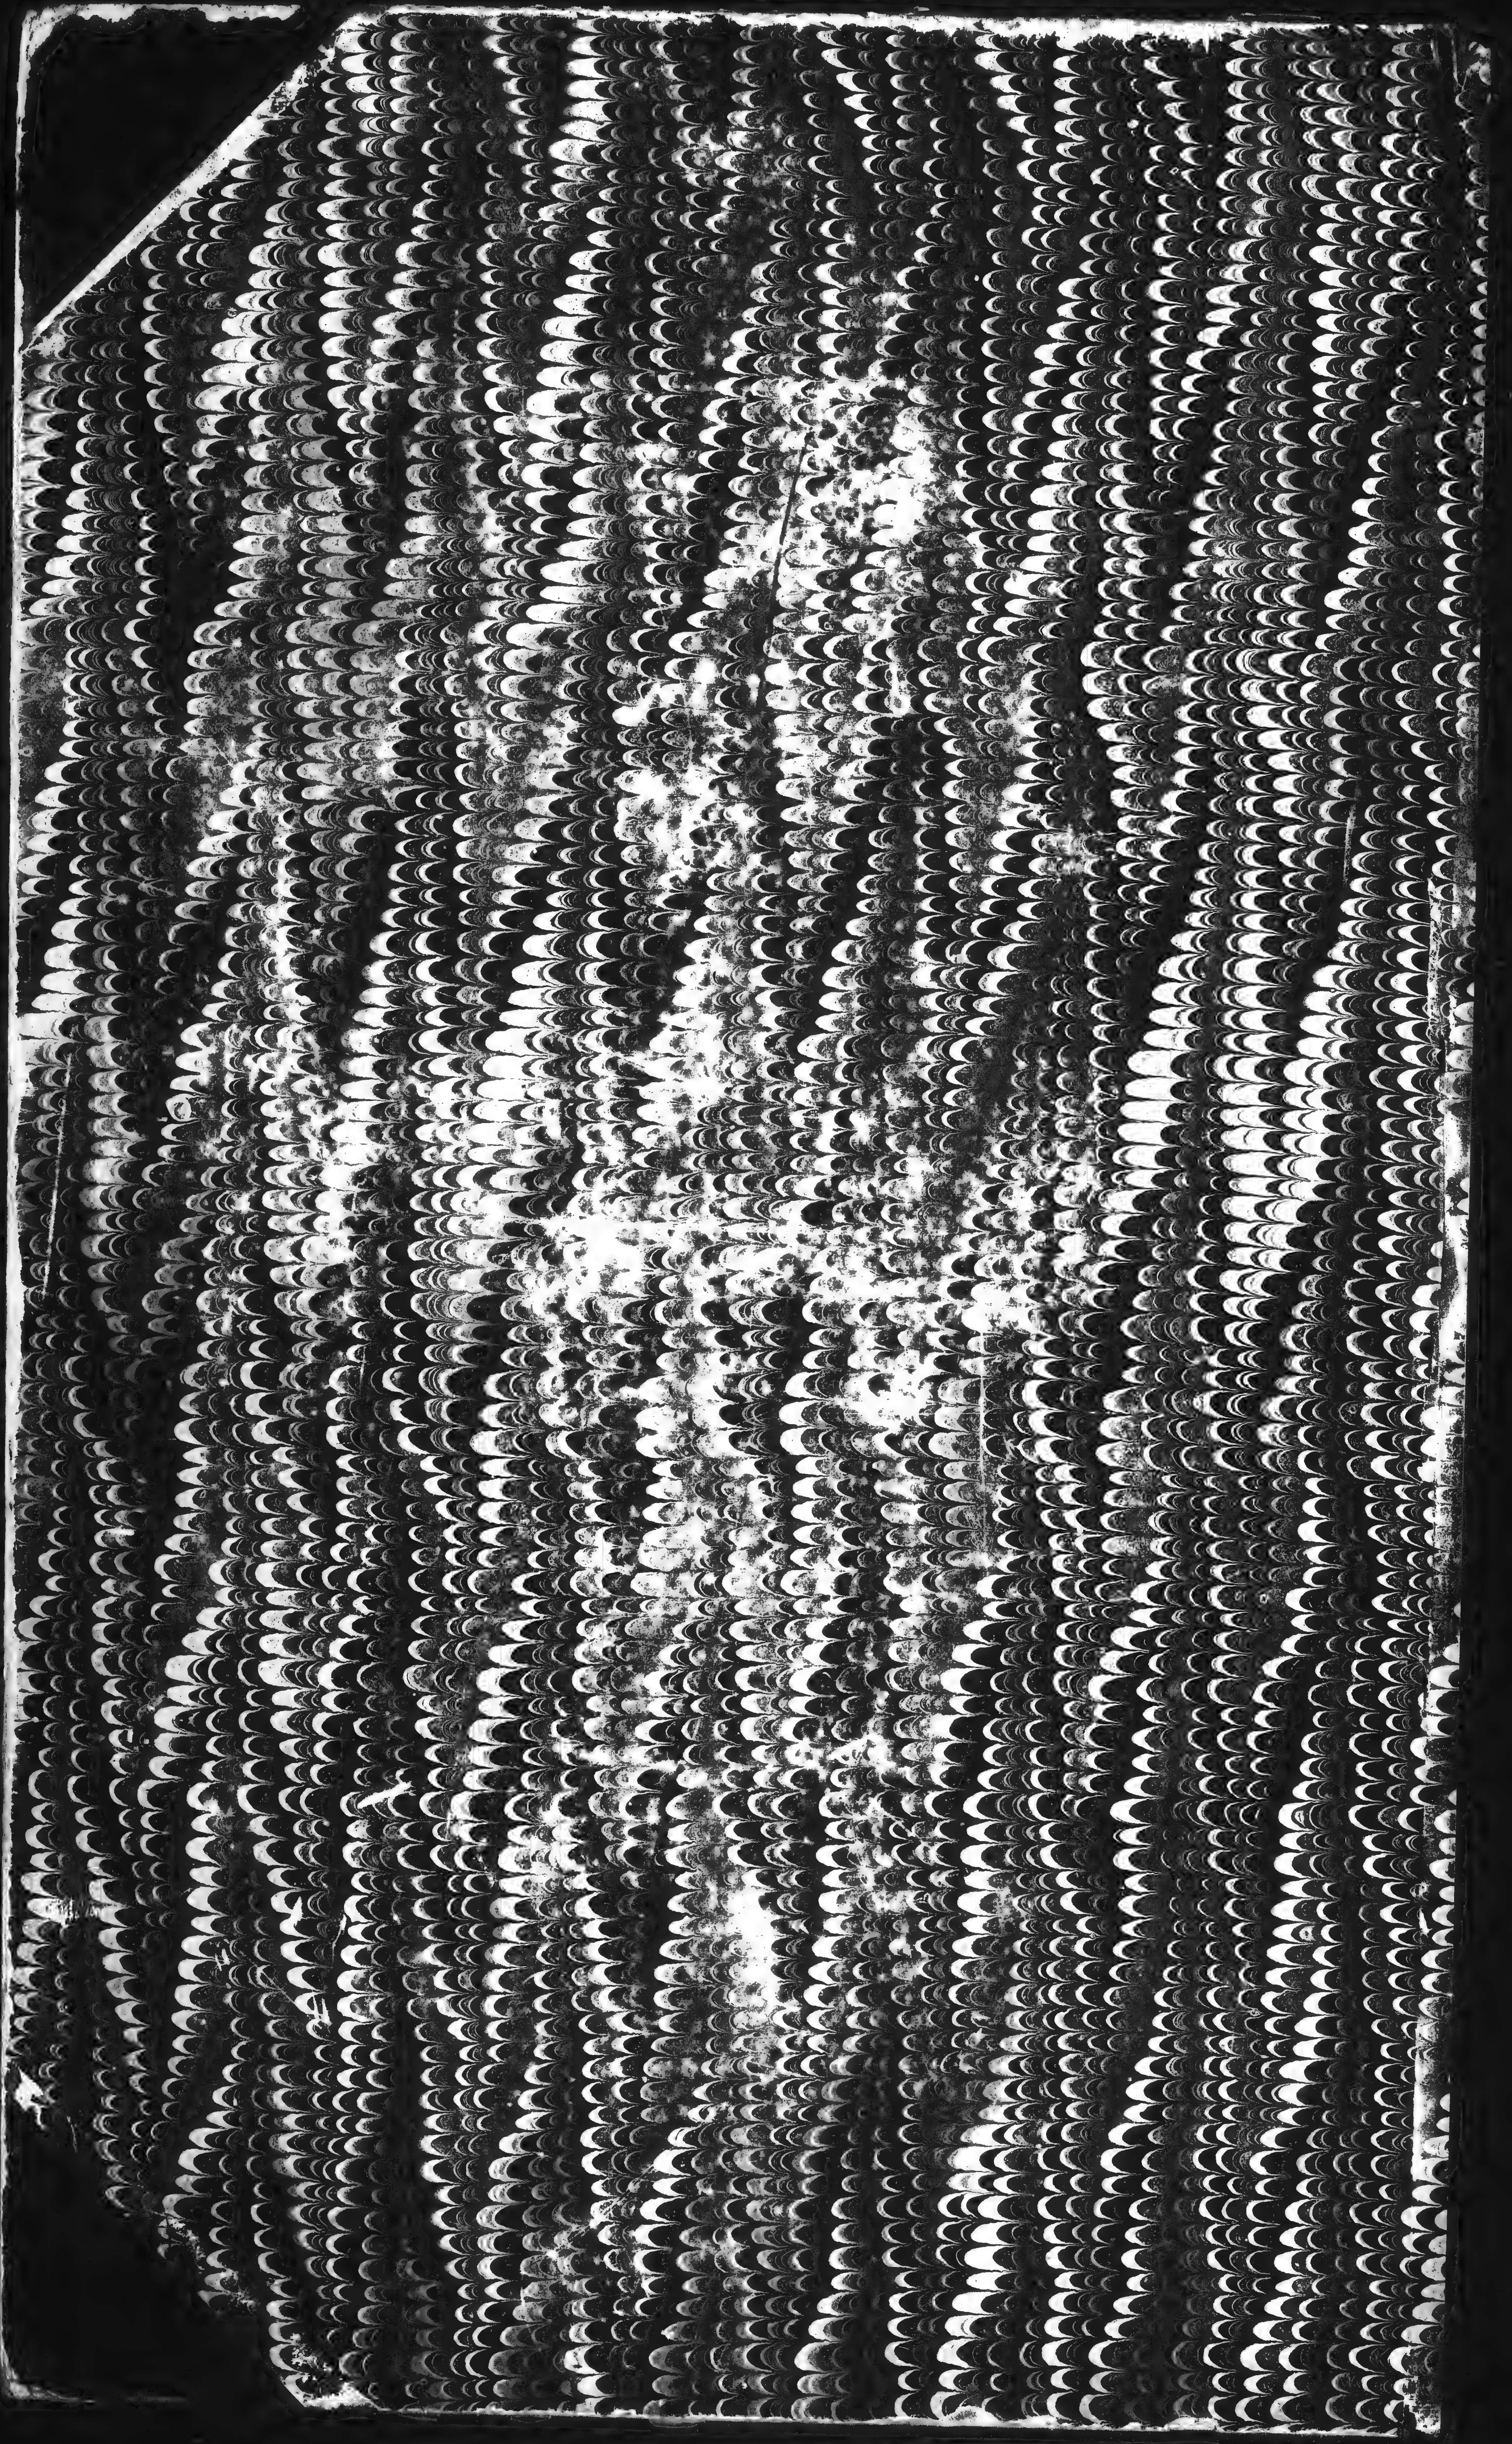
ASA L. SHIPMAN'S SONS
NEW YORK

[236]

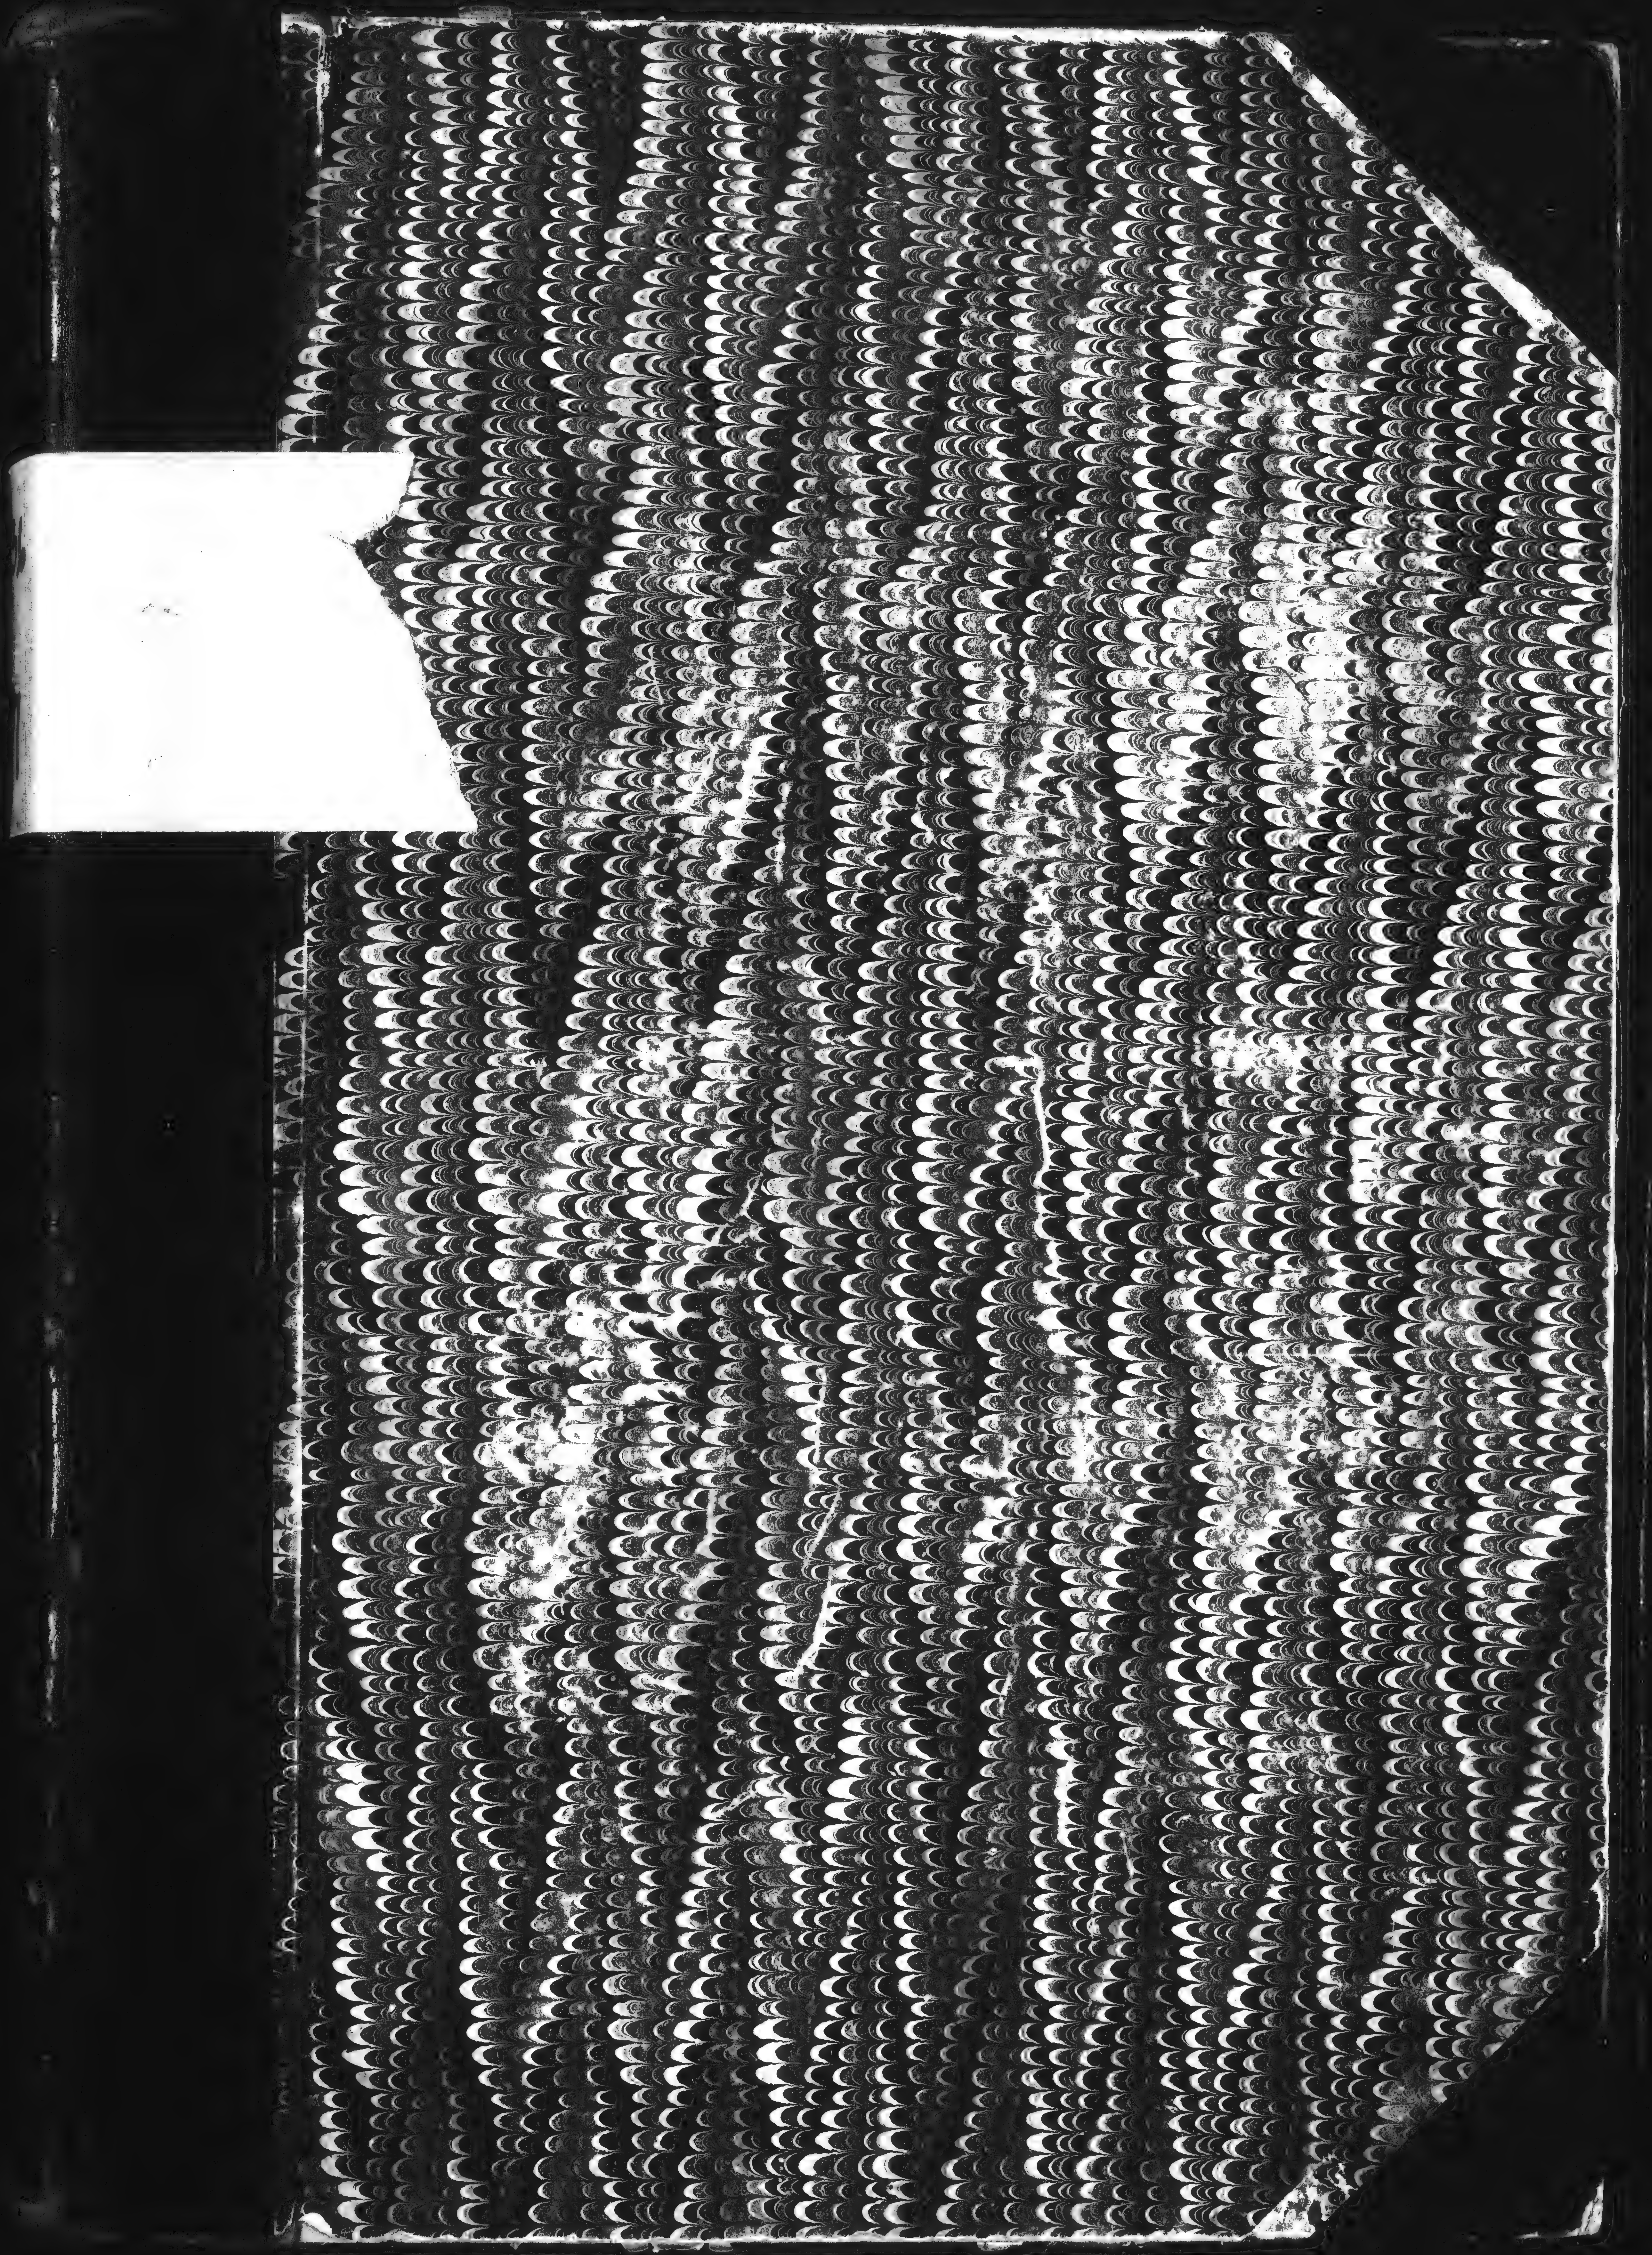


END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 60

Pops
Tanglewood

1936 - 1937



POPE ASKS PRAYERS BY CATHOLICS

Sees World Menaced by Communism and Fascism

VATICAN CITY, Sept. 29 (UP)—Pope Pius XI. today exhorted the world's 331,500,000 Roman Catholics to pray during October for the world's salvation from a "moral and spiritual crisis" that has sprung from Naziism and Communism.

MENACE TO CIVILIZATION

The 80-year-old Pontiff, in a 1200-word encyclical, said that a wave of atheism is sweeping over the world and that it threatens the destruction of all civilization.

The encyclical, devoted to "the rosary of the Blessed Virgin Mary," called upon all the devoted to recite their rosaries, especially during October.

The Pope criticised Communism, deplored trends toward atheism and condemned the ideals of dictators who "forget the wisdom of the gospel and exhume pagan errors and morals."

The latter obviously was in reference to Nazi Germany, where the Catholic Church is involved in strife with Adolf Hitler's regime.

As for himself, the Pontiff asked his followers to render thanks to the Virgin Mary for restoration of his health.

Dangers Confronting World

The encyclical was issued under the date of Monday from Castel Gandolfo, the Papal summer palace outside Rome. It was published tonight in the Vatican organ, Osservatore Romano.

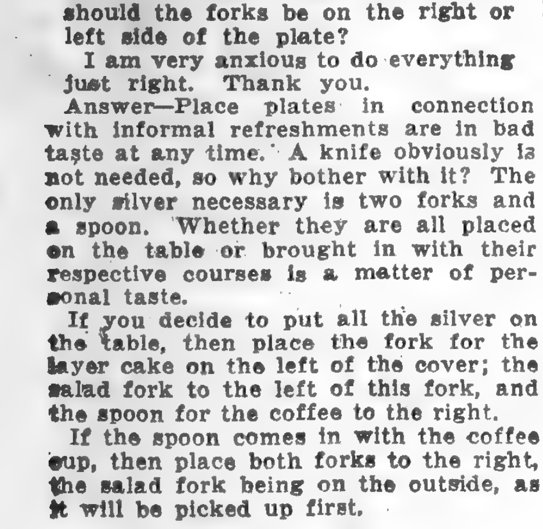
"The dangers which threaten are no less grave than those in the past," an official summary of the encyclical said. "The world is observed to be in a moral and spiritual crisis due to forgetfullness of God. . . .

"Deep dissensions rend the classes of society. On the one hand, Communism rears itself in denial of all rights of private property; on the other hand, the cult of State and the desire to restore order and public authority against the increase of Communism leads men to forget the wisdom of the gospel and exhume pagan errors and morals."

This apparently referred to Nazi Germany's hatred of Soviet Russia.

THE Correct Thing

By PHYLLIS BELMONT



When serving refreshments after an evening of bridge is it necessary to use place plates? I am planning to serve a fruit salad, sandwiches, layer cake and coffee. Do I place a knife at each cover, and if not, should the forks be on the right or left side of the plate?

I am very anxious to do everything just right. Thank you.

Answer—Place plates in connection with informal refreshments are in bad taste at any time. A knife obviously is not needed, so why bother with it? The only silver necessary is two forks and a spoon. Whether they are all placed on the table or brought in with their respective courses is a matter of personal taste.

If you decide to put all the silver on the table, then place the fork for the layer cake on the left of the cover; the salad fork to the left of this fork, and the spoon for the coffee to the right.

If the spoon comes in with the coffee cup, then place both forks to the right, the salad fork being on the outside, as it will be picked up first.

(Copyright Ledger Syndicate)

START HOME OF MRS. COOLIDGE

House to Be Completed by Next March

NORTHAMPTON, Sept. 29—Awarded the contract last night, the William J. Quinn Co., of Longmeadow, today began work on construction of the new Colonial mansion of Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of former President Calvin Coolidge. The home is expected to be completed for occupancy next March 1.

Workmen today cleared out the brush on the half-acre lot and the site of the house was laid out.

Late this afternoon, Mrs. Coolidge, accompanied by Mrs. F. B. Adams, walked from Mrs. Adams' nearby home, where the former First Lady has resided for more than a year, and surveyed the first day's progress on the new home.

Special Features at M. C. O. F. Carnival

The open-air carnival of the St. Augustine Court of the M. C. O. F. Building Fund Association, Inc., which started Monday evening, will continue during the remainder of this week at the old circus grounds on Dorchester avenue, near Andrew square, South Boston.

Special features and attractions have been arranged for each evening. Nearly all of the attractions that were at last year's carnival have been engaged. Many new attractions that have never appeared in South Boston have been added. The midway, with its large number of booths and variety of games, has been providing considerable enjoyment.

James F. Daly, president of the association, is chairman of the general committee; Daniel P. Murray is secretary, Fred W. Goeller, treasurer, and Paul W. Halloran has charge of publicity. Assisting in the arrangements are members of the board of directors of the association and the good of order committee of the court.

SHOE CONCERN DENIED PLEA

Union Refuses Readjustment of Wage Scale

HAVERHILL, Sept. 29—Shoe manufacturers of this city were refused a readjustment of wages by supervisor Michael F. Lynch of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union today after a conference with Edward F. Casey of the Freedlender Shoe Co., representing the manufacturer.

The shoe manufacturers say they find it impossible to sell their $2.35 and $3.35 priced shoes in the open market in competition with the $2 and $3 shoe now having a wide sale. They requested a "supplementary" price list which would allow them to manufacture the $2 and $3 shoe.

Supervisor Lynch refused the request on the grounds that it has been the history of the shoe industry here that any regrading granted by the union has always resulted in a wage cut to workers.

VAIL FUNERAL HELD

Funeral services for George M. Vail, 67, Arlington manufacturer and former builder, who was vice-president of the Vail Brothers-Mauger Corp., of Arlington, took place yesterday afternoon, in the Hartwell Chapel, 792 Massachusetts avenue, Arlington, the Rev. John Nicol Mark, minister of the First Parish Unitarian Church, Arlington, officiating.

MacFadden Flies 1200 Miles in Eight Hours

MIAMI, Fla., Sept. 29 (UP)—Bernarr MacFadden, 69-year-old publisher and physical culturist, landed his Stinson monoplane at Municipal Airport here today, completing a 1200-mile non-stop flight from New York in eight hours and six minutes.

MacFadden, who is the oldest flier to attempt the New York-Miami non-stop hop, took off from Floyd Bennett Airport, New York, at 7:22 a. m. and brought his ship down at Municipal Airport at 3:28 p. m. E. S. T.

The elderly physical culturist, who said he made the flight to test his physical endurance, carried with him a thermos jug of water, pineapple juice, a bottle of honey and two raw carrots.

OVER 7,000,000 LISTEN

The Federal Music Project in this State has presented its units to audiences aggregating more than 7,200,000 persons since its organization as an individual project in July, 1936, William Haddon, State director, announced yesterday. More than 11,000 children and adults received instruction in 63,000 classes in all branches of vocal and instrumental music.

DAUGHTERS OF ST. GEORGE

SANFORD, Me., Sept. 29 (AP)—Mrs. Bessie Norris of Schenectady, N. Y., was elected grand president of the Grand Lodge of the American Independent Order, Daughters of St. George, at the 52nd annual convention of the order here today.

LAST SUDBURY G. A. R. SURVIVOR BURIED

SUDBURY, Sept. 29—The funeral of William E. Bills, last survivor of the G. A. R. here, was held today from his home on Weir Hill road, North Sudbury, followed by a requiem high mass celebrated at St. Anne's Church in Wayland at 9 o'clock by the Rev. George Chaput, the pastor.

The body was escorted from his home to the church by a military escort from the Sudbury American Legion Post.

TO GREET STUDENTS

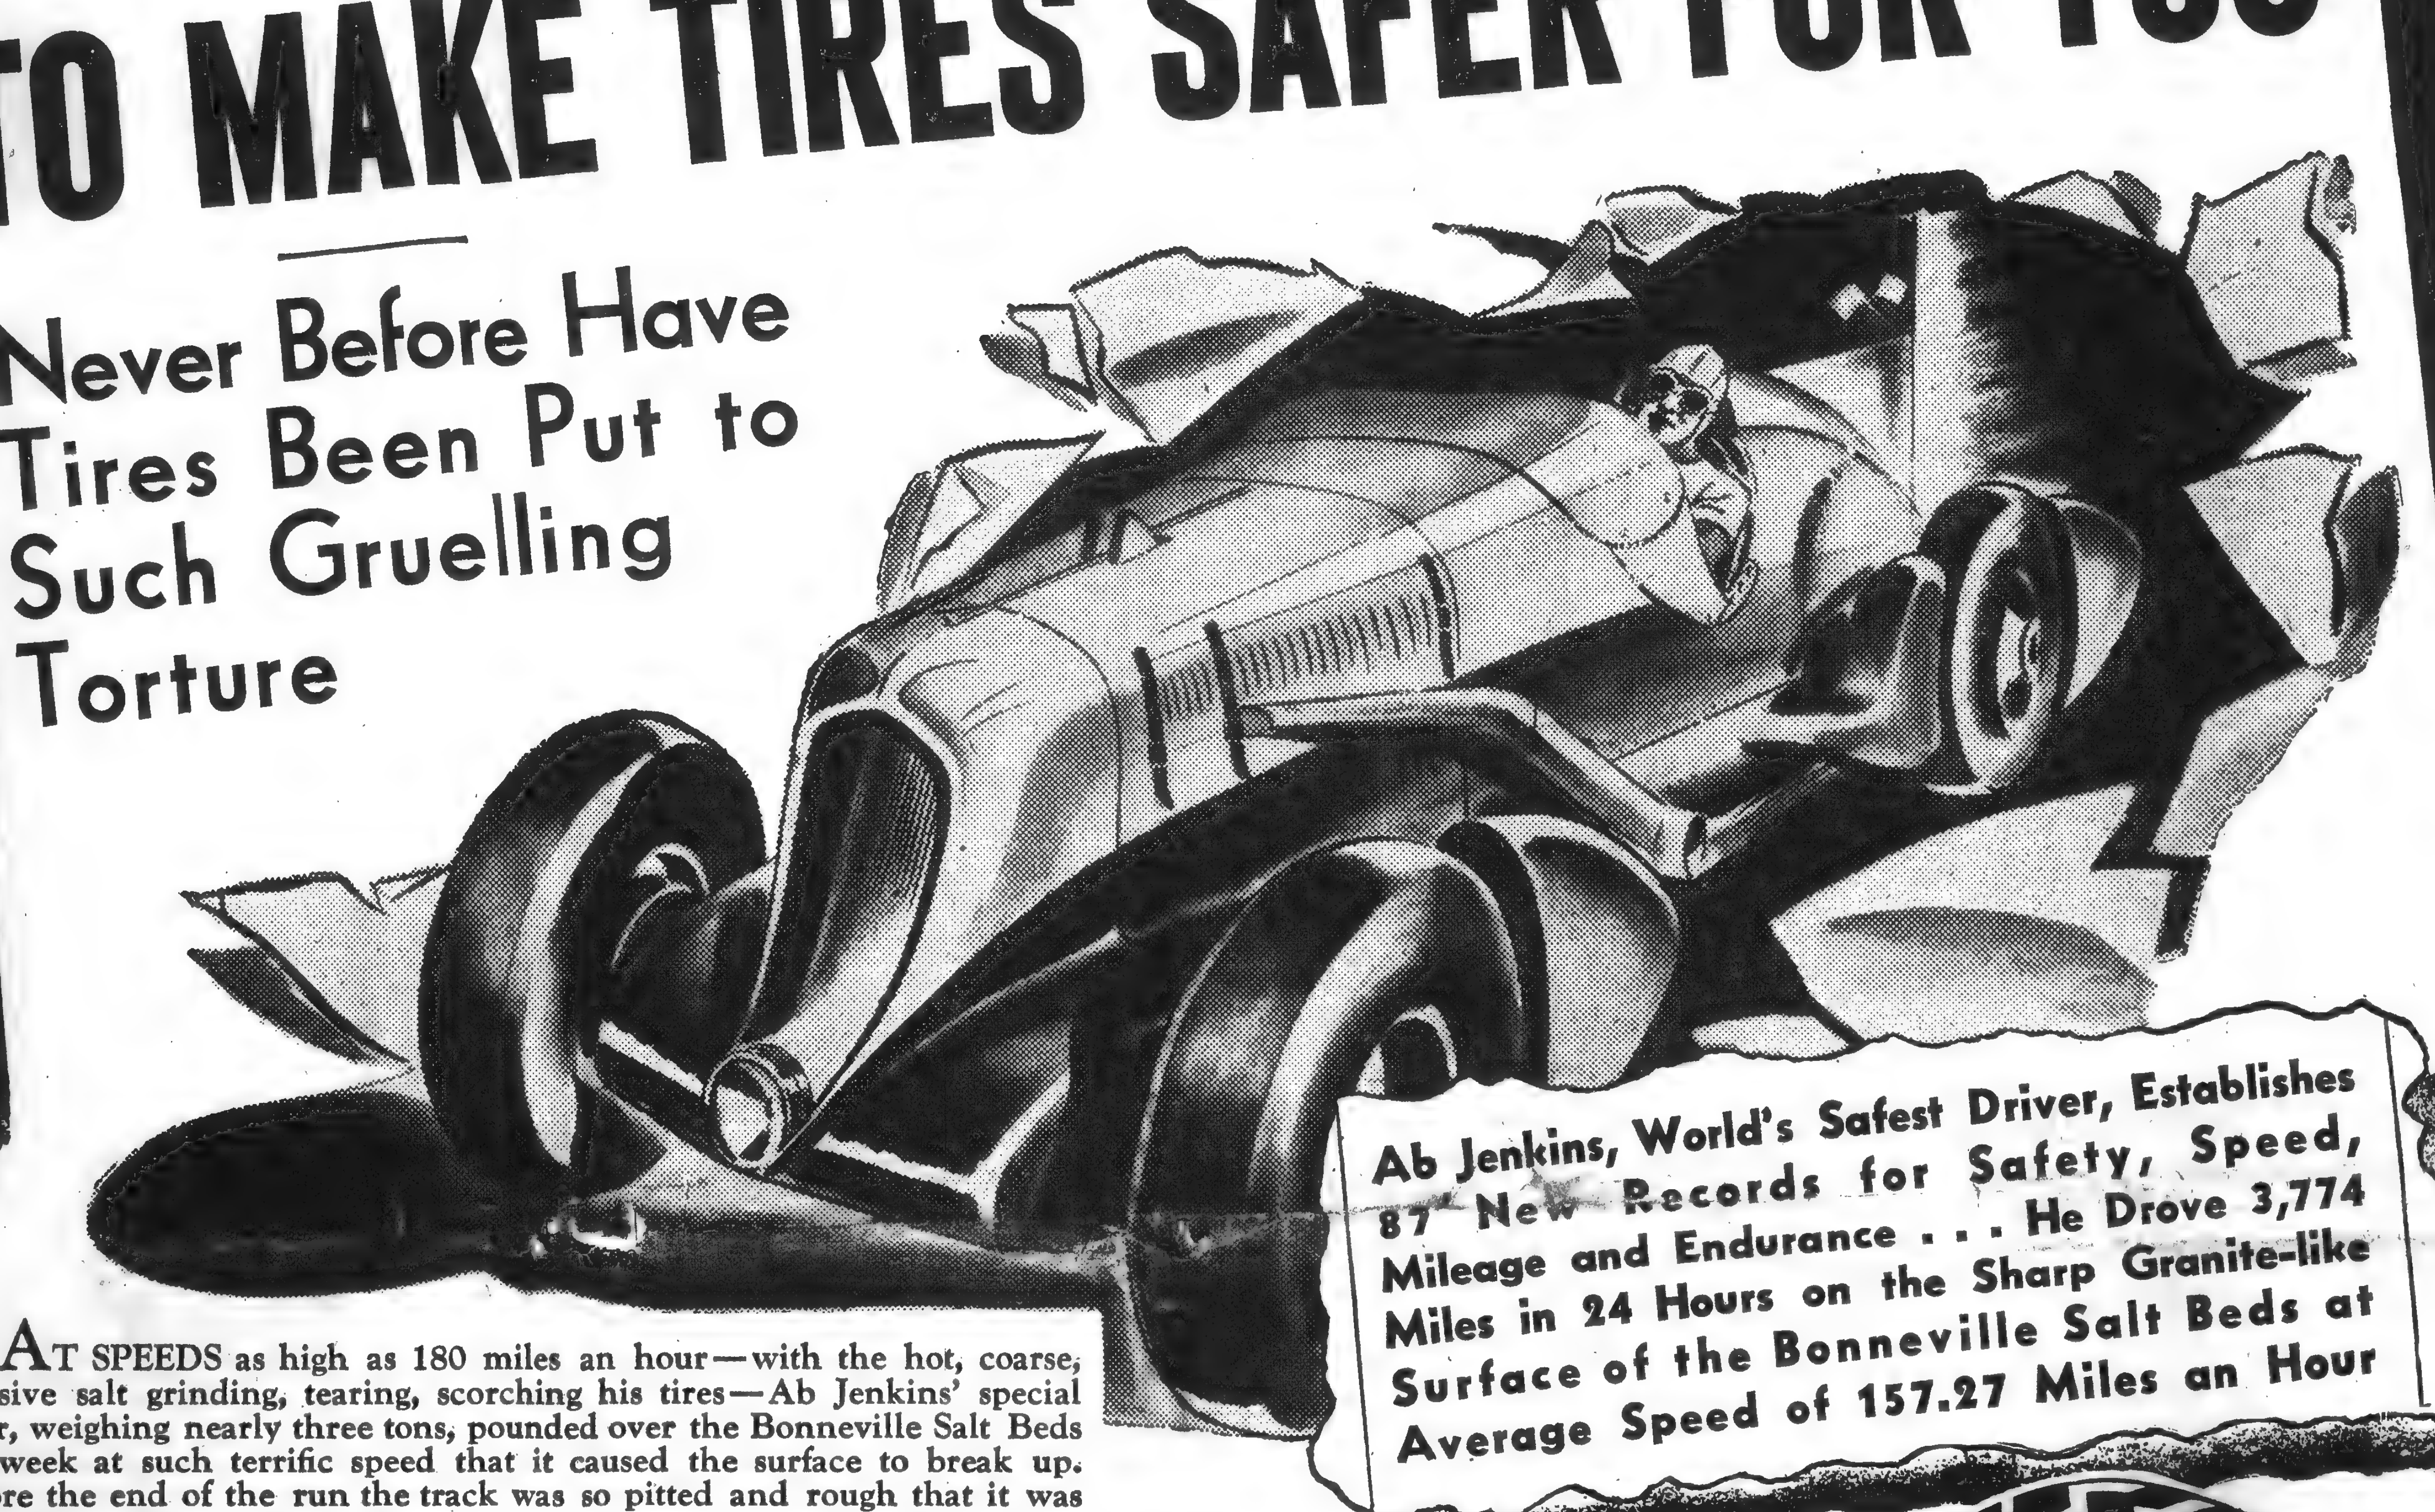
President James B. Conant of Harvard University and Dean Wallace B. Donham of the Harvard Business School will speak tonight at the annual reception for students of the business school.

Do You Know . . .

Why Goats Like Tin Cans?

A favorite stunt of cartoonists is to depict a goat gulping down a barrelfull of tin cans and smacking its lips with that self-satisfied air of one who has just finished a hearty meal. The idea is, no doubt, prompted by the fact that goats are often seen nibbling at discarded cans. They are not eating the tin, however, but simply licking the paper labels, which contain salt.

Since the ordinary diet of goats and other grass-eating animals does not provide much of this essential goiter-preventing material, they must obtain it elsewhere.



87 SPEED RECORDS BROKEN TO MAKE TIRES SAFER FOR YOU

Never Before Have Tires Been Put to Such Gruelling Torture

Ab Jenkins, World's Safest Driver, Establishes 87 New Records for Safety, Speed, Mileage and Endurance . . . He Drove 3,774 Miles in 24 Hours on the Sharp Granite-like Surface of the Bonneville Salt Beds at Average Speed of 157.27 Miles an Hour

AT SPEEDS as high as 180 miles an hour—with the hot, coarse, abrasive salt grinding, tearing, scorching his tires—Ab Jenkins' special racer, weighing nearly three tons, pounded over the Bonneville Salt Beds last week at such terrific speed that it caused the surface to break up. Before the end of the run the track was so pitted and rough that it was almost impossible to hold the car on its course. Yet Jenkins set 87 new World, International and American speed records on Firestone Tires.

Building tires capable of establishing such records is made possible by patented Firestone manufacturing processes. These exclusive features enable Firestone to provide car owners with tires that are extra safe.

For the greatest protection of yourself and your family equip your car with Firestone TRIPLE-SAFE Tires. By TRIPLE-SAFE we mean—

1 PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING—The scientific tread design gives longer non-skid mileage and stops your car up to 25% quicker.

2 PROTECTION AGAINST BLOWOUTS—Firestone Tires run up to 28 degrees cooler because every fiber of every cord in every ply is saturated with liquid rubber by the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process. This counteracts the internal friction and heat that ordinarily cause blowouts.

3 PROTECTION AGAINST PUNCTURES—Two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread give extra protection against punctures.

Make your car tire-safe for fall and winter driving. Join the Firestone SAVE A LIFE Campaign today by equipping your car with a set of new FIRESTONE TRIPLE-SAFE Tires—the safest tires that money can buy!

EXTRA POWER BATTERY
Allrubber Separators give 40% quicker starting power.
ASK ABOUT OUR "CHANGEOVER" PRICE

AUTO RADIO
6 All-Metal Tubes—8" Dynamic Speaker.
$39.95
Includes Universal Control Head
CUSTOM BUILT DASH MOUNTINGS AVAILABLE

CAR HEATER
4-way heat distribution—40% more heat
$19.95
CUSTOM FIT DEFROSTERS AVAILABLE FOR POPULAR CARS

Firestone HIGH SPEED TIRE

3.75-18.	$ 7.85	7.00-16.	$20.80
4.50-21.	10.05	7.50-16.	26.40
4.75-19.	10.60	HEAVY DUTY
5.00-17.	10.80	4.50-21.	$12.65
5.00-19.	11.40	4.75-19.	13.05
5.25-17.	12.25	5.00-19.	14.35
5.25-18.	12.70	5.25-18.	15.85
5.25-19.	13.10	5.50-16.	16.25
5.50-16.	13.75	5.50-17.	16.55
5.50-17.	13.95	6.00-16.	18.40
5.50-18.	14.30	6.25-16.	20.45
6.00-16.	15.55	6.50-16.	21.15
6.25-16.	17.40	7.00-16.	24.45
6.50-16.	19.15	7.50-16.	32.00

OTHER SIZES PROPORTIONATELY LOW

YOU CANNOT AFFORD TO DRIVE WITHOUT FIRESTONE TRIPLE-SAFE TIRES

Last year highway accidents cost the lives of more than 38,000 men, women and children and a million more were injured! More than 40,000 of these deaths and injuries were caused directly by punctures, blowouts and skidding due to smooth, worn, unsafe tires!

Right is a section cut from a new Firestone Tire. Note the thick, non-skid protection against skidding, blowouts and punctures. Come in and see a demonstration.

Left is a section cut from a smooth, worn tire, with non-skid protection worn off. Tires in this condition are liable to punctures, blowouts and skidding.

JOIN THE FIRESTONE Save a life CAMPAIGN TODAY

Firestone TRIPLE-SAFE TIRES

Listen to the Voice of Firestone featuring Margaret Speaks, Monday evenings over Nationwide N. B. C. Red Network

AT ALL TEXACO STATIONS—AT ALL TYDOL STATIONS—AT ALL SOCONY STATIONS DISPLAYING FIRESTONE SERVICE SIGNS

The following Firestone dealers are prepared to serve you:

BARRABEE SERVICE STORES Inc.
143 Brookline Ave., Boston
COMmonwealth 4900

FIRESTONE SERVICE STORES, Inc.
Kendall Sq., Cambridge
KIRkland 5550

BARRABEE SERVICE STORES, Inc.
40 Arsenal St., Watertown
MIDdlesex 3988

R. H. WHITE CO. (9th Floor)
Motorists' Department
HANcock 4100

FIRESTONE AUTO SUPPLY AND SERVICE STORES
78 Washington St., Quincy
PREsident 0200

ALLSTON
GIANT BATTERY SERVICE CO.
204 Brighton Ave. STAdium 1780
PARKVALE GARAGE
164 Brighton Ave. STAdium 0700

ARLINGTON
COLONIAL MOTORS, INC.
745 Mass. Ave. ARLington 5600
CHARLES B. PERHAM SERVICE STATION
1211 Mass. Ave. ARLington 4043
Broadway and Franklin St. ARLington 6495

BELMONT
WHEATON MOTOR SALES
307 Trapelo Road. BELmont 3538
BARONE'S SERVICE STATION
Trapelo Rd. and Hull St. BELmont 3994

BOSTON
ALL FISHER HILL STATIONS TALbot 5000
ALL PUBLIX STATIONS
Kenmore Sq. COMmonwealth 1350
BOWDOIN SQUARE GARAGE
91 Cambridge St. CAPitol 9265
STUDEBAKER SALES & SERVICE
900 Commonwealth Ave. ASPinwall 9000
BROOKLINE AVE. GARAGE
462 Brookline Ave. ASPinwall 4000
DANKER & DONOHUE, INC.
10 Peabody St. ASPinwall 5235
LAPHAM-BROWN OIL CORP.
525 Huntington Ave. GARrison 8570
MOTOR MART GARAGE
Park Square. HUBbard 3380
MUSEUM SQUARE GARAGE
435 Parker St. GARrison 9765
NATIONAL GARAGE
20 Buckingham St. KENmore 8150
NEWBURY ST. GARAGE
434 Newbury St. KENmore 1922
NORTH END PARKING CO.
8 Atlantic Ave. LAFayette 4900
PORTLAND ST. GARAGE
119 Portland St. LAFayette 1056
DAVID H. SEDERSKY
425 Tremont St. DEVonshire 9004

BRIGHTON
P. E. LEPPER
1955 Beacon St. LONgwood 0468

BROOKLINE
T. C. BAKER
2 Boylston St. BEAcon 5900
VERNDALE GARAGE
525 Harvard Ave. ASPinwall 2001
EVERETT AVENUE AUTO PARTS CO.
48 Boylston St. LONgwood 3250
LONGWOOD TOWERS GARAGE
20 Chapel St. LONgwood 3200

CAMBRIDGE
HUGHES MOTOR MART
2355 Mass. Ave. KIRkland 5040
HALE'S OIL CO.
603 Concord Ave. KIRkland 5533
FISK ALDEN CO.
132 Brookline St. TROwbridge 0633

CHARLESTOWN LEIGHTON'S STATION, INC.
80 Chapman St. CHA'sotwn 1798

CHELSEA
MYSTIC GARAGE
62 Broadway. CHElsea 0446
EVERETT AVE. AUTO PARTS
234 Everett Ave. CHElsea 3350

COHASSET
RUITER MOTOR SALES
So. Main St. COHasset 0450

DORCHESTER
NEPONSET OIL CO.
950 Old Colony Parkway. TALbot 9000

EAST BOSTON
EVERETT AVE. AUTO PARTS
378 Chelsea St. EASt Boston 3350

HINGHAM
BERRY'S SERVICE STATION
Fearing Rd. HINgham 1047

HULL
HULL GARAGE
(J. R. Wheeler, Prop.) HULL 0498

LEXINGTON
F. K. JOHNSON
39 Bedford St. LEXington 1000

LYNN
ESSEX TIRE & SUPPLY CO.
115 Central Ave. PACKson 666

MALDEN
EASTERN AUTO PARTS CO., INC.
182 Eastern Ave. MALden 4000

MEDFORD
EASTERN AUTO PARTS CO., INC.
76 Main St. MYStic 6060
ROCHFORD MOTORS
364 Boston Ave. MYStic 0090

MELROSE
BROWN'S LUBRITORIUM
887 Main St. MELrose 2716

NEEDHAM
ADAMS BROS.
26 Pickering St. NEEdham 1440

NEWTON
GARDEN CITY MOTOR PARTS
316 Washington St. NEWton 1350

NEWTONVILLE
NEWTON MOTOR SALES
773 Washington St. NEWton 4300

NEWTON CENTER
KERRIGAN BROS.
749 Beacon St. CENtre 4600

NEWTON HIGHLANDS
EARLE S. JOHNSON
1151 Walnut St. CENtre 5070

NORWOOD
OLSON & LEPPER
519 Washington St. NORwood 0440

NEWBURYPORT
EASTERN AUTO PARTS CO., INC.
28 Market Sq. NEWburyport 1100

PORTSMOUTH—NEW HAMPSHIRE
EASTERN AUTO PARTS CO., INC.
322 State St. Phone 1538

RANDOLPH
NORTH MAIN ST. GARAGE
659 No. Main St. RANdolph 0012

READING
HOOK & COWARD
Cor. Chute and High Sts. READing 0267

REVERE
NORTH SHORE VULC. CO.
No. Shore Rd. REVere 1836

ROSLINDALE
EASTERN AUTO PARTS CO., INC.
4170 Washington St. PARkway 6812
ROSLINDALE BATTERY STATION
18 Roberts St. PARkway 3443

SOMERVILLE
EVERETT AVE. AUTO PARTS CO.
70 Webster Ave. SOMerset 1631
E. L. BRAGG CO., INC.
541 Broadway. SOMerset 1206
CHARLES H. COULTER, INC.
Cutter Square. SOMerset 0490
WILLOW GARAGE, INC.
131 Willow Ave. SOMerset 0466

STONEHAM
A. T. HOLMAN
Main and South Sts., STOneham 1064

WAKEFIELD
BROWN'S LUBRITORIUM
100 Albion St. CRYstal 0270

WALTHAM
EASTERN AUTO PARTS CO., INC.
738 Main St. WALtham 4080

WELLESLEY
WELLESLEY MOTOR SALES
475 Washington St. WELlesley 2700

E. WEYMOUTH
SCHOFIELD'S GARAGE
1515 Commercial St. WEYmouth 1700

WEST ROXBURY
WHITTIER'S SERVICE STATION
1744 Center St. PARkway 3233

WINCHESTER
MURPHY & REARDON
641 Main St. WINchester 2348
EVERETT HAMBLY
751 Main St. WINchester 0477

WINTHROP
DAN HONAN'S SERVICE STATION
44 Pauline St. OCEan 0773

Now—
get your station at the touch of a finger

GENERAL ELECTRIC

TOUCH TUNING

Brings in your station
Instantly—Silently—Automatically

Press a button—that's all
WITH THE AMAZING NEW G-E TONE MONITOR

MODEL F-107 illustrated

10 Tubes, 3 Bands, ONLY $144.95

NOW comes a radio that actually tunes itself. There are thirteen separate buttons for your favorite stations—each one marked with station letters. A touch of your finger, and there's your program—perfectly tuned.

G-E Touch Tuning is the highest development in automatic tuning—because:

- no dials to twist, twirl or swish
- no fumbling with knobs
- more stations at your fingertips—16 buttons in all
- exclusive G-E Scan Button
- positive in operation
- simplified short wave tuning
- tunes itself perfectly—and silently
- just press a button—that's all.

Stop in at your nearest General Electric Radio Dealer. Compare G-E Touch Tuning with other automatic tuning devices—then decide for yourself whether any other radio offers so much performance and value. Your radio dollars buy more in the new 1938 General Electric.

GENERAL ELECTRIC RADIO

FOR REPLACEMENTS SPECIFY GENERAL ELECTRIC PRE-TESTED TUBES

FREE DEMONSTRATION

GLADLY ARRANGED BY ANY OF THESE G-E RADIO DEALERS

Boston—Gilchrist Co., 417 Washington St.
R. H. White Co., 518 Washington St.
Chickering & Sons, 146 Boylston St.
Clark & Mills Elec. Co., 75 Newbury St.
C. W. Homeyer Co., 498 Boylston St.
Edward Bass Elec. Co., 48 High St.
Dewey Radio Co., 140 Summer St.
A. Marks Co., 77 Summer St.
Union Elec. Supply Co., 92 High St.
Banet Radio Ex., 167 Washington St.
C. C. Peters, 731 Boylston St.
Harold's Radio Co., 36 Brattle St.
Radio Center, 32 Stuart St.
E. C. Dimock, 261 Franklin St.
Belmont—Cullington Radio, 86 Trapelo Rd.
Beverly—Samuel Knight Sons Co., 282 Cabot St.
Brighton—John F. Conaty, 596 Washington St.
Brookline—Coolidge Corner Elec. Shop, 1416 Beacon St.
Cambridge—Clark & Mills Elec. Co., 37A Brattle St.
Harvard Coop. Society, Harvard Sq.
Hill Hardware Co., 2014 Mass. Ave.
J. McKenna, 19 Brattle St.
Briggs & Briggs, 1270 Mass. Ave.
Charlestown—Hart Furniture Co., 246 Main St.
Chelsea—I. Grood Radio Co., 295 Broadway
Concord—Concord Radio Lab., West Concord
Lawton & Lufkin Appliance Co., 18 Belnap St.
Dorchester—Hawkins-Elwell Co., 577 Washington St.
Home Appliance Sales Co., 1877 Dorchester Ave.
Meredith & Gray, 534 Washington St.
J. J. Piotti, 760 Dudley St.
East Boston—East Boston Radio Co., 107 Porter St.
D. Levenson & Sons, 59 Meridian St.
Times Electric Co., 984 Saratoga St.
Everett—Olsen's Electrical Shop, 508 Broadway
Framingham—C. W. Hansen Co., 32 Union Ave.
Gloucester—Wm. G. Brown Co., Main St.
Hyde Park—Hyde Park Radio, 1191 River St.
The Waterman Co., 1228 Hyde Park Ave.
Jamaica Plain—Alpert's Furn. Showrooms, 307 Centre St.
Lawrence—Brainerd Motor Co., 139 Jackson St.
Korbey Heating & Oil Co., 246½ Broadway
Scott Jewelry Co., 428 Essex St.
M. J. Sullivan, Inc., 226 Essex St.
Lowell—Bon Marche Dry Goods Co., Merrimack St.
Gaumont Bros., 338 Merrimack St.
Scott Jewelry Co., 60 Merrimack St.
Lynn—Hutchinson Hdwe. Co., 49 Munroe St.
C. V. Stackpole & Son, 27 Market St.
Malden—Bliss & Sage Elec. Co., 145 Pleasant St.
Medford—The Big Bear, 200 Boston Ave.
General Oil Co., 66 Main St.
Needham—Suburban Radio & Hdwe. Co., Great Plain Ave.
Newton—Moore & Moore, 361 Centre St.
Plymouth—Plymouth Home Service, Court St.
Quincy—Harry G. March, 1577 Hancock St.
Revere—Revere Radio & Appl. Co., 240 Broadway
Roslindale—Parkway Radio Elec. Service, 4402 Wash. St.
W. S. Van Brocklin, 1036 South St.
Roxbury—Bill's Tire & Battery Service, 240 Blue Hill Ave.
Gerber Radio Co., 149A Humbolt Ave.
A. F. Kennedy, 77 Warren St.
Salem—Lefavour Music House, 186 Essex St.
Wm. G. Webber Co., Essex and Wash. Sts.
Somerville—E. J. Mahoney, 228A Broadway
Parke Snow, Inc., Davis Sq.
South Boston—James Ellis Co., 405 Broadway
George McShane, Inc., 118 Dorchester St.
Wakefield—Russell Electric Co., 418 Main St.
Waltham—Parke Snow, Inc., Moody St.
Watertown—Hawes Electric Co., 15 Main St.

Listen to the G-E HOUR OF CHARM, Monday Evenings, 9:30, NBC Red Network

Testifies Against Ex-Wife in Divorce

MRS. ROSEALPHA TRAYERS
Her divorced husband testified against her in a hearing at Salem yesterday.

SALEM, Sept. 29—Giving testimony in behalf of another woman, 45-year-old Edward P. Trayers, a Lynn fireman, came to the witness stand in Probate Court today and supported the contentions of two detectives that his divorced wife embraced another man in the darkened living room of a Saugus cottage one night in the spring of 1936.

The man who took part in the alleged love scene was 42-year-old Daniel A. Conroy of Central street, Peabody, according to Trayers. Mrs. Mary E. Conroy of Lynn is petitioning for a divorce on the grounds of desertion and infidelity. And the woman in the arms of Mrs. Conroy's husband that night, the fireman claimed, was Mrs. Rosealpha M. Trayers of Saugus, whom he himself later divorced.

Conroy, who is contesting the current divorce action, was named as a co-respondent in the Trayers suit.

Judge O'Brien adjourned the hearing until tomorrow morning, at which time Mrs. Conroy herself will come to the witness stand.

Kolodny Honored by Order Brith Abraham

NYMAN H. KOLODNY
Named chairman of the Board of Deputies of Massachusetts of the Independent Order Brith Abraham.

The Independent Order Brith Abraham last night at its annual meeting at the Parker House elected Nyman H. Kolodny of Boston as the chairman of the board of deputies of Massachusetts. This order has a national membership of 100,000 and the membership in Massachusetts is 40,000.

Mr. Kolodny has been prominently identified with the order for many years and after serving as district deputy grandmaster and as vice-president of the board was honored last night by election as chairman of the board.

Rockland Man Named Chief Bank Examiner

George C. Mansfield of Rockland, oldest man in point of service in the State banking department, was named yesterday as chief examiner for the department by Commissioner William P. Husband.

The appointment is the outgrowth of a recent examination by Commissioner Husband to determine the fitness of approximately 100 examiners of different classifications. Mansfield will succeed Burton T. Spencer of Worcester, who has been acting as chief examiner for the past two years. Spencer will continue as an examiner in the department. Mansfield, as chief examiner, will be paid a salary of $4200 a year.

LIFERS GOOD FOR PAROLES

Officer Says Only Two Out of 170 Failed

Paying tribute to both Commissioner of Correction Arthur T. Lyman and State Parole Board Chairman Ralph W. Robart, who are at odds over the parole situation, William M. Robinson, State parole officer and former representative, last night defended the paroling of lifers before 100 members of the 76th Division of the 301st Field Artillery Veterans' Association at the Soldiers and Sailors Club.

Lifers make the best kind of prisoners, Robinson told the veterans. They cause no trouble in prisons and are "splendid parolees," he said.

Of 170 lifers pardoned or paroled during the past 10 years, only two have been brought back to the State prison for further offences, he stated.

"You hear a lot about the setting loose of convicts, but there is much less to fear than you would imagine," he declared.

Degraded morale and broken homes were blamed for the "popularity" of crime among young boys by the former representative, who cited cases from his 25 years of experience.

"Night clubs are running wild," he declared; "Our children are reading cheap trash in magazines and seeing disgusting moving pictures, and then going home to witness drunkenness and irresponsibility among their parents. What chance have these children of today?

"If you want to give your child a present, give him or her more of your time. If you don't give them that 'pal' friendship, they are bound to go elsewhere to find it."

He described some of his experiences with notorious criminals and exhibited some of the home-made instruments used by prisoners at Charlestown prison in escape attempts.

ARRESTED IN COURTROOM

Perjury Alleged in $10,000 Accident Case

Taken into custody on presumption of perjury after she had testified in a $10,000 accident case in which she was the plaintiff, Mrs. Mary Roach, 55, of 27 Pine street, Stoneham, was released late yesterday from the East Cambridge jail under bail of $500.

The trial came to an abrupt halt in Middlesex Superior Court as Judge Franklin T. Hammond ordered the woman held for the grand jury and declared a mistrial. She was seeking damages from the estate of the late John R. Stevens of Newburyport, claiming she was injured by slipping on an icy sidewalk in front of Stoneham property owned by Stevens.

After she had given testimony regarding the injuries she allegedly received when she fell, Dec. 30, 1933, stating the length of time it had taken her to recover, defence counsel produced records of testimony she had given in another damage case heard at a previous date. After comparing the testimony given by her in the cases, Judge Hammond found presumption of perjury and directed court officers to take the woman into custody.

SMARTEST, SMOOTHEST RIDE IN AMERICA

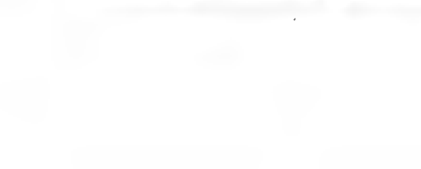
YET FARES REMAIN LESS THAN 1½ CENTS PER MILE AVERAGE FOR ROUND TRIPS

—and the lowest-cost trip, too! You can travel by Greyhound at only 1/3 the cost of driving a car—and enjoy all the extra-fare comforts of the new Super-Coaches at no extra fare. See more, save more—by Greyhound.

Round Trip		Round Trip
NEW YORK	$5.35	NEW HAVEN	$4.25
PORTLAND	2.70	HARTFORD	3.55
WASHINGTON	10.35	CHICAGO	25.85
PHILADELPHIA	6.75	DETROIT	20.65

MONTREAL
One Way $6.25 Rd. Trip $11.25
First Class Service Via Frontier Coach

GREYHOUND TERMINAL
222 Boylston Street, Park Square
Tel. Commonwealth 5400



GREYHOUND Lines

BAR ASSN. GUARD FOR HIGH COURT

Creates Commission to Watch All Attacks on Judiciary

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 29 (AP)—The American Bar Association created a seven-man "standing army" today, ready to spring into action in the event of further attempts to revise the federal judiciary system.

Without opposition or debate, a record-breaking attendance of the association's assembly voiced approval of a special committee's report recommending the setting up of a commission of seven members to meet any new efforts to "remake the courts."

PLAN TO GUARD COURT

The bar's legislative body, the house of delegates, added its prompt ratification to the assembly's expression, likewise unanimously approving the report prepared by a committee headed by Sylvester C. Smith of Phillipsburg, N. J.

The commission will be appointed by the association's president. It will be instructed to report any proposed changes in the country's judicial system to the Bar Association for a membership referendum which would guide the action of the commission.

Another reverberation of the Supreme Court controversy was the effort of Lessing Rosenthal, Chicago, to record the bar as favoring mandatory public hearings in the Senate on Supreme Court nominations.

After a flurry of heated discussion, the assembly voted to abandon consideration of the pending federal child labor amendment rather than submit it to a referendum of the membership, an action recommended by a committee whose title included the phrase "to oppose ratification" of the amendment.

Higher Standards for Lawyers

Robert M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, warned the bar tonight that the nation's lawyers must "do something pretty promptly" if they want to continue to "command sufficient respect to impose on the country their conception of justice."

"I must admit that few universities and few law schools seem much interested in anything but cook-book drill," Hutchins said in an address on legal education.

"If the bar wants educated lawyers," he said, "it can get them by making its wishes known and enforcing them through its control of the rites of admission.

"If they (the lawyers) continue to accept what is done as the standard of what to do; if they continue to seek large fees under the impression that they are the common good; if legal ethics mean little more than a protective tariff in favor of the bar; if we are regarded as the spokesmen of special privilege; if our chief claim to public admiration is our agility in making the worse cause appear the better, then we are lost; then we cannot hope to make the community accept our moral leadership."

Hutchins told his audience mechanical requirements in courses of study for admission to the bar would not serve.

Wrong Kind of Lawyers

"It is perfectly possible to cover these materials," he said, "in such a way as to defeat the production of the kind of lawyers that we presumably want and to produce instead sly, corrupt, amoral and dangerous brethren for us.

"The student can learn that philosophy is getting adjusted to his environment, that economics is how to get rich, and that political science is who gets what and how.

"We could not expect from such an education that the neophyte would be prepared to join us in our noble efforts to improve the moral and intellectual level of the bar. He will be of no greater assistance to us than the lawyer who thinks that the law is merely what (and whatever) the courts will do."

Senator Bennett Champ Clark of Missouri told the international law section "there is at the present time no such thing as international law," as regards the rules of warfare.

"Let us take the American flag off munitions ships," he urged, after a discussion of the "futility of trying to defend our neutral rights and freedom of the seas.

"Let us announce to the world that we have determined upon a policy of real neutrality designed to prevent us from being entangled in their quarrels," he continued.

Registration of delegates reached a total of 3610 today, the largest attendance in the association's history.

24,520 TRAFFIC DEATHS IN 1937

Hub Has 13 Per 100,000 Killed, New York 11.1

CHICAGO, Sept. 29 (AP)—Death is setting a record-breaking pace along the nation's streets and highways.

The National Safety Council estimated today that traffic accidents had cost 24,520 lives in the first eight months of this year.

The total was 11 per cent greater than the 22,160 recorded in the corresponding period of 1936—the year the all-time high mark of 36,500 was established.

Deaths numbered 3850 in August compared with 3740 in the same month last year.

New York led the cities in the eight months death column with 528. Chicago, with 511, ranked second.

However, New York had the lowest traffic fatality rate among the most populous centres.

On the basis of deaths per 100,000 residents, the council made this ranking:

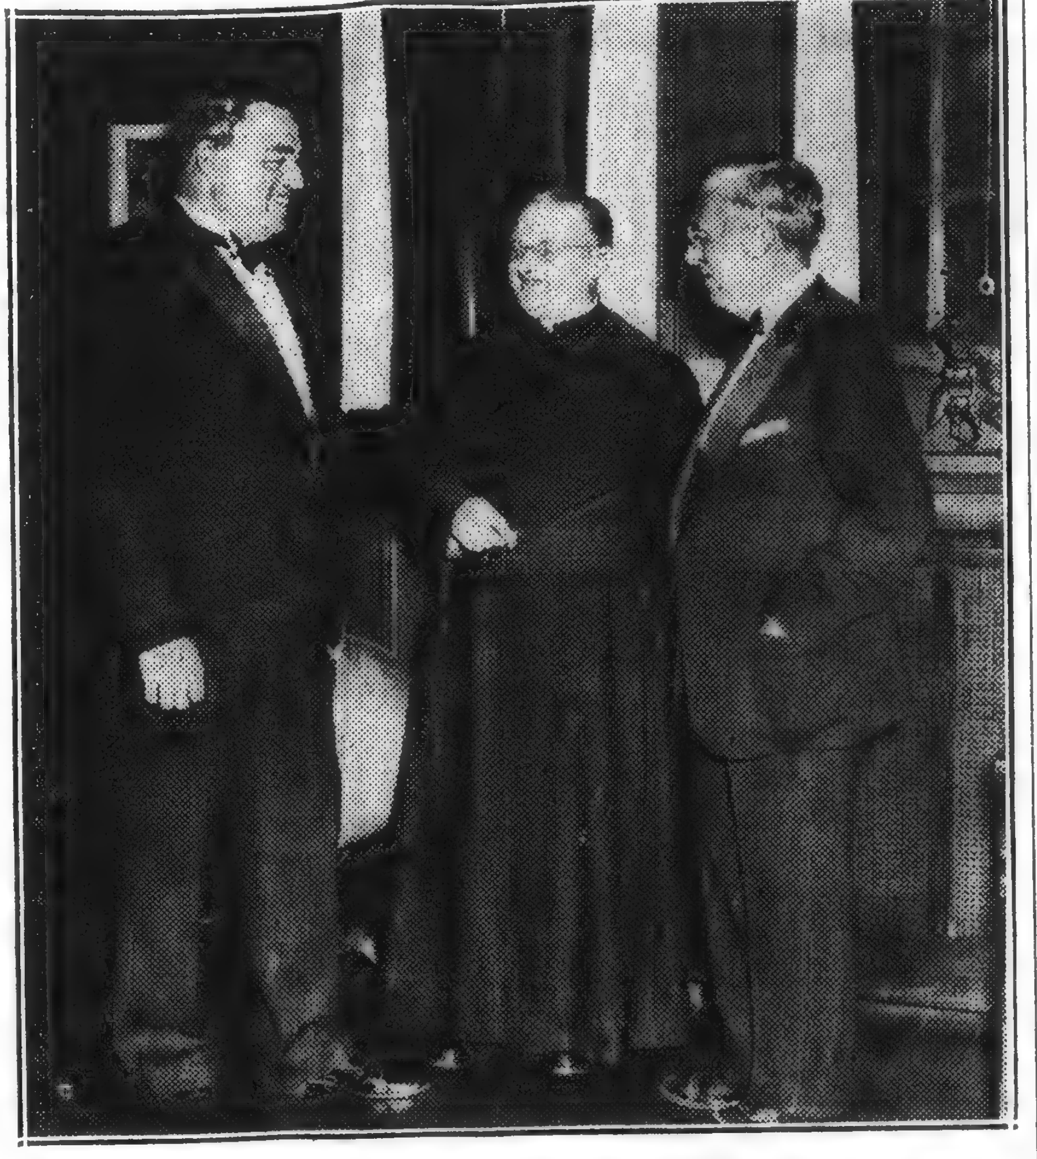
Cities of more than 500,000—New York, 11.1; Milwaukee, 11.8; Boston, 13.

From 100,000 to 250,000—Wichita, Kan., 5.1; New Bedford, Mass., 6.7; Hartford, Conn., 7.1.

From 25,000 to 50,000—Chicopee, Mass.; Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Green Bay, Wis.; Taunton, Mass., Fargo, N. D., Bangor, Me.; Kingston, N. Y., and Beverly, Mass., each had a perfect record.

Twelve States which reduced their totals in comparison with 1936, included Maine.

New B. C. Head Given Reception by Alumni



B. C. HEAD IS GIVEN RECEPTION
Governor Hurley, B. C. alumnus, left, is shown at the reception to the Rev. Fr. William J. McGarry, S. J., centre, new president of Boston College. Daniel J. Gallagher, former president of the B. C. alumni, is at the right.

Expansion of Boston College was forecast by the Rev. William J. McGarry, S. J., new president of the college, at a reception tendered him last night in the administration building at University Heights by more than 300 members of the almuni association headed by Governor Hurley.

"The word expansion expresses my dreams for the future of the college," said the Rev. Father McGarry. "I do not necessarily mean that we will have more buildings or more schools but I do mean that we will send more boys into the Commonwealth with Catholic ideals, principles and education."

The new president, the 18th in the history of the college, urged the almuni members to send more boys to the college, so that "with God's help, the willing faculty may fit them to do in the 40's, 50's and 60's what you have done in the past."

Governor Hurley brought personal greetings as an almunus and the official welcome of the State.

Child and Dog Cross at Traffic Rush Height

ALL TIRED OUT
Eleanor Carucci, sound asleep on an improvised bed at the North End police station. With her is Officer John Connors, and Spot, who wandered with Eleanor from their Somerville home.

Just how a 2½-year-old girl and her pet dog managed to cross Sullivan square at the height of the traffic rush yesterday puzzled police last night after they had safely returned Eleanor Cariuci and the dog, Spot, to her parents.

The child, who lives at 9 Mt. Pleasant street, Somerville, was found by Patrolman Charles Wanderly of the City square station and taken to the police station, where she promptly fell asleep in the guardroom beside her dog. Some time later her parents learned that she was at the police station and went there to take her home.

DUCE TO URGE 4-POWER PACT

Would Include Germany, England, France, Italy

BERLIN, Sept. 29 (UP)—Premier Mussolini, nursing a cold with hot lemonades, started back to Italy today with plans for concluding a four-power pact of friendship among Germany, Italy, Great Britain and France, high Fascist officials revealed.

Il Duce was said to have been assured of Hitler's full support.

Over a luncheon table they reportedly went into full details and discussed the possibility of bringing Poland into the accord.

Mussolini left Berlin at 3:51 aboard his special train.

Crowley to Help Former Mayor Hagan

Former Representative John J. Crowley of Somerville last night announced his support of former Mayor James E. Hagan in the latter's race for mayor of Somerville. He said in part:

"In annnouncing my support of former Mayor James E. Hagan for the office of Mayor, I do so after calm and mature deliberation.

"A calm analysis and review of the Hagan administration with the present incumbent leads me to the only possible conclusion, namely, that the best interests of the city will be served by the return of James E. Hagan to City Hall. A comparison of the tax rate is very illuminating; under Mr. Hagan's predecessor in 1932 the tax rate was $40.10; under Hagan it was $37 in 1934 and $38.60 in 1935. During the past two years under Mr. Knox it soared to the record high of $41.90 in 1936, and this year there is another jump to the almost confiscatory figure of $44.30."

COMPLAINS HER BUDGET IMPOSSIBLE

Irene Castle Can't Get Along on $750 a Month, She Says

CHICAGO, Sept. 29 (AP)—Take $750 a month, subtract bills for Mrs. Irene Castle McLaughlin's household maintenance, food, tips, telephone, a nurse and her son's tuition and what has she left?

"IT'S IMPOSSIBLE"

"Thirty dollars and 70 cents," the dancing darling of 20 years ago found today after figuring her budget "until I'm blue in the face." Then she asked the rhetorical question:

"How on earth can I keep up with my facials, manicures, massage and clothes on $30.70? It's impossible."

Her third husband, Major Frederic McLaughlin, hockey team owner and coffee merchant, agreed yesterday to pay $750 a month temporary alimony pending outcome of her divorce proceedings. She charged cruelty and he answered with a denial and a charge she was extravagant.

As she saw her son, Billy, 8, off to school and looked forward to spending a day with her daughter, Barbara, 12, before the girl takes up her studies in the East, Mrs. McLaughlin foresaw "plenty of homework" for herself from now until Christmas.

No Maid 5 Days a Week

"And I don't mean having people in to dinner because I can't afford that. It's the budget," she explained.

Besides dinners she said she couldn't afford her customary frequent visits to her dog refuge in suburban Deerfield. And she'll have to do without her maid five days a week.

The $5 a day she budgeted for food, she said, "doesn't seem like an awful lot." All her clothes have been custom made; now she doubts whether she'll be able to buy them ready-made.

Mrs. McLaughlin, who with her first husband, Vernon Castle, put the nation on its dancing feet in the pre-war era, asked custody of the two children, but no ruling was made in court yesterday. Billy has been with his mother and Barbara with her father since the parents' estrangement.

The $750 for support of mother and son temporarily was half the amount her attorney had asked.

START 18TH SEASON

The Sisterhood of the Temple Kehillath Israel, Brookline, enters on its 18th year with an opening meeting next Tuesday at 2:30 p. m., in the newly-decorated social hall. This hall will be dedicated, there will be an installation of officers, and entertainment by the Gladys Troupin Ensemble.

FOR ARCTIC WEATHER

FIVE STAR
ANTI-FREEZE

DU PONT
5 STAR
ANTI-FREEZE

PROTECTS FIVE WAYS AGAINST:

★ Freezing ★ Corrosion
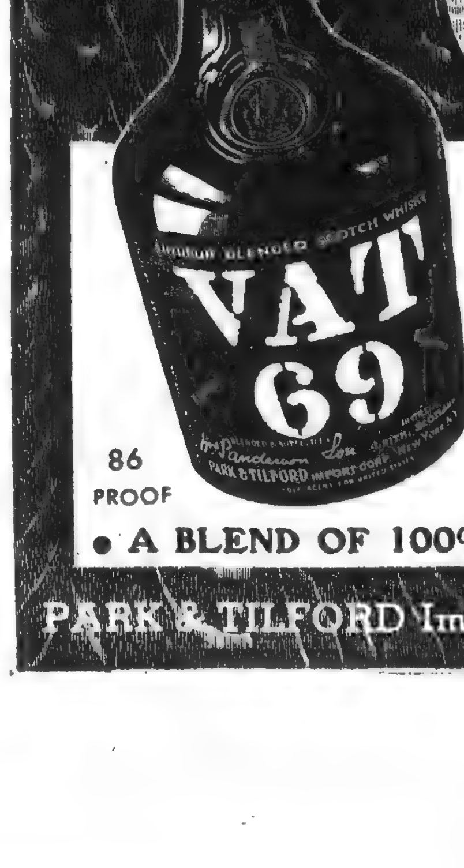
★ Rust-clogged radiators
★ Over-heating of engine
★ Excessive evaporation

Only $1.00 a gal.

The change is to—

VAT 69



86 PROOF

—because Quality Tells!

• A BLEND OF 100% SCOTCH WHISKIES

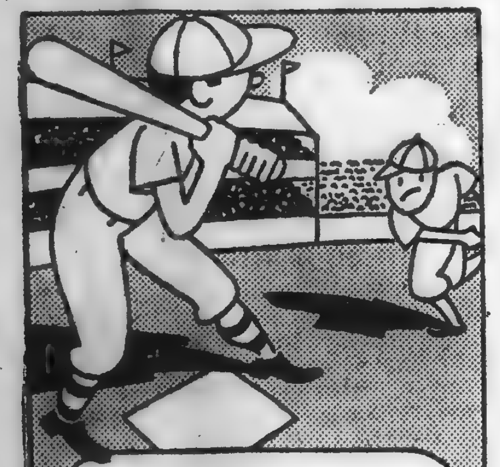
PARK & TILFORD Import Corp., New York, N. Y.

Many B. U. Graduates in the Far East

Boston University is well represented in the Chinese-Japanese conflict that is going on in the far east at present. A great number of the university's graduates are employed in the colleges of China, and in the Peiping area alone there are 17 graduates.

Lieutenant Herman E. Nickerson of the fourth regiment of the United States Marine Corps is one of the most active members of the number representing the university. Nickerson was an honor student at B. U.

A check list on the alumni lists showed that there is a total of 34 graduates in the far east, and that most of them are engaged in teaching, or doing social service work. Among the persons in the war zone are: Dr. Eugene Chan, who is teaching at the School of Medicine connected with Cheloo University. Also in the same university is the Rev. Peter Peng, professor of the School of Theology.



WORLD SERIES FANS!
stay at
"NEW YORK'S BEST LOCATED HOTEL"
THE COMMODORE
HEADQUARTERS OF THE YANKEES!

Express Subway Direct to the YANKEE STADIUM and POLO GROUNDS from THE COMMODORE'S LOWER LOBBY!

2000 large, comfortable outside rooms, all with private bath . . . from $3.50
Frank J. Crohan, President RIGHT AT GRAND CENTRAL

Advertisement

BANISH FAT NEW SAFE WAY

With science's latest discovery you can now banish fat the new safe way. SILF tablets bring the bodily functions controlling weight quickly in a normal harmless way. SILF aids the bodily factors consume the fatty excess. This new health and beauty treatment brings about a renewed keenness of mind and vigor. Eat what you like on our money back guarantee that you must lose weight or your money refunded at Carroll Perfumers, Allied Perfumers, Miller Drugs, Epstein Drugs (Scollay Sq.), People's Drug Stores, Garb Stores (Newton & Allston), Coolidge Pharmacy (Brookline), Lyman's Drug (Cambridge), Cole's Drug Stores (Waltham, Cambridge, Somerville, Medford, and Arlington).

If your dealer does not handle SILF, send $1 on our money back guarantee, to SILF, INC., 247 Park Avenue, N. Y.

KNOCKED OUT WITH A SHOE

Wife Is Awarded Divorce After Relating Incident

A five-day bride and a wife who declared her husband gave her a knockout blow with a shoe were among those to win divorces yesterday in the Middlesex Probate Court.

Mrs. Lillian Souza of Lowell, testified that married life with Manuel Souza, a sailor, now of San Pedro, Calif., lasted just five days for her. She told Judge Arthur E. Beane that she received cruel treatment at his hands from their marriage Nov. 2, 1935, until he went to sea on Nov. 7. They did not live together again, according to her testimony.

Arguments over money and her mother-in-law broke up the home of Mrs. Dorothy E. Hynes of Newton Centre, she alleged as she told her marital troubles to Judge John C. Leggat. She and Joseph F. Hynes of Waltham, were married Aug. 30, 1931, and made their home in Belmont.

Less than a year after the marriage, the young woman asserted, there was a dispute over her mother-in-law.

"My husband hit me on top of the head with a shoe, and knocked me out," she testified.

"I worked as a waitress after my baby was born," she continued, "and my husband wanted money all the time. If he did get it he would use it to buy liquor. Once he tried to choke me to death because I would not give him money."

She was awarded a divorce and custody of her 5-year-old daughter.

A marriage of 20 years duration was dissolved when Mrs. Alice L. LeBlanc of Waltham was granted a divorce from Aurele H. LeBlanc, also of Waltham. "He used to drink and then come home and beat me up," she told Judge Leggat. She was given custody of her three children. The suits were not opposed.

CLAIM 10 IN DOPE RING

Five Held and Five More Arrests Promised

Five men rounded up by federal agents and police were held for continued hearing by United States Commissioner Harry N. Guterman yesterday, while the United States attorney's office announced that five more men are to be arrested in connection with the government's efforts to crush one of the biggest dope rings operating in this vicinity.

Assistant United States Attorney William T. McCarthy informed the court that the leaders of the ring, including Victor D'Alessandro of Bowdoin street, Medford, one of those arraigned, has been associated with notorious commerical dope dealers in New York. D'Alessandro was held in $7500 bonds.

John Murphy of Hemenway street, Back Bay, held in $5000, was characterized by Mr. McCarthy as the spearhead for distribution of dope to perhaps 25 addicts in Greater Boston, and the ring was termed one of the most resourceful the government has had to fight.

Others arraigned yesterday included Daniel J. Croke of East Lenox street, Roxbury, who was able to procure bail; William E. Simpson of Grove avenue, Wilmington, and Thomas J. Balusky of Second street, South Boston.

THREE ARRESTS IN NUMBER POOL RAID

Captain James T. Sheehan of the Fields Corner police, former head of the racket squad, made another raid on number pool operators in Dorchester yesterday and made three arrests.

Michael W. Callahan, 37, of 218 Thatcher street, East Milton, and his chauffeur, Dennis Sweeney, 32, of 185 Bowdoin street, Dorchester, were arrested on Minot street on charges of being concerned in a lottery.

The third man to be arrested was Walter J. Cleary, 23, of 89 Glover street, Quincy. Police said he had a quantity of number pool slips on his person.

SYLVIA SIDNEY HAS DEEP, DARK SECRET

Cherishes Certain Pretentious Role but Won't Tell Interviewers What It Is

SYLVIA SIDNEY
The famous film star, who is appearing here at the Colonial Theatre in a new play, "To Quito and Back."

BY ELLIOT NORTON

Sylvia Sidney, who's about as big as a watch charm—a very pretty watch charm—was sitting in her dressing room at the Colonial Theatre—sitting and knitting and chatting.

She was sitting at ease, so to speak. Because the play in which she is appearing, [illegible] "To Quito and Back" has been To The Rewrite Man and Back and she is somewhat tired from almost endless rehearsing between performances. She was knitting a sweater (adult size). She was chatting about the stage and the movies and her ambitions.

LIKES THE STAGE

She has been "pretty happy" in the films, she was saying; which is not unnatural, since she is one of the screen's eight or 10 ranking stars, reputedly paid as high as $6500 a week. And her present appearance in the theatre doesn't signify, by any means, that she has abandoned the pictures.

"For one personal reason," she explained, "I will have to go on making movies to make money. Because that income tax keeps catching up."

She is, however, tremendously fond of the spoken stage. Which is natural, too, because she was brought up on the spoken stage and did quite well on it before she went away to Hollywood to spend her last seven years.

No Restrictions

Her employer in Hollywood is Producer Walter Wanger. From him—because, one day, she stamped her small foot and made demands—she has a contract without restrictions. She can appear in as many plays as she wants and stay away from the cinema as long as her heart desires and her purse permits.

"This play is not just a single appearance, you see," she was saying, between stitches and purls. "I am definitely going to do a play every year from now on. I have two new plays I'm interested in right now, that I'll see about when the run of this one is ended."

Getting back to acting before an audience is not easy, she has found. At the premiere here of "To Quito," she says frankly and with a slight shiver, she was "scared to death."

Comortable Now

But the stage fright has pretty well worn off now and she feels comfortably cozy up there on the Colonial stage, despite all those staring pairs of eyes out beyond the glowing bridge of footlights.

"Getting used to the audience is not the hardest task," she explained very seriously. "The hardest part is changing from one kind of acting to another. In the pictures, you hardly have to do more than feel an emotion; the camera picks up everything, even the slightest expression, and the directors and cutters do the rest.

"On the stage, instead of just feeling an emotion, you have to project it, to throw it out. It's a good deal more difficult."

As to the future, Miss Sidney raises her right hand in mock solemnity and swears she doesn't want to play Juliet, which is the role that almost inevitably tempts successful actresses.

Big Secret

"No Juliet! I give you my word," she declared definitely and added—as a gay afterthought—"not even Hamlet!"

Despite this, she has an ambition to play something or other pretentious. But: "I absolutely refuse to say what the part is, or the play. I've only told two of my friends so far and they were both so startled I thought they were going to faint!"

As a kind of hit, (dropped along with a single stitch) she seemed to indicate that whatever it is, it will probably be a "high comedy" role in which she will have an opportunity to wear pretty clothes. In Hollywood, it seems, they don't care to give her comedy roles and they seem always to want to dress her, to her great disgust, in "rags and tatters."

Beyond this hint, however, she will not go. Therefore, until she does something more about it, until she takes steps, the Great Sylvia Sidney Ambition must remain, regrettably, the Great Sylvia Sidney Mystery.

So be it.

Calls Prisoner a Menace to the Community

Describing him as "a menace to the community; and a scourge who preys upon women as well," John "Jockey" Owens was sentenced to six months in the House of Correction by Judge Edward L. Logan in South Boston Court yesterday.

Owens, who gave as his address a downtown hotel, was arrested for larceny of $650 in a betting deal from John Erikson of 6 Powerhouse street, South Boston, several days ago.

Owens appealed and was held in $2000 for trial Oct. 22.

Unequalled At Its Price!
DICTUM WHISKEY $1.25 Full Quart
90 PROOF
C. L. RICHARDSON & CO.
831 Atlantic Ave., Boston

Never have Local Motorists had such a Chance to SAVE

1937 PONTIAC

DEMONSTRATORS AND OFFICIALS' CARS AT WELL BELOW NEW CAR COST

The big yearly clean-up sale of low-mileage 1937 Pontiacs and the finest late-model Good Will used cars is now on, and here is why it offers you an unparalleled chance to save. These models must be sold without fail within the next few weeks and Pontiac dealers are letting nothing stand in the way. Never have cars so fine sold at a price so low. Come in and prove it for yourself.

LIBERAL ALLOWANCE ON YOUR CAR
GENERAL MOTORS TERMS TO SUIT YOUR PURSE

"SEE YOUR NEAREST PONTIAC DEALER"

LOOK AT THE VALUES YOU GET AT Liggett's
THE REXALL DRUG STORES

℞ When you entrust your doctor's prescription to a LIGGETT'S registered pharmacist, the doctor's word becomes our law. We know that upon that prescription depends health—the easing of pain—perhaps life itself. Only the purest and freshest drugs are used. A double checking system guarantees accuracy.
LET US FILL YOUR NEXT PRESCRIPTION.

BEDSIDE TRAY
For reading, writing or eating in bed. No home should be without one.
98c

IT'S NEW! A BRIEF CASE THAT WILL "HOLD-UP" 1.98
for students, lawyers, teachers and executives. Make it as bulky or as flat as you like by means of clever automatic sliding straps that act as reinforcement for the bottom as well.

Prophylactic HAIR BRUSH
Solid Wood Back
BRISTLES SET IN HARD RUBBER 59c

DU-BE Perfume
GARDENIA—SWEET PEA
CHYPRE—LILAC
ORCHID
17c EACH 3 FOR 49c

UTILITY BOX
Use it for bonds, cash, fishing tackle, etc. — Complete with key.
64c

DEEP CUT PRICES

1.00 SIZE NUJOL	43c
60c SIZE BROMO SELTZER	33c
40c SIZE CASTORIA FLETCHER'S	24c
60c SIZE ALKA-SELTZER	49c
50c SIZE MIDOL TABLETS	31c
75c SIZE LISTERINE	59c
1.00 SIZE HALEY'S M. O.	67c
50c SIZE SQUIBB'S ASPIRIN TABLETS	39c
60c SIZE BISODOL	37c
75c SIZE GLOVER'S MANGE MEDICINE	53c
75c SIZE DOAN'S PILLS	49c
75c SIZE BAUME BENGUE	46c

WE RESERVE THE RIGHT TO LIMIT QUANTITIES

GIANT MECHANICAL PENCIL
10½" long with a supply of 4 thin lead . . . Extra large eraser.
POPEYE design
Only 25¢ Practical as well as novel
PROPELS · REPELS · EXPELS

SILVERTONE ALARM CLOCK
Square or pedestal type. Asst. colors.
98c

GLOBE OF THE WORLD
Showing 5000 names and places. 1937 Edited MAP. Choice of two color combinations.
98c

Eveready Shaving BRUSH
SET IN RUBBER. STERILIZED. GUARANTEED. 59c

Gloray FRENCH MILLED COMPLEXION SOAP
9c EACH 67c DOZEN

MAIL ORDERS FILLED—Add 10% extra for postage and packing.
Address:—LIGGETT'S
50 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON

COLGATE TOOTH POWDER
LARGE SIZE 18c DOUBLE SIZE 33c

Muscle Pains?
RUB WITH "CREAMED" ALCOHOL
SPRY quickly relieves paining muscles, backache, sore joints. Can't spill. Liquefies as you rub it in. Doesn't "dry out" the skin. Easy to use. Economical. 70% absolute alcohol. Large size, 29c—double size, 49c.
Spry
LARGE JAR—29¢
DOUBLE SIZE—49¢
Generous trial-size jar—Only 10c.

SPECIAL Economy offer
DR. WEST'S Water-proofed Toothbrush 50c
CALOX Tooth Powder 50c
Both for 59¢
Regular Value ~~$1.00~~
LIMIT 2 TO A CUSTOMER

DISINFECT AS YOU CLEAN
KILLS GERMS · COMBATS ODORS
Help Prevent Sickness with CN
SMALL 23¢ MEDIUM 45¢

NEW SHAMPOO DISCOVERY
DRENE large 79c
NOT SOAP NOT OIL medium 49c half PRICE

$2.00 Jar cut to $1
Barbara Gould CLEANSING CREAM
A rare opportunity to get one America's finest creams at an unheard of low price

Hide Ugly Skin Blemishes with Blemi-Stik by MINER'S
Masters of make-up since 1864
- Covers all skin blemishes all day.
- Harmless, waterproof.
- Will not rub off or streak.
- An excellent all day make-up base.

Brunette Peach 50c Rachelle Suntan

MAPS OF UNITED STATES OF THE WORLD
These maps are wonder charts of knowledge about the world we live in. Every alert person who wants to understand the momentous news events of the day will find these maps absolutely essential references. Accurate and up to date in every respect. You have to see these colorful charts to appreciate their value.
FORMER PRICE 25c EACH
NOW 3c EACH
MAP of UNITED STATES
With historical maps, historical data on states and territories, air line distances and population of cities and towns.
MAP of the WORLD
With colored flags of the leading nations and compendium of geographical facts.
GET YOURS TODAY! LIMITED SUPPLY!

AMAZING OIL SHAMPOO lathers like Soap!
Gobs of creamy lather surge through your hair and scalp seconds after applying. A single rinse and your hair emerges soft, manageable and lovely. Try it today!
75c HALF PINT 59c
90c QTR. PINT 39c
ADMIRACION Foamy OIL Shampoo
Special! While They Last!
ADMIRACION COMBINATION PKG.
¼ pt. Foamy Oil Shampoo. 50c
¼ pt. Hair Tonic . . . 60c
Both 59c

Black Very Likely to Broadcast Statement

Continued From First Page

While his ship, the City of Norfolk, was brought into port from quarantine, he submitted to his first interview since the Klan charges were made.

"When I have any statement to make," he emphatically told the scribbling reporters, "you can accept it as definite and final that I will make it in a way that cannot be misquoted, and so the nation can hear it.

"Does that mean you will make a radio speech?"

"I might—draw your own conclusions."

As for his immediate plans, he was going to Washington at once, that Mrs. Black would start house-hunting and he himself might be reached—"at my office in the Supreme Court building."

Observers regarded this as an indication that he intends to take his place on the high court when it reconvenes Monday after a summer recess.

Pressed for a further statement, Justice Black said:

"If I make a statement, I will make it publicly so the people can hear it and can understand what I say, because some portion of the press might decide not to publish what I said."

Refuses Block's Papers

When a reporter for the Post-Gazette handed him a stack of papers with the remark: "I wonder if you would care for this series of stories published by the Post-Gazette?" Black snapped:

"You take that back to Mr. Block." (Paul Block is the publisher of the Post-Gazette.)

The National Broadcasting Company revealed here that it had offered its facilities to the jurist, and that they had not been declined.

In addition to the reporters, a small group of intimate friends boarded the revenue cutter and a special coast guard boat which took the crowd out to quarantine to meet Black today. Included were Thomas W. Woodward, a member of the Federal Maritime Commission, and Mrs. Woodward.

Mrs. Black and Mrs. Woodward breakfasted in the dining saloon, while Black and Woodward ate in the justice's cabin with reporters crowding about.

Utter silence greeted all references to the alleged Klan membership. Finally a reporter asked what he called a "scientific question"—whether Black had been or was a member of "the invisible empire."

"Whom are you with?" Black retorted.

The reporter identified himself.

Black then said he had made the only statement he intended to make today.

"I repeat that's the total statement; here, later today, or anywhere else."

After he had debarked, reporters still surrounded him as he stood on the pier.

"I appreciate your courtesy in meeting me," he said. "I am very happy about it."

He and Mrs. Black climbed into the Woodward automobile and were off for Washington.

Black at Sister-in-Law's

Upon their arrival here late today the justice and Mrs. Black went to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Durr in Seminary Hill, suburban residential section near Alexandria, Va.

They were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Durr on the motor trip from Norfolk. Mrs. Durr is Mrs. Black's sister. Mr. Durr is an attorney for the Reconstruction Corporation.

The justice, laughing and joking with members of his family and with newspapermen, declined to amplify the statements he made at Norfolk.

Asked when he would go to his office he smiled and said: "When I get ready." Then he added:

"When I get a chance to see my folks—if I do."

Mrs. Durr said the Blacks, who have rented out their Washington home, would live at her home for several weeks. She said Mrs. Black was exhausted from her travels and needed several days of rest.

Mrs. Durr said the group stopped in Richmond for lunch and spent some time there walking about the city.

No one recognized them there, she added.

Mrs. Durr said the jurist had ham and eggs for breakfast just before he left the liner which brought him from Europe and ham for lunch at Richmond, Va.

"He's very fond of Virginia ham," Mrs. Durr told newsmen.

"I'll eat it ton'ght for dinner," Black said, "and for breakfast if I can get it."

"One egg and one strip of bacon is all you can have for breakfast," his hostess replied.

This dialogue took place on the lawn of the Durrs' secluded home.

Surrounded by a variety of large shade trees, the two-storied white frame house faces a little-travelled road in Fairfax county, not far from Alexandria.

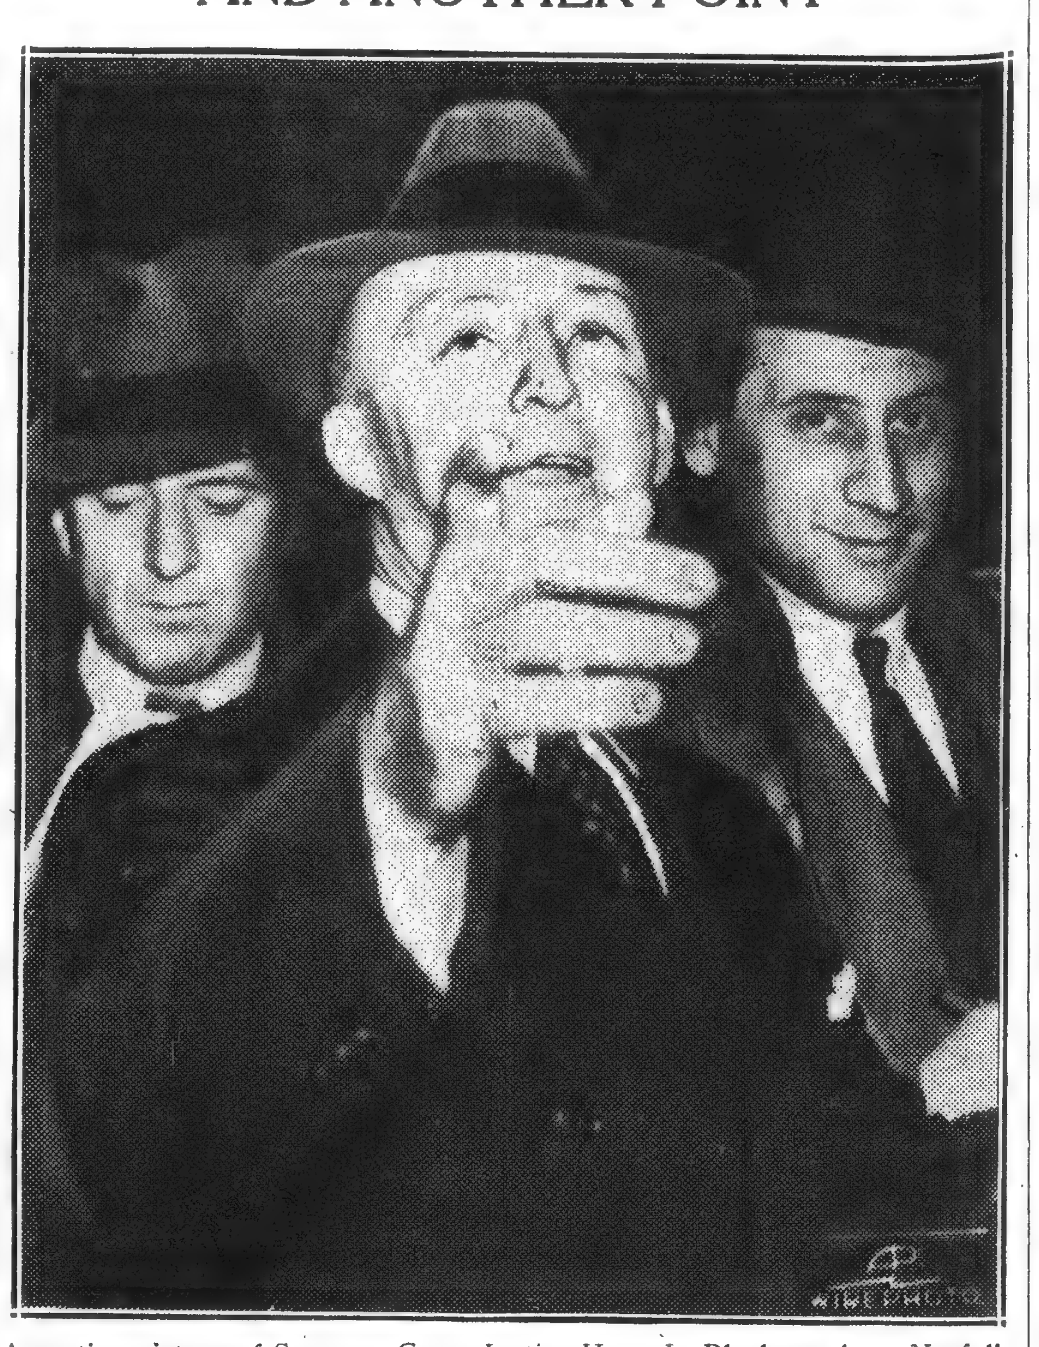
Broadcast Chains Offer Services to Black

NEW YORK, Sept. 29 (AP)—Executives of the nation's major broadcasting chains, the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System, said tonight they had invited Justice Hugo L. Black to use their facilities to reply to assertions that he was a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

The justice has not indicated, the executives said, that he would accept their offers, although both chains despatched lists of available time for broadcasts to his Washington office after his arrival in Norfolk, Va., today from a European trip.

Justice Black radioed the National Broadcasting Company from his ship while at sea, thanking them for the offer, and indicating that he would advise if he wished to accept it.

"AND ANOTHER POINT"



An action picture of Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black, made at Norfolk, Va., after he landed from his European vacation trip. A BOSTON POST-ASSOCIATED PRESS WIREPHOTO.

PLANNING MILK FOR NEEDY AT TWO CENTS

Continued From First Page

This explained why the ace men of the government were rushed to Boston to play a trump card, that of drawing on the $110,000,000 fund of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation for the purchase of surplus milk from any handlers complying with the code for distribution to the poor, it was declared.

The FSCC has available 30 per cent of the receipts from the entire customs income of the country, it was revealed, although it was plainly indicated that there was no idea that any considerable sum would be required to carry out the programme of buying milk.

To Needy at 2 Cents a Quart

Plans are being whipped into shape with the utmost speed in order to secure funds for the haraseed farmers who voted for the AAA milk code months ago but yet have to receive a penny of benefit from it. Four officials of the FSCC, including a national official from Washington, and a regional director, were engaged yesterday in making plans to launch the milk buying programme.

Two FSCC officials conferred with Mayor Mansfield yesterday and by him were referred to Director Patrick J. Moynihan of the city's welfare department. A proposal was laid before the latter under which the city welfare department would pay two cents a quart for all milk distributed to needy families in Boston.

Bottling at Actual Cost

The government will buy the milk at the price established by the AAA milk code of seven cents a quart f.o.b. Boston, this government money to be credited to the producers. The FSCC, according to the plan it follows, will deal in milk by the wholesale, leaving for local relief agencies the burden of providing funds for packaging and distribution.

The packaging cost, in the case of milk, it was explained, is for pasteurization and bottling. This will be done at actual cost and without any profit at all by the plants of the complying handlers with whom the government makes its contracts. Those who have been named as being ready to perform this service include the United Farmers, the New England Dairies and Herlihy Bros., Inc.

Roster of FSCC

Members of the FSCC, a Delaware corporation, include the Secretary of Agriculture, the administrator of the AAA and the governor of the Farm Credit Administration. Its roster of director names Secretary Wallace, H. R. Tolley, J. W. Tapp, Milo Perkins, W. I. Myers, F. R. Wilcox and W. A. Jump.

City Councillor Clement A. Norton came to the defence of the milk distribution programme yesterday, sending a telegram to United States Senator Walsh in which he expressed a belief that the latter would favor the plan on fuller investigation. The telegram stated:

Norton's Wire to Walsh

"You are quoted as opposing the idea of having the federal government give away a $1,000,000 worth of free milk in the Boston area, comprising 37 cities and towns, because such a procedure may lead to a milk surplus and the milk may come from uninspected cattle.

"You have always stood for the underprivileged and I am sure that when you have all the facts, that you will do so in this case. As I understand it, the federal government will request welfare organizations to distribute this milk to families so poor that no milk is being bought at present, or if said family is buying say a pint of milk a day from a private dealer, the family must continue to make that purchase in order to be eligible for this additional free milk.

No Interference With Trade

"The idea is not to interfere with the private milk trade. As regards the milk coming from uninspected cattle, the federal government will supervise farms, cattle and plants and this means the highest of sanitary standards.

"There are thousands of children and old people in Boston today who are not getting a glass of milk a day. School physicians report thousands of pupils suffering from malnutrition. Milk is the most important item in the budget of the poor. The government has given away grapefruit, raisins and other commodities, but never milk. I am sure, on fuller investigation, you will heartily approve this idea."

Cost $2080 a Week

The Boston Board of Overseers of Public welfare took no action on the milk distribution plan yesterday but tabled the matter until next Wednesday's meeting, when it will be reconsidered after Director Moynihan has gathered all possible information and facts.

As understood by them, the plan outlined by the FSCC representatives would call for a distribution of 26,000 quarts of milk a day in Boston, four days a week, which, at the rate of 2 cents a quart to be paid by the city, would call for a contribution of welfare funds amounting to $520 a day or $2080 a week.

300 Compliers in Boston

While there are 300 complying handlers in Boston who are eligible to participate in the government buying of relief milk, it was thought unlikely that smaller dealers who secure their supply already processed will apply for FSCC contracts.

The Massachusetts Legislative Recess Commission, appointed last year to make a thorough study of the milk situation, last night announced its public hearings would begin Oct. 5 at Pittsfield, with additional sessions scheduled Oct. 6 at Springfield, Oct. 13 at Worcester and Oct. 14 at Boston.

Investigating Enforcement

This commission is making a thorough investigation and study of the enforcement and the adequacy of the laws of Massachusetts relating to the inspection of dairy farms producing milk and cream for distribution within the State, to the bonding of milk dealers, milk control, production, transportation, sale and distribution of milk, with a view of recommending such changes in the State laws as seem advisable.

Its members include Senator Thomas H. Johnson, Clinton, Representatives William Ackeroyd, Lanesboro; Fred B. Dole, Shelburne; David M. Owens, Roxbury, and George E. Rice, Spencer, together with Francis J. Kelley, Bedford, and Glenn Sim, Belmont.

Three Lawyers File Three Wills of Man

SALEM, Sept. 29 — Three different wills, all of which were purportedly written by William J. Golden of Salisbury, wealthy shoe manufacturer, have been filed in the registry of probate by three lawyers, it was disclosed today.

Golden, a widower, died two weeks ago.

CLAIM BETTY REAL BEAUTY

Film Group Names "Miss Ideal America"

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 29 (AP)—Without any fanfare the committee for the improvement of American standards of beauty today picked Betty Grable as "Miss Ideal America."

In presenting the cup to Miss Grable, the committee said it was challenging Atlantic City's right to call its annual beauty contest winner "Miss America," inasmuch as American "young womanhood is not properly represented."

RESIGNATION OF SISK LEAVES 9 VACANCIES

Continued From First Page

Reports in circulation for several days are to the effect that at least four other resignations from the higher courts will be forthcoming within a short time, while several additional district court changes are expected also.

Governor Hurley continued his silence yesterday as to the identity of any of his appointees to the pending vacancies. It is generally understood, however, that Judge of Probate Arthur W. Dolan of Suffolk will be appointed to the Supreme Court to succeed Judge John C. Crosby, whose resignation from that bench was announced on Monday, and that John V. Mahoney, secretary to the Governor, will be named to fill the vacancy caused by the promotion of Judge Dolan.

As to the successor of Judge Sisk on the Superior Court there was much speculation last night, with many of the Governor's close friends mentioned as possibilities, but no definite line could be obtained regarding any of them.

JUDGE JAMES S. SISK
Superior Court justice who has retired.

While it was generally believed that William H. Henchey, campaign manager for the Governor last year, would be named to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation last Saturday of Judge Michael J. Murray of the Boston Municipal Court, it was learned that pressure of law business may prevent Mr. Henchey's selection at this time, but that his final appointment to a place on the bench is merely deferred.

In addition to these vacancies the Governor has received the resignations of Judge Frederick A. D. Fisher of the Lowell District Court and of Hugh P. Drysdale, special judge of probate of Berkshire county. Judge William Bacon of Newton District Court resigned several months ago and later died.

There are vacancies in the Williamstown District Court caused by the death of Judge Clarence M. Smith and in the Ayer District Court, due to the recent death of Judge John M. Maloney.

Judge in Poor Health

The death of Loyed E. Chamberlain of Brockton created a vacancy in the Plymouth County Probate Court, and the Governor named Mayor Lawrence E. Crowley of Brockton to the position, but the Executive Council has refused to date to confirm the Crowley appointment.

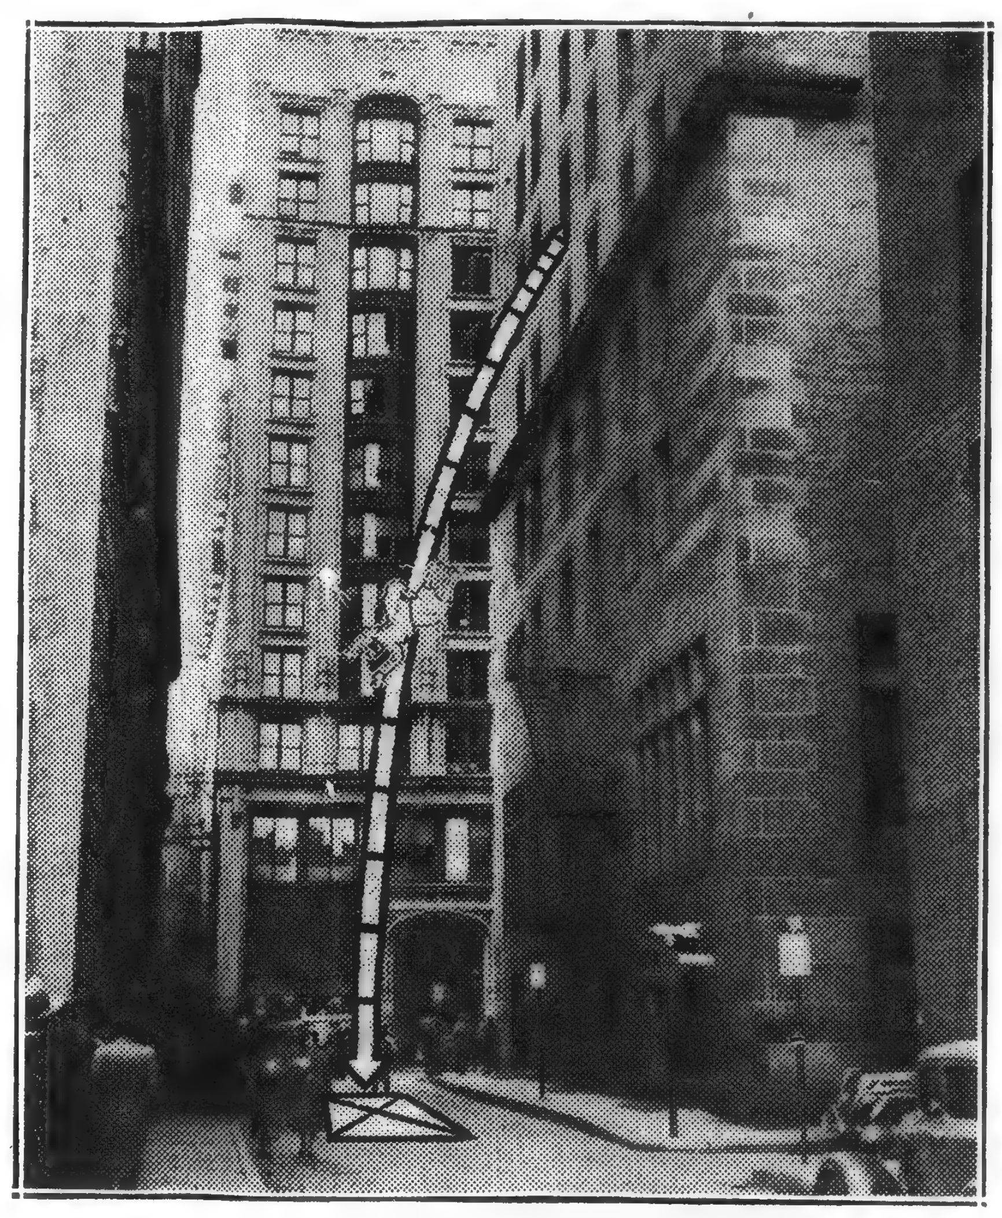
Judge Sisk, whose health has been poor for some time, making his resignation one that has been expected for several months, has been an associate justice of the Superior Court since 1915. He is 79 years of age. He will retire at three-fourths of his annual salary of $12,000 a year, under the provisions of the retirement act passed at the last session of the Legislature.

In a letter to Judge Sisk accepting the resignation, Governor Hurley said: "It is with regret that I accept your resignation, but I fully realize that after 23 years of faithful and distinguished service rendered by you to the Commonwealth you are entitled to a rest from these exacting and serious duties you were called upon to perform. I extend to you my best wishes for health and happiness during the years of your retirement."

President's Mother Sails Home From Paris

PARIS, Sept. 29 (UP)—Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, mother of President Roosevelt, sailed for the United States today aboard the Ile de France after a lengthy visit on the continent.

Hundreds See Woman Plunge to Her Death



WHERE WOMAN DOVE TO DEATH
This photo-diagram shows how Mrs. Mary Donohue dove to her death from a hotel window yesterday. The arrow traces her plunge to the street outside.

Continued From First Page

Her body first struck the edge of the fire escape on the hotel building, then fell below, landing on the apron of a parked truck, the driver of which was delivering trunks at the hotel's rear doors.

Death was instantaneous, according to Medical Examiner Timothy Leary. Mental illness, believed to have been brought on by a recent operation, was attributed as the cause of the suicide.

Two of the women who saw Mrs. Donohue's body plunge from the hotel window were occupants of passing automobiles. The body landed a few feet from where their cars were halted in traffic. The other two women, who fainted, had just left a nearby office building and got caught in the jam of pedestrians who watched the woman make the fatal plunge. Their escorts helped the women to a nearby drugstore where they were revived and taken from the scene.

Three notes, which she had written earlier in the day, were found in the woman's handbag. One of them was addressed to her husband, J. Joseph Donohue, 43, a field agent for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, another to her 15-year-old son, Joseph, a student at Lynn Classical High, and a third to a friend. The contents of the notes proved unintelligible, police were informed last night.

[illegible] Ties Up Traffic

The suicide plunge, which tied up in-town traffic for many blocks between 4:20 and 5 p. m., was made while thousands of persons were pouring out of office buildings in the vicinity of the hotel.

The sight of the woman on the window sill, while hotel employees, and spectators in the windows in the opposite building strove desperately to dissuade the woman from diving to her death, attracted them, hampering the efforts of police and causing the traffic tieup.

Mrs. Donohue paid no attention to the crowd below, however. Office workers across the street from the hotel, who begged and implored her to go back and not to jump, were also ignored by the woman. To hotel employees who sought to reach her she kept repeating the warning, "Go away. If any of you come near me, I'll jump."

Had the fire department's rescue crew, called by the police, been able to get through the traffic jam that tied up the streets for blocks in the vicinity of the hotel, the woman's plunge would have been broken by a life net and her life saved, fire officials declared. They arrived too late, however.

The identity of the woman was unknown for some time. The body, however, was identified at the Southern Mortuary last night by her husband. Accompanying Mr. Donohue to the morgue was the victim's mother, Mrs. Mary Flynn, of 108 Essex street, Salem. Mrs. Donohue before her marriage was Miss Mary Flynn of Salem. She was born and raised in Salem, attended the public schools there, and afterwards St. Elizabeth's Academy, Convent Station, N. J., and the New England Conservatory of Music, also Portia Law School.

According to the woman's husband and her mother, Mrs. Donohue disclosed no suicidal symptoms when she left her home early yesterday morning to go to Boston on a shopping tour. They said they were aware that she had been ill but that she had not appeared despondent or morose.

Was Shopping With Mother

Mrs. Flynn said last night that she had accompanied her daughter to Boston. After making some purchases, she said, the pair entered a hat shop near the hotel. Mrs. Flynn was fitting on some hats, she said, when her daughter suddenly declared she was going outdoors to purchase a newspaper.

"She didn't return and I waited for some time and then I returned to my home in Salem," Mrs. Flynn said. "I knew she liked to walk a great deal and I thought she had grown tired of shopping and had decided to walk to the North Station to board a train for home. The first news I received that she had killed herself was when Mr. Donohue called me and told me that a newspaperman had just told him that my daughter had killed herself."

From the hat shop, police learned, Mrs. Donohue walked to the hotel, entered the lobby, secured some writing paper and wrote the notes that relatives and authorities were unable to understand last night. That the woman was mentally ill when she wrote them was evidenced by the few intelligible phrases in the notes. They referred to what police said was an imaginary state of affairs which was distressing the woman.

After writing the notes Mrs. Donohue walked to one of the elevators in the hotel and rode to the fifth floor. She left the elevator there and tried the doors of several rooms before making the death leap. Police believe she intended to jump from the window of one of the guest rooms had she been able to gain access to one. A bell hop at the hotel reported seeing the woman walking along the corridor and trying one of the doors. Nothing about her demeanor at the time, however, aroused his suspicions.

Unable to gain access to one of the rooms on the floor, Mrs. Donohue walked to the corridor window. She opened it, placed her handbag, containing the notes and $74.44 in cash, on the floor nearby, then calmly straddled the window sill.

Across the street hundreds of office workers were busy at their desks in a 10-story building. One of them suddenly saw the woman sitting on the window sill. She called to fellow workers and within seconds hundreds of windows in the office building were pulled up and the unsuccessful attempt to stop the woman from killing herself was begun.

Calls for Aid

Telephone calls were hurriedly sent in to police headquarters, the hotel and the fire department. Because of the usual congestion of traffic in the immediate area of the hotel vehicular and pedestrian traffic soon became a jam as scores of machines and hundreds of passersby stopped to watch the woman on the window sill.

Words of encouragement and pleadings were shouted at the woman as she sat for several minutes on the sill high above the sidewalk. She replied to none. Meantime hotel employees rushed to the floor and implored the woman not to jump. The sight of them brought forth the first intelligible words heard from the woman.

"Go away. I'll jump if you come near," she kept repeating.

For several minutes she remained on the window sill and just before she jumped she stood up and carefully arranged her skirt about her legs. A strong wind was blowing at the time and occasionally her skirt was blown above her knees. Each time she was quick to adjust it. The last time she tried to tighten the lower part of the skirt about her legs.

Sixty-five feet below where she stood lurching from side to side in view of the horror-stricken hundreds witnessing the scene, amidst the roar of traffic and the shouting of the hundreds, was parked one of the trucks of the Harry McPhail Trucking Company. The driver was delivering baggage at the hotel.

A short distance away a fire department rescue company with a life net was battling to get through the traffic jam. The delay proved fatal. Just before it finally managed to find a clearing to the hotel the woman made her last gesture of adjusting her dress and without further warning closed her eyes and plunged to her death.

"Her mind must have suddenly snapped. That is all I can think of," the woman's husband told reporters last night after identifying the body. "I know of no reason why she did it. She seemed perfectly happy."

ARREST TWO IN PHONE THEFTS

Charlestown Men Caught With Burglar Tools

The quick wit of a youthful clerk in a Main street, Charlestown, store yesterday led to the arrest of two men charged with having burglar tools in their possession and to what police regard as the solution to a chain of telephone coin box breaks in Charlestown, Belmont, Brookline and other neighborhoods. Under arrest are Harold C. Chase, 41, of 843 East Fourth street, South Boston, and Gabriel Raguso, 32, of 662 Main street, Charlestown.

The clerk became suspicious of the man later identified as Chase when the pair entered the store. He saw them at the phone booth and heard a noise as of metal breaking, the clerk said. When the pair left, he investigated and found the coin box dislodged. He saw the two men drive away in an automobile, took down the number, and called police.

THREE DEAD AS CAR HITS TRUCK HEAD-ON

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Sept. 29—Two Concord, N. H., children and a local man were killed instantly and two other people seriously hurt here tonight when an automobile with 12 passengers crashed head-on into a truck loaded with scrap iron.

Theresa Shields, 4, and her sister, Grace Shields, both of Concord, N. H., were killed, as was Raymond Mary, 32, of Plattsburg.

Mrs. Mary Cottell of Concord, N. H., mother of the two dead children, is suffering with a broken neck at the Champlain Valley Hospital. Raymond Mary, Jr., 13-month-old son of the other victim, is also in a critical condition at the hospital, suffering with a fractured skull.

HITS BACK AT CHARGE BY O'HARA

Lt.-Gov. Jordan Says He Was Offered Job to Aid Track

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 29—Lieutenant-Governor Raymond E. Jordan declared tonight that an employee of Walter E. O'Hara offered him a job as attorney for the Narragansett Racing Association if he would use his good office to see that the fall meet was allowed on Oct. 18.

NAMES THREE OTHERS

In a lengthy statement, which follows a copyright story in the O'Hara-owned Star-Tribune which charged the Lieutenant-Governor with setting down terms in which peace would be brought about between the race track president and Governor Robert E. Quinn, Lieutenant-Governor Jordan stated that "Mr. Francis Welsh called at my house and made the absurd suggestion that Mr. O'Hara would like to employ me as an attorney and I informed him that Mr. O'Hara could not employ me in any such capacity."

Welsh was one of four, Mr. Jordan claimed, who approached and asked him to intercede to continue the operation of the track and retain O'Hara as head. He named Edward Hogan, Lawrence Hogan and James H. Kiernan, Democratic speaker of the House of Representatives, as the other members of the quartet.

In the copyright story, the Star-Tribune charges that Lieutenant-Governor Jordan, acting for the Democratic administration leaders, made the following terms for the settlement of the horse racing controversy:

The immediate sale of the Star-Tribune to outside interests.

Secondly, O'Hara must sign an apology, written by the State administration.

Thirdly, O'Hara must resign as managing director, but could continue as president of the racing association.

Fourthly, O'Hara's successor must be approved by the Democratic organization.

Fifthly, that all jobs and patronage at the race track must be distributed by William A. Shaw Cross, chairman of the Democratic State committee.

Jordan's Denial

Denying all these charges, Lieutenant-Governor Jordan said, "in the first place, neither the Governor nor any other State official has ever authorized me to make any promise or requests for them in the fight with Mr. O'Hara. I certainly have never approached Mr. O'Hara with any offers or terms, and as far as I know, no other State official or person representing the Governor has approached Mr. O'Hara.

"Shortly after the beginning of the court battles, two men came to my house at their own request, on behalf of Mr. O'Hara, and begged that we would let Mr. O'Hara continue at the race track as before and offered only to apologize publicly and thought that the Governor should be satisfied with that. At that time those two men requested that I would not make it public that they were at my house and that all dealing with a view of ending the fight which Mr. O'Hara precipitated be confidential.

"I have scrupulously followed my promise to them that it would be confidential and the same applied to all others who have approached me."

The Lieutenant-Governor then said that the published articles relieved him of his promise and placed him in a position where he must "give the public the true facts."

STICKY
VALVES
GUMMED RINGS
FOULED PLUGS

Mr. Carbon is the worst kind of Hitch-Hiker

Mr. Hard Carbon, who has been enjoying long rides in many motors, has been chased out by JENNEY SOLVENIZED GASOLINE

Don't let him transfer to your car. Keep this expensive hitch-hiker out by using JENNEY SOLVENIZED.

NOW SIMPLE SIMON'S IN A DAZE WITH CUT-BACKS, FAKES AND SPINNER PLAYS, BUT COACHES ALL WHO WOULD BE WINNERS TO TRAIN ON HOWARD JOHNSON'S DINNERS.

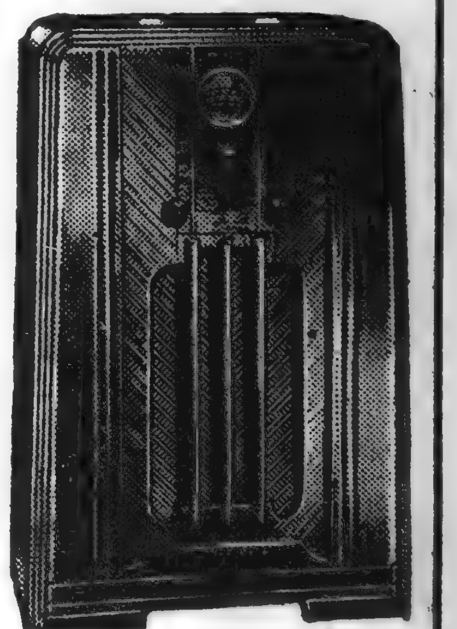
THURSDAY SPECIAL
Soup or Fruit Juice Cocktail
Cube Steak
Mashed Potato
Cole Slaw
Rolls and Butter
Homemade Ice Cream
Pudding, Cup Cake or Fruit Jello
Tea, Coffee or Milk
50c

SIGNALS!

Before or after the Big Game, when you tackle the eating problem, block all interference and guard against fumbling for a suitable restaurant. Quick, kick the throttle and you're off side by side, your goal a Howard Johnson's. Forward! Pass any other eating place or you're wide open to the penalty for illegal substitution. Smart football fans know that any try for All-American food should end around a Howard Johnson's table.

HOWARD JOHNSON'S
HOME MADE ICE CREAM
ICE CREAM SHOPS and RESTAURANTS

ALL LETTERING IN RELIEF
Without Engraved Plates
Unexcelled Quality
LETTERHEADS
Liberty 9256
87 Summer St., Boston
Write for Samples, Dept. P
RELIEF PRINTING CORP.



WORLD RADIO
SAVE 25 to 50%
EVERY DAY YOU CAN SAVE MONEY AT WORLD RADIO

Save—on these Fine Radios
$200.00 Philco ...$119.00
149.50 Bosch ... 79.95
250.00 Philco ... 109.95
79.95 Arm Chair 49.95
89.95 R. C. A... 49.95
99.95 Zenith .. 59.95
154.50 R. C. A... 99.95
54.50 Emerson . 29.95
199.50 R. C. A... 99.95

Save—at New England's Radio Headquarters for Philco—Zenith—RCA—Emerson — and others

WORLD RADIO
82 Summer St.
Phone LIB. 7751

STOP FACIAL BLEMISHES
WHILE THEY ARE STILL MINOR LOCAL IRRITATIONS
CUTICURA SOAP AND OINTMENT

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

(1)

The Fiedlers Link Half Century of the 'Pops'

By a Staff Photographer

The Famous "Pops" Sign

Emanuel Fiedler Arthur Fiedler

Emanuel Fiedler

Regional Pl

Elder Fiedler Watches Son Conduct Rehearsal of Pops

A white-haired man leaned happily on the rail of the first balcony overlooking the stage of Symphony Hall watching his first "Pops" rehearsal of the season and declared that this was a proud occasion and his best birthday present.

He was Emanuel Fiedler, father of Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the "Pops," and this was the first time he had ever seen his son conduct. He left the United States 25 years ago to go to Germany.

Watching a "Pops" rehearsal was fraught with plenty of reminiscences for the elder Fiedler. As a first violinist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra he had participated in the first "Pop" concert in 1885. In his seventy-seventh year he was now delightedly watching his son conduct, the son whom he had taught to play the violin and who has won his way to musical fame in Boston not only through his conductorship of the "Pops," but also through his outdoor concerts on the Esplanade.

Points Out Old Place

"I used to sit right down there," the elder Fiedler said, indicating a seat in the second row of the first violin section.

As he turned to take in more of the sight of his son conducting his daughter, Elsa, who had just arrived from New York for her annual visit to the first "Pop" concert of the season, declared that she was downright "tickled" to see her father enjoying himself so much. She explained that owing to the recent passing of their mother, she and her brother Arthur had decided to bring their father back to America, as he had no other kin in Germany.

The elder Fiedler, who was born near Vienna, is a musician of extensive experience. After leaving the Boston orchestra in 1911 he went to Berlin and played at various times in the Berlin Philharmonic under Arthur Nikisch and Felix Weingartner.

No Stranger to Radio

He has also been associated with the Opera Comique, was with the Kurfureston Opera for four years, and alternating in between with teaching and radiocasting.

Asked whether he had noticed any changes in Boston since his departure 25 years ago the elder Fiedler's first reaction, musicianlike, was one of surprise at the size of the present "Pops" orchestra. "In my day," he said, "we had about 50 players. Today you have from 70 ot 80." Noticing a "Pops" program flyer in the reporter's hand, he observed that the faithful old "Blue Danube Waltz" was programmed just as it had been 50 years ago at the first "Pops." "Pops" music today he found not much different than the "Pops" of yesterday except that more modern music was played. He has no objections to modern music.

Three Pupils in Orchestra

As a teacher Mr. Fiedler Sr. has more than a passing interest in the "Pops" orchestra. Three of his pupils are now playing in the orchestra and seven members of the present orchestra played with him when the first concert was played in 1885.

"You know," he said, "one of the biggest surprises to me in coming up to Symphony Hall was finding that great new building (the Christian Science Publishing Society) standing opposite the old Mother Church. I used to live at No. 15 Norway right across the street from the church. In those days there were quite a few vacant lots on Norway Street, too.

When intermission was called by Arthur Fiedler he asked the musicians to remain for a few minutes and his father came down from the balcony and was briefly introduced to the orchestra.

Gets Warm Welcome

The elder Fiedler gave a short speech of thanks at getting back to America and his pleasure in his son's conductorship. The musicians applauded warmly.

Then Julius Theodorowicz, concertmaster of the "Pops," who had been a member of the Kneisel Quartet as had the elder Fiedler, although not at the same time, joined him for a period of reminiscence.

As the photographers requested the elder Fiedler to pose with a violin in his hand he confessed that his fingers had itched for the feel of a violin ever since he had landed. Mr. Theodorowicz handed him his violin for the picture and his face beamed as he tested the strings and drew the bow over them. The newsmen left the scene with the elder Fiedler surrounded with Symphony musicians happily talking over old times.

Gossip of the Town

Post May 16

HOW HE WON RECOGNITION—The toughest musical jobs to win are places on the Boston Symphony Orchestra. And Manuel Valerio, born in New Bedford, and as American as Plymouth Rock, scaled the wall most strangely:

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, about to conduct a student group at the New England Conservatory of Music, asked an associate to come along and criticize his talent with the baton. The associate for an hour or more sat riveted to his chair in Jordan Hall and couldn't wait for the rehearsal to end. He finally jumped to his feet and hurried to the conductor.

Enthusiasm ran high. The conductor thought all this praise was for himself. "No, no, no," said the musician who was the guest-listener, "I mean that young clarinet player over there. What a beautiful tone! What technique! Who is he?"

Valerio, of course, was the clarinetist. He was brought to the attention of Serge Koussevitzky who snapped him up for the orchestra and thinks him one of the "great finds."

* * * *

Correspondence

To the Editor of the Transcript:

The discussion in your columns of Stravinsky's setting of the 150th Psalm has finally revealed, it seems to me, the fundamental differences in two points of view. What do we require of music, a definite, pictorial representation, or those deeper, more subtle intimations that constrain us to participate in what measure our imaginations will allow, with the unfoldment of an idea? Is it the letter we require, or the spirit? A ticket of admission, or the keys of the city?

Apparently Stravinsky was concerned most with the emotion that inspired the Psalm, and to evoke this in those who were to hear the music, he needed neither cymbals nor tympanum, which, after all, may represent merely the poet's symbolic material, not his theme. Must we be more literal?

It is dangerous, I believe, to try to press any work of art into the confines of some familiar mold. It will escape in spite of anything we can do, and later on return to confound us. Great music, especially, must have a life of its own which can often transcend even the imagination of its creator. In every new interpreter and in every new generation it may beget new meanings. And that is one reason why it is so potent in the lives of men.

Perhaps Stravinsky did not have in mind that angel whose heartstrings were a lute, and who made moon and stars faint with the love and wonder of his "Laudate." But the thought is not extraneous to the music, and I am the richer thereby. No, I do not think cymbals would have been more eloquent.

Elaine Westall Gould.

Jamaica Plain, May 7.

Herald May 17

Soloist

DAI BUELL, who will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Pops in the Liszt Concerto in E flat for pianoforte and orchestra on Tuesday evening, May 19.

DAI BUELL
SOLOIST AT POPS TUESDAY
SYMPHONY HALL

Final Plans Announced For Two Gala Pop Concerts

Mrs Theodore Chase (left), Mr Robert Gardiner and Miss Charlotte Denny will take the Romany trail to Symphony Hall tomorrow evening where they will usher at the festive Gypsy Pops in aid of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

Mrs Charles Devens (Edith Wolcott) will be among the younger set attending the gay Gypsy dinner before tomorrow's Pops.

Globe
Boston Globe
Globe
Boston Globe

Reading their Globe are two pretty "newsboys," Miss Alice Merriam and Miss Betty Blake, who will usher at the gala Pops on May 26 to benefit the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation.

3

"Boston Blast" to Be Pops Feature

——The ingenious and indefatigable committee planning the never-to-be-forgotten Pops for the benefit of the Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation on May 26 are completing their authentic background for this unusual party by getting out a newspaper, the Boston Blast, for which Mr Richard Ely Danielson will be editor-in-chief.

Everything from financial news to recipes will be "assigned" by night city editor Maurice Osborne, whose staff will include Mrs Mark deWolf Howe, Mothers' Day columnist; Mrs Christian Herter, circulation manager; Mrs William Power Blodgett, complexion and heart balm editor; Miss Katherine Lane, music critic; Mr Donald Carlisle, dog advisory department; Mr Frank Hatch, editor of the poetry nook; Mr Harold Buckley Willis, better homes editor; Mrs William Brace Pratt, wild flower editor, and Mr Donald Moffatt, advice to housewives.

The radio and wire service will be by the Blast's alert foreign correspondents, A. Hitler, P. Stalin, A. Eden and B. Mussolini, and contributors to the magazine section will include W. Shakespeare, C. Dickens, M. Twain and W. Winchell.

Armored trucks with eight guards and machine guns will deliver the Blast at Symphony Hall where newsboys have been allotted their "beat," and subscription customers already include Mr Charles Blanchard of Little, Brown & Co, Mr John Holmes, Mr Edward Weeks of the Atlantic Monthly, Mr Ben Ticknor of Houghton Mifflin, Mrs George P. Denny, Mr David McCord, Mrs Ramon Penn, Mrs Clement K. Stodder, Mr Dale Warren, Miss Rebekah Hobbs, Mr Eugene Williams and Mr Ross Whistler.

The ushers, in multicolor "Front Page" print dresses will include Miss Nancy Ames, Miss Betty Blake, Miss Daphne Brooks, Miss Mary Bryant, Miss Mary Derby, Miss Betsy Jaques, Miss Ledlie Laughlin, Miss Marian Lawrence, Miss Alice Merriam, Miss Katherine Peabody, Miss Elise Russell, Miss Marjorie Saltonstall, Miss Lucy Stone, Miss Frances Turner, Miss Peggy Turner, Miss Frances Weekes, Miss Betty Watson and Miss Priscilla Weld.

Orders for "request numbers" which will feature the musical program may be sent to Mrs Herter at 1 Beacon st.

The first reservations for tables include those of Mr and Mrs Maximilian Agassiz, Mr Nathaniel F. Ayer, Mr and Mrs Charles Francis Adams, Miss Martha Alford, Mrs Harry S. Burroughs, Mrs Mary Hemenway Callan, Mrs Roger Cutler, Mrs Edward Dane, Mrs R. W. Emmons, Mrs Nathaniel F. Emmons, Mrs Samuel Eliot, Mrs Robert F. Herrick, Mrs William P. Homans, Mrs Francis R. Hart, Dr Frederick S. Jack, the Misses King, Mrs George Lewis Jr, Miss Lima MacLeod, Miss Eleonora R. Sears, Mrs Charles Taylor, Mrs David Walton, Miss Beatrice Williams and Mrs S. W. Wakeman.

Romany Night at Symphony Hall

——Handsome young Romanys and their beautiful guests wearing the striped silks and gold earrings of a successful caravan, will foregather tomorrow evening at "the Boston Branch of Gypsies of America, Horsechestnut Street Encampment," for a merry dinner preceding the Gypsy Pops for the benefit of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

Going on to Symphony Hall from this gay party will be Mr and Mrs Theodore Chase, Mr and Mrs David Cheever Jr, Miss Charlotte Denny, Mr and Mrs A. L. Devens Jr, Mr and Mrs Charles Devens, Mr and Mrs Edward L. Francis, Miss Mary Frost, Miss Eleanor Gibson, Miss Frances Gardiner, Miss Rosamond Gardiner, Miss Caroline Hunnewell, Miss Harriet Moseley, Miss Priscilla Prince, Mr and Mrs F. L. W. Richardson Jr and Miss Celina Robbins. Also Mr and Mrs Horace Soule Jr, Miss Anne Tuckerman, Miss Anne Warren, Mrs Thomas Whiteside, Mr and Mrs S. H. Wolcott Jr, Miss Frances Williams, Mr Gaspar G. Bacon Jr, Mr Nathaniel T. Clark, Mrs Henry Fessenden, Mr John Gardiner, Mr Robert H. Gardiner Jr, Mr Devens Hamlen, Mr Stacey Holmes, Mr James Parker, Mr Charles Pierson, Mr Philip Weld and Mr Thomas B. Williams.

Additional reservations for tables include those of Mr and Mrs William De Ford Beal, Mr and Mrs William Powell Blodgett, Mr and Mrs Otto F. Bradley, Mr and Mrs Theodore Chase, Miss Helen Cheever, Mrs Leslie Cutler, Mr and Mrs John Wells Farley, Mr and Mrs Robert H. Gardiner, Mr and Mrs Freeman Hinckley, Mr and Mrs Robert Livermore, Mr and Mrs Roger B. Merriman, Mr and Mrs Donald Moffat, Dr and Mrs Robert Monroe, Dr and Mrs John T. Monks, Mr and Mrs Richard Paine, Dr N. B. Pierce, Mrs Nathaniel Saltonstall, Dr and Mrs Smith Peterson, Mrs E. F. Williams and Mrs Ralph B. Williams.

Globe M 17

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN New England's Greatest Evening Newspaper SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1936

n 'Beacon Hill'

DRESS REHEARSAL FOR GYPSY NIGHT BENEFIT AT POPS

(Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

ROSAMOND GARDINER DAVID CHEEVER, JR.

TWO OF THE PSEUDO ROMANY GYPSIES who will be ushers and flower vendors at the Gypsy Night Pops Monday evening are Rosamond Gardiner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Pennington Gardiner of Brookline, and David Cheever, Jr., of Dover, who had their picture taken at a "dress rehearsal" tea at which all the ushers gathered to get their final instructions from the members of the committee planning the benefit for the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

Pops Tomorrow Will Benefit Hospital

May 17

'Gypsy Night' Will Be Preceded by Several Parties

Among the many gay dinner parties which will precede glamorous "Gypsy Night" at the Pops tomorrow evening, benefitting the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, there is one which will be differentiated from all the rest, one that will have an added liveliness, a more carefree Gypsy abandon. It will be held at the Boston Branch of Gypsies of America, Horsechestnut Street Encampment (alias the home of one of Boston's most indefatigable committee workers), and the guests will be the corps of dashing young ushers for the evening and their sister flower vendors, good Gypsies all.

The guests will be Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Chase, Mr. and Mrs. David Cheever, Jr., Miss Charlotte Denny, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Deven., Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Charles Devens, Mr and Mrs. Edward L. Francis, Miss Mary Frost, Miss Eleanor Gibson, Miss Frances Gardiner, Miss Rosamond Gardiner, Miss Caroline Hunnewell and Miss Harriet Moseley. Others are Miss Priscilla Prince, Mr. and Mrs. F. L. W. Richardson, Jr., Miss Celina Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Soule, Jr., Miss Anne Tuckerman and Miss Anne Warren Still other Gypsies who will attend the dinner are Mrs. Thomas Whiteside, Mr. and Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott, Jr., Miss Frances Williams, Mr. Gasper G. Bacon, Jr., Mr. Nathaniel T. Clark, Mr. Henry Fessenden, Mr. John Gardiner, Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, Jr., and Mr. evens Hamlen. Also: Mr. Stacy olmes, Mr. James Parker, Mr. arles Pierson, Mr. Philip Weld d Mr. Thomas B. Williams.

---

acDowell Club Pops ext Sunday Night

The MacDowell Club will sponsor pop concert to be held next Sun-y, May 24, in Symphony Hall. Mr. sus Maria Sanroma, a member the club of long standing, will the soloist that evening, and will y a MacDowell concerto. As the nductor of the pop concerts, Mr. thur Fiedler, is also the conductor the MacDowell orchestra, mem-s of the club are looking forward a particularly interesting pro-m.

Reservations have already been de by Miss Helen Ranney, presi-t of the club; Mrs. Edgar Pierce, s. Livingston Davis, Mrs. Philip lding, Mrs. Morgan Butler, Mrs. nuel P. Sears, Mrs. James Cun-gham Gray and her daughter, ss Katharine Cunningham Gray, s. Adolf Leeds, Mrs. Frank Piper d Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs.

Tickets for the concert may be ocured through Miss Josephine iffith of Adams street, Milton, lu. 5788).

Society Goes to Pops---Notes on Dedham Horse Show ---Events of the Week

May 17

BY COPLEY HALL

Pastel balloons gaily floating through the air, pretty girls, masked, offering trays of gardenias for sale, "King Comus" (Mr. Gaspar Bacon, Jr.), and his graceful Queen (Miss Marion Lawrence), dressed in their royal robes and crowns, and Arthur Fiedler infusing the carnival spirit into his programme with such extras as "The Arkansas Traveler" and Irving Berlin's "Piccolino," made "Mardi Gras in Old New Orleans" at The Pops last Monday night a gala affair. The audience too was festive in mood and appearance, with the ladies in colorful evening prints adding the perfect touch to the picture.

* * * *

Mrs. Charles Cabot, attractive chairman of the event, was very charming in a gown of soft violet mousseline de soie. She and Mr. Cabot personally extended an invitation to the king and queen to join the groups at the tables after the second intermission, but young royalty, perhaps a bit shy, preferred to hold court in the first balcony. Seated at the Cabot table were Mr. and Mrs. Richard Saltonstall and Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Greenough. Enjoying the music to the utmost were Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Coolidge, the latter wearing lovely print of unusual design; Mr. and Mrs. George E. Hills, Mr. and Mrs. J. Hamilton Heard, Mr. and Mrs. Mason Hammond and Mr. and Mrs. J. Gardner Coolidge 2d.

In Miss Barbara Cushing's party were Miss Anne Howard wearing a stunning evening coat of raspberry moire, Miss Louise Stevens in a gown of tangerine. Miss Priscilla Weld in sophisticated black, and Miss Frances Hovey in one of new smart prints.

Many Lovely Costumes

Many of the younger girls with their fiances were much in evidence. Miss Gertrude McGinley, looking very chic in a coin dotted taffeta, was accompanied by Mr. Peter Jay. Miss Leslie Bremer in a lovely gown of delicate rose chiffon, was with her fiance, Mr.

was Miss Betty Brooks, in crisp navy blue dotted swiss, with white accessories, who graciously broke string with her tiny hands in expert fashion so that the balloons might be carried home in safety.

It was certainly a delightful evening for everyone, and one attractively gowned young matron enjoyed Stravinsky's "Fireworks" the more because it enabled her to get caught up on the dress she was so busily knitting.

* * * *

Another Special Pops

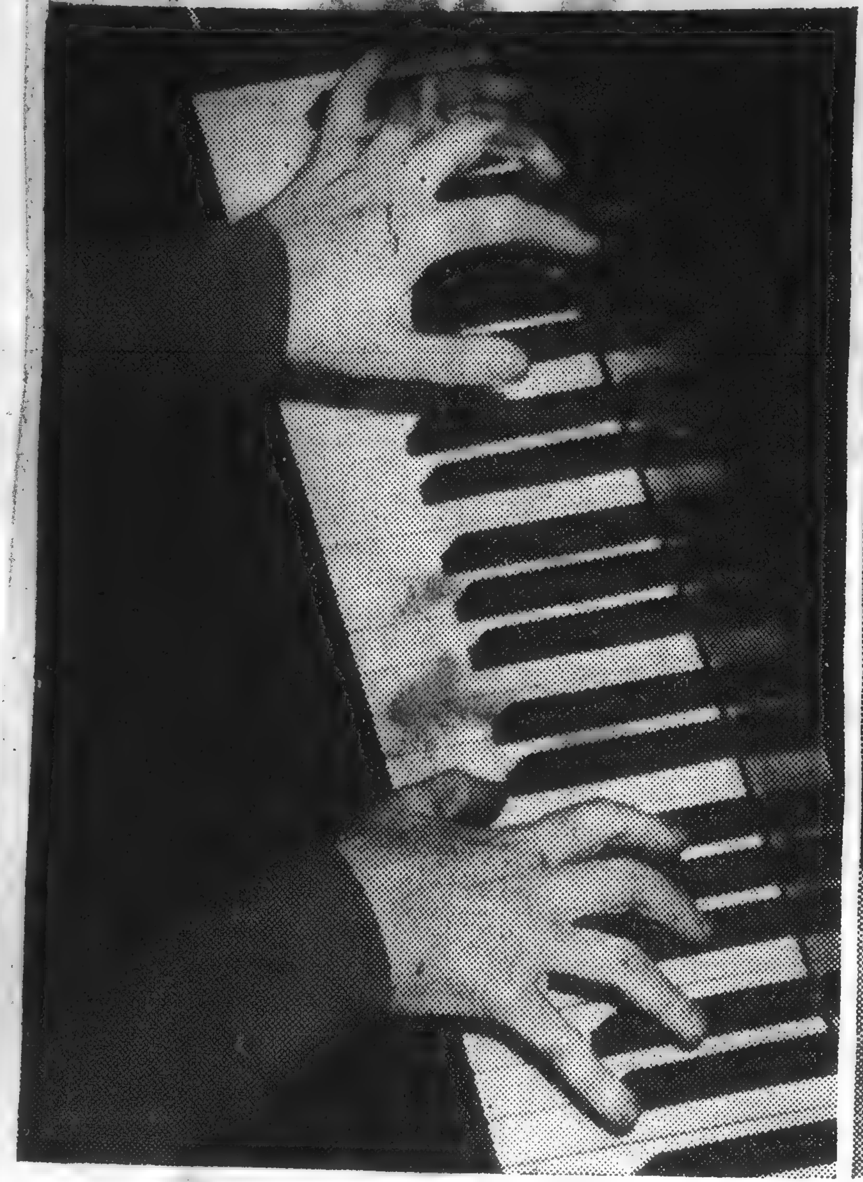
The MacDowell Club is having its own night at the Pops on Sunday, May 24. As soloist with the orchestra will be a club member of long standing, Jesus Maria Sanroma. Mr. Sanroma will play a MacDowell Concerto.

Arthur Fiedler, the conductor of the Pops Concerts at Symphony Hall, also conducts the MacDowell Club Orchestra.

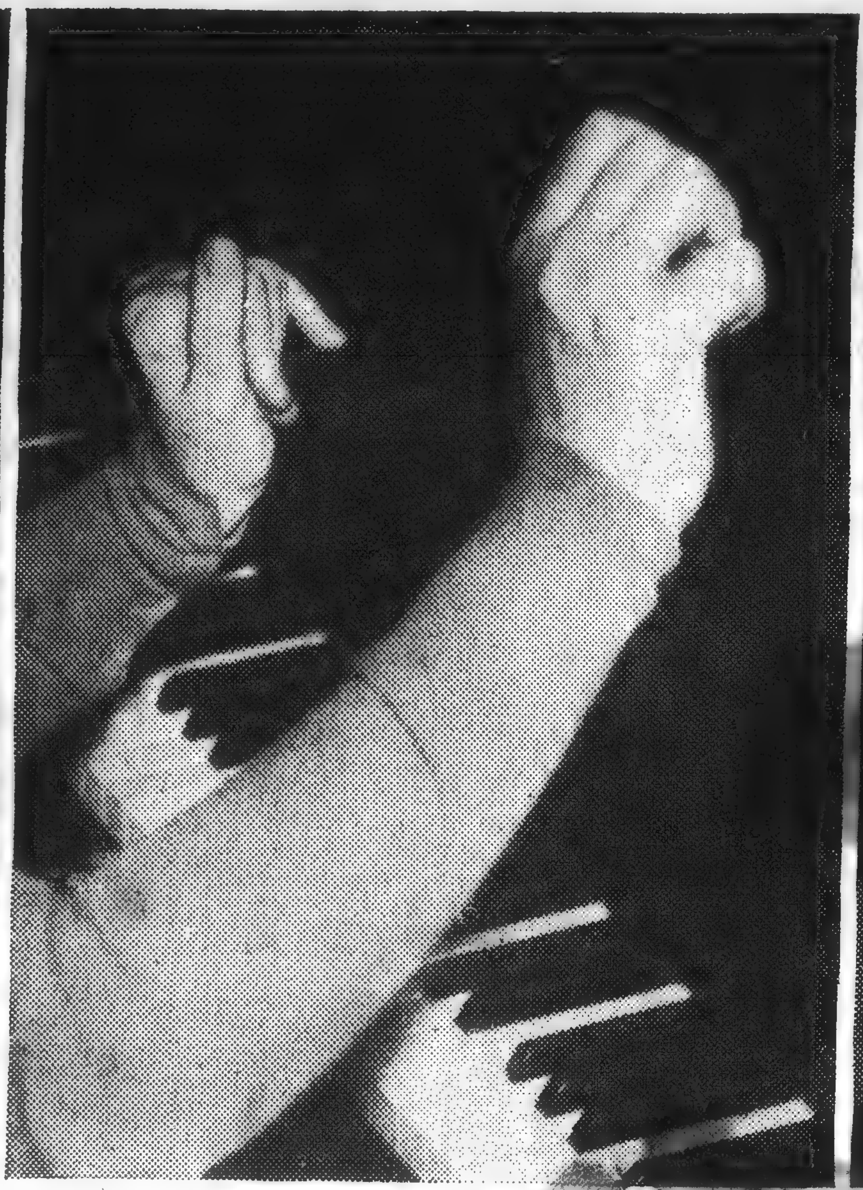
Some of those who have already made reservations are Miss Helen M. Ranney, Mrs. Edgar Pierce, Mrs. Frank Piper, Mrs. Livingston Davis, Mrs. Philip Spalding, Mrs. James Cun-

4

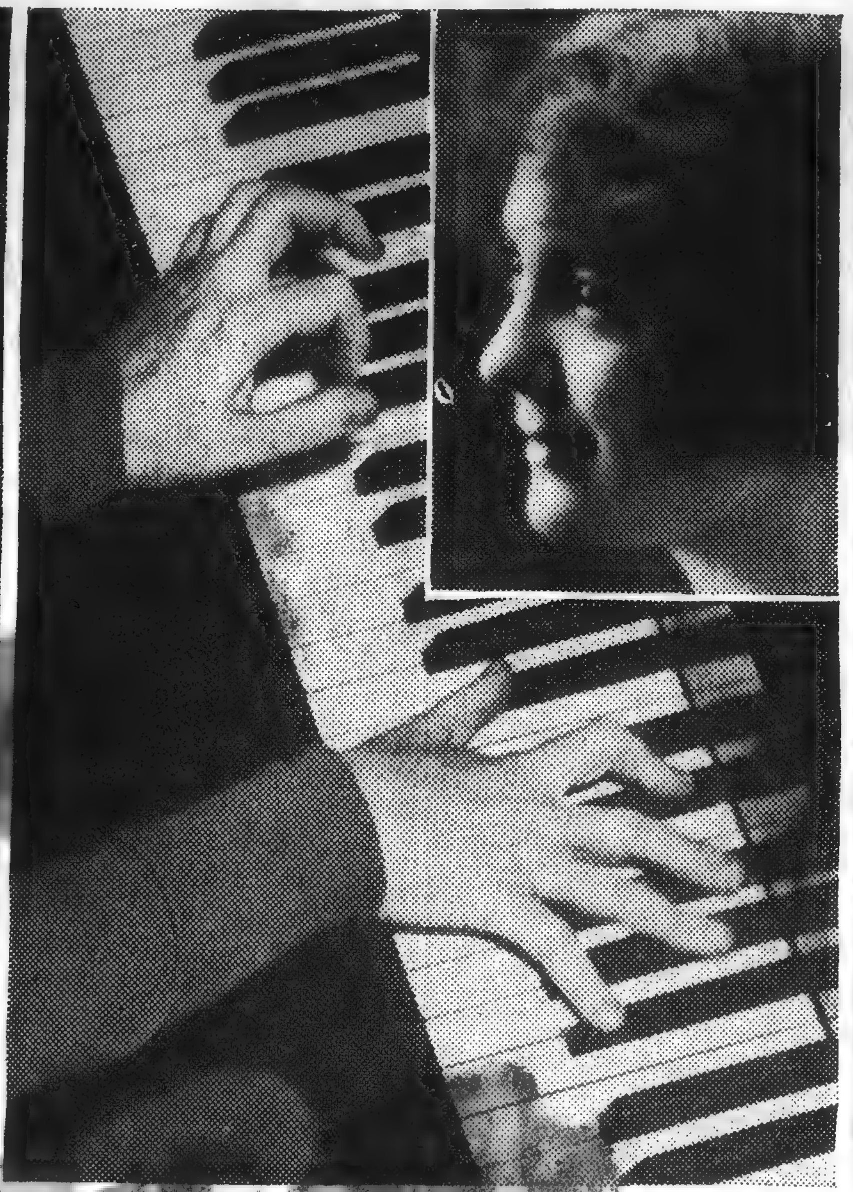
Dai Buell Practises for "Pops"--And Speed Camera Shows You Just How



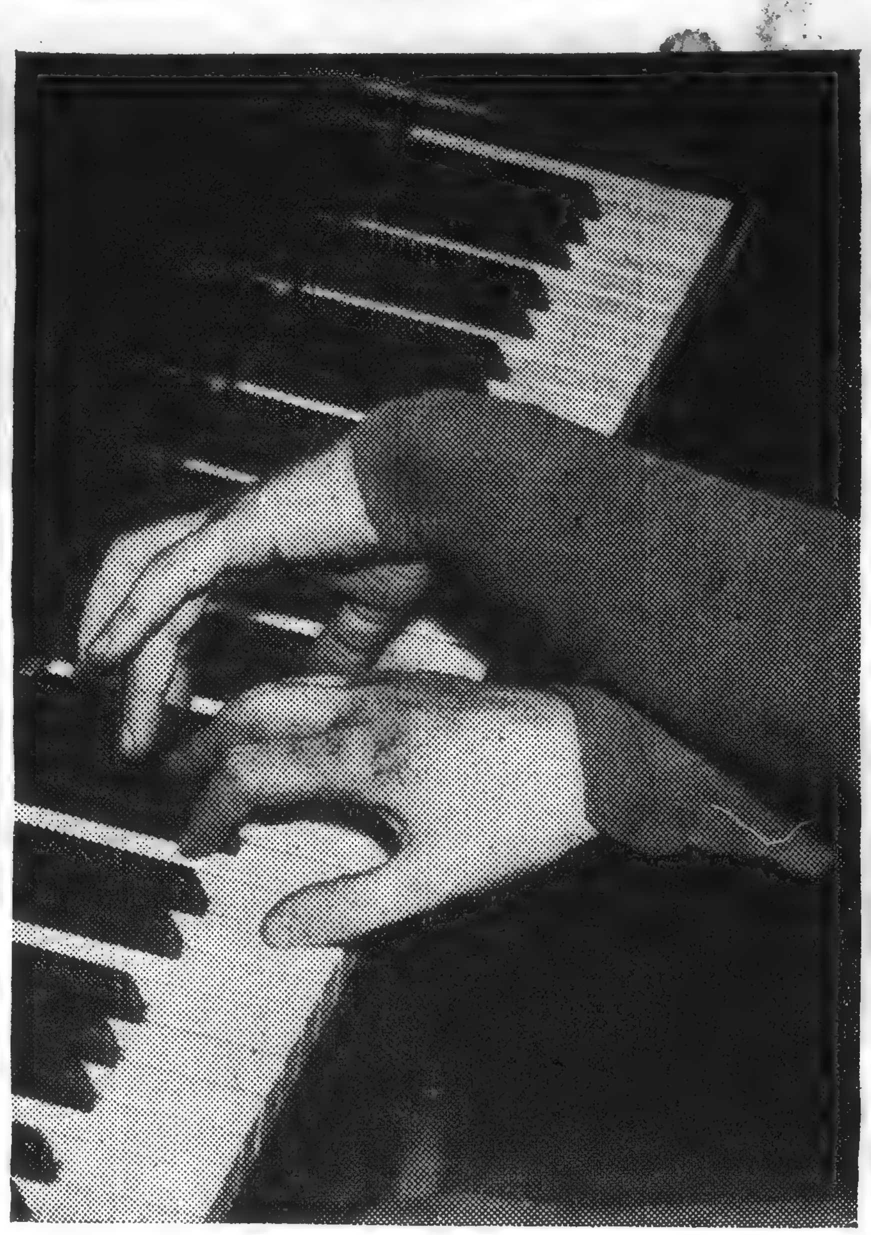
1. Quasi Adagio—caress—right hand spatulate touch. Note firm lower joint in the left hand.



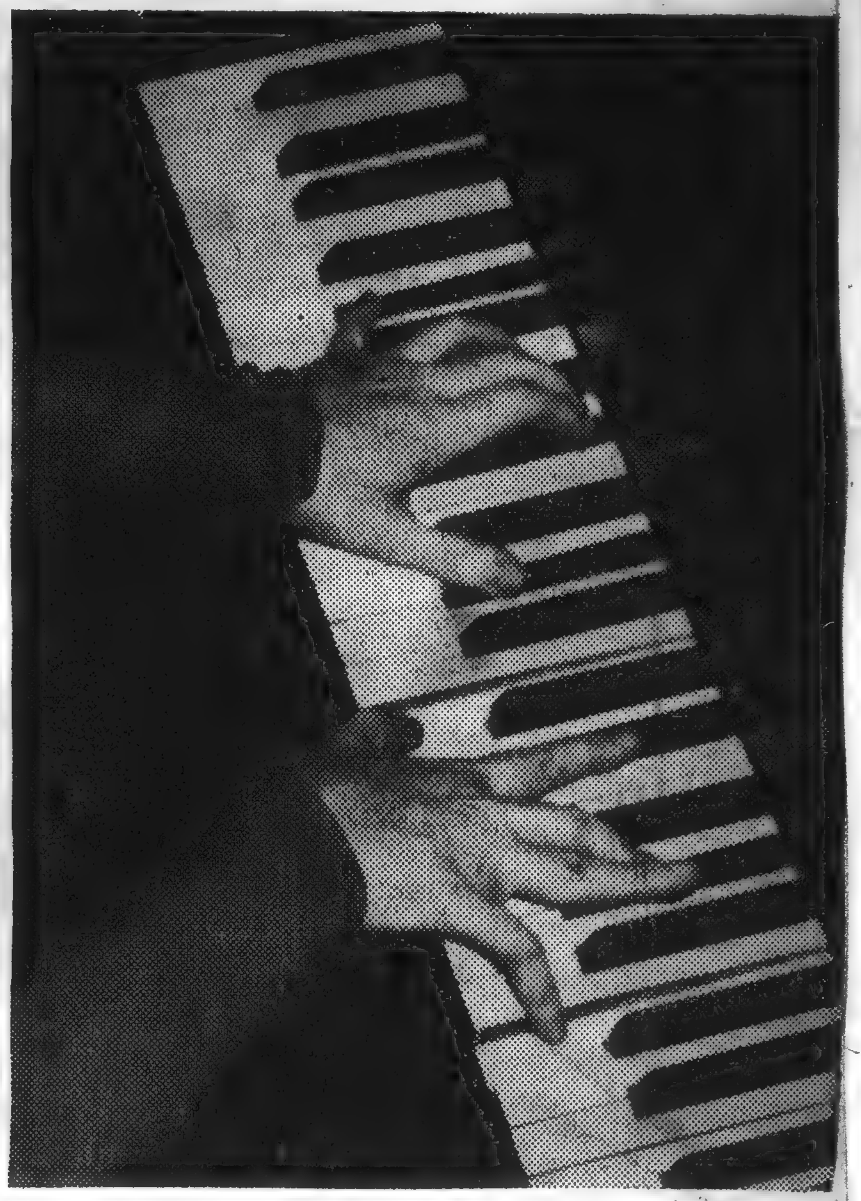
2. Stringendo—gradually faster and faster. Note action of left hand.



3. Rinforzando—quasi trillo—interlocking chords. Note strength of arch of hand. (Insert, Dai Buell.)



4. Con bravura—a handful of keys just released. Note formation of fist for relaxation.



5. Incalzando—taking fire. Note strength of thumb of right hand and reach of fourth finger. (Photos by F. G. Jason.)

Infinitely restless fingers flashing in the light gleam with a speed beyond comprehension, a wrist at a moment like steel, the next moment limp, hands lifting and diving and pouncing, while tense shoulders hunch and tear into the fight—

That is how the Sunday Post camera found Dai Buell, Newton's world famous pianist, the other day as she practised the Liszt Concerto in E Flat (for pianoforte and orchestra), which she'll play at Symphony Hall on Tuesday night, May 19, as soloist at Arthur Fiedler's Symphony "Pops."

The cutlines under the pictures above speak for themselves to music lovers. They were written, of course, by Dai Buell herself, and show her flair for brilliant conciseness.

It is hardly necessary to identify Miss Buell. She has been internationally famous since the World war, has appeared as concert artist before the most critical audiences of America and Europe.

One of the most interesting features of her career has been her invention and development of the "causerie-concert"—a kind of talky recital which has suceeded wonderfully wherever she has gone, and which has made Aloha Bungalow, in Newton Centre, a place to which music lovers like to drift.

Music with chats, or chats with music. Nothing pedantic. No lecture or anything like that, but remarks running through the programme—animated programme notes that fascinate you.

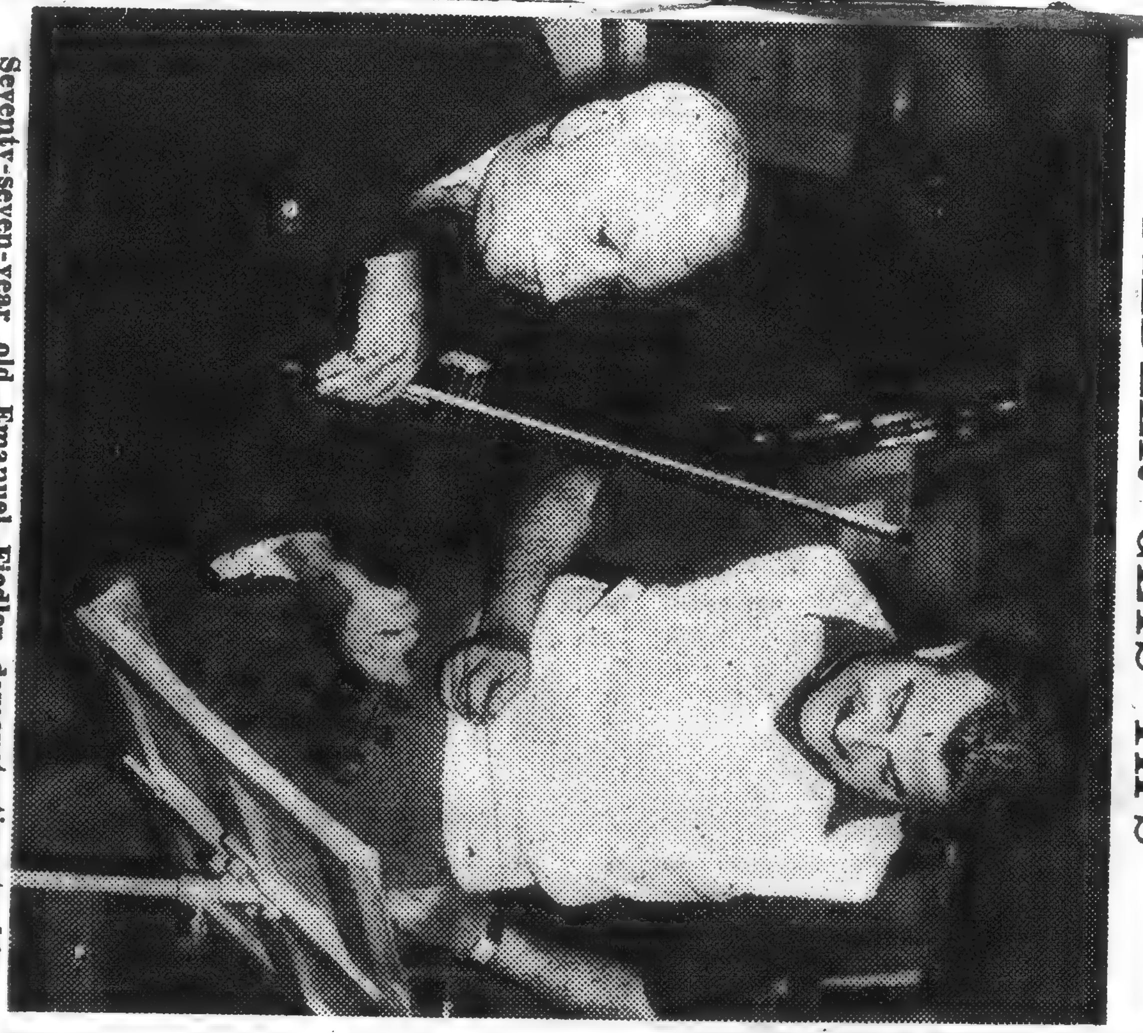
The Liszt Concerto, which Dai Buell plays Tuesday night, is one which finds her at her absolute best, one that caused a critic to write, not long ago:

"Miss Buell had many admirers in the audience, who came to hear her playing of the brilliant Liszt Concerto and they were well repaid. It was a fine performance."

TUESDAY, MAY 5, 1936

BOSTON TRAVELER,

FIEDLER GETS TIPS



Seventy-seven-year old Emanuel Fiedler demonstrating to his son Arthur (right), conductor of the Pops, how he played at the first Pops 51 years ago. Photo taken at Symphony Hall during a rehearsal for the opening of the 1936 season of Pops tomorrow night.

W. Rhodes of Lynn. (Savage)

KATHRYN POPE AND BRILHART CHAPMAN, prominent Boston dance team appearing this week at the Cocoanut Grove, and with the Hans Weiner Dancers at the Pops the week of May 25, where they will do Ravel's "La Valse," choreography by Mr. Chapman.

5

Mr. Richard E. Danielson Launches the "Boston Blast"

"Great Newspaper" to Be Sold May 26 at Burroughs Newsboys Night at Pops

Her May 17

By PAULINE WARREN

This is an historic week. Under the brilliant leadership of Editor-in-Chief, Richard E. Danielson, the best brains of Boston have organized to produce the Boston Blast, a dynamic, challenging newspaper to be sold only on May 26, newsboys night at the Pops. It will be printed at the Burroughs Newsboy Foundation Press, entirely in capital letters. Since it promises to "reveal all" a great many copies will probably find themselves enshrined for posterity in scrapbooks of collectors. Modestly these editors and contributors assured this reporter that it will make an end at once of all newspapers which have dared to precede its advent. So devastating will it be with its wit and satire that other publications are good-naturedly notified to be ready to fold up their tents and like the Arabs silently steal away. (Since this particular 7-floor tenement housing the Herald, will take a great deal of folding we'll wait a while before applying for relief.)

Interviewed at the newly established Blast office on Beacon Hill, Editor Danielson said: "Our editorial policy is stern and fearless. Our news will be practically unfit to print. Our foreign items will be sent by the Blast's alert, special correspondents—A. Hitler, P. Stalin, A. Eden, and B. Mussolini. These men can be counted on for the latest news. Domestic news will be complete, impartial, and inaccurate. In view of the recent depression we will sell our paper at the reduced price of $1.00." Mr. Harold Buckley Willis, head of the Better Homes Department, said: "What this country needs is not a 5 cent cigar but a Big Blast."

The first editorial organization meeting was stormy even though several of the editors were absent. Miss Katharine Lane, music critic, had an engagement with a hippopotamus. Mr. Frank Hatch, editor of the Poetry Book, had to paint his doghouse. Mrs. Donald Starr, art editor, was out of town seeing about an exhibition of her own, and Mr. Maurice Osborne, night city editor, gave no explanation whatever. Maybe he just forgot.

"There is no truth in the rumor that the Blast is controlled by any other Boston paper. It isn't controlled at all," Mrs. Mark Howe, internationally known Mothers Day feature writer, assured the interviewer.

The naming of the paper proved difficult. "Let it be alliterated," said Mrs. William Brace Pratt, wild flower editor—"Alliteration so often takes the place of wit." The B's were gone through.

"Boston Barometer?" "Certainly not," said the Women's Club editor. "If you call it Boston Barometer you couldn't tell its policy from day to day." "Baboon?" "No class distinction. This is a sheet for all," the advertising manager objected. "Barb?" "After all. We are all friends,'" said Editor Danielson in his gentle voice. "Let us introduce no sharp note." "Bubble?" "Savors of inflation too much," said Donald Carlisle, editor of the "What Shall I do with My Dog Department."

At this moment the nearest WPA work exploded outside.

"I have it," said Donald Moffatt, advice to housewives editor. "The Boston Blast."

So Editor Danielson broke a bottle of American Dry (Adv.) ginger ale over the rough draft of policy and the paper was christened "Boston Blast."

The editorial staff then issued the following heartening statement: "This paper will combine the merits of all previously established journals, but will have many original features besides. Contributors to our magazine section will include William Shakespeare, Charles Lamb, F. Bacon and O. O. McIntyre. As for other contributions, the editor-in-chief wants this great newspaper to come straight from and to the hearts of the public. Contributions from one and all will be welcomed

(Continued on Page 2A)

Her May

Mr. Richard Danielson Launches Newspaper

(Continued from Page 1A)

with open arms. Anyone who has ever felt the urge to write something for the press has but to send it to Mrs. Christian A. Herter, circulation manager, Symphony Hall, and get it off his mind forever. Contributions must be in by Thursday, May 21, at 10:53 A. M., daylight saving time. No article will be paid for. We can not guarantee to publish all we get.

"Our Complexion and Advice-to-the-lovelorn Editor (Mrs. William Power Blodget) will put a new face on Boston social conditions. Our Household Recipes Editor, Mr. Donald Moffatt will tell you how to make a French salad out of whipped cream and a few (used) inner tubes. Our Society Editor will show the smart set in poses never seen before. The Blast will show what society IS. What should a father do on Mothers' day, or vice versa? This subject has never been discussed before but Pansy Ironheart gives the answer in the Boston Blast.

"We shall include in our Poets corner (if there is a corner left over), which should be added allurement to bird, bush, and sky lovers, the better poets, now licking pencils in hopes of calling the allusive moose to their sides those talented youngsters, Milton Byron, Goldsmith, and Fapphio.

"As to our international news it will be utterally fresh and uncorrobuated. Believing as we do in the stimulating effect of imaginative writing we have spared no expense in setting our foreign correspondents down in spots so far removed from the activities upon which they report that no one can be prejudiced by what he sees, hears, tastes, or smells.

"As to the latest from Washington, we have arranged that our correspondents there will work in braces (or in pairs), one will sleep while the other watches and verse-visa. Thus our readers will be assured of full reports on the most tedious speeches and animated quarrels which may (and will) ensue in our great 'Capital.'"

The Blast can only be purchased (if the censor permits) at the Newsboys' Night at Symphony Hall on May 26th for the benefit of the Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation, but advance subscription orders may be sent Mrs. Christian A. Herter, circulation manager at Symphony Hall at $1 per copy, to be filled after May 26th. As this is a limited edition, collectors are already astir, orders having come in from Europe, America, and New Jersey. Among alert and early Boston collectors applying for this epoch making limited edition are Mr. Charles Blanchard of Little, Brown & Co., Mr. John Holmes, Mr. Edward Weeks of the Atlantic Monthly, Mr. Ben Ticknor of Houghton Mifflin, Mrs. George P. Denny, Mr. David McCord, Mrs. Ramon Penn[illegible] [illegible]ment K. Stodder, Mr. Dal[illegible] [illegible] Rebekah Hobbs, Mr. [illegible] and Mr. Ross Whistler.

Realizing the immense value of this journalistic scoop Editor Danielson has arranged to have the paper delivered in armored trucks and tanks with an escort of motorcycle police at Symphony Hall on May 26th. Until then a detachment of G men will watch over the presses at the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation.

Crapson
147 NEWBURY STREET
SUITS OR COATS
Made To Order
Reduced To Half Price $50
Ready to Wear Suits or Coats
Now $16.50 to $35
[illegible] Capes with Vest $35
Town and Country Frocks
$10.50 and $12.50
Fur and cloth garments restyled at summer prices.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1936

--Symphony Program

Notes--Lope de Ve

The Scholar Whose Principal Testament Was Program Notes

Philip Hale's Contribution to Music Criticism Recalled By a Recent Book

By Moses Smith

During the course of a season of symphony concerts the reviewer inevitably has occasion now and then to make obeisance to a long-established functionary, the program annotator. With the season's end it is timely to pay a less parenthetical and more formal compliment to the editor of the program-books, which, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been recently prepared by John Burk.

Mr. Burk's assignment, formidable enough in itself, in view of the wide and ever-changing repertory of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was made mountainous by the fact of his succession to the late Philip Hale, who performed the similar duties for thirty-two years, from 1901 to 1933. Mr. Hale's achievements in many fields were significant; they ornamented, especially through his more prolific and vigorous middle years, whatever medium they employed. The importance of his program-notes, however, is difficult to over-estimate, both for their intrinsic value and for the enormous influence they have had upon musical criticism and scholarship here and abroad.

* * *

It may be said at once that Mr. Hale's notes were far from ideal for the purpose for which they were presumably intended—to assist the listener in the enjoyment of the musical program. They were chock-full of information on all sorts of subjects, some of them only remotely related to the particular composition—or even composer—in question. Mr. Hale had the weakness of the man of books, the passion for extended asides and excursions.

To the extent that the listener at a concert wants to read anything about the music at all—and it has long been a problem how much he does want—he is likely to be attracted by an "appreciation" of the music, which he may scan more or less hastily before the playing begins. Mr Hale's notes, on the other hand, had almost everything but such an appreciation. It used to take weeks and often months for the most diligent reader of these notes to discover a single sentence in which the writer had, so to say, committed himself on the artistic or aesthetic qualities of the music to be performed.

Instead there were long lists of dates and facts having to do with performances; incidents in the composer's life while he was engaged in the creation of a masterpiece; quotations from eyewitnesses about the contemporary scene and personalities; analyses of the compositions, almost as a matter of course, but some of them—especially in the later years—neither made nor written by Mr. Hale; long foot-notes about an incident, or a personage, or even a social custom, suggested by something in the main text. And although Mr. Hale never worked without planning, the notes themselves frequently seemed to have no formal plan whatever.

There is no doubt that many of the subscribers to the symphony concerts made little pretence of reading the program-books fully. They were content with a glance and with taking them home carefully after the concert. Some time they would get around to reading the notes. As a rule, probably, they never did. On the other hand, those who studied the notes more conscientiously were rewarded not only with the veritable encyclopedia that had been compiled under the guidance of Mr. Hale's enormous scholarship and almost unparalleled care and accuracy but also with some miniature essays that were delightful to read. These excursions, as Mr. Hale sometimes formally termed them, were on a fairly breath-taking variety of subjects that marked the full man, in the Baconian sense.

But the principal importance of Mr. Hale's work in this field was its influence on others doing the same sort of thing and on almost anyone who practises the craft of writing or talking about music. His diligence in running down facts and legends, never accepting a statement as verified by the testimony of a single witness, was practically unprecedented in this country when he began his labors, and set the standard for subsequent research. He made readily available to others a body of information that it seemed impossible for one person to assemble in a lifetime. He despised second rate, sloppy work, and by his example shamed countless others into a more conscientious regard toward their duties.

Mr. Burk's notes, during the past three years, on the other hand, have borne a closer resemblance to what may be called the Gilmanesque pattern. They are more formally constructed essays. If they do not exhaust a single aspect of a subject, they relate it more apparently with the other aspects. Nor does Mr. Burk shy at a little research on his own account—which remains, after all, one of the functions of a program annotator. Here and there the informed reader observes a mistake in fact or an error of commission or omission that may be laid to faulty proofreading. But Mr. Burk is, of course, relatively new at his job. He has many profitable years ahead of him.

Mr. Hale's newspaper reviews tended to resemble his advance notes except for one most important detail: here he no longer abstained from critical and aesthetic judgments, but hit out boldly. Whether in praise or in condemnation he had a wonderful faculty of setting down succinctly, tersely and cogently his judgments on both music and performance. It was worth the time of the most impatient of readers to run his eye down the column containing Mr. Hale's review of a concert, to find, in a paragraph or two, a summary that might express as much as another writer required pages to say.

* * *

These recollections of the man and his work can now be reinforced by a book published during the past season, "Philip Hale's Boston Symphony Program Notes" (New York: Doubleday, Doran and Company). The title, fortunately, is somewhat of a misnomer—fortunately, because the book includes, as well, excerpts from Mr. Hale's newspaper reviews, which contain more of the man's opinions, judgments and prejudices. It is edited and compiled, appropriately enough, by Mr. Burk, who had the assistance of Mr. Hale for a short time before the latter's death.

The selection will offend some, who will not find some marvellous gem that they may happen to recall in Mr. Hale's work. To me it seems almost sacrilege that the opening chapter on Bach should be limited to about five pages. But such things had to be, no doubt, one man's basis of selection being as good as another's. To have included everything would have been impossible within the confines of a single volume addressed to a general audience.

PERSONAL and SOCIAL

May 17

(Reynolds)

A Couple of Gypsies Whose Proper Setting Should Be a Campfire and a Caravan Against a Background of Rolling Hills: Miss Rosamond Gardiner and David Cheever, Jr., Costumed (Partially) for the Gypsy Night Pop Concert, to Be Given This Monday Evening, May 18, to Benefit the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital

(Reynolds)

Another of the Gypsy Ushers for the Peter Bent Pops: Miss Caroline T. Hunnewell as She Went to Mrs. Mortimer A. Seabury's for a Meeting

(Reynolds)

Devens Hamlen and Mrs. Samuel Huntington Wolcott, Jr., Two More Who, with Mr. Wolcott as Well, Have Been Persuaded to Don Bright Colored Costumes and Serve at Symphony Hall on the Night of May 18, So That the Social Service Department of the Peter Bent Brigham May Continue Its Activities

North Shore News

THE BOSTON
TRANSCRIPT

(Warren Colby)

The Famous Front Page Print Appearing in the News: Miss Betty Gay Symington and Miss Nancy Ames, on the Steps of Mr. and Mrs. Christian A. Herter's Beacon Street House, the Latter of Whom Is Chairman of the Committee Arranging the Newsboys Night Pop Concert, on Tuesday, May 26, to Benefit the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation, Wearing the Costume in Which They Will Usher

(Warren Colby)

Mrs. Edward A. Taft, Who, as Wife of the Treasurer of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation, Is an Important Member of the Committee Working on Plans for Their Benefit Pop Concert on May 26, and Miss Phyllis Forbes, One of Several Out-of-Town Members Whose Job It Is to Spread the Good News to Boston's Outlying District's Leaving Mrs. Herter's Following Their Meeting This Week

7

Large Audience

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, MAY 18, 1936

Assured for "Radcliffe Night at the Pops" Wednesday

Many Subscriptions Received For Event to Benefit Fun

Mrs. Atherton Loring, Jr., Mrs. Parker Potter an Mrs. Gardner T. Bolster Among Many Alumnae Who Have Reserved Tables

By PAULINE WARREN

Assured of a large and enthusiastic audience is Symphony Ha this Wednesday evening when "Radcliffe at the Pops" is staged t benefit the regional scholars' fund of the Radcliffe Club of Bosto The entire floor has been taken over for the cause and last-minut reservations are being received today by Miss Ethel Dodd of Ceda road, Belmont.

Mrs. Atherton Loring, Jr., of Beacon street, Mrs. Parker Potter, also of Beacon street, and Mrs. Gardner T. Bolster (Susanne Ricker) of Cambridge are among the many alumnae who have already subscribed. Others are Miss Georgiana Ames, Mrs. Garland Ames Buckingham, Mrs. Joseph G. Carbonell, Jr. (Virginia Cannon), Mrs. Marcia K. Chamberlain, Miss H. Fordham Webster, Mrs. James Donovan (Frances Cooper-Marshal), Miss Madelaine Goodhue, Mrs. James M. Howard, Miss Marian K. Harris, Miss Harriet Houghton, Miss Marian H. Judd, Mrs. John K. Reeves, Miss Isabel R. Reynolds and Mrs. Arthur P. Stone.

Mrs. Arthur H. Morse of Weston will entertain in honor of her daughter, Miss Susan Morse. Still other subscribers include Mrs. Helen B. Goodale of New York, Miss Elizabeth Briggs, Miss Madeleine Lawrence, Miss Catherine B. McCoy, Miss Alice M. Maginnis, Mrs. John M. Maguire, Mrs. F. Gordon Morrill, Miss Grace F. Packer, Miss Constance Morse, Miss Marie L. Mahoney, Mrs. Charles T. Porter, Mrs. James W. Taylor, Miss Catharine Barr, Miss Virginia Belliveau, Miss Ruth Crapson, Miss Helene M. Ernst, Miss Myrtle Graves, Miss Mary W. Killam, Miss Rose McGirr, Miss Mary B. Robinson, Miss Margaret Todd, Dr. William H. Frackelton and Mr. Franklin W. Fessenden.

Although the greater portion of the audience will naturally be composed of Radcliffe alumnae and their friends, the undergraduates now studying at the college will not be entirely without representation. Several of the flower vendors have been chosen from the student body and, in addition, sophomores will be hostesses to members of the senior class that evening. This latter custom is a traditional one at Radcliffe, with each of the three lower classes doing something in honor of the seniors prior to commencement. The usual custom has been for the sophomores to give a picnic for the seniors, but this year they decided in favor of Pops.

PLANNING PAPER TO BE SOLD AT POPS MAY 26

This is the committee which will startle all Boston with the "Boston Blast," the challenging publication to be sold only May 26, Newsboys Night at the Pops, benefitting the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation. Mrs. Mark DeWolf Howe (left) is the Mother's Day feature writer; Mr. Donald Moffatt, Advice to Housewives editor; Mrs. William Brace Pratt, Wild Flower editor; Mr. Richard E. Danielson, editor-in-chief; the mysterious ghost writer; Mrs. Christian A. Herter, circulation manager; Mr. Donald Carlisle, editor of the "What-Shall-I-Do-with-My-Dog" department; Mr. Harold B. Willis, head of the Better Homes department, and Mrs. William Power Blodget, Social editor.

The Pops and Other Events

By Ruth Marsters

Music Editor

THE CLOSE of a music season which ended so brilliantly with those memorable performances of Bach's St. Matthew Passion, and the last concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appears to have brought about an abrupt change in kind—rather than cessation, of music activities.

So quickly do we accustom ourselves to change, however, that Symphony Hall's present nonchalant and frivolous guise appears always to have been its own.

The little green tables at which people sip and sup, the banners and flowers with which, upon occasion the hall is decorated, flippantly assert this to be their rightful place.

As indeed it is during the progress of the Pops.

* * *

ARTHUR FIEDLER, has announced the programs in which he will conduct the Pops Orchestra of eighty-five Boston Symphony men, for this, the third week of the current season.

As usual there is not a little to interest and much to enjoy.

At this evening's concert Elizabeth Travis will appear with the orchestra as soloist in Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto in B flat minor, Op. 23.

Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, Ave Maria, and Overture to "Rosamunde," and Wagner's Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan und Isolde," Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," and Overture to "Tannhauser" are also to be included in this evening's program.

On Monday evening a Gypsy program will benefit the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. Among the composers drawn from on this occasion are Liszt, Bizet, Dvorak, Enesco, Lacome, Sarasate, Kalman and Herbet.

On Tuesday evening, Dai Buell will be the soloist in a performance of Liszt's E flat major Piano Concerto. The remainder of the program is varied and includes such familiar favorites as Sibelius' "Finlandia," Dvorak's Larga from the "New World" Symphony, Gounod's March, "The Queen of Sheba," and "Prayer of Thanksgiving," Old Dutch Hymn, by Valerius.

* * *

WEDNESDAY evening is Radcliffe Night.

Edward Burlingame Hill's "Two Jazz Studies" will be heard for the first time in an orchestral version.

Elizabeth Beaman, soprano, will be the soloist in the Recitative and Air of Azael from Debussy's "L'Enfant Prodigue." The program will be continued with such fare as Ibert's Divertissement, Strauss Waltzes, Schubert's "March Militaire," Weber's Overture to "Oberon," etc.

Thursday's program is made up for the most part of melodies popular during the World War.

Friday is Roxbury Latin School Night. This program, as Saturday evening's, is compiled from music that has proved most popular during preceding seasons of the Pops.

* * *

Ro

6

Soloists with Pops; Inte

Third Week of Pops To Have Soloists; Radcliffe Night

The third week of the season of Pop concerts in Symphony Hall will begin tonight with a Schubert Tchaikovsky-Wagner program, in which Elizabeth Travis will be the soloist of the evening. Arthur Fiedler announces other programs of special interest to be given in the course of the coming week by the Pops orchestra of 85 Symphony players. Monday will bring a Gypsy program, for the benefit of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. On Tuesday, there will be another notable soloist, Dai Buell, in Liszt's E flat major Pianoforte Concerto. Wednesday will bring Radcliffe Night, with new numbers by E. B. Hill and Mabel Daniels. Thursday's program revives popular melodies from the epoch of the world war. Friday will be Roxbury Latin School Night, and Saturday will draw heavily upon the favorites of long standing at the Pops. On Sunday, May 24, the soloist will be Jesus Maria Sanroma, who will be heard in the Pianoforte Concerto of MacDowell. The programs of the week follow:

Overture to "Rosamunde"	Schubert
Ave Maria	Schubert
Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"	Schubert
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1 in B flat minor, Op. 23	Tchaikovsky
Soloist, Elizabeth Travis
Prelude and "Love-Death," "Tristan und Isolde"	Wagner
Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"	Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser"	Wagner

Monday Evening, May 18

Marche Tzigane	Lacome
Overture, "Hungarian Lustspiel"	Keler-Bela
Gypsy Air, "Songs My Mother Taught Me"	Dvorak
Roumanian Rhapsody	Enesco
Suite from "Carmen"	Bizet
Zigunerweisen	Sarasate
(Solo part by the combined first violins)
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Selection, "The Fortune Teller"	Herbert
"Play Gypsies, Play," "Countess Maritza"	Kalman
Czardas, "Warriors' Spirit"	Grossmann

TUESDAY, MAY 19

March, "The Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
Overture, "The Secret of Suzanne"	Wolf Ferrari
Largo from the "New World" Symphony	Dvorak
Third Slavonic Dance	Dvorak
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem	Sibelius
Pianoforte Concerto No. 1 in E flat major	Liszt
Soloist—Dai Buell
Selection, "Music in the Air"	Kern
"The Skaters," Waltzes	Waldteufel
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn	Valerius

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 20

Marche Militaire	Schubert
Overture to "Oberon"	Weber
Two Jazz Studies	Hill
(First performance in orchestral version)
Suite from "The Damnation of Faust"	Berlioz
"Pirates' Island"	Mabel W. Daniels
Recitative and Air of Azael, from "L'Enfant Prodigue"	Debussy
Soloist: Elizabeth Beaman, Soprano
Divertisement	Ibert
Selection, "The Gondoliers"	Sullivan
"Artists' Life," Waltzes	Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 21

March, "Lorraine"	Ganne
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Indian Lament	Dvorak-Kreisler
Rhapsody "Espana"	Chabrier
A Victory Ball	Schelling
"Ave Maria"	Bach-Gounod
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," waltzes	Strauss
"Over There," World War Medley	Arranged by M. L. Lake
Selection, "The Fighting Allies"	Arranged by M. L. Lake

Friday Evening, May 22

French Military March	Saint-Saens
Academic Festival Overture	Brahms
"Traumerei"	Schumann
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saens
Ballet Suite	Rameau-Mottl
Valse Triste	Sibelius
Bolero	Ravel
Selection, "Roberta"	Kern
"Emperor" Waltzes	Strauss
"Thunder and Lightning" Polka	Strauss

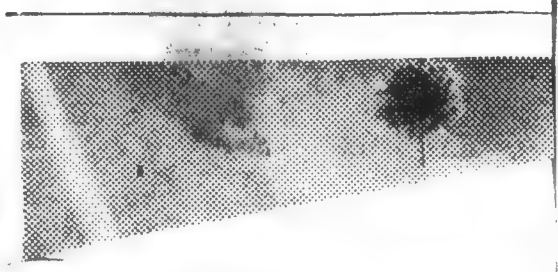
Saturday Evening, May 23

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture to "Fingal's Cave"	Mendelssohn
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes	Strauss
"Arkansas Traveller"	Arranged by Guion
Suite from "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
"Scheherazade," Finale	Rimsky-Korsakov
Soviet Iron Works	Mossolov
"On the Trail," from the Grand Canyon" Suite	Grofe
Selection, 'Of Thee I Sing"	Gershwin
"Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

Sunday Evening, May 24

Chorale and Fugue	Bach
Symphony, "The Hunt"	Leopold Mozart
(For string orchestra with horns)
Overture to 'Leonore" No. 3	Beethoven
Indian Suite	MacDowell
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2	MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem	Liszt
Andante Cantabile	Tchaikovsky
"Sailor's Dance, from "The Red Poppy"	Glier

onal Photographic on Opens at Art Club



Elizabeth Travis, pianist, who will play the Tchaikovsky B-flat minor piano Concerto with the Pops orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting, in Symphony Hall this evening.

Concerts of the Local Week

Post May 17

THIRD WEEK OF POPS

SUNDAY EVENING, MAY 17

Overture to "Rosamunde"	Schubert
Ave Maria	Schubert
Symphony in B minor "Unfinished"	Schubert
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1 in B-flat minor, Op. 23	Tchaikovsky
(Soloist: Elizabeth Travis)
Prelude and "Love-Death," "Tristan und Isolde"	Wagner
Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"	Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser"	Wagner

MONDAY EVENING, MAY 18

Marche Tzigane	Lacome
Overture, "Hungarian Lustspiel"	Keler-Bela
Gypsy Air, "Songs My Mother Taught Me."	Dvorak
Roumanian Rhapsody	Enesco
Suite from "Carmen"	Bizet
(aAragonaise; bMarch of the Smugglers; cGypsy Dance)
Zigeunerweisen	Sarasate
(Solo part by the combined first violins)
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Selection, "The Fortune Teller"	Herbert
"Play, Gypsies, Play," "Countess Maritza"	Kalman
Czardas, "Warriors' Spirit"	Grossman

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 19

March, "The Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
Overture, "The Secret of Suzanne."	Wolf-Ferrari
Largo from the "New World" Symphony.	Dvorak
Third Slavonic Dance	Dvorak
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem	Sibelius
Pianoforte Concerto No. 1 in E-flat major	Liszt
(Soloist: Dai Buell)
Selection, "Music in the Air"	Kern
"The Skaters," Waltzes	Waldteufel
Prayer of Thanksgiving (old Dutch hymn).	Valerius

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 20

Marche Militaire	Schubert
Overture to "Oberon"	Weber
Two Jazz Studies	Hill
(First performance in the orchestral version)
Suite from "The Damnation of Faust"	Berlioz
Minuet of the Will-o'-the-wisps
Ballet of the Sylphs
Rakoczy March
"Pirates' Island"	Mabel W. Daniels
Recitative and Air of Azael, from "L'Enfant Prodigue"	Debussy
Soloist, Elizabeth Beaman, Soprano
Divertissement	Ibert
Selection, "The Gondoliers"	Sullivan
"Artists' Life," Waltzes	Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 21

March, "Lorraine"	Ganne
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Indian Lament	Dvorak-Kreisler
Rhapsody, "Espana"	Chabrier
A Victory Ball	Schelling
Ave Maria	Bach-Gounod
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes	Strauss
"Over There," World War Medley
Selection, "The Fighting Allies"

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 22

ROXBURY LATIN SCHOOL NIGHT

French Military March	Saint-Saens
Academic Festival Overture	Brahms
"Traumerei"	Schumann
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saens
Ballet Suite	Rameau-Mottl
Valse Triste	Sibelius
Bolero	Ravel
Selection, "Roberta"	Kern
'Emperor,' Waltzes	Strauss
'Thunder and Lightning," Polka	Strauss

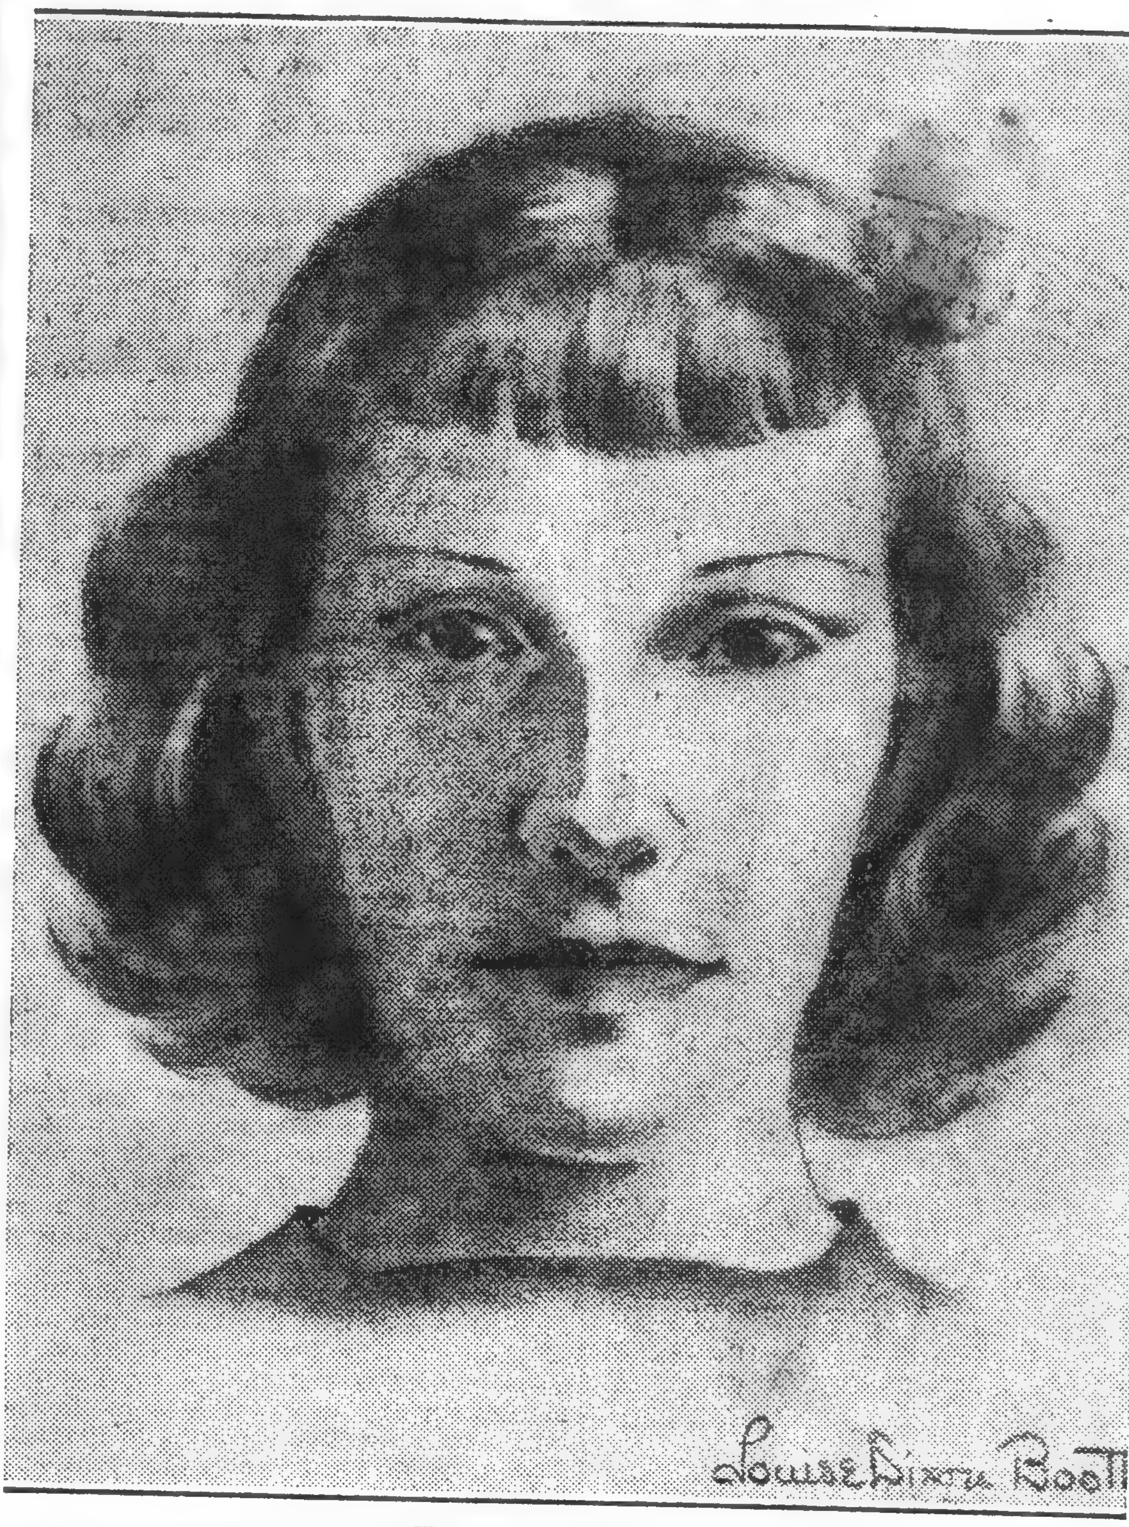
SATURDAY EVENING, MAY 23

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture to "Fingal's Cave"	Mendelssohn
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes	Strauss
"Arkansas Traveler" (Old Fiddler's Break-down)	Guion
Suite from "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
Morning Mood
Ase's Death
Anitra's Dance
In the Hall of the Troll King
"Scheherazade," Finale	Rimsky-Korsakov
Soviet Iron Works	Mossolov
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite	Grofe
Selection, "Of Thee I Sing"	Gershwin
"Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

* * * *

the Garden Court

This Demure Decade



Elizabeth Travis

Pianist at the Pops Sunday Evening in the First Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto

-Pop Concerts

Miss Travis Soloist at Pops Tonight; Programs for Week

The third week of the season of Pop concerts in Symphony Hall will begin tonight with a Schubert-Tchaikovsky-Wagner program, in which Elizabeth Travis will be soloist. Tomorrow will bring a Gypsy program for the benefit of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. On Tuesday there will be another Boston soloist, Dai Buell, in Liszt's E-flat major Piano Concerto. Wednesday will bring Radcliffe Night, with new numbers by E. B. Hill and Mabel Daniels. Thursday's program revives popular melodies from the epoch of the World War. Friday will be Roxbury Latin School Night and Saturday will draw heavily upon the favorites of long standing at the Pops.

On Sunday, May 24, the soloist will be Jesus Maria Sanroma, who will be heard in the Piano Concerto of MacDowell.

The programs of the week follow:

Tonight. Overture to "Rosamunde," Ave Maria, Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished," Schubert; concerto for pianoforte No. 1 in B flat minor, Op. 23, Tchaikovsky, soloist: Elizabeth Travis; prelude and "Love-Death," "Tristan und Isolde," prize song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," overture to "Tannhauser," Wagner.

Monday. Marche Tzigane, Lacome; overture, "Hungarian Lustspiel," Keler-Bela; Gypsy air, "Song My Mother Taught Me," Dvorak; Roumanian Rhapsody, Enesco; suite from "Carmen," Bizet; Zigunerweisen,, solo part by the combined first violins, Sarasate; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; selection, "The Fortune Teller," Herbert; "Play, Gypsy. Play," Countess Maritza," Kalman; Czardas, "Warriors' Spirit," Grossman.

Tuesday. March, "The Queen of Sheba," Gounod; overture, "The Secret of Suzanne," Wolf-Ferrari; largo from the "New World" Symphony, Dvorak; Third Slavonic Dance, Dvorak; "Finlandia," Symphonic Poem, Sibelius; pianoforte concerto No. 1 in E flat major, Liszt, soloist: Dai Buell; selection "Music in the Air," Kern; "The Sk katers," altzes, er of Thanksgiving, Old Hymn, Valerius.

Wednesday. Marche Militaire, Schubert; Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Two Jazz Studies (first performance in orchestral version), Hill; Suite from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz; "Pirates' Island," Mabel W. Daniels; Recitative and Air of Azael, from "L'Enfant Prodigue," Debussy, soloist: Elizabeth Beaman, soprano; Divertissement, Ibert; Selection, "The Gondoliers," Sullivan; "Artists' Life," waltzes, Strauss; Prelude to "Carmen," Bizet.

Thursday. March, "Lorraine," Ganne; Overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; Indian Lament, Dvorak-Kreisler; Rhapsody "Espana," Chabrier; A Victory Ball, Schelling; "Ave Maria," Bach-Gounod; Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; "Tales from the Vienna Woods," waltzes, Strauss; "Over There," World War Medley, Selection, "The Fighting Allies," arranged by M. L. Lake.

Friday. French Military March, Saint-Saens; Academic Festival Overture, Brahms; "Traumerei," Schumann; Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Ballet Suite, Rameau-Mottl; Valse Triste Sibelius; Bolero, Ravel; Selection, "Roberta," Kern; "Emperor" waltzes, "Thunder and Lightning," polka, Strauss.

Saturday. Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Overture to "Fingal's Cave," Mendelssohn; "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes, Strauss; "Arkansas Traveller," Arranged by Guion; Suite from "Peer Gynt," Grieg; "Scheherazade," Finale, Rimsky-Korsakov; Soviet Iron Works, Mossolov; "On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite, Grofe; selection, "Of Thee I Sing," Gershwin; "Stars and Stripes Forever," Souza.

Sunday, May 24. Overture in D major, Handel; Choral and Fugue, Bach-Abert; Symphony, "The Hunt," Leopold Mozart; Overture to "Euryanthe," Weber; "Indian" Suite (three movements), Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor 5, MacDowell, soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma; "L'Arlesienne," First Suite, Bizet; Andante Cantabile (from the String Quartet No. 1), Tchaikovsky; Sailors' Dance from "The Red Poppy," Gliere.

Notes and Comment

Concert Calendar

Next Week

At the Pops—Nightly as well as on Sunday at Symphony Hall, programs of music light and occasionally serious, furnished by at least eighty-five members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting. Refreshments, alcoholic and otherwise, may be enjoyed during the concert by those seated at the tables on the floor, and by all and sundry at the refreshment bar in the rear of the first balcony. Smoking and discreet conversation may be indulged in. At the concert tomorrow evening the program will consist entirely of music by Schubert and Wagner, with the exception of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto in B-Flat minor, for which Elizabeth Travis will be the soloist. On Monday there will be a program of Gypsy music, with the solo part of Sarasate's "Zigeunerweisen" being played by the entire first-violin section, for a "stunt." On Tuesday Dai Buell will play the E-Flat Piano Concerto of Liszt with the orchestra. Wednesday will be "Radcliffe Night," with Professor E. B. Hill's Two Jazz Studies and Mabel W. Daniels's "Pirates' Island" scheduled, and with Elizabeth Beaman, soprano, as soloist. Ernest Schelling's "Victory Ball" is scheduled for Thursday evening. Brahms's "Academic" Overture, the Rameau-Mottl Ballet Suite and Ravel's "Bolero" are the more symphonic items on Friday's program; and on Saturday the list will include, inter alias, Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" Overture and Mossolov's "Soviet Iron Works." On Sunday evening, May 24, there will be an exceptionally fine program with Mr. Sanromá as soloist in the Second Piano Concerto of MacDowell.

Elizabeth Travis Plays at the Pops

Symphony Hall was crowded last night for the second Sunday evening Pops Concert, a more serious affair than the first one of a week ago. The program was devoted principally to Schubert and Wagner, with an important interlude in the form of the Piano Concerto in B-flat minor by Tchaikovsky. The soloist in this work was the Boston pianist, Elizabeth Travis, who has appeared at the Pops several times in recent years and has been well received.

Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra, both in good form, played Schubert's Overture to "Rosamunde," "Ave Maria" and "Unfinished" Symphony. The Wagner numbers were the Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde," the Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg" and the Overture to "Tannhäuser."

The audience, unusually attentive, applauded the performers with hearty enthusiasm. It was especially appreciative of the playing of Miss Travis in the difficult Concerto. Her playing was noteworthy for its neatness of execution and for its high spirits. She despatched the difficult octave and bravura passages with apparent facility.

N. N.

9

Herald

MUSIC

ELIZABETH TRAVIS

Elizabeth Travis, local pianist of repute, made her first appearance at the Pops this season when she was the guest soloist in the Tchaikovsky piano concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor, Opus 23, in Symphony Hall last evening. Arthur Fiedler conducted the orchestra of 85 symphony players. The program, aside from the Tchaikovsky, was entirely devoted to works of Schubert and Wagner. It included Schubert's Overture to "Rosamunde," the Ave Maria, and the Symphony in B minor, the "Unfinished," as well as the Prelude and "Love-Death" from Wagner's music drama "Tristan und Isolde," the Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg," and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser."

This was a more seriously popular group of selections than is usually the case, more so in fact than last Sunday's concert. The capacity audience apparently appreciated the nature of the occasion and was exceptionally quiet. Conversation practically ceased only the bustling of the waitresses and the occasional popping of a wine bottle interrupted, say, the "Unfinished" Symphony. The development of this form of "meaty" program once a week by Mr. Fiedler and its cordial reception by the audience reflects credit on all concerned. By such methods is the taste of the general public whetted. And last night, in spite of the limited number of rehearsals possible under present conditions, both conductor and orchestra performed with great competence. The Schubert Symphony was especially well interpreted and without an undue amount of sentimentality.

As to the Tchaikovsky B-flat minor piano concerto, Miss Travis played it agreeably, displaying a most promising technique. The interpretation of the first movement, however, lacked some of that "magnificent breadth and sweep," remarked upon by Philip Hale. There were other moments, too, during the remainder of the work when one recalled Nicholas Rubinstein's terrible tirade against Tchaikovsky and the concerto when the composer played it to him Christmas Eve of 1874. Surely Miss Travis might have found some other concerto more suited to her requirements! But be that as it may, she performed the work creditably and thoroughly deserved the prolonged applause which she received. The orchestra gave her adequate support.

W. T. C., Jr.

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

A gypsy programme will be presented by Arthur Fiedler at the Pops in Symphony Hall tonight, the concert being for the benefit of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital!

Marche Tzigane	Lacome
Overture, "Hungarian Lustspiel"	Keler-Bela
Gypsy Air, "Songs My Mother Taught Me"	Dvorak
Roumanian Rhapsody	Enesco
Suite from "Carmen"	Bizet
Zigunerweisen Solo part by the combined first violins	Sarasate
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Selection, "The Fortune Teller"	Herbert
"Play Gypsies, Play," "Countess Maritza"	Kelman
Czards, "Warriors Spirit"	Grossman

Amusements

As Soloist

GEORGE GERSHWIN, whose music always is popular at the "Pops," will appear as piano soloist with the orchestra on May 7th.

THE MICROPHONE
BOSTON, MASS.

MAY 8 - 1936

Boston Symphony "Pops" Series Begins 51st Season On May 6th

Saturday Concerts On NBC

By MORRIS HASTINGS

Now Spring casts her enchantments over the concert-halls in Boston.

Symphony Hall, dignified home of the Boston Symphony, is transformed into a friendly auditorium of gleaming green and gold. Gone are the staid rows upon rows of commodious seats on the floor. In their places are hundreds of small and shining tables—around which people sit and smoke and eat as they listen to programs of "light" music.

This is, in short, the season of the Boston Symphony "Pop" concerts.

On Wednesday, May 6, this most delightful of Boston's Spring and early Summer institutions enters into its 51st year. Simultaneously, ARTHUR FIEDLER celebrates the opening of his seventh year as conductor of these concerts.

Many listeners who cannot get to the "Pops" are happy to know that a portion of the Saturday evening concerts will be broadcast over a coast-to-coast NBC-WJZ network from 8.30 to 9.30.

The "Pops" Programs

The "Pops" programs primarily are dedicated to that celebrated group of persons who "don't know much about music but do know what they like."

Nevertheless, shrewd program-maker that he is, Mr. FIEDLER also includes in each of his programs two or three compositions that please the more musically-sophisticated members of the audience.

Mr. FIEDLER happens to be a gentleman of good sense as well as one of catholic taste.

He believes that the first group will listen to the more "serious" music and find that they like it, and also that members of the second group will discover much that is good in the more popular numbers on the program.

Thus, a characteristic "Pops" program will harbor as bed-fellows a WAGNERIAN excerpt and a SOUSA march, a waltz by JOHANN STRAUSS and a Rhumba, an English or Russian "novelty" by WILLIAM WALTON or SHOSTAKOVICH and LISZT's Liebestraume.

Whatever the piece or whatever the kind of music, the audience is assured of a satisfactory performance because the orchestra is composed of members of the Boston Symphony and because Mr. FIEDLER is a reliable and sensible musician.

A Popular Conductor

Under the direction of ARTHUR FIEDLER, the "Pops" concerts have reached new heights of popularity.

The audience likes the conductor's crisp, straightforward manner, his lack of affectation and the clarity and liveliness of his performances.

They like his custom of presenting "special evenings." Sometimes these take the form of "Old Fashioned Nights" when members of the audience come in costumes of the Gay Nineties and the orchestra plays lilting waltzes and dashing polkas.

An Informal Discussion

ARTHUR FIEDLER (left), conductor of the Boston Symphony "Pops" Concerts, shares a joke with MORRIS HASTINGS, Managing Editor of The MICROPHONE.

or All-American or all-German programs.

Sometimes there are soloists with the orchestra. On May 7, for example, GEORGE GERSHWIN, whose music always is popular at the "Pops," will play his own piano concerto with the orchestra. Occasionally SANROMA, brilliant young pianist, appears as a soloist at the "Pops" concerts.

"Off the Stage"

Having known ARTHUR FIEDLER over a period of some years, I can testify that "in private life" he is as unaffected and direct as he appears on the stage.

He works hard when work is called for. In his lighter moments, he is a delightful companion with a fund of gay stories that he tells incomparably and a likeable boyishness that finds him ready for any adventure.

He has an inquiring mind that causes him to dig into the less familiar portions of musical literature and uncover charming and neglected overtures and suites and "novelties" which he places on his programs.

That same inquiring mind helps him find out-of-the-way restaurants, towns, and people. Let him talk with a person whose business is with anything but music, and before the conversation is over ARTHUR FIEDLER will have an intelligent knowledge of the ins and outs of that business.

He has grown up in the Boston Symphony. When he was only 20 years old, he joined the orchestra as second violinist. Later he was transferred to the viola section, where he remained until two or three years ago.

In addition to conducting the "Pops" concerts, Mr. FIEDLER directs his own Sinfonietta, which has been heard on the radio, the Cecilia Chorus, the Esplanade Concerts (some of which were broadcast by The MICROPHONE two Summers ago) and the Boston University student orchestra.

A Boston Institution

Someone has said that the "Pops" are as much a tradition of Boston as are baked beans and codfish.

They were inaugurated in 1885 when the Boston Symphony itself was only four years old. The idea was to bring to this country a touch of the European music-halls, where audiences partake of refreshment as they listen to light music, and also fill out the season for the players in the orchestra.

The first season's concerts were held in the old Boston Music all, Symphony Hall then being ncompleted.

TIMOTHEE ADAMOWSKI, then a olinist in the orchestra and still resident of Boston, was the first nductor. The concerts were ccessful from the outset.

ollowing ADAMOWSKI as conctors were FRANZ KNEISEL, NDRE MAQUARRE, GUSTAV RUBE, AGIDE JACCHIA and ALEDO CASELLA

Herald

9

MUSIC

ELIZABETH TRAVIS

Elizabeth Travis, local pianist of repute, made her first appearance at the Pops this season when she was the guest soloist in the Tchaikovsky piano concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor, Opus 23, in Symphony Hall last evening. Arthur Fiedler conducted the orchestra of 85 symphony players. The program, aside from the Tchaikovsky, was entirely devoted to works of Schubert and Wagner. It included Schubert's Overture to "Rosamunde," the Ave Maria, and the Symphony in B minor, the "Unfinished," as well as the Prelude and "Love-Death" from Wagner's music drama "Tristan und Isolde," the Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg," and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser."

This was a more seriously popular group of selections than is usually the case, more so in fact than last Sunday's concert. The capacity audience apparently appreciated the nature of the occasion and was exceptionally quiet. Conversation practically ceased only the bustling of the waitresses and the occasional popping of a wine bottle interrupted, say, the "Unfinished" Symphony. The development of this form of "meaty" program once a week by Mr. Fiedler and its cordial reception by the audience reflects credit on all concerned. By such methods is the taste of the general public whetted. And last night, in spite of the limited number of rehearsals possible under present conditions, both conductor and orchestra performed with great competence. The Schubert Symphony was especially well interpreted and without an undue amount of sentimentality.

As to the Tchaikovsky B-flat minor piano concerto, Miss Travis played it agreeably, displaying a most promising technique. The interpretation of the first movement, however, lacked some of that "magnificent breadth and sweep," remarked upon by Philip Hale. There were other moments, too, during the remainder of the work when one recalled Nicholas Rubinstein's terrible tirade against Tchaikovsky and the concerto when the composer played it to him Christmas Eve of 1874. Surely Miss Travis might have found some other concerto more suited to her requirements! But be that as it may, she performed the work creditably and thoroughly deserved the prolonged applause which she received. The orchestra gave her adequate support.

W. T. C., Jr.

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

A gypsy programme will be presented by Arthur Fiedler at the Pops in Symphony Hall tonight, the concert being for the benefit of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital!

Marche Tzigane	Lacome
Overture, "Hungarian Lustspiel"	Keler-Bela
Gypsy Air, "Songs My Mother Taught Me"	Dvorak
Roumanian Rhapsody	Enesco
Suite from "Carmen"	Bizet
Zigunerweisen Solo part by the combined first violins	Sarasate
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Selection, "The Fortune Teller"	Herbert
"Play Gypsies, Play," "Countess Maritza"	Kelman
Czards, "Warriors Spirit"	Grossman

Amusements

As Soloist

GEORGE GERSHWIN, whose music always is popular at the "Pops," will appear as piano soloist with the orchestra on May 7th.

THE MICROPHONE
BOSTON, MASS.
MAY 8 - 1936

Boston Symphony "Pops" Series Begins 51st Season On May 6th

An Informal Discussion

ARTHUR FIEDLER (left), conductor of the Boston Symphony "Pops" Concerts, shares a joke with MORRIS HASTINGS, Managing Editor of THE MICROPHONE.

Saturday Concerts On NBC

By MORRIS HASTINGS

Now Spring casts her enchantments over the concert-halls in Boston.

Symphony Hall, dignified home of the Boston Symphony, is transformed into a friendly auditorium of gleaming green and gold. Gone are the staid rows upon rows of commodious seats on the floor. In their places are hundreds of small and shining tables—around which people sit and smoke and eat as they listen to programs of "light" music.

This is, in short, the season of the Boston Symphony "Pop" concerts.

On Wednesday, May 6, this most delightful of Boston's Spring and early Summer institutions enters into its 51st year. Simultaneously, ARTHUR FIEDLER celebrates the opening of his seventh year as conductor of these concerts.

Many listeners who cannot get to the "Pops" are happy to know that a portion of the Saturday evening concerts will be broadcast over a coast-to-coast NBC-WJZ network from 8.30 to 9.30.

The "Pops" Programs

The "Pops" programs primarily are dedicated to that celebrated group of persons who "don't know much about music but do know what they like."

Nevertheless, shrewd program-maker that he is, Mr. FIEDLER also includes in each of his programs two or three compositions that please the more musically-sophisticated members of the audience.

Mr. FIEDLER happens to be a gentleman of good sense as well as one of catholic taste.

He believes that the first group will listen to the more "serious" music and find that they like it, and also that members of the second group will discover much that is good in the more popular numbers on the program.

Thus, a characteristic "Pops" program will harbor as bed-fellows a WAGNERIAN excerpt and a SOUSA march, a waltz by JOHANN STRAUSS and a Rhumba, an English or Russian "novelty" by WILLIAM WALTON or SHOSTAKOVICH and LISZT's Liebestraume.

Whatever the piece or whatever the kind of music, the audience is assured of a satisfactory performance because the orchestra is composed of members of the Boston Symphony and because Mr. FIEDLER is a reliable and sensible musician.

A Popular Conductor

Under the direction of A
FIEDLER, the "Pops" concert reached new heights of p ity.

The audience likes the tor's crisp, straightforwar ner, his lack of affectation clarity and liveliness of formances.

They like his custom
senting "special evenings.
times these take the form Fashioned Nights" when of the audience come in
of the Gay Nineties and chestra plays lilting wal dashing polkas.

or All-American or all-German programs.

Sometimes there are soloists with the orchestra. On May 7, for example, GEORGE GERSHWIN, whose music always is popular at the "Pops," will play his own piano concerto with the orchestra. Occasionally SANROMA, brilliant young pianist, appears as a soloist at the "Pops" concerts.

"Off the Stage"

Having known ARTHUR FIEDLER over a period of some years, I can testify that "in private life" he is as unaffected and direct as he appears on the stage.

He works hard when work is called for. In his lighter moments, he is a delightful companion with a fund of gay stories that he tells incomparably and a likeable boyishness that finds him ready for any adventure.

He has an inquiring mind that causes him to dig into the less familiar portions of musical literature and uncover charming and neglected overtures and suites and "novelties" which he places on his programs.

That same inquiring mind helps him find out-of-the-way restaurants, towns, and people. Let him talk with a person whose business is with anything but music, and before the conversation is over ARTHUR FIEDLER will have an intelligent knowledge of the ins and outs of that business.

He has grown up in the Boston Symphony. When he was only 20 years old, he joined the orchestra as second violinist. Later he was transferred to the viola section, where he remained until two or three years ago.

In addition to conducting the "Pops" concerts, Mr. FIEDLER directs his own Sinfonietta, which has been heard on the radio, the Cecilia Chorus, the Esplanade Concerts (some of which were broadcast by The MICROPHONE two Summers ago) and the Boston University student orchestra.

A Boston Institution

Someone has said that the "Pops" are as much a tradition of Boston as are baked beans and codfish.

They were inaugurated in 1885 when the Boston Symphony itself was only four years old. The idea was to bring to this country a touch of the European music-halls, where audiences partake of refreshment as they listen to light music, and also fill out the season for the players in the orchestra.

The first season's concerts were held in the old Boston Music Hall, Symphony Hall then being uncompleted.

TIMOTHEE ADAMOWSKI, then a violinist in the orchestra and still a resident of Boston, was the first conductor. The concerts were successful from the outset.

Following ADAMOWSKI as conductors were FRANZ KNEIS, ANDRE MAQUARRE, GUSTAV STRUBE, AGIDE JACCHIA and ALFREDO CASELLA.

SOCIETY Women's Clubs BOSTON (SUNDAY) ADVERTISER NEW ENGLAND'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION Motion Pictures THEATERS
WALTER WINCHELL–RADIO
BOSTON, SUNDAY, MAY 17, 1936
MUSIC–HOME GARDEN–TRAVEL

Nine Attendants Will Precede Hope Blanchard Altarward on Saturday

ROBERT HALLOWELL GARDINER, JR., and Mrs. The dore Chase . . . the former Dorothea Newman . . . will among the gaily costumed young smart setters selling pr grams, gardenias, cigarettes and the like at "Gypsy Night the Pops" . . . slated for tomorrow in Symphony Hall to bene Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

es from International News Photograph Service

THIS ATTRACTIVE young "gypsy" is Rosamond "Happy" Gardiner . . . post-debutante daughter of the J. Pennington Gardiners of Brookline. Miss Gardiner is amony the bevy of ushers . . . recruited from smart set ranks . . . who will assist in seating the fashionable audience arriving at Symphony tomorrow evenin [illegible] o Arthur Fiedler conduct a delightful program . . . [illegible] same time do their bit for the Brigham Hospital. All sorts of novel ideas are being arranged by the committee to make the concert one of the most colorful events of the spring season.

ANOTHER CHARMING junior smart setter in fetching gypsy attire is dark-eyed Charlotte Denny . . . post-debutante in the household of Dr. and Mrs. George Parkman Denny of Gloucester street and the North Shore. Charlotte's mother chairmans the committee of prominent society women sponsoring tomorrow evening's benefit concert.

night blue chiffon. At another table

EVENING AMERICAN New England's Greatest Evening Newspaper MONDAY, MAY 11, 1936

'Beacon Hill'

SOCIETY TURNS OUT
FOR AMERICAN NIGHT
AT THE ANNUAL POPS

CATHERINE OLNEY — RICHARD OLNEY, JR. — MRS. RICHARD OLNEY, JR. — CHARLES P. RUSSELL

AT THE AMERICAN NIGHT program at the Pops Concerts the Olney family was well represented and here you see Miss Catherine Olney, her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Olney, Jr., and Mr. Charles P. Russell as they listened to the music of Arthur Fiedler and his orchestra of Symphony players.

(Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

350 Club at Pops; Aristos Tribute to Mothers

VIGNETTES of a week-end . . .350 Club going musical Saturday evening at the Pops, and Aristos Club feting its mothers at a tea yesterday afternoon at the Hotel Sheraton . . . a grand gesture in keeping with the day's significance.

Festive indeed were the 350 Pops. Crisp organdies and billowy chiffons worn by smartly groomed ladies . . . glint of the governor's aides' uniforms . . . the rhythmic tunes of light classics . . . thus 350 bade its adieu to the current season.

For distiction and individuality, Mrs. Edward MacCourt's gown was unsurpassed, black and white print was topped with a full-length cape of black net, with a collar of tiny gardenias.

White Crepe

Mrs. Edward Donnelly, Jr., listened with delight to one of her favorite tunes, Ravel's "Bolero." Beneath her white fox scarf, she wore slim white crepe gown. In her party were Catherine Donnelly, escorted by her brother, John, Mrs. George Dennis and Mr and Mrs. Eugene McSweeney.

Others in her group were Mary Jane Ryan and her fiance, Jud Connor and Major Timilty.

For her last appearance as the club's president, Mrs. Edward Goode chose navy sheer with a bright bodice of print and Mrs. Edward O'Shea, Jr., of Belmont, topped her black lace with a fox scarf. Her guests included Mrs. Daniel O'Connor in a dinner gown of rust and gold brocade and Mrs. Thomas O'connor in a rich-looking gown of black velvet.

Busily snaring all prospective gardenia customers were a quartet of the club's attractive members . . . Margaret Donovan of Newton, Katherine Glynn of Jamaica Plain, Mary Dacey of Newton and Genevieve Mullin of Winchester . . .

Entertains

Mrs. Harry McDonald entertained a group of friends before arriving at the concert . . . her black net was edged with matching satin . . . very different and exceedingly chic. Mrs. Arthur Conlon of Belmont . . . who took an active part in Cecelian Guild's May party . . . topped her black chiffon with a crisp batiste jacket and vari-colored flowers were splashed on Mrs. John Foster's yellow crepe ensemble.

With a knowing eye to the club treasury, Agnes Goode was delighted with the turn-out. She wore royal blue beueath her squirrel cape and spent the intermission chatting with Mrs. Emile Coulon, who topped her white gown with an ermine wrap, and Mrs. Herbert Connelly whose Kelly green frock was in keeping with many Victor Herbert tunes the concert orchestra rendered.

Loretta Robinson, Miriam McCue and Mary Dolan arrived after the intermission . . . Loretta's soft print sporting huge puffed sleeve, Miriam, very naive in aquamarine overnor and Daughter Attend Pops

(Picture from International News Photograph Service)

JOHN DONNELLY — MRS. E. C. DONNELLY, JR. — GOVERNOR CURLEY

As a fitting climax to a highly successful season the 350 Club gathered at Symphony Hall on Saturday night for a night at the Pops and heading the list of guests was Governor James M. Curley and his party. With him is his daughter, Mrs. Edward C. Donnelly, Jr., and her brother-in-law, John Donnelly.

Dr. Koussevi[illegible]y Sails Today for Bavarian Alps

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, accompanied by Madame Koussevitzky and his niece, Miss Olga Naumoff, will leave New York today aboard the United States Lines' steamship Manhattan, to spend the summer abroad. They plan to visit the Bavarian Alps and Paris, among other places. Dr. Koussevitzky will be back in Boston in time to condunct three concerts Aug. 13, 15 and [illegible] at Hanna Farm, Southbridge, to be given under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

EVENING AMERICAN New England's Greatest Evening Newspaper MONDAY, MAY 11, 1936

'Beacon Hill'

SOCIETY TURNS OUT FOR AMERICAN NIGHT AT THE ANNUAL POPS

CATHERINE OLNEY — RICHARD OLNEY, JR. — MRS. RICHARD OLNEY, JR. — CHARLES P. RUSSELL

AT THE AMERICAN NIGHT program at the Pops Concerts the Olney family was well represented and here you see Miss Catherine Olney, her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Olney, Jr., and Mr. Charles P. Russell as they listened to the music of Arthur Fiedler and his orchestra of Symphony players.

(Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

350 Club at Pops: Aristos Tribute to Mothers

VIGNETTES of a week-end . . .350 C
Saturday evening at the Pops, an ing its mothers at a tea yesterday a Sheraton . . . a grand gesture in significance.

Festive indeed were the 350 Pops.
Crisp organdies and billowy chiffons worn by smartly groome ladies . . . glint of the governo aides' uniforms . . . the rhyth tunes of light classics . . . th bade its adieu to the current
For distiction and indiv
Mrs. Edward MacCour's was unsurpassed, black print was topped with cape of black net, wi tiny gardenias.

White Crep

Mrs. Edward tened with del favorite tun
Beneath he wore slim her party escorted George
Euger
Ot
Jar
C

Ge brigh
Edward topped her scarf. Her g
Daniel O'Connor
of rust and gold br
Thomas O'connor in a gown of black velvet.
Busily snaring all pros

—R whi white
and Sizes of cor
Filene's
9 p. m.

O
"A
I've never se as this love you! It comes looks almost to

"Five O'Clock Tea" Blouse
Floor of R. H. White Compa

Zotos $10
Eugene $6—Realist
Genuine Supplies use
No
No

Governor and Daughter Attend Pops

(Picture from International News Photograph Service)

JOHN DONNELLY — MRS. E. C. DONNELLY, JR. — GOVERNOR CURLEY

As a fitting climax to a highly successful season the 350 Club gathered at Symphony Hall on Saturday night for a night at the Pops and heading the list of guests was Governor James M. Curley and his party. With him is his daughter, Mrs. Edward C. Donnelly, Jr., and her brother-in-law, John Donnelly.

Dr. Koussevi y Sails Today for Bavarian Alps

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, accompanied by Madame Koussevitzky and his niece, Miss Olga Naumoff, will leave New York today aboard the United States Lines' steamship Manhattan, to spend the summer abroad. They plan to visit the Bavarian Alps and Paris, among other places. Dr. Koussevitzky will be back in Boston in time to conduct three concerts Aug. 13, 15 and 1 at Hanna Farm, Southbridge, to be given under the auspices of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Society Gathering at Gypsy Pop Concert in Symphony Hall

ON COMMITTEE FOR BENEFIT POPS MAY 26

Miss Priscilla Weld, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Weld of Buckminster road, Brookline, is a member of the committee for the benefit pop concert to be staged May 26 in Symphony Hall. Miss Weld is also a member of the Vincent Club.

Miss Frothingham Wins Trip on the Queen Mary

Peter Bent Hospital Benefits from Gay Party—Hall Draped in Gypsy Motifs—Young Men And Women Sell Flowers

By PAULINE WARREN

Miss Mary E. Frothingham, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Channing Frothingham of Bay State road, won the trip on the giant liner, the Queen Mary, awarded at the gypsy Pop concert in Symphony hall last evening. Unfortunately she is at Bryn Mawr and so was not able to claim her prize in person. Evidently every one of the hundreds in the hall had wanted to win that prize for there was a minute's tense silence when Mr. J. A. Lowell Blake stepped forward to fish out the winning ticket. Dr. Elliott C. Cutler of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, which benefited from this gay party, was greeted with a storm of applause when he read out her name.

"Gypsy Night" was as carefree as it sounds. Somber Symphony Hall was draped in gypsy motifs and the back-drop behind the orchestra, done by Mr. Gardner Cox and Mr. Nathaniel Saltonstall, was a superb mixture of wild vivid colors. A corps of young men and women (they must have been selected for their good looks) had a regular battle selling flowers and chances on the trip, the rivalry becoming so keen to be the one to sell the most they soon left the lobby and were bearding late arrivals in their motors before they had a chance to step in the hall. Their costumes were all gold bangles, and gaudy silks and they collected their money in little tin pails.

Since it was a warm sultry night, most of the fashionables in the audience were gowned in bright summer nts and organdies, adding gayety color to the occasion. There were y distinguished member of so- present. Sitting with Dr. and Cutler was Mr. J. Forbes Amory, who received practically an ovation when he stepped on the stage, in much gold braid and big black whiskers, calling: "All ashore that's going ashore" following the model of the Queen Mary borne aloft by more men in gold braid. The model, which is a beautiful graceful thing, was lighted from inside and was left to glow on the stage all through the remaining numbers of the program. The latter was a melange of gypsy airs well blended by popular Mr. Arthur Fiedler.

Also at Dr. and Mrs. Cutler's table were Mrs. Charles C. Newcomb, Mr. John Gage and the distinguished Swedish surgeon, Dr. Giertz. Mrs. Cutler was charming in a red and white printed gown with matching red slippers. Mrs. J. A. Lowell Blake was exceedingly chic in a green frock, dotted with white, which had a tiny jacket and was ruffled at the hem with narrow pleats. With it she wore emerald earrings and a cluster of deep yellow lilies in her belt. Another member of the committee who looked very smart was Mrs. Mortimer Seabury. Her gown was of white background paisley print and with it she wore a brief blue jacket of mousseline-de-soie.

Sitting together at one of the little tables were Mr. and Mrs. John A. Tuckerman, Mrs. A. L. West Movius and ex-Gov. and Mrs. William Tudor Gardiner. The latter was regal in a floral print of white background. Mrs. Tuckerman was also wearing a chic print gown—one which sophisticatedly combined deep green with pale chartreuse. Mrs. Movius wore black with a huge creamy gardenia at one shoulder. They were joined by Mr. and Mrs. Tuckerman's daughter, Miss Anne, who looked too adorable for anything in her gypsy costume of flower vendor. Her flaring short red skirt was banded with flowers and over it she wore a sheer white blouse with short puffed sleeves and a gold-embroidered bodice of red velvet.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Stockton stopped to buy flowers from several of the vendors as they came in, Mrs. Stockton looking charming in black. Black lace and chiffon was almost as popular as print. Wearing black lace were Mrs. William A. Gaston (with violets) and Mrs. Stephen Weld. Mrs. I. Tucker Burr, who attended with Mr. Burr, wore a marvelous gown of pale cream lace which had a hip-length jacket of the same lace. Mrs. Edward L. Francis was one of the prettiest of the gypsy girls and she and Mrs. Charles Devens seemed to be having the best luck in selling their wares. They were closely rivalled, however, by Mr. and Mrs. David Cheever—Mr. Cheever looked as much like a bold pirate as a gypsyy in his bandanna and gaudy-colored outfit while Mrs. Cheever was prettier than ever with a gay yellow bandanna and gold rings around her head.

Mrs. Herbert Jaques was smartness itself in one of the new black chiffons trimmed with white organdy down the front. Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott, Jr., was another of the prettier flower vendors and Miss Caroline Hunnewell was still another. The latter had further embellished her costume with strings and strings of beads and wore a single yellow rose in her golden hair instead of the usual bandanna. Mrs. J. Lewis Bremer wore a black background print frock and Mrs. Gerald Boardman wore a bright red hat with her rose red printed gown.

Miss Gwendolen Livermore and Miss Susannah Ayer were sitting at the same table, the latter wearing a wrap of green taffeta over her black printed gown, and the former in silver cloth with a long jacket of midnight blue chiffon. At another table in a large party, we recognized Miss Jane Hamlin in soft blue and pink print and Miss Ramelle Cochrane in a high-necked frock of gray print. Mr. William Grosvenor of Providence sat with his sister, Mrs. George Peabody Gardner, Jr., who looked very distinctive wearing a gown of soft black chiffon, striped with sheer black lace.

In the same party were Mr. and Mrs. Christian A. Herter, Mrs. Guy Lee, Mrs. Herbert Jaques and Mr. George von L. Meyer. Mr. Ellery Rogers came in with Mr. Roger Hooper, Mr. Samuel Cabot and Mrs. Morton Prince, the latter very beautifully gowned in black, trimmed with dull red.

Others we noted about the crowded hall were Mr. William Prescott Wolcott, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Weld, and Miss Edith Parker with her mother, Mrs. J. Harleston Parker. The latter was distinctive in a white gown, splashed over with large black flowers, over which she donned a pale orange shawl, and Miss Edith looked enchanting in a fluffy gown of cobalt blue marquisette, made with long puffed sleeves and a high neck. Mrs. Francis W. Capper's gown was also marvelous—of sheer black lace and net, trimmed with narrow bands of forest green.

We also saw Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Ward, Mrs. Ward in dark pink, and Miss Olive Berry who wore a brief cape of white ermine over her evening gown. Mrs. Robert Hallowell, very distinguished in a turquoise gown which had a long graceful train, was complimenting the vendors on their success when we glimpsed her. Mrs. Harold Challifoux wore a gown of print and Mrs. Paul Clark, who attended with Mr. Clark, was gowned in black taffeta, trimmed with dull blue. Mrs. William C. Chick wore black and green. Mrs. Charles Pettit was in black net with a cluster of pink flowers at the front and Mrs. Winthrop Pyemont was in brown taffeta. Another in brown was Mrs. John T. Bottomley who attended with her daughter, Miss Ellen Bottomley, the latter in blue and white print.

Miss Dorothy Lamb was attractive in black, and still others we noted were Mrs. Freeman Hinckley, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Claflin (Mrs. Claflin very lovely in black and white print with bright red), Miss Barbara Bremer, Miss Anne Torbert, Miss Jane Frost (very pretty as a gypsy), Mrs. William Everts and Mrs. George P. Denny, Jr. The latter wore a gown of navy and white taffeta, diagonally striped. Miss Celina Robbins and Miss Frances Williams were very winsome as flower vendors, and Mrs. Richard M. Saltonstall wore a pastel-printed gown of chiffon. Mr. and Mrs. Dunbar Lockwood attended with their two young daughters, Miss Grace in rose crepe and Miss Sydney in green and white print. Mrs. Lockwood wore black net.

Miss Eleanor Almy Miller entertained at dinner before the concert for Mr. and Mrs. Francis G. Wright of Hingham. Her guests included her sister, Miss Kathleen Bennett Miller, Miss Mary Wright, Miss Eileen Nolan, Mrs. Wright's brother, Mr. Kingman Paine, Jr., Mr. Carlyle Hayes, Mr. Cary Haskell, and Mr. Lewis F. Perry.

Program at Pops For Newsboys' Night

In addition to circulating the "Boston Blast"—the paper which will startle all Boston—May 26, in Symphony Hall, Newsboys' Night at the Pops, the energetic committee has planned an interesting and varied musical program, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist. A large and representative audience is already assured, and among the music lovers who will attend the concert are Mrs. Richard Ely Danielson, wife of the "Boston Blast's" editor-in-chief; Mrs. Allan Forbes, Mrs. Melvin M. Johnson, Mrs. Robert W. Lovett, Miss Dorothy Preston, Mrs. George Saltonstall West and Miss Dorothy West.

The selections before the first intermission will be Planquette's march, "Sambre et Meuse"; Weber's Overture "Der Freischutz"; "Liebestraum" by Liszt and Bizet's Fantasia "Carmen." Following the first intermission will be Weber's Konzerstuck, with Jesus Maria Sanroma, soloist; Brodin's dances from "Prince Igor," and numbers by the Harmonica Band of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation, the benefiting organization. The last group of selections will include Porter's "Anything Goes"; "Morning Journals" waltzes by Strauss, and Gershwin's "Wintergreen for President."

W

14

You Ought to Know by C. B. C.

ARTHUR FIEDLER, DISTINGUISHED CONDUCTOR, IS DIRECTING BOSTON'S UNIQUE "POP" CONCERTS FOR HIS SEVENTH SUCCESSIVE SEASON.

WITH THE RETURN OF ALE AND BEER, THE POPS TOOK ON THEIR OLDTIME AIR OF CONVIVIALITY. CONDUCTOR FIEDLER HIMSELF, ENJOYS A GLASS OF GOOD ALE WHICH, OF COURSE, MEANS OLD INDIA PALE!

DON'T ACCEPT A SUBSTITUTE. COMMERCIAL BREWING COMPANY MAKE THE ONLY OLD INDIA PALE ALE!

—Advertisement.

Gl. May 19

Apropos Pops

Trans May 23

Many M. D.'s of Boston town will har back to the ivied columns and Bulfinc dome of the Massachusetts General Hos pital at the Pops next Thursday evening May 28, when the concert, under th direction of Arthur Fiedler, will b sponsored by the Nurses Alumnæ Association of that famous old institution overlooking the Charles River Basin. The proceeds will be devoted to the benefit of the Massachusetts General Hospital Training School endowment fund. Mrs. Gerardo M. Balboni of 78 Mt. Vernon street is chairman of the endowment fund committee. Miss Marion Stevens, chairman of the program committee, has been in charge of the ticket sales. Nurses at the hospital have been assisted in the sale by Junior League members, Miss Betty Soule, Miss Gwendolen Livermore, Miss Marjorie Saltonstall and Miss Polly Winslow.

During the concert Thursday evening the student nurses' glee club will sing several selections, including the Massachusetts General Hospital song, the words of which were composed by Miss Margaret Dieter and the music by Miss Julia Wilkinson and Miss Helene Lee, all graduates of the school. Miss Dorothy Smith, a senior student, is director of the glee club.

Flowers of various kinds representing the different services at the hospital will be sold. To many these will revive memories of traditional "Change Day" ceremonials, when senior internes who act as house officers are launched into the vicissitudes of private practice and remaining groups each step up a notch toward the eminence of full-fledged medicos, junirs becoming seniors, "pups" graduating into juniors and "strikers" moving into "pupdom."

The endowment fund committee will hold a luncheon at the home of Mrs. Balboni next Wednesday. The members of this committee are Mrs. James Garland, Mrs. Thorvald Ross, Mrs. James M. Gallison, Mrs. George Morse, Miss Barbara Williams, Mrs. Paul Jones, Miss Anne Taylor and Miss Stevens.

A number of Boston doctors and their wives and others have subscribed for the concert. Among these are:

Dr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Faxon, Dr. and Mrs. Norman C. Baker, Miss Sally Johnson, Miss Annabella McCrae, Miss Almira Stevens, Miss Betty Dumaine, Miss Helene Lee, Dr. and Mrs. John P. Monks, ıd Mrs. W. Franklin Wood, Dr. Irs. Gerardo M. Balboni, Dr. and James H. Means, Dr. and Mrs. Cope, Dr. and Mrs. Norman Free- Dr. Paul Gustafson, Dr. and Mrs. d D. Churchill, Dr. and Mrs. Wil- lason Mixter and Dr. and Mrs. Vagner Harmer.

Dr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Goethals, d Mrs. Paul D. White, Dr. Charles rt, Dr. and Mrs. Henry C. Marble, ıd Mrs. James Hitchcock, Miss Sleeper, Miss Reta Corbett, Miss ret Riley, Dr. and Mrs. Henry K. r, Dr. and Mrs. James B. Ayer, d Mrs. Sylvester Kelley, Dr. and hester Jones, Dr. and Mrs. Wil- J. Shedden and Dr. and Mrs. R. Linton.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul G. Courtney, l Mrs. Charles E. Mason, Mr. and Ienry Bryant Bigelow, Mr. and rthur W. Bell, Mr. and Mrs. Philip on, Dr. and Mrs. Edwin Cave, Dr. rs. Varaztad H. Kazanjian, Mrs. Robert Homans, Dr. and Mrs. John S. Hodgson, Dr. and Mrs. Richard S. Eustis, Dr. and Mrs. Andre W. Reggio, Dr. and Mrs. Donald S. King, Dr. and Mrs. Richard Chute and Dr. and Mrs. Edwin T. Wyman.

Also Dr. and Mrs. Frederick T. Lord, Dr. E. Charles Romberg, Dr. Moses R. Strock, Dr. and Mrs. Ralph W. Dattinee, Dr. and Mrs. Sidney Burwell, Dr. and Mrs. John W. Cass, Dr. and Mrs. Franklin G. Balch, Jr., Dr. and Mrs. James E. Fish, Dr. and Mrs. Solomon H. Rubin, Dr. and Mrs. C. Langdon Parsons, Dr. and Mrs. George W. Holmes, Dr. and Mrs. Richard Miller, Dr. and Mrs. Francis M. Rackemann, Dr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Allen, Miss Kathleen Atto and Miss Dorothy Tarbox.

Cruise

Concert Calendar

Trav M 23

At the Pops—Nightly as well as on Sunday at Symphony Hall, programs of music light and occasionally serious, furnished by at least eighty-five members of the Boston Symphony Ochestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting. Refreshments, alcoholic and otherwise, may be enjoyed during the concert by those seated at the tables on the floor, and by all and sundry at the refreshment bar in the rear of the first balcony. Smoking and discreet conversation may be indulged in. At the concert tomorrow evening the program will include the Haydn "Symphonie Concertante" in B-uat for violin, 'cello, oboe and bassoon with orchestra and MacDowell's Second Piano Concerto in D-minor, the latter with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist.

The programs for the rest of the week follow:

Monday Evening

Marcia Reale Italiana	Gabetti
Ballet Suite from "Aida"	Verdi
Serenade	Toselli
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"	Leoncavallo
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Aria, "Che gelida manina," from "La Boheme"	Puccini
Soloist: Francesco Albanese, tenor
Rhapsody, "Italia"	Casella
Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
Waltz, "Il Bacio"	Arditi
Dance of the Camorrists from "The Jewels of the Madonna"	Wolf-Ferrari

Tuesday Evening

March, "Sambre et Meuse"	Planquette
Overture to "Der Freischütz"	Weber
Liebestraum	Liszt-Herbert
Fantasia, "Carmen"	Bizet
"Konzertstück"	Weber
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Polovetzkian Dances" from "Prince Igor"	Borodin
Harmonica Band, Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation
Selection, "Anything Goes"	Porter
"Morning Journals," Waltzes	Strauss
"Wintergreen for President"	Gershwin

Wednesday Evening

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla"	Glinka
Variations on the Austrian National Anthem (from the String Quartet	Haydn
"Briar Rose," Waltzes	Tchaikovsky
"Orgy of the Spirits" from the Oriental Suite, "Noure and Anitra"	Ilynsky
"Dreams." Violin solo, Julius Theodorowicz	Wagner
Marche Slave	Tchaikovsky
Hans Wiener Dancers with Orchestra
"La Valse"	Ravel
"Roumanian Rhapsody"	Enesco

Thursday Evening

March, "El Capitan"	Sousa
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
March of the Little Lead Soldiers	Pierne
Second "L'Arlèsienne" Suite	Bizet
"Rigoletto," Fantasia	Verdie
Prelude to "The Deluge"	Saint-Saëns
Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz
"Pathetic Symphony," Third Movement,	Tchaikovsky
"Girls of Baden," Waltzes	Konzak
"Night and Day"	Porter
Festival March	Herbert

Friday Evening

March, "La Père de la Victoire"	Ganne
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Spring (for String Orchestra)	Grieg
"Fosteriana," Rhapsody on Melodies of Stephen Foster	Baron
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Song of India	Rimsky-Korsakov
Ouverture Solennelle, '1812'	Tchaikovsky
Hans Wierner Dancers with Orchestra
"La Valse"	Ravel
"Roumanian Rhapsody"	Enesco

Saturday Evening

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld"	Offenbach
Invitation to the Dance	Weber-Berlicz
"Les Préludes," Symphonic Poem	Liszt
Bolero	Ravel
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango	Gade
Victor Herbert Favorites	Arranged by Sanford
"Danube Waves," Waltzes	Ivanovici
"Franklin D. Roosevelt" March	Woodin

Her May 24

Hans Wiener, well known Boston teacher and dancer, who will appear with his group at the Pops concerts in Symphony Hall on this coming Wednesday and Friday evenings.

6

ton, Para

Koussevitzky Sails for Europe

Programs Announced for The Berkshire Festival

Trav May 20

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra for the past 12 years, will sail today for France from New York on the S. S. Manhattan. After a Boston symphony season of 110 concerts, one of the most outstanding the famous orchestra has had, its conductor will have a quiet sojourn in Europe, staying in his Paris house, and at a mountain resort.

Dr. Koussevitzky will return to America at the end of July to conduct the music festival which the Boston symphony orchestra will give at Stockbridge, in the Berkshire mountains, on Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

The Boston symphony orchestra will figure prominently in the tercentenary activities of Harvard University in September. The orchestra will be heard by the many delegates and guests of the occasion who will then be in Cambridge. The calendar of the tercentenary will include two concerts by the orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Sept. 16 and 18, an another in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Sept. 17, as part of the celebration. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will join the orchestra in the third concert. The 56th season of the orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on Oct. 9, under Dr. Koussevitzky's conductorship.

The programs are here announced for the three concerts of the Berkshire symphonic festival: The first will consist of a Chorale of Bach, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," the same composer's Seventh Symphony, and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. The second program will include Rimsky-Korsakov's Overture, "The Russian Easter"; the Prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"; the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis and Chloe"; and the Second Symphony of Brahms. The third program will consist of Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; two Wagnerian excerpts—the preludes to "Lohengrin" and to "Die Meistersinger"; and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

BOWDOIN SQUARE

Koussevitzky Sails, Programs Announced

Tran May 20

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, sails today for France from New York on the S. S. Manhattan. After a Boston Symphony season of 110 concerts, the conductor will have a quiet sojourn in Europe, staying in his Paris house, and at a mountain resort. Dr. Koussevitzky will return to America at the end of July to conduct the music festival which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give at Stockbridge, in the Berkshire mountains, on Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will figure prominently in the tercentenary activities of Harvard University in September, as previously announced in the Transcript. The orchestra will be heard by the many delegates and guests of the occasion who will then be in Cambridge. The calendar of the Tercentenary will include two concerts by the orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Sept. 16 and 18, and another in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Sept. 17.

The complete programs are now announced for the three concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival: The first will consist of a Chorale of Bach, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," the same composer's Seventh Symphony, and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. The second program will include Rimsky-Korsakov's Overture, "The Russian Easter"; the Prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"; the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis and Chloe"; and the Second Symphony of Brahms. The third program will consist of Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; two Wagnerian excerpts—the preludes to "Lohengrin" and to "Die Meistersinger"; and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Pops in Print

Trans May 23

Final news for the Pop Concert scheduled for Tuesday evening, May 26, under the auspices of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation and to benefit their summer camp, which is known as "Agassiz Village" for its founders, Mr. and Mrs. Maxilian Agassiz, is arousing much interest, especially because of its unusual features.

As has been said, the committee recommends early reservations, tickets for both tables and balcony seats being so much in demand. A number of dinner parties have been planned to precede the concert, some of the latest reservations having been made by Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Sr., Mrs. Powell M. Cabot, Mrs. George Lee, Dr. and Mrs. John L. Ames, Stephen P. Cabot, Henry Parkman, Jr., Mrs. John Draper Gannett, Mrs. James A. Nelson, Mrs. William R. Bullard, Mrs. Richard C. Paine, Miss Elizabeth Ham-

---

* * *

MacDowell Night at the Pops

ONE OF THE MOST pleasant features for music lovers who attend the MacDowell Night at the Pops Sunday evening, will be the presence in the audience of the composer's wife, Mrs. Edward MacDowell, who is coming down from Peterboro at the invitation of Miss Helen Ranney, president of the MacDowell Club of Boston . . .

Among society's most enthusiastic followers of MacDowell's music and the fine work his wife is doing in helping to make good music available to those who yearn for it, who will be on hand to greet her Sunday evening are Mrs. Roland Nickerson, Mrs. Arthur W. Rice, Miss Elizabeth Weld, Mrs. Delano Putnam, Mrs. A. H. Ladd, Mrs. Philip De Normandie, and Mrs. Lincoln Filene . . . Miss Rebekah Hobbs, Miss Catherine Cunningham Gray and Mrs. Adolf Leeds are making plans for this very worthwhile musical event . . .

Her. May

MacDowell Club Pop Concert Tonight

Miss Elizabeth Watson Of Milton Will Head Ushers

A corps of attractive debutantes and post-debutantes will be the ushers this evening at the MacDowell Club Pop Concert held in Symphony hall. Miss Elizabeth Watson of Milton will be the head usher, substituting for Miss Millicent Leeds, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adolf Leeds of Brookline, who is in Mexico at present with her sister, Miss Felice Leeds. Her assistants will include Miss Anne H. Richards of Groton, Miss Rosamond Pier of Milton, Miss Leslie Eustis of Chestnut Hill, Miss Edith Lewis of Brookline and Miss Mary Bryant of Milton.

To be present at the concert is Mrs. Edward MacDowell, widow of the famous composer, who is herself a well-known concert pianist. Most recent reservations have been made by Mr. and Mrs. Earl Major of Newton Center, who will have as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Arnold of Providence. Their daughter, Miss Jane Major, will also have a guest at the concert—Miss Violet Brooks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Warren street, Brookline.

Other subscribers include Mrs. Frank Sawtell, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Preston, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Dr. and Mrs. Charles Porter Sylvester and Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Heasly.

You Ought to Know by C. B. C.

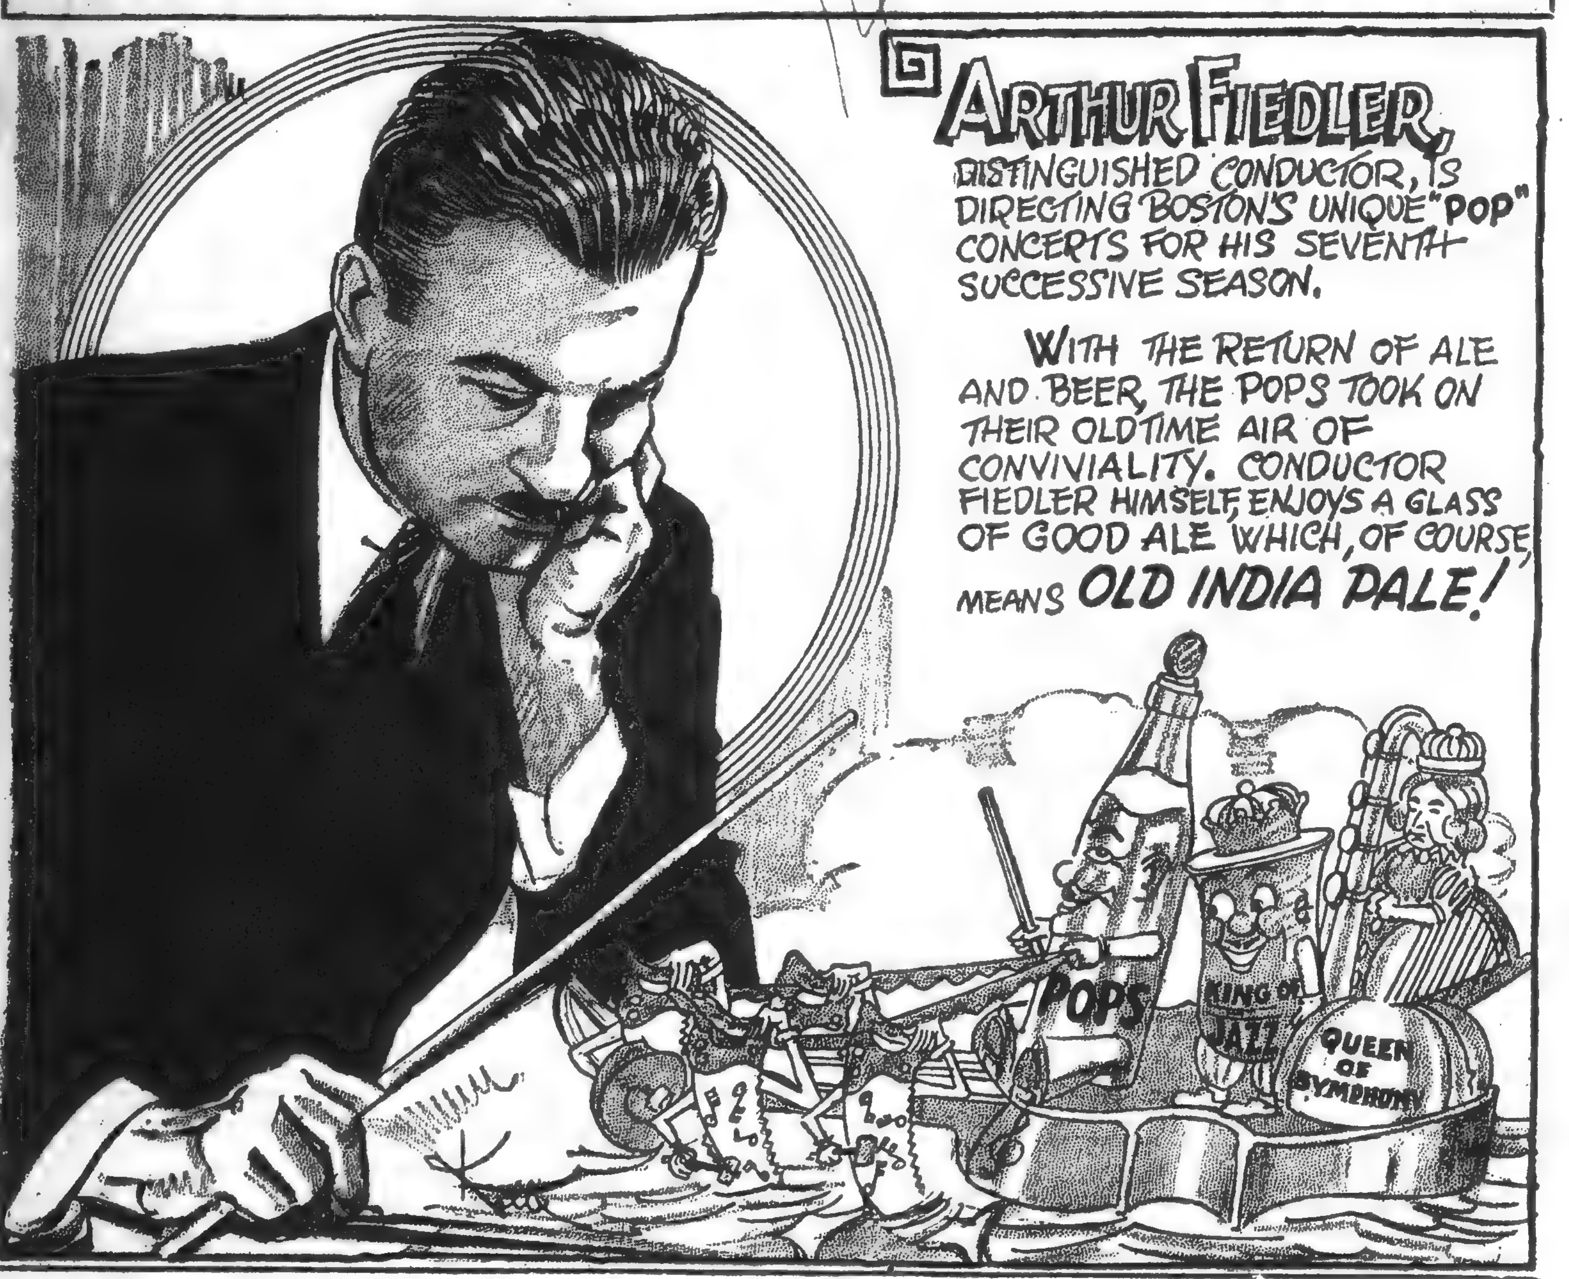
14



ARTHUR FIEDLER, DISTINGUISHED CONDUCTOR, IS DIRECTING BOSTON'S UNIQUE "POP" CONCERTS FOR HIS SEVENTH SUCCESSIVE SEASON.
WITH THE RETURN OF ALE AND BEER, THE POPS TOOK ON THEIR OLDTIME AIR OF CONVIVIALITY. CONDUCTOR FIEDLER HIMSELF ENJOYS A GLASS OF GOOD ALE WHICH, OF COURSE, MEANS OLD INDIA PALE!
POPS
KING OF JAZZ
QUEEN OF SYMPHONY

DON'T ACCEPT A SUBSTITUTE. COMMERCIAL BREWING COMPANY MAKE THE ONLY OLD INDIA PALE ALE!

—Advertisement.

Gl May 19

6

ton, Para

Koussevitzky Sails for Europe

Programs Announced for The Berkshire Festival

Las May

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra for the past 12 years, will sail today for France from New York on the S. S. Manhattan. After a Boston symphony season of 110 concerts, one of the most outstanding the famous orchestra has had, its conductor will have a quiet sojourn in Europe, staying in his Paris house, and at a mountain resort.

Dr. Koussevitzky will return to America at the end of July to conduct the music festival which the Boston symphony orchestra will give at Stockbridge, in the Berkshire mountains, on Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

The Boston symphony orchestra will figure prominently in the tercentenary activities of Harvard University in September. The orchestra will be heard by the many delegates and guests of the occasion who will then be in Cambridge. The calendar of the tercentenary will include two concerts by the orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Sept. 16 and 18, an another in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Sept. 17, as part of the celebration. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will join the orchestra in the third concert. The 56th season of the orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on Oct. 9, under Dr. Koussevitzky's conductorship.

The programs are here announced for the three concerts of the Berkshire symphonic festival: The first will consist of a Chorale of Bach, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," the same composer's Seventh Symphony, and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. The second program will include Rimsky-Korsakov's Overture, "The Russian Easter"; the Prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"; the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis and Chloe"; and the Second Symphony of Brahms. The third program will consist of Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; two Wagnerian excerpts—the preludes to "Lohengrin" and to "Die Meistersinger"; and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

BOWDOIN SQUARE

Koussevitzky Sails, Programs Announced

Tra May 20

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, sails today for France from New York on the S. S. Manhattan. After a Boston Symphony season of 110 concerts, the conductor will have a quiet sojourn in Europe, staying in his Paris house, and at a mountain resort. Dr. Koussevitzky will return to America at the end of July to conduct the music festival which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give at Stockbridge, in the Berkshire mountains, on Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will figure prominently in the tercentenary activities of Harvard University in September, as previously announced in the Transcript. The orchestra will be heard by the many delegates and guests of the occasion who will then be in Cambridge. The calendar of the Tercentenary will include two concerts by the orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Sept. 16 and 18, and another in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Sept. 17.

The complete programs are now announced for the three concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival: The first will consist of a Chorale of Bach, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," the same composer's Seventh Symphony, and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. The second program will include Rimsky-Korsakov's Overture, "The Russian Easter"; the Prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"; the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis and Chloe"; and the Second Symphony of Brahms. The third program will consist of Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; two Wagnerian excerpts—the preludes to "Lohengrin" and to "Die Meistersinger"; and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Pops in

Final news for the uled for Tuesday eve
der the auspices of th boys Foundation and summer camp, whi
"Agassiz Village" for and Mrs. Maxilian A much interest, especi unusual features.

As has been said, th
mends early reserv
both tables and balc much in demand. A parties have been pla concert, some of the having been made
Cabot, Sr., Mrs. Pow
George Lee, Dr. and
Stephen P. Cabot, H
Mrs. John Draper G
A. Nelson, Mrs. Willi
Richard C. Paine, M financial Laglen, a two, will machiner same har fashioned

The ent in marked the other major cri
was outsp one conn down thr boys ever Informer. salary bu percentag nected wi be left o forth, w tory.

In the being om blow to name of

---

* * *

MacDowell Night at the Pops

Am

ONE OF THE MOST pleasant features for music lovers who attend the MacDowell Night at the Pops Sunday evening, will be the presence in the audience of the composer's wife, Mrs. Edward MacDowell, who is coming down from Peterboro at the invitation of Miss Helen Ranney, president of the MacDowell Club of Boston . . .

Among society's most enthusiastic followers of MacDowell's music and the fine work his wife is doing in helping to make good music available to those who yearn for it, who will be on hand to greet her Sunday evening are Mrs. Roland Nickerson, Mrs. Arthur W. Rice, Miss Elizabeth Weld, Mrs. Delano Putnam, Mrs. A. H. Ladd, Mrs. Philip De Normandie, and Mrs. Lincoln Filene . . . Miss Rebekah Hobbs, Miss Catherine Cunningham Gray and Mrs. Adolf Leeds are making plans for this very worthwhile musical event . . .

Apropos Pops

Trav May 23

Many M. D.'s of Boston town will hark back to the ivied columns and Bulfinch dome of the Massachusetts General Hospital at the Pops next Thursday evening May 28, when the concert, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, will be sponsored by the Nurses Alumnæ Association of that famous old institution overlooking the Charles River Basin. The proceeds will be devoted to the benefit of the Massachusetts General Hospital Training School endowment fund. Mrs. Gerardo M. Balboni of 78 Mt. Vernon street is chairman of the endowment fund committee. Miss Marion Stevens, chairman of the program committee, has been in charge of the ticket sales. Nurses at the hospital have been assisted in the sale by Junior League members, Miss Betty Soule, Miss Gwendolen Livermore, Miss Marjorie Saltonstall and Miss Polly Winslow.

During the concert Thursday evening the student nurses' glee club will sing several selections, including the Massachusetts General Hospital song, the words of which were composed by Miss Margaret Dieter and the music by Miss Julia Wilkinson and Miss Helene Lee, all graduates of the school. Miss Dorothy Smith, a senior student, is director of the glee club.

Flowers of various kinds representing the different services at the hospital will be sold. To many these will revive memories of traditional "Change Day" ceremonials, when senior internes who act as house officers are launched into the vicissitudes of private practice and remaining groups each step up a notch toward the eminence of full-fledged medicos, junirs becoming seniors, "pups" graduating into juniors and "strikers" moving into "pupdom."

The endowment fund committee will hold a luncheon at the home of Mrs. Balboni next Wednesday. The members of this committee are Mrs. James Garland, Mrs. Thorvald Ross, Mrs. James M. Gallison, Mrs. George Morse, Miss Barbara Williams, Mrs. Paul Jones, Miss Anne Taylor and Miss Stevens.

A number of Boston doctors and their wives and others have subscribed for the concert. Among these are:

Dr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Faxon, Dr. and Mrs. Norman C. Baker, Miss Sally Johnson, Miss Annabella McCrae, Miss Almira Stevens, Miss Betty Dumaine, Miss Helene Lee, Dr. and Mrs. John P. Monks, Dr. and Mrs. W. Franklin Wood, Dr. and Mrs. Gerardo M. Balboni, Dr. and Mrs. James H. Means, Dr. and Mrs. Oliver Cope, Dr. and Mrs. Norman Freeman, Dr. Paul Gustafson, Dr. and Mrs. Edward D. Churchill, Dr. and Mrs. William Jason Mixter and Dr. and Mrs. Torr Wagner Harmer.

Also Dr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Goethals, Dr. and Mrs. Paul D. White, Dr. Charles L. Short, Dr. and Mrs. Henry C. Marble, Dr. and Mrs. James Hitchcock, Miss Ruth Sleeper, Miss Reta Corbett, Miss Margaret Riley, Dr. and Mrs. Henry K. Beecher, Dr. and Mrs. James B. Ayer, Dr. and Mrs. Sylvester Kelley, Dr. and Mrs. Chester Jones, Dr. and Mrs. William M. Shedden and Dr. and Mrs. Robert R. Linton.

Also Mr. and Mrs. Paul G. Courtney, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Mason, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bryant Bigelow, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Bell, Mr. and Mrs. Philip S. Dalton, Dr. and Mrs. Edwin Cave, Dr. and Mrs. Varaztad H. Kazanjian, Mrs. Robert Homans, Dr. and Mrs. John S. Hodgson, Dr. and Mrs. Richard S. Eustis, Dr. and Mrs. Andre W. Reggio, Dr. and Mrs. Donald S. King, Dr. and Mrs. Richard Chute and Dr. and Mrs. Edwin T. Wyman.

Also Dr. and Mrs. Frederick T. Lord, Dr. E. Charles Romberg, Dr. Moses R. Strock, Dr. and Mrs. Ralph W. Dennee, Dr. and Mrs. Sidney Burwell, Dr. and Mrs. John W. Cass, Dr. and Mrs. Franklin G. Balch, Jr., Dr. and Mrs. James E. Fish, Dr. and Mrs. Solomon H. Rubin, Dr. and Mrs. C. Langdon Parsons, Dr. and Mrs. George W. Holmes, Dr. and Mrs. Richard Miller, Dr. and Mrs. Francis M. Rackemann, Dr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Allen, Miss Kathleen Atto and Miss Dorothy Tarbox.

Cruise

Concert Calendar

Tra May 23

At the Pops—Nightly as well as on Sunday at Symphony Hall, programs of music light and occasionally serious, furnished by at least eighty-five members of the Boston Symphony Ochestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting. Refreshments, alcoholic and otherwise, may be enjoyed during the concert by those seated at the tables on the floor, and by all and sundry at the refreshment bar in the rear of the first balcony. Smoking and discreet conversation may be indulged in. At the concert tomorrow evening the program will include the Haydn "Symphonie Concertante" in B-uat for violin, 'cello, oboe and bassoon with orchestra and MacDowell's Second Piano Concerto in D-minor, the latter with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist.

The programs for the rest of the week follow:

Monday Evening

Marcia Reale Italiana	Gabetti
Ballet Suite from "Aida"	Verdi
Serenade	Toselli
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"	Leoncavallo
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Aria, "Che gelida manina," from "La Boheme"	Puccini
Soloist: Francesco Albanese, tenor
Rhapsody, "Italia"	Casella
Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
Waltz, "Il Bacio"	Arditi
Dance of the Camorrists from "The Jewels of the Madonna"	Wolf-Ferrari

Tuesday Evening

March, "Sambre et Meuse"	Planquette
Overture to "Der Freischütz"	Weber
Liebestraum	Liszt-Herbert
Fantasia, "Carmen"	Bizet
"Konzertstück"	Weber
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Polovetzkian Dances" from "Prince Igor"	Borodin
Harmonica Band, Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation
Selection, "Anything Goes"	Porter
"Morning Journals," Waltzes	Strauss
"Wintergreen for President"	Gershwin

Wednesday Evening

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla"	Glinka
Variations on the Austrian National Anthem (from the String Quartet	Haydn
"Briar Rose," Waltzes	Tchaikovsky
"Orgy of the Spirits" from the Oriental Suite, "Noure and Anitra"	Ilynsky
"Dreams," Violin solo, Julius Theodorowicz	Wagner
Marche Slave	Tchaikovsky
Hans Wiener Dancers with Orchestra
"La Valse"	Ravel
"Roumanian Rhapsody"	Enesco

Thursday Evening

March, "El Capitan"	Sousa
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
March of the Little Lead Soldiers	Pierne
Second "L'Arlèsienne" Suite	Bizet
"Rigoletto," Fantasia	Verdie
Prelude to "The Deluge"	Saint-Saëns
Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz
"Pathetic Symphony," Third Movement	Tchaikovsky
"Girls of Baden," Waltzes	Konzak
"Night and Day"	Porter
Festival March	Herbert

Friday Evening

March, "La Père de la Victoire"	Ganne
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Spring (for String Orchestra)	Grieg
"Fosteriana," Rhapsody on Melodies of Stephen Foster	Baron
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Song of India	Rimsky-Korsakov
Ouverture Solennelle, '1812'	Tchaikovsky
Hans Wierner Dancers with Orchestra
"La Valse"	Ravel
"Roumanian Rhapsody"	Enesco

Saturday Evening

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld"	Offenbach
Invitation to the Dance	Weber-Berlicz
"Les Préludes," Symphonic Poem	Liszt
Bolero	Ravel
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango	Gade
Victor Herbert Favorites	Arranged by Sanford
"Danube Waves," Waltzes	Ivanovici
"Franklin D. Roosevelt" March	Woodin

Hn May 24

Hans Wiener, well known Boston teacher and dancer, who will appear with his group at the Pops concerts in Symphony Hall on this coming Wednesday and Friday evenings.

Herald May

MacDowell Club Pop Concert Tonight

Miss Elizabeth Wats Of Milton Will Head Ushers

A corps of attractive debutan and post-debutantes will be the u ers this evening at the MacDow Club Pop Concert held in Sympho hall. Miss Elizabeth Watson of M ton will be the head usher, subs tuting for Miss Millicent Lee daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ad Leeds of Brookline, who is in Me co at present with her sister, Ma Felice Leeds. Her assistants will clude Miss Anne H. Richards Groton, Miss Rosamond Pier of M ton, Miss Leslie Eustis of Chest Hill, Miss Edith Lewis of Brook and Miss Mary Bryant of Milton.

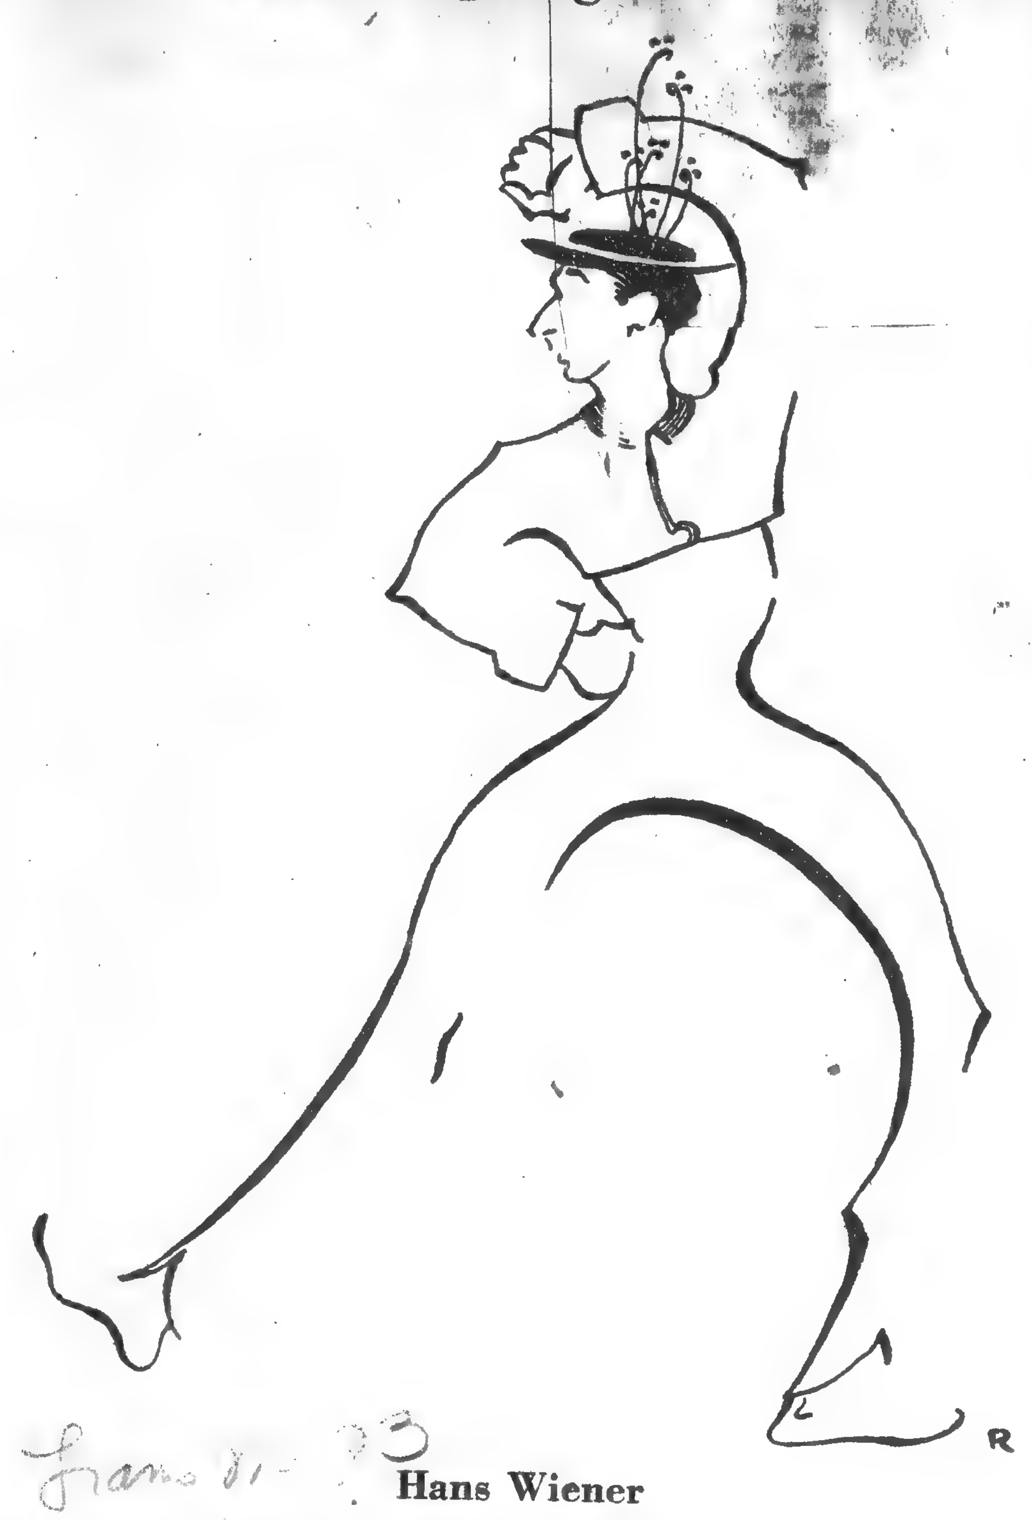
To be present at the concer

Mrs. Edward MacDowell, widow of the famous composer, who is herself a well-known concert pianist. Most recent reservations have been made by Mr. and Mrs. Earl Major of Newton Center, who will have as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Arnold of Providence. Their daughter, Miss Jane Major, will also have a guest at the concert—Miss Violet Brooks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Warren street, Brookline.

Other subscribers include Mrs. Frank Sawtell, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Preston, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Dr. and Mrs. Charles Porter Sylvester and Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Heasly.

probable that Spencer Tracy will be borrowed from Metro for the other lead.

Sprig of Spring Garniture



Trans M - 23

Hans Wiener

In the Dance to Enesco's "Roumanian" Rhapsody, to Be Presented at Pops on Wednesday and Friday Evenings Next Week

Sing:

Concerts of the Local Week

Post May 24

FOURTH WEEK OF POPS

SUNDAY EVENING, MAY 24
Overture in D major..................Handel
Chorale and Organ Fugue in G minor
Bach-Abert
Symphonie Concertante in B flat, Op. 84, for Violin, Violoncello, Oboe and Bassoon with Orchestra ....Haydn
"Indian" Suite ....MacDowell
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor
MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"L'Arlesienne," First Suite...........Bizet
Anante Cantabile (from the String Quartet No. 1).............Tchaikovsky
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy"....Glieve

MONDAY EVENING, MAY 25
Marcia Reale Italina................Gabetti
Ballet Suite from "Aida"..............Verdi
Serenade ....Toselli
Fantasia, "Pagliacci" ....Leoncavallo
Overture to "William Tell"..........Rossini
Aria, "Che gelida manina," from "La Boheme" ....Puccini
Soloist: Francesco Albanese, Tenor
Rhapsody, "Italia" ....Casella
Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda" ....Ponchielli
Waltz, "Il Bacio"....................Arditi
Dance of the Damorrists from "The Jewels of the Madonna"........Wolf-Ferrari

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 26
March, "Sambre et Meuse"......Planquette
Overture to "Der Freischutz"..........Weber
Liebestraum .... Liszt-Herbert
Fantasia, "Carmen" ....Bizet
"Konzertstuck" ....Weber
"Polovetzkian Dances," from "Prince Igor" .... Borodin
Harmonica Band .... Selected
Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation
Selection, "Anything Goes"............ Porter
"Morning Journals," Waltzes.........Strauss
"Wintergreen for President"........Gershwin

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 27
Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"
Rimsky-Korasakov
Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla". Glinka
Variations on the Austrian National Anthem (from the String Quartet, Op. 76, No. 3)......................Haydn
"Briar Rose," Waltz...........Tchaikovsky
"Orgy of the Spirits," from the Oriental Suite "Noure and Anitra"........Ilynsky
"Dreams" .... Wagner
Violon Solo: Julius Theodorowicz
Marche Slave ....Tchaikovsky
Hans Wiener Dancers with Orchestra
"La Valse" .... Ravel
"Roumanian Rhapsody" .... Enesco

THURSDAY EVENING, May 28
March, "El Capitan" .... Sousa
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" .... Suppe
March of the "Little Lead Soldiers"..Pierne
Second "L'Arlesienne" Suite..........Bizet
"Rigoletto," Fantasia .... Verdi
Prelude to "The Deluge" .... Saint-Saens
(Solo violin: Julius Theodorowicz)
"Pathetic Symphony," Third Movement.
Tchaikovsky
"Girls of Baden," Waltzes .... Komzak
"Night and Day" .... Porter
Festival March .... Herbert

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 29
March, "La Pere de la Victoire" ... Ganne
Overture to "Mignon" .... Thomas
Spring (for string orchestra) ....Grieg
Fosteriana, Rhapsody on Melodies of Stephen Collins Foster .... Baron
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Song of India .... Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture Solemnelle, "1812" ...Tchaikovsky
(Hans Weiner Dancers, with Orchestra)
"La Valse" .... Ravel
"Rumanian Rhapsody" .... Enesco

SATURDAY EVENING, MAY 30
Entrance of the Guests Into the Wartburg, from "Tannhauser" ...... Wagner
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld."
Offenbach
Invitation to the Dance .... Weber-Berlioz
"Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem No. 3.
Liszt
Bolero .... Ravel
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango .... Gade
Victor Herbert Favorites.
Arranged by Sanford
Danube Waves, Waltzes .... Ivanovici
"Franklin D. Roosevelt," March....Woodin

Pops in Mid-Season

15

Her May 24

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who will be the soloist in the MacDowell second piano concerto with the Pops orchestra in Symphony Hall tonight.

Hans Wiener & His Group to Dance at Pops 4th Week

The coming week of Pop concerts at Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, offers many special points of interest. Tonight Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist, playing the 2d piano concerto of MacDowell. He will also appear on Tuesday night in Weber's Conzertstueck. Monday evening will bring an all-Italian program, with Francesco Albanese as tenor soloist. Tuesday night's concert will be for the benefit of the Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation, and there will be a fashion show in the second intermission. On Wednesday and Friday Hans Wiener and his group of dancers will appear with the orchestra in ballet presentations of Ravel's "La Valse" and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody." The choreography for the Ravel ballet is by Brilhart, and the costumes were designed by Marco Montedoro, who is designer for Radio City Music Hall and was formerly connected with the Follies Bergeres in Paris. Thursday offers a program of long-standing Pops favorites, and Saturday's concert will be taken over by the Democratic committee of Massachusetts. Beethoven's Fifth Symphony will be on the program for Sunday, May 31. The programs for the week are as follows:

SUNDAY EVENING, MAY 24
Overture in D major...................Handel
Chorale and organ fugue in G minor
Bach-Abert
Symphonie Concertante in B flat, Op. 84, for violin, violoncello, oboe and bassoon with orchestra.............Haydn
"Indian" Suite ....MacDowell
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor
MacDowell
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma.
"L'Arlesienne," first suite..........Bizet
Andante Cantabile (from the string quartet No. 1) ....Tchaikovsky
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy"....Gliere

MONDAY EVENING, MAY 25
Marcia Reale Italiana...........Gabetti
Ballet Suite from "Aida"...........Verdi
Serenade ....Toselli
Fantasia, "Pagliacci" .... Leoncavallo
Overture to "William Tell".......Rossini
Aria, Che gelida manina, from "La Boheme" ....Puccini
Soloist, Francesco Albanese, tenor.
Rhapsody, "Italia"................Casella
Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda"
Ponchielli
Waltz, Il Bacio.....................Arditi
Dance of the Camorrists from "The Jewels of the Madonna"....Wolf-Ferrari

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 26
March, Sambre et Meuse.........Planquette
Overture to "Der Freischutz" ......Weber
Liebestraum ....Liszt-Herbert
Fantasia, "Carmen"..................Bizet
Konzertstuck ....Weber
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma.
Polovetzkian Dances, from "Prince Igor" ....Borodin
Harmonica band
Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation
Selection, Anything Goes..........Porter
Morning Journals, waltzes........Strauss
"Wintergreen for President" .....Gershwin

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 27
Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"
Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture - "Russlan and Ludmilla"
Glinka
Variations on the Austrian National Anthem (from the String Quartet, Op. 76, No. 3) ....Haydn
"Briar Rose," waltz..........Tchaikovsky
"Orgy of the Spirits," from the Oriental Suite, "Noure and Anitra" ......Ilynsky
"Dreams" ....Wagner
Violin solo: Julius Theodorowicz
Marche Slave..................Tchaikovsky
Hans Wiener dancers with orchestra
"La Valse" ....Ravel
"Roumanian Rhapsody"...............Enesco

THURSDAY, EVENING, MAY 28
March, "El Capitan"...............Sousa
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"....Suppe
March of the Little Lead Soldiers .Pierne
Second "L'Arlesienne" Suite.........Bizet
"Rigoletto," Fantasia...............Verdi
Prelude to "The Deluge"......Saint-Saens
Solo violin: Julius Theodorowicz
"Pathetic Symphony," Third Movement
Tchaikovsky
"Girls of Baden," waltzes........Komzak
"Night and Day" ....Porter
Festival March ....Herbert

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 29
March, "La Pere de la Victoire" ...Ganne
Overture to "Mignon" ....Thomas
Spring (for string orchestra).......Grieg
Fosteriana, Rhapsody on Melodies of Stephen Foster....................Baron
Prelude to "Lohengrin"............Wagner
Song of India......... Rimsky-Korsakov
Ouverture Solenelle, "1812"...Tchaikovsky
Hans Wiener dancers with orchestra
"La Valse".........................Ravel
"Roumanian Rhapsody"..............Enesco

SATURDAY EVENING, MAY 30
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhauser"..........Wagner
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld"
Offenbach
Invitation to the Dance.....Weber-Berlioz
"Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem No. 3
Liszt
Bolero ....Ravel
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango ....Gade
Victor Herbert Favorites ....
Arranged by Sanford
Danube Waves, waltzes..........Ivanovici
"Franklin D. Roosevelt," march....Woodin

News of the World of Music

Post May 24

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

IN music, as in the Standard Oil Company, it paid to get in on the ground floor. Last Wednesday evening there occurred here the local premieres of several compositions from the various hands of Giambattista Pergolesi, Mabel Daniels and Edward Burlingame Hill. In the matter of richness of material and resourcefulness of treatment, the advantage lay with the pieces by the two resident composers, Miss Daniels' "Pirates' Island" and Mr. Hill two Jazz Studies, all of which were being featured at the Pops. From both Miss Daniels and Mr. Hill came effects that Pergolesi, the two hundredth anniversary of whose death was being commemorated at Jordan Hall, would have bartered his soul to obtain. Yet here were his simple opera, "Il Maestro di Musica," an unpretentious Concertino and some sonatas transcribed for strings and organ coming to performance after two hundred years and more. And who would be rash enough to predict that fate, either for the pieces of Miss Daniels and Mr. Hill aforementioned or for the bulk of the music composed in our immediate time?

* * * *

Without doubt the composers who wrote when the simpler, more basic and fundamental effects were still relatively fresh, enjoyed a life expectancy for their works far beyond that of the music-makers of a later and more sophisticated day. It is needless to cite instances; they will occur readily to any one. We find here in operation the law of diminishing returns. Surely there are more compositions a hundred years old, roughly speaking, in the contemporary repertory than there are pieces of our day which will be played a century hence, or pieces written fifty years ago which will be heard in 1986. It is not so much a matter of genius or endowment as it is of opportunity.

* * * *

Possibly some enterprising concert-giver of the distant future might, at that, revive Mr. Hill's two Studies as an example of the sophisticated treatment of a current popular idiom. But it is more likely that they will go to something more authentic, say Mr. Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," which may long survive as the crystalization of a musical movement. When Mr. Hill wrote the first of his Jazz Studies as a composition for two pianos, dedicated to Messrs. Maier and Pattison, it was the fashion for composers of his standing to toy with the jazz idiom. Mr. Hill, as it happens, did it better than most; he was later tempted to add to it three others, and two of the four have now been given the dignity of an orchestral dress, which enhances their attractiveness.

* * * *

It is no more inappropriate for women composers to treat of robust or even brutal subjects than for men to treat of idyllic and tender ones. Dame Ethel Smith handled a far from feminine theme in her opera "The Wreckers," and Miss Daniels in her "Pirates' Island" of the other evening, described in tone the high jinks of a party of buccaneers relaxing from their sanguinary toil.

* * * *

Instrumental soloists are more frequent than ever at the Pop Concerts this season, although up to date, the pianists have enjoyed a monopoly. At the concert of next Sunday evening, Ruth Posselt, able young violinist of this community, will play the solo part in the Concerto of Goldmark. And tomorrow evening there will be a vocalist, Francesco Albanese, who sings Rodolfo's "Che gelida minina" from Puccini's "La Boheme." This week, too, the Hans Wiener Dancers will return to the Pops on Wednesday and Friday evenings.

* * * *

wedding is planned for the fall. from Smith in 1934. She made her debut

(Warren Colby)

Four Who Will Put Fashions into the News: Mrs. B. Young Hamlen, Miss Cornelia Pentecost, Miss Leslie Blake and Miss Catherine Pentecost, All of Whom Will Be Among Those Modeling in the Fashion Show to Be Presented During an Intermission of the Newsboys' Night Pop Concert Next Tuesday Evening, May 26, for the Benefit of the Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation. Tickets for Both Tables and Balcony Seats for This Affair Are Going Fast.

~~Her~~ Trans M 23

16 ewsboys' Night at Pops Sponsored By an Array of Prominent Leaders

Adv May 24

MOST interesting affair he week's calendar . . . h promises to attract a guished audience . . . is Newsboys' Night at Pops Tuesday evening, sponsored by an energetic group of society leaders . . .

Proceeds from the evening will be devoted to the summer camp at Agassiz Village, near Poland Spring, Me . . . maintained by the Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation . . . and supported by society volunteers.

Highlights of the affair . . . besides a brilliant concert conducted by Arthur Fiedler . . . will be the first appearance of the "Boston Blast," a brand new newspaper . . . and a fashion show, depicting styles for "around the clock" . . . to be run off during the first intermission.

Editor-in-chief of the journal is Richard Ely Danielson, who has assembled a talented editorial staff . . . he will be assisted by Mrs. Mark de-Wolf Howe, as mother's day columnist . . . Katherine Lane, music critic . . . Mrs. William Brace Pratt, wildflower editor . . . Mrs. Donald Starr, art editor . . . and Mrs. William Power Blodgett, complexion and heart balm editor, writing under the name of Pansy Ironheart . . .

The dog advisory department is in charge of Daniel Carlisle . . . editor of the poetry nook, Frank Hatch . . . Maurice Osborn is night city editor . . . Harold Buckley Willis will be "better homes" editor . . . and Donald Moffatt will give advice to housewives.

The circulation . . . an important department in ANY newspaper . . . will be under the direction of Mrs. Christian A. Herter. All of the printing will be done at the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation and no feature of a regular paper will be slighted.

Promenading in the fashion revue . . . staged by Boston's smartest shops . . . will be Mrs. Nelson Aldrich, Mrs. Tracy Barnes, Dorothy West, Elizabeth Watson, Leslie Blake, Priscilla Bramhall, Mrs. Charles Devens, Phyllis Forbes, Mrs. Edwin Buxton, Mrs. Powell Cabot, Isabel Gardner, Marion Lesson, Joanna Palfrey, Catherine Pentacost . . . and many, many others . . .

Reservations have been coming into committee headquarters early and fast . . . it's quite a task to keep track of them all . . .

The exciting evening is under the leadership of Mrs. Christian A. Herter, general chairman . . . co-operating with her are Mrs. Charles Francis Adams, Mrs. John Dinsmoor, Mrs. Richard Ely Danielson, Mrs. Edward Dane, Mrs. Carl Dreyfus, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Maxmilian Agassiz, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird . . .

'Boston Blast' To Appear Tuesday

Will Be Sold at Pop Concert in Symphony Hall

Her. May 24

Several new departments and contributions have been added to the "Boston Blast," the news organ which coyly promises to revolutionize Boston society by its appearance Tuesday evening at the benefit pop concert in Symphony Hall.

Here's the last of the innumerable statements made by Editor-in-Chief Richard E. Danielson of the Blast: "The Blast Bloweth Where It Listeth (it's listing quite a bit), but it doesn't want to blow its own horn. However, it does wish to announce that the night city editor, Mr. Maurice Osborne, who, it will be remembered, disappeared mysteriously on the day of the Blast's organization, has been found in Schreckville, Pa., from which point (if any) he is running the paper brilliantly in absentia cum laude.

"Mr. Frank Hatch, Battening in Atlantic City (perhaps we shouldn't mention this), has sent some lovely verse.

"Mr. George Foote has written a musical criticism to end all musical criticism. 'The Voice of Bugle Ann,' a most suitable column for the Bay State (careful. Mr. Danielson), has told more than we—incorrigibly optimistic—dared fear. Mr. Mark Howe, Jr., will be the League of Nations feature writer and Mr. Thomas Metcalf is a contributor to the 'Arthur Bruised Brain' column. Our new 'Anticipation Column,' conducted by Diane, will mean much to mothers." (Herald social editor's note—Sorry, but Mr. Danielson allowed himself to be carried away here and this part of his statement had to be deleted.)

Each copy of the "Boston Blast" sold at the concert will contain a ticket for the prize which will be given away during the evening. The lucky winner will receive a gown, fashioned on the latest lines, such as those worn by the models in the fashion show (the first ever held in Symphony Hall), which will follow the well-dressed woman "Around the Clock."

Trav. May 23

s—'Saint Joan,'

Pops Begin Fourth Week

Jesus Maria Sanroma Will Be the Soloist Tomorrow

The coming week of Pop Concerts n Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, offer many special points of interest. Tomorrow night, Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist, appearing in the Second Pianoforte Concerto of MacDowell. The same notable pianist will appear on Tuesday night in Weber's "Konzertstuck." Monday evening will bring an all Italian program, with Francesco Albanese as tenor soloist, and on Tuesday, which will be for the benefit of the Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation, there will be a fashion show in the second intermission. On Wednesday and Friday, Hans Wiener and his group of dancers will appear with the orchestra in dance presentations of Ravel's "La Valse," and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody"—long-enduring symphonic favorites. Thursday offers a program replete with Pops favorites, while Saturday's concert will be taken over by the Democratic committee of Massachusetts.

The programs for tonight and tomorrow night follow:

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
Overture to "Fingal's Cave" . . . Mendelssohn
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes . . . Strauss
"Arkansas Traveller" . . Arranged by Guion
Suite from "Peer Gynt" . . . Grieg
"Scheherazade," Finale . . Rimsky-Korsakov
Soviet Iron Works . . . Mossolov
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite . . . Grofe
Selection, "Of Thee I Sing" . . . Gershwin
"Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . Sousa

SUNDAY EVENING

Overture in D major . . . Handel
Chorale and Organ Fugue in G minor . . . Bach-Abert
Symphonie Concertante in B flat, Op. 84 . . . Haydn
For Violin, Violoncello, Oboe and Bassoon, with Orchestra
"Indian" Suite . . . MacDowell
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor . . . MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"L'Arlesienne," First Suite . . . Bizet
Andante Cantabile (from the String Quartet No. 1) . . . Tchaikovsky
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy" . . . Gliere

Pops Soloist

Jesus Maria Sanroma, famous pianist, will appear at Symphony Hall tomorrow evening.

6—D A

Boston Conside

Music in the Ensuing Week

By Ruth Marsters

Music Editor

INTEREST in things musical continues to center around the Pops, now entering upon the fourth week of nightly occurrence in Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

In addition to the inevitable Pops fare, this week's programs contain several features of special interest.

This evening Jesus Maria Sanroma will appear as soloist in MacDowell's Second Piano Concerto in D minor. The same composer's "Indian" Suite will also be performed.

The program opens with Handel's Overture in D major; includes an arrangement of Bach's Chorale and Organ Fugue in G minor by Abert, Haydn's Symphonie Concertante in B flat, Op. 84 (for violin, 'cello, oboe and bassoon with orchestra), and a Tchaikovsky melody, and closes with Gliere's "Sailors' Dance" from "Red Poppy."

* * *

MONDAY EVENING brings an all-Italian program with Francesco Albanese, tenor, singing Puccini's aria, "Che gelida manina," from "La Boheme."

Tuesday evening's performance will be for the benefit of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation.

The program is sufficiently varied, including, as it does, Weber's Overture to "Der Freischutz," and Gershwin's "Wintergreen for President."

Jesus Maria Sanroma will make his second appearance of the week as soloist, playing on this occasion Weber's "Konzertstuck."

The Harmonica Band of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation is one of the features of the program, [illegible] a fashion show will be held during the second intermission.

* * *

ON WEDNESDAY, [illegible] on Friday evening, Hans Wiener and his group will appear with the orchestra in danced presentations of Ravel's "La Valse," and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody."

Saturday evening's concert has been taken over by the Democratic committee of Massachusetts.

Ruth Posselt, violinist, will be the soloist at the Pop concert of Sunday evening, May 31, in a program which will also include Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

* * *

-Pop Concerts

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Sanroma to Play MacDowell Concerto at Pops Tonight

The coming week of Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, offers special points of interest. Tonight Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist, appearing in the Second Piano Concerto of MacDowell. He will also appear on Tuesday night in Weber's Konzertstuck."

Tomorrow evening will bring an all Italian program, with Francesco Albanese as tenor soloist, and on Tuesday, which will be for the benefit of the Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation, there will be a fashion show in the second intermission.

Wednesday and Friday, Hans Wiener and his group of dancers will appear with the orchestra in danced presentations of Ravel's "La Valse," and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody"—long-enduring symphonic favorites.

Thursday offers a program replete with Pops favorites, while Saturday's concert will be taken over by the Democratic committee of Massachusetts.

Sunday, May 31, the program will include Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Ruth Posselt, young Melrose violinist, will be the soloist.

The program of the week follows:

Tonight. Overture in D major, Handel; Chorale and Organ Fugue in G minor, Bach-Abert; Symphonic Concertante in B flat, Op. 84, for Violin, Violoncello, Oboe and Bassoon with Orchestra, Haydn; "Indian" Suite, Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor, MacDowell, soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma; "L'Arlesienne," First Suite, Bizet; Andante Cantabile (from the String Quartet No. 1), Tchaikovsky; Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy," Gliere.

Monday. Marcia Reale Italiana, Gabetti; Ballet Suite from "Aida," Verdi; Serenade, Toselli; Fantasia, "Pagliacci," Leoncavello; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Aria, "Che gelida manina," from "La Boheme," Puccini, soloist: Francesco Albanese, tenor; Rhapsody, "Italia," Casella; Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; waltz, "Il Bacio," Arditi; Dance of the Camorrists from "The Jewels of the Madonna," Wolf-Ferrari.

Tuesday. March, "Sambre et Meuse," Planquette; Overture to "Der Frieschutz," Weber; Liebestraum, Listz-Herbert; Fantasia, "Carmen," Bizet; "Konzerstuck," Weber; soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma; "Polovetzkian Dances," from "Prince Igor," Borodin; harmonica band, Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation; selection, "Anything Goes," Porter; "Morning Journals," waltzes, Strauss; "Wintergreen for President," Gershwin.

Wednesday. Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or," Rimsky-Korsakov; Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla," Glinka; variations on the Austrian National Anthem (from the String Quartet, Op. 76, No. 3), Haydn; "Briar Rose," waltz, Tchaikovsky; "Orgy of the Spirits," from the Oriental Suite, "Noure and Anitra," Ilynsky; "Dreams," violin solo: Julius Theodorowicz; Marche Slave, Tchaikovsky; Hans Wiener Dancers with Orchestra: "La Valse," Ravel; "Roumanian Rhapsody," Enesco.

Thursday—March, "El Capitan," Souzo; Overture to "Poet and Peasant," Suppe; March of the Little Lead Soldiers, Pierne; Second "L'Arlesienne" Suite, Bizet; "Rigoletto," Fantasia, Verdi; Prelude to "The Deluge" (solo violin—Julius Theodorowicz), Saint-Saens; "Pathetic Symphony," Third Movement, Tchaikovsky; "Girls of Baden," Waltzes, Komzak; "Night and Day," Porter; Festival March, Herbert.

Friday—"La Pere de la Victoire," Ganne; Overture to "Mignon," Thomas; Spring (for string orchestra), Grieg; Fosteriana, Rhapsody on Melodies of Stephen Foster, Baron; Prelude to "Lohengrin," Wagner; Song of India, Rimsky-Korsakov; Overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; Hans Wiener Dancers with Orchestra: "La Valse," Ravel; "Roumanian Rhapsody," Enesco.

Saturday—Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhauser," Wagner; Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld," Offenbach; Invitation to the Dance, Weber-Berlioz; "Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem No. 3, Liszt; Bolero, Ravel; "Jealousy," Gypsy Tango, Gade; Victor Herbert Favorites, arranged by Sanford; Danube Waves, Waltzes, Ivanuvici; "Franklin D. Roosevelt," March, Woodin.

MUSIC

May 25

THE POPS

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

An important Sunday concert of the Pops was given last night in Symphony Hall. Arthur Fiedler conducted; and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, was the soloist. Two numbers on the program were played in honor of Edward MacDowell, who was born 75 years ago. The program was as follows:

Overture in D major..............Handel
Chorale and Organ Fugue in G minor, arranged by Abert..................Bach
Symphonie Concertante for violin, 'cello, oboe and bassoon with orchestra..Haydn
Three Movements from "Indian Suite" McDowell
Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor, MacDowell
First Suite from "L'Arlesienne"......Bizet
Andante cantabile from String Quartet Tchaikovsky
Sailor's Dance from "The Red Poppy" Gliere

It was an excellent idea to play some of MacDowell's music in memory of a composer, who is, after all, the greatest creative musician that America has produced. His reputation has suffered from the contempt of modern composers inimical to the romantic school; and his piano pieces have had to endure the thumpings of too many students. A few performances of his best works, such as that of last night, would restore MacDowell to his proper place as a composer. The great enthusiasm after the Concerto last night by the audience both for the music and for Mr. Sanroma's superb playing indicates that his music has not lost popular favor, if only the public has the opportunity to hear a good performance.

This Piano Concerto, for instance, has been neglected here since the war. It is a remarkably beautiful and brilliant work and should make a reasonably regular appearance in the orchestra's repertoire. Mr. Sanroma played with admirable spirit and great clarity of execution. It was an extraordinarily fine interpretation on his part, a great achievement by this versatile artist. Mr. Fiedler conducted the orchestra in sympathetic fashion. There were moments when the orchestra was a trifle too loud, when the balance in body of tone was not perfect; but for the most part it was a very good performance indeed. The three movements of the "Indian Suite," which preceded the Concerto, were good to hear. It is music that is not too literally descriptive, that has originality and poetic feeling.

The concert opened with an interesting group of pieces. The Handel Overture is grand music. Abert's arrangement of the Bach G Minor Organ Fugue is a conservative piece of work. It is interesting to recall Mr. Mitropoulos' version of the same fugue which he conducted here earlier in the season. The Haydn Symphonie Concertante is delightful and unusual music, in which the dialogue between the solo instruments and the orchestra is ingeniously carried out. Messrs. Theodorowicz, Langendoen, Speyer and Allard played most capably in it. Altogether it was an exceedingly successful concert, a serious evening, for a change, in the midst of prevailingly light concerts.

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

The following program of Italian music will be presented at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall tonight by Arthur Fiedler:

Marcia Reale Italiana............Gabetti
Ballet Suite from "Aida"..........Verdi
Serenade ....Toselli
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"........Leoncavallo
Overture to "William Tell".......Rossini
Aria, "Che gelida manina," from "La Boheme"........................Puccini
Soloist: Francesco Albanese, tenor.
Rhapsody, "Italia" ....Casella
Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda" Ponchielli
Waltz, "Il Bacio"...................Arditi
Dance of the Camorrists from "The Jewels of the Madonna"........ Wolf-Ferrari

---

DAY ADVERTISER—Largest Sunday Circulation in New England—MAY 24, 1936—Telephone Liberty 4000

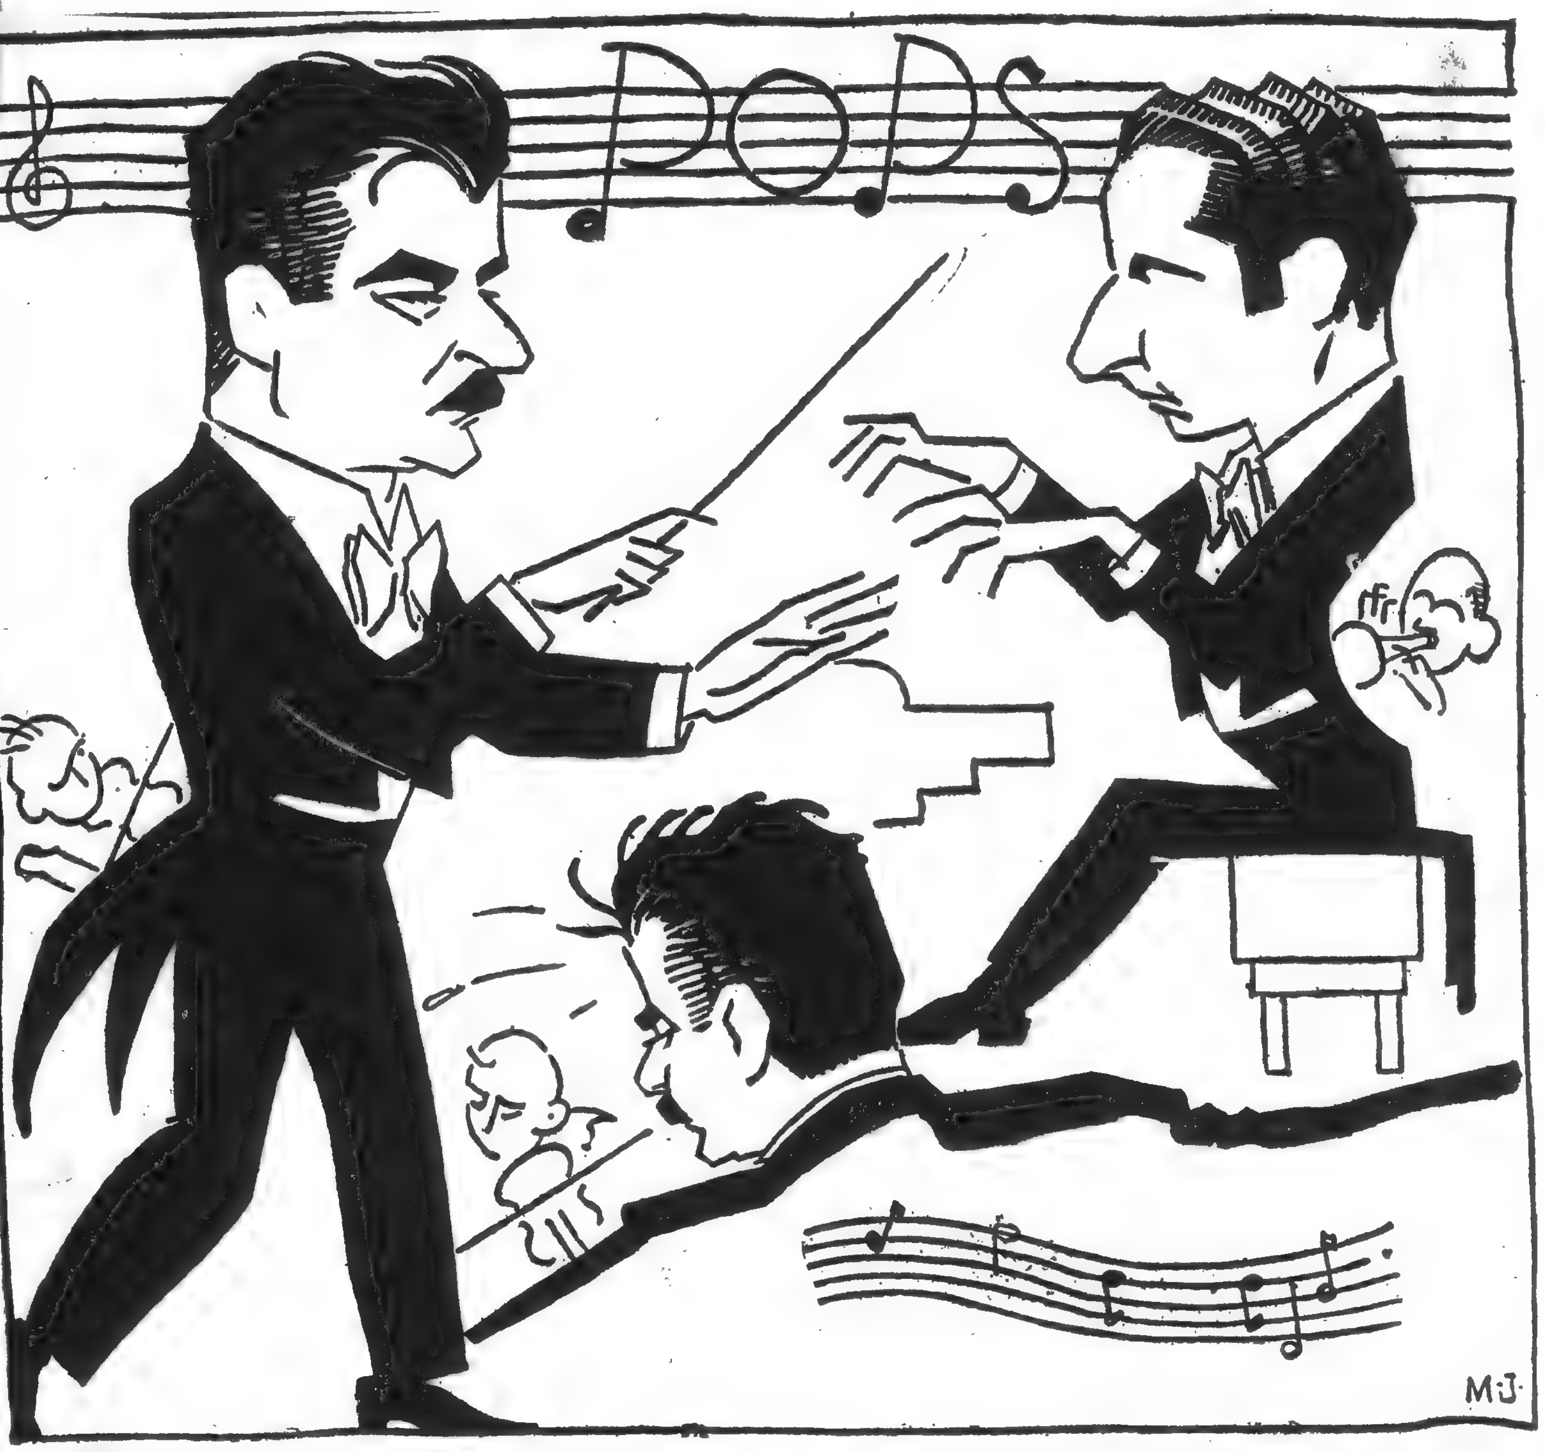
17

Amiable and Animated Artists in This Vic



THE SOUNDING CHORDS of the Pops Orchestra under the nimble direction of Conductor Arthur Fiedler stimulate the cartoonist to record his impressions—which also include (at the right) Pianist Sanroma, who will re-appear at Symphony Hall tonight, playing MacDowell's Second Piano Concerto, and again on Tuesday evening.

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

The following program will be conducted by Arthur Fiedler at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight, from which the Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation will benefit:

March, "Sambre et Meuse," Planquette; Overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; Liebestraum, Liszt-Herbert; Fantasia "Carmen," Bizet; "Konzertstuck," Weber; soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma; "Polovetzkian Dances," from "Prince Igor," Borodin; Harmonica Band, Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation; Selection, "Anything Goes," Porter; "Morning Journals," Waltzes, Strauss; "Wintergreen for President," Gershwin.

May 26

ITALIAN NIGHT ATTRACTS LARGE CROWD TO POPS

"Italian night" at the "Pops" was enjoyed by an unusually large gathering of music lovers, the greater majority being Italians or of Italian extraction, last evening. Arthur Fiedler conducted.

The Junior League of the Women's Italian Club sponsored the evening and acted as flower girls, ushers and cigarette girls. Those who assisted in the success of the evening were:

Emma C. Cavallo, chairman; Mary Albre, co-chairman; Sylvia Spugnardi, Lulu Amendolare, Josephine Bruno, Elsie Capone, Florence Carilli, Olga Cavallo, Emily Ciovacco, Eleanor Corea, Elena DeBenedictis, Florence DeBenedictis, Raffaella Fiorentino, Lydia Fondecaro, Mary Maiello, Maria Maravigna, Georgina Nazzaro, Angela Rigone, Laura Spinelli.

Globe May 25

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Pops

In honor of the fact that the MacDowell Club occupied a portion of the floor, the middle section of last evening's Pops concert was devoted to MacDowell's music. The works played were happily chosen—three movements from the "Indian Suite" and the second Pianoforte Concerto in D minor. Mr Fiedler and the orchestra accorded the Indian Suite a particularly satisfying and effective performance—one marked by a careful avoidance of MacDowell's tendency towards flamboyant and explosive effects. It was a performance strictly in adherence to the fact that, though the themes of the three excerpts—"In War Time," "Dirge," "Village Festival," are of authentic Indian origin, MacDowell strove for his effect (as indeed he does in much of his descriptive music) by suggestion of a mood rather than by descriptively imitative effects.

Jesus Maria Sanroma was soloist in the MacDowell concerto. Mr Sanroma turned his usual spotless performance, one in which the amazing technical dexterity was exceeded only by the sobriety of the musicianship. One must confess—the players most of all—that, as accompaniment, the orchestra was not of too much assistance. Throughout all three movements, there were notable lapses of synchonization between orchestra and soloist, and in a few places their differences were so critical that even Mr Sanroma's proverbial poise seemed for the moment about to be shattered. It appeared that insufficient rehearsal might be the cause of this defect.

The more serious side of the remainder of the program was represented by Handel's Overture in D major, the Bach-Avert transcription of the organ chorale and fugue in G minor, and Haydn's "Symphonie Concertante" in G minor, in which several members of the orchestra appeared as soloists.

The Editorial Page—read it today. Tell your neighbors about the Globe's Editorial Page!

ITALIAN MUSIC AT POPS

The following program of Italian music will be presented at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight by Arthur Fiedler:

Marcia Reale Italiana, Gabetti; Ballet Suite from "Aida," Verdi; Serenade, Toselli; Fantasia, "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Aria, "Che gelida manina," from "La Boheme," Puccini; soloist, Francesco Albanese, tenor; Rhapsody, "Italia," Casella; Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; waltz, "El Bacio," Arditi; Dance of the Camorists from "The Jewels of the Madonna," Wolf-Ferrari.

AMUSEMENTS

AMUSEMENTS

May

THE BOSTON GLOBE—

PAINTERS PASSING JUDGMENT AT ART CLUB

"Jury" of artists shown in one of foyers at Symphony Hall on artists' night. Left to Right—Arthur F. Musgrave, Miss Dorothea Helt, curator of the club; Margaret Fitzhugh Browne; F. John Hilliard, chief juror; Lester Hornby, Mrs Gertrude Tonsberg, Carroll Bill. The subject of the portrait, which was accepted, is Leslie Rogers, librarian of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, painted by Robert Horrigan.

18 May 36

THE BOSTON HERALD,

era House for Prem

PLANNING BENEFIT POPS

Mrs. George Saltonstall West of Chestnut Hill avenue, Chestnut Hill, is a member of the distinguished committee for the benefit pop concert to be staged in Symphony Hall this evening. One of the outstanding features of tonight's concert will be the fashion show, the first ever staged in Symphony Hall.

BOSTON TRAVELER, TUESDAY, MAY 26, 1936

Cornell Delights Socie

"WILDFLOWER EDITOR"

(Photo by Roy L. Jacoby)

Heavily guarded, copies of the "Boston Blast" will be delivered at Symphony Hall this evening where it will be on sale for the first and only time at the Benefit Pop Concert. Mrs. William Brace Pratt of Milton, "Wildflower Editor" of this startling newspaper, is shown here supervising an early delivery.

THE MICROPHONE
BOSTON, MASS.
MAY 15 1936

Concerning Fine Music On the Radio

THIS IS the Letter Box of The MICROPHONE, to which readers are invited to contribute their frank criticism and appreciation of radio programs.

Only one stipulation is made. All letters must contain the name and address of the writer for publication.

From Mrs. RAY MILLER of No. 5 Clifton Road, Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts, comes a letter concerning music on the radio.

Says Mrs. MILLER:

"I write to ask you what happens to a lot of scheduled broadcasts that I plan my time to hear, but which do not materialize.

"A specific instance was the BARBIROLLI concert from London at 5.30 on April 28.

"The substitute for the London concert did not appeal to anyone who had anticipated an honest-to-goodness symphony. This sort of thing happens altogether too often.

"Good for OLIN DOWNES for writing, and you for quoting, his objections to the opera intermission broadcasts. I am writing to tell him my approval. NBC would do well to note the success of the New York Philharmonic intermissions, as broadcast by Columbia.

"And while I am on it, isn't there some way of getting the entire Boston Symphony concerts broadcast next year? I go to Symphony Hall Fridays and am always eager to hear the concert again on Saturdays."

The BARBIROLLI concert to which Mrs. MILLER refers was cancelled at the last minute because of unfavorable weather conditions.

The OLIN DOWNES article of which she speaks was that in which the music critic of the New York Times sharply rebuked the National Broadcasting Company for what he termed "the inanity" of the material provided for the intermission interviews during the broadcasts from the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City on Saturday afternoons.

Mr. DOWNES took as specific example an interview with LAURITZ MELCHIOR, great WAGNERIAN tenor. MILTON J. CROSS was the interviewer.

Southern Radio News
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
MAY 16 1936

"POP" CONCERTS ON

The new series of the famous Boston Pop Concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston, will be heard over NBC at 6:30 p.m. each Saturday for seven more consecutive weeks.

Arthur Fiedler will conduct instead of Dr. Serge Kussevitsky.

19

Benefit Pop Concert for Newsboys Foundation

Society Audience Enjoys Benefit Night at Pops

Fashion Show, Acts, Stunts and Drawing of Prizes Are Among Features of Interesting Program

By PAULINE WARREN

The benefit pop concert given in Symphony Hall last evening to benefit the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation had so many extraneous additions to amuse the audience that one almost lost sight of the fact that it was supposed to be a concert. There was a fashion show, acts and stunts, a noted soloist, drawings for prizes and the long-awaited emergence of "The Boston Blast," the publication which was to startle all of Boston society.

The fashion show was called "Around the Clock at a House Party." Mr. Kenneth Wheeler kept up a continuous monologue through the loud speaker while the models appeared on the stage and did their little stunts. Mrs. Barbara Young Hamlen and Miss Elise Russell, who opened it at the morning hour, appeared in pajamas, drank orange juice, did setting-up exercises and donned negligees brought by impeccable maids. Mrs. Powell Cabot and Miss Elizabeth Jaques followed them—both wearing gardening costumes. Mrs. Cabot pushed a wheelbarrow full of flowers, while Miss Jaques, in overalls and garden hat, went about with garden tools.

Next, at 10 o'clock were Miss Joanna Palfrey and Miss Cornelia Pentecost, who came in tennis costumes, the former in divided skirt and the latter in shorts. They served imaginary balls over a non-existent net and were followed by Miss Phyllis Forbes and Miss Lilly Warren, who smacked with real golf clubs at imaginary balls The next hour was 12 and this brought Miss Pentecost, both ready for the beach. They had a huge beach ball, which they tossed around, and had also brought along a big beach parasol.

Mrs. Robert Leeson, Jr., and Miss Caroline Hunnewell showed perfect clothes for the luncheon hour, the former carrying a white parasol with her white dress and big red hat. Miss Eleonora Sears and Mrs. N. Penrose Hallowell, Jr., showed riding habits, while Miss Alice Burrage and Miss Isabel Gardiner modeled correct wear for cocktail parties. (Both wore long tunics over dark skirts, Miss Burrage's white and Miss Gardiner's yellow).

The two prettiest gowns were worn by Mrs. Charles Devens and Mrs. Forrester A. Clark. The former's was black, made with an extremely wide skirt which billowed as she walked, and the latter's was white, also made on picture lines with a very full fluffy skirt. Miss Dorothy West and Miss Marion Lawrence also modeled some extremely attractive gowns, both white. Mrs. Nelson Aldrich and Mrs. Joseph Woods closed the show with hostess gowns —very grand ones—the latter's of pale chartreuse satin made with long floating drapes of chiffon and Mrs. Aldrich's of white with a long cape of red chiffon.

The fashion show was preceded by several numbers given by the harmonica band of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation. They played "Put On Your Your Old Gray Bonnet," "Believe Me" and "Nola" with equal aplomb and sang, too, while one of the young boys nearly brought down the house with a creditable tap dance.

Right after the fashion show, the prizes for the lucky numbers found at the top of "The Boston Blast," hawked at a dollar a copy, were drawn. The "Blast" turned out to be a four-page satire, written in racy style, on various newspapers. It evoked many chuckles while the first numbers went almost unheard. Mr. Fiedler had planned a varied program which included such morsels as the Liszt-Herbert "Liebestraum," Weber's "Konzertstuck," with Jesus Maria Sanroma as the soloist, Strauss waltzes, Gershwin's "Wintergreen for President" and the hit pieces from Porter's "Anything Goes."

Most of Boston society was present and the majority of the fashionables in the audience wore their most attractive gowns. Mrs. Christian A. Herter, the chairman of the committee, wore a printed gown of green, black and white, which had a short jacket. In fact, nearly every one was in print. Mrs. Charles Francis Adams, who attended with Mr. Adams, wore a black and white printed gown, and another wearing a printed gown in these same colors was Mrs. Alexander Steinert. Mrs. Timothee Adamowski's gown was black, trimmed with fringe, and Mrs. Robert Herrick, Jr., wore a short, tight-fitted jacket of white fur over her black gown. The latter's daughter, Miss Margaret Pierce, looked charming in a red and white printed gown which had a red bolero.

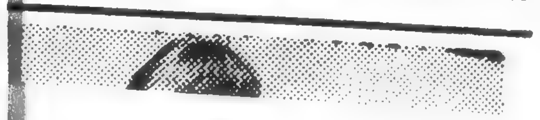
Mr. and Mrs. Amor Hollingsworth brought along quite a large party. With them were their pretty daughter, Miss Evelyn Hollingsworth, who wore a pale yellow gown under a short fur cape. Miss Harriet Moseley, also in print, and Mr. and Mrs. A. Lithgow Devens, the latter in crisp white lace with a fur cape. Miss Anne Tuckerman wore a distinctive gown of black, spashed with huge white water-lilies and her mother was very distinguished in tulip-purple chiffon with a cluster of pink flowers at the front.

Mrs. Moses Williams, Jr., was in print and Miss Caroline Hunnewell, when she finished her modeling, reappeared in the smartest costume of the evening—a gown of navy chiffon trimmed with wide bands of white pique which had a floor-length cape of the same navy chiffon. Miss Elizabeth Everts was in a gown of black background glazed chintz.

Mr. and Mrs. John Blyth attended with Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Batchelder, Mrs. Blyth in print and Mrs. Batchelder wearing a silver coat over her peach net frock. Miss Dorothy Stone was very pretty in a white gown of heavy crepe with a matching cape which tied with a red bow under her chin. Mrs. Louis Curtis, Jr., was in wine velvet and Miss Eleanor Gibson was another very chick, in striped blue taffeta.

Others present were Miss Elizabeth Marston, Mr. Richard Pentecost, Miss Marjorie Saltonstall, Miss Celina Robbins, Mrs. William Brace Pratt (cobalt lace with a dubonnet sash), Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Miss Ellen Bottomley, Mrs. Charles Collens, Mrs. Wilbur Higgins, Mrs. Barrett Wendell, Mr. and Mrs. Robert P. Johns, Miss Martha Bird, Miss Anne Peabody, Mrs. Edward A. Taft, Miss Aileen Kelly, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Bramwell Shaw, Mr. Brace Pratt, Miss Elizabeth Watson, Mrs. Guy Warren Walker, Miss Susan Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Dreyfus, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and her daughter, Miss Lydia Fuller, Mrs. George S. West, Miss Alice Merriam, Mr. John Pierce and Mrs. William A. Gaston.

Still others noted were Mr. and Mrs. I. Tucker Burr, Judge and Mrs. John Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Francis, Miss Emily Dick, Miss Dorothy Preston, Miss Polly Powers, Miss Isabel Lawrence, Miss Nancy Cassels, Mrs. Roger Cutler, Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Stockton, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison G. Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. Dunbar Lockwood, Mrs. Frank H. Stewart, Mrs. Mark Howe, Miss Eleanor Williams, Miss Ledlie Laughlin, Dr. and Mrs. John L. Ames, Miss Anne Howard, Miss Mary Dewart, Mrs. Russell Burrage, Mrs. Arthur Beale, Mrs. Reeve Chipman, Miss Dorothy West, Mr. Richard Ely Danielson, Miss Rosamond Blanchard and Mrs. James Dean.



THE BOSTON HERALD, WEDNESDAY, MAY 27, 1936

19

Benefit Pop Concert for Newsboys Foundation

Society Audience Enjoys Benefit Night at Pops

Fashion Show, Acts, Stunts and Drawing of Prizes Are Among Features of Interesting Program

By PAULINE WARREN

The benefit pop concert given in Symphony Hall last evening to benefit the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation had so many extraneous additions to amuse the audience that one almost lost sight of the fact that it was supposed to be a concert. There was a fashion show, acts and stunts, a noted soloist, drawings for prizes and the long-awaited emergence of "The Boston Blast," the publication which was to startle all of Boston society.

The fashion show was called "Around the Clock at a House Party." Mr. Kenneth Wheeler kept up a continuous monologue through the loud speaker while the models appeared on the stage and did their stunts. Mrs. Barbara Young [illegible] Miss Elise Russell, who [illegible] hour, ap- [illegible] orange

Leslie Blake and Miss Catherine Pentecost, both ready for the beach. They had a huge beach ball, which they tossed around, and had also brought along a big beach parasol.

Mrs. Robert Leeson, Jr., and Miss Caroline Hunnewell showed perfect clothes for the luncheon hour, the former carrying a white parasol with her white dress and big red hat. Miss Eleonora Sears and Mrs. N. Penrose Hallowell, Jr., showed riding habits, while Miss Alice Burrage and Miss Isabel Gardiner modeled correct wear for cocktail parties. (Both wore long tunics over dark skirts, Miss Burrage's white and Miss Gardiner's yellow).

The two prettiest gowns were worn by Mrs. Charles Devens and Mrs. Forrester A. Clark. The former's was black, made with an extremely wide skirt which billowed as she walked, and the latter's was white, also made on picture lines with a very full fluffy skirt. Miss Dorothy West and Miss Marion Lawrence also modeled some extremely attractive gowns, both white. Mrs. Nelson Aldrich and Mrs. Joseph Woods closed the show with hostess gowns—very grand ones—the latter's of pale chartreuse satin made with long floating drapes of chiffon and Mrs. Aldrich's of white with a long cape of red chiffon.

The fashion show was preceded by several numbers given by the harmonica band of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation. They played "Put On Your Your Old Gray Bonnet," "Believe Me" and "Nola" with equal aplomb and sang, too, while one of the young boys nearly brought down the house with a creditable tap dance.

Right after the fashion show, the prizes for the lucky numbers found at the top of "The Boston Blast," hawked at a dollar a copy, were drawn. The "Blast" turned out to be a four-page satire, written in racy style, on various newspapers. It evoked many chuckles while the first numbers went almost unheard. Mr. Fiedler had planned a varied program which included such morsels as the Liszt-Herbert "Liebestraum," Weber's "Konzertstuck," with Jesus Maria Sanroma as the soloist, Strauss waltzes, Gershwin's "Wintergreen for President" and the hit pieces from Porter's "Anything Goes."

Most of Boston society was present and the majority of the fashionables in the audience wore their most attractive gowns. Mrs. Christian A. Herter, the chairman of the committee, wore a printed gown of green, black and white, which had a short jacket. In fact, nearly every one was in print. Mrs. Charles Francis Adams, who attended with Mr. Adams, wore a black and white printed gown, and another wearing a printed gown in these same colors was Mrs. Alexander Steinert. Mrs. Timothee Adamowski's gown was black, trimmed with fringe, and Mrs. Robert Herrick, Jr., wore a short, tight-fitted jacket of white fur over her black gown. The latter's daughter, Miss Margaret Pierce, looked charming in a red and white printed gown which had a red bolero.

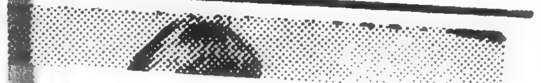
Mr. and Mrs. Amor Hollingsworth brought along quite a large party. With them were their pretty daughter, Miss Evelyn Hollingsworth, who wore a pale yellow gown under a short fur cape. Miss Harriet Moseley, also in print, and Mr. and Mrs. A. Lithgow Devens, the latter in crisp white lace with a fur cape. Miss Anne Tuckerman wore a distinctive gown of black, spashed with huge white water-lilies and her mother was very distinguished in tulip-purple chiffon with a cluster of pink flowers at the front.

Mrs. Moses Williams, Jr., was in print and Miss Caroline Hunnewell, when she finished her modeling, reappeared in the smartest costume of the evening—a gown of navy chiffon trimmed with wide bands of white pique which had a floor-length cape of the same navy chiffon. Miss Elizabeth Everts was in a gown of black background glazed chintz.

Mr. and Mrs. John Blyth attended with Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Batchelder, Mrs. Blyth in print and Mrs. Batchelder wearing a silver coat over her peach net frock. Miss Dorothy Stone was very pretty in a white gown of heavy crepe with a matching cape which tied with a red bow under her chin. Mrs. Louis Curtis, Jr., was in wine velvet and Miss Eleanor Gibson was another very chick, in striped blue taffeta.

Others present were Miss Elizabeth Marston, Mr. Richard Pentecost, Miss Marjorie Saltonstall, Miss Celina Robbins, Mrs. William Brace Pratt (cobalt lace with a dubonnet sash), Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Miss Ellen Bottomley, Mrs. Charles Collens, Mrs. Wilbur Higgins, Mrs. Barrett Wendell, Mr. and Mrs. Robert P. Johns, Miss Martha Bird, Miss Anne Peabody, Mrs. Edward A. Taft, Miss Aileen Kelly, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Bramwell Shaw, Mr. Brace Pratt, Miss Elizabeth Watson, Mrs. Guy Warren Walker, Miss Susan Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Dreyfus, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and her daughter, Miss Lydia Fuller, Mrs. George S. West, Miss Alice Merriam, Mr. John Pierce and Mrs. William A. Gaston.

Still others noted were Mr. and Mrs. I. Tucker Burr, Judge and Mrs. John Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Francis, Miss Emily Dick, Miss Dorothy Preston, Miss Polly Powers, Miss Isabel Lawrence, Miss Nancy Cassels, Mrs. Roger Cutler, Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Stockton, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison G. Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. Dunbar Lockwood, Mrs. Frank H. Stewart, Mrs. Mark Howe, Miss Eleanor Williams, Miss Ledlie Laughlin, Dr. and Mrs. John L. Ames, Miss Anne Howard, Miss Mary Dewart, Mrs. Russell Burrage, Mrs. Arthur Beale, Mrs. Reeve Chipman, Miss Dorothy West, Mr. Richard Ely Danielson, Miss Rosamond Blanchard and Mrs. James Dean.



---

ou must be tern statesm ainst feeding to it used to be giv
bably keenly aware season is almost upon

Ideal American married cou after a nation-wide search, hav ldren and an annual income of A worthy choice! There can be ubt that it's true love that makes a week go 'round.

l Thomas, Socialist candidate for says he hasn't spent a cent for ation, and, politically speaking,

70

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAY 10 1936

Music on Records

* * *

IT IS reported that Mr. Koussevitzki and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have recorded Listz' Faust Symphony. The recording has not yet, however, been announced for release, and in the meantime another has been imported by the Gramophone Shop. This is by a French orchestra—the Grand Orchestre Philharmonique—and a Russian chorus, under the direction of Selmar Meyrowitz.

Probably it is not possible to speak appreciatively of the Faust Symphony without running the risk of being suspected of a deliberate eccentricity of taste. The pendulum of favor has swung wide of the point at which its shadow fell on Listz, and when this occurs it is never considered sufficient to depreciate the defects of an artist's work, but becomes obligatory to deny him any qualities whatsoever. Yet Listz did not produce only trash; his many pages of music include quite a number stamped with authentic genius, and these we will find in the piano sonata, the Mephisto Waltz and the Dante and Faust symphonies. E. C.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

MAY 17 1936

Right Off th

A Review of Suggested

BY STEWART

MENDELSSOHN—Symphony No. 4 in A minor (Italian); the Boston Symphony Orchestra, direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Victor Musical Masterpiece 294.

At the same time that the Boston Orchestra made the epochal recordings of the Strauss "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and the Sibelius "Symphony No. 2," this delightful work was made. All the praise showered on the previous two releases must be repeated with equal emphasis in this case. If it is apparent the finest recordings we have had from Victor are those of the Boston Orchestra, why cannot we have regular releases of this fine group? Certainly, America's finest orchestra should be better represented than it is.

Mendelssohn said that the Italian Symphony was his most mature, most inspired work. It is far ahead of its fellows and is with the violin concerto and the oratorios the greatest work of his career. Koussevitzky gives a reading of the highest caliber, and this artists conception added to a marvelous recording will afford you a thrill such as you have seldom experienced.

BACH—Chorale Prelude—Sanctify us by Thy Goodness (from Cantata No. 22), and Chorale Prelude—Beloved Jesus; Harriet Cohen, piano. Columbia 17053D.

I want to assure you that the unkind things I said recently about Miss Cohen's other Columbia release, holds in no way in this case. This is truly one of the finest examples of Bach piano recording we have seen. There is none of the silly interpolations and personal whims so often injected by the average arranger; it is pure Bach, done in a most artistic style.

The first is from the cantata Bach wrote when he applied for the position as cantor at the Thomasschule in Leipzig. The second, one of his lovliest chorale preludes. Certainly there is many a moment's enjoyment for you in this little disc.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAY 10 1936

A Seasonal Review

By B. H. Haggin

Considerations of Music, Musicians and Concerts of the Winter and Spring

A LINE was omitted and sense destroyed last Sunday in the passage in which Schnabel told of his attempts to get a copy of the correct edition of Beethoven's cello sonatas. The passage should have read: "We wired Breitkopf in Leipzig; and the answer came: 'Not available.' It is not possible to buy the correct text of Beethoven's cello sonatas! And even the symphonies: Breitkopf published the scores, and they are correct; but the parts it gave out to be printed by others, and they are full of nuances that are not Beethoven's." Etc.

* * *

I HAVE had occasion to remark that ordinarily the occasions which impress themselves on a reviewer in the course of a season and remain in his memory as great artistic events are extremely few (though enough to make him aware of the inadequacy of most of the things he is called on to appraise—to the great indignation of impresarios, sponsoring committees and others whose lack of judgment or of disinterestedness does not prevent them from accusing the reviewer of incompetence or unfairness). The season just past proved in the end to be extraordinary in this respect, but its first two or three months were only normally eventful. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra played the music of Beethoven and other masters; and if Mr. Henderson is right the concerts conducted by Otto Klemperer should have been memorable occasions. I doubt that they were, even to Mr. Henderson; they certainly were not to me. The concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski provided demonstrations of phenomenal technical virtuosity in orchestral performance, and also of the fact that Stokowski has reached a point where his phenomenal technical virtuosity is of use to very few of the composers it is supposed to serve. Sergei Koussevitzky's performances of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, at the Boston Symphony's first concerts of its 50th season in New York, gave the impression that he was stimulated and excited too much by the occasion; they sounded forced and driven, and produced an effect of vehemence rather than of power.

In this

TOLEDO, OHIO
NEWS BEE

MAY 9 - 1936

Radio From the Br

An Old Custom

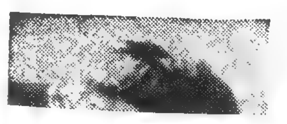
FOUR years after the Boston Symphony was founded by the late Major Lee Higginson in 1881, it was decided that the orchestra give a post-season of nightly concerts for several weeks featuring those semi-classics and lighter masterworks seldom programmed for the regular subscription season. These were originated in the old Boston Music Hall until the present Symphony Hall was completed. Then, as now, the regular auditorium seats were replaced by tables and chairs around which listeners enjoy light refreshments while listening to a Strauss waltz, a Sousa march, or a Beethoven scherzo or a Mozart minuet.

As customary, the entire Boston Symphony will present the "Pops" under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. This will be Fiedler's seventh consecutive season as leader of this annual spring series. Franz Kneisel, Timothee Adamowski, Andre Maquarre, Gustav Strube, Agide Jacchia and Alfredo Casella are among his distinguished precessors. The concerts will continue to June 27.

American Hebrew & Jewish Tribune

APR 10 1936

MUSIC



THE PAST week has had several musical events of un-

JEWISH GENIUS predominates in this month's releases of the Victor Phonograph Company. First and foremost, there is a new recording of Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Nazi government may banish Mendelssohn into permanent exile, and the Vienna Philharmonic may refuse to perform his symphonies when Wilhelm Furtwängler conducts; but Mendelssohn remains one of the most inspired composers in musical history. Listen to the enchantment and magic of the Italian Symphony—a work composed in one lyric flight of pure poetry—and you will feel your heart warm at the angelic beauty of this music. Kousevitzky's performance, on these Victor records, is particularly effective, and the recording is superb.

One of Mendelssohn's most famous overtures, Fingal's Cave, likewise makes its appearance on the Victor lists. The conductor is Adrian Boult, and the orchestra is the B. B. C. Symphony.

The prince of all violinists, Jascha Heifetz, appears this month on Victor records with the Vieuxtemps D-minor Concerto. This music may appeal as little to you as it does to me, but you cannot remain indifferent to the work as it is performed by Mr. Heifetz. His phenomenal technique, his beautiful singing tone, his fine sense for style, his incomparable instinct for effective phrasing, his sensitivity for the correct nuance—qualities which have made him one of the greatest violinists of our day—succeed in converting a very routined violin concerto into one of compelling interest. This is not great music, but it is a great performance, and as such the Victor recording of the Vieuxtemps Concerto demands your attention.

—DAVID EWEN.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAY 17 1936

Music on Records

VICTOR has issued Schubert's Quintet in C major in a performance by the Pro Arte String Quartet, with Anthony Pini, second cello. If there is more lovely, more affecting music than the slow movement of this work, or its last movement, or portions of the other movements, it is to be found only in other works of Schubert. It is something one feels like talking about at length, and yet one is deprived of speech by miracles of instantaneous loveliness and expressiveness of the sort that occur in the music of only one other composer—Mozart. As for the records, I have compared them, movement by movement, with Columbia's records of the performance of the London String Quartet and Horace Britt, which were made seven or eight years ago. The quality of recording is a little better in the Victor set, but it is astonishing how little better (the tone of the group is more compact), and how clear and faithful the Columbia reproduction is. And this difference is negligible compared with the superiority of the Londoners' performance in spirit, warmth, feeling for the essential quality and style of the music. Only in the slow movement does the Pro Arte group play as well (the superiority in recording is also most marked in this movement); in the three Allegro movements their playing is pedestrian and completely lacking in the easy suppleness and buoyancy that Schubert requires. Compared with this, the fact that they use one record less than the Londoners, eliminating two interruptions, is also negligible.

* * *

Debussy's "Iberia" is for me the greatest of his orchestral works, for in it the process of earlier masterpieces reaches its highest development and produces its finest results: the polyphony is densest, the resulting harmonic subtlety richest. And the new Victor recording of the performance of the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra under Coppola has the important merit of clarity—of letting one hear everything. But—possibly in order to attain this result—the work seems to have been recorded at a low volume level, with the microphones placed in a way that destroys correct balance (the violins sound distant); and the music, in this performance, has almost nothing of the atmosphere and excitement that it should have. Victor should have it recorded by Kousevitzky. On the sixth side is a wooden performance of a bad transcription of "Soiree dans Granade."

* * *

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

MAY 20 1936

Koussevitzky Sails Today For Vacation in Europe

Announces Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival Plans

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will sail today for France on the Manhattan for a vacation lasting until late in July, when he will return to conduct the Boston Symphony in the three concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August.

The festival will be held in a large tent on the Hanna Farm between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. The following programs were announced by Dr. Koussevitzky before his departure: August, 13, a Bach chorale, Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and seventh symphony and Sibelius's second symphony; August 15, Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Russian Easter," the prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanschina," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite and Brahms's second symphony; August 16, Mendelssohn's Italiana Symphony, the preludes to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony.

The Boston Symphony will give four concerts for the tercentenary celebration of Harvard University in Symphony Hall, Boston, on September 16 and 18, and in Sanders Theater Cambridge, on September 17. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will sing with the orchestra in one of the concerts. The orchestra's regular season, its fifty-sixth and the thirteenth under Dr. Koussevitzky's leadership, will begin in Symphony Hall on Friday October 9.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 20 1936

KOUSSEVITZKY OFF TODAY

Will Return From Europe for Berkshire Festival.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the last twelve years, will sail today for France on the Manhattan for a vacation. During the last season, he has directed the Boston orchestra in 110 concerts. He will return to the United States at the end of July to conduct the music festival which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give at Stockbridge, in the Berkshire Hills, on Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will also have a rôle in the tercentenary activities of Harvard University in September. The calendar of the tercentenary will include two concerts by the orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Sept. 16 and 18, and another in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Sept. 17, as part of the celebration. The fifty-sixth season of the orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on Oct. 9, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

MAY 11 1936

Mr. and Mrs. John Nicholas Brown have returned from a visit at Baltimore, with Mrs. Brown's parents, the Rev. and Mrs. Arthur atB. Kinsolving. Mrs. Brown also visited at Stratford, Va.

On Wednesday evening the first of the series of concerts by the Musical Art Quartet of New York will be given at the Brown residence. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mme. Koussevitzky will arrive from Boston that day to be guests of Mr. and Mrs. Brown who will give a dinner in their honor before the concert.

THIS CLIPPING
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAY 17 1936

Mr. and Mrs. John Nicholas Brown opened their home on Benefit street Wednesday evening for the first in a series of concerts by the Musical Art Quartet of New York. Preceding the concert, Mr. and Mrs. Brown entertained at dinner in honor of Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky of Boston, who were their guests for the concert.

The following evening Mr. and Mrs. Samuel M. Nicholson gave a dinner at their George street home before the second concert presented at Mr. and Mrs. Brown's residence.

Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson have had with them for a few days their daughter, Mrs. Richard F. Hoyt of New York.

70

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAY 10 1936

Music on Records

• • •

IT IS reported that Mr. Kousevitzki and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have recorded Listz' Faust Symphony. The recording has not yet, however, been announced for release, and in the meantime another has been imported by the Gramophone Shop. This is by a French orchestra—the Grand Orchestre Philharmonique—and a Russian chorus, under the direction of Selmar Meyrowitz.

Probably it is not possible to speak appreciatively of the Faust Symphony without running the risk of being suspected of a deliberate eccentricity of taste. The pendulum of favor has swung wide of the point at which its shadow fell on Listz, and when this occurs it is never considered sufficient to depreciate the defects of an artist's work, but becomes obligatory to deny him any qualities whatsoever. Yet Listz did not produce only trash; his many pages of music include quite a number stamped with authentic genius, and these we will find in the piano sonata, the Mephisto Waltz and the Dante and Faust symphonies. E. C.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

MAY 17 1936

Right Off th

A Review of Suggested

BY STEWART

MENDELSSOHN—Symphony No. 4 in A major (Italian); the Boston Symphony Orchestra, direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Victor Musical Masterpiece 294.

At the same time that the Boston Orchestra made the epochal recordings of the Strauss "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and the Sibelius "Symphony No. 2," this delightful work was made. All the praise showered on the previous two releases must be repeated with equal emphasis in this case. If it is apparent the finest recordings we have had from Victor are those of the Boston Orchestra, why cannot we have regular releases of this fine group? Certainly, America's finest orchestra should be better represented than it is.

Mendelssohn said that the Italian Symphony was his most mature, most inspired work. It is far ahead of its fellows and is with the violin concerto and the oratorios the greatest work of his career. Koussevitzky gives a reading of the highest caliber, and this artists conception added to a marvelous recording will afford you a thrill such as you have seldom experienced.

BACH—Chorale Prelude—Sanctify us by Thy Goodness (from Cantata No. 22), and Chorale Prelude—Beloved Jesus; Harriet Cohen, piano. Columbia 17053D.

I want to assure you that the unkind things I said recently about Miss Cohen's other Columbia release holds in no way in this case. This is truly one of the finest examples of Bach piano recording we have seen. There is none of the silly interpolations and personal whims so often injected by the average arranger; it is pure Bach, done in a most artistic style.

The first is from the cantata Bach wrote when he applied for the position as cantor at the Thomasschule in Leipzig. The second, one of his lovliest chorale preludes. Certainly there is many a moment's enjoyment for you in this little disc.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAY 17 1936

Music on Records

VICTOR has issued Schubert's Quintet in C major in a performance by the Pro Arte String Quartet, with Anthony Pini, second cello. If there is more lovely, more affecting music than the slow movement of this work, or its last movement, or portions of the other movements, it is to be found only in other works of Schubert. It is something one feels like talking about at length, and yet one is deprived of speech by miracles of instantaneous loveliness and expressiveness of the sort that occur in the music of only one other composer—Mozart. As for the records, I have compared them, movement by movement, with Columbia's records of the performance of the London String Quartet and Horace Britt, which were made seven or eight years ago. The quality of recording is a little better in the Victor set, but it is astonishing how little better (the tone of the group is more compact), and how clear and faithful the Columbia reproduction is. And this difference is negligible compared with the superiority of the Londoners' performance in spirit, warmth, feeling for the essential quality and style of the music. Only in the slow movement does the Pro Arte group play as well (the superiority in recording is also most marked in this movement); in the three Allegro movements their playing is pedestrian and completely lacking in the easy suppleness and buoyancy that Schubert requires. Compared with this, the fact that they use one record less than the Londoners, eliminating two interruptions, is also negligible.

• • •

Debussy's "Iberia" is for me the greatest of his orchestral works, for in it the process of earlier masterpieces reaches its highest development and produces its finest results: the polyphony is densest, the resulting harmonic subtlety richest. And the new Victor recording of the performance of the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra under Coppola has the important merit of clarity—of letting one hear everything. But—possibly in order to attain this result—the work seems to have been recorded at a low volume level, with the microphones placed in a way that destroys correct balance (the violins sound distant); and the music, in this performance, has almost nothing of the atmosphere and excitement that it should have. Victor should have it recorded by Koussevitzky. On the sixth side is a wooden performance of a bad transcription of "Soiree dans Granade."

• • •

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

MAY 20 1936

Koussevitzky Sails Today For Vacation in Europe

Announces Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival Plans

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will sail today for France on the Manhattan for a vacation lasting until late in July, when he will return to conduct the Boston Symphony in the three concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August.

The festival will be held in a large tent on the Hanna Farm between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. The following programs were announced by Dr. Koussevitzky before his departure: August, 13, a Bach chorale, Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and seventh symphony and Sibelius's second symphony; August 15, Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Russian Easter," the prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanschina," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite and Brahms's second symphony; August 16, Mendelssohn's Italiana Symphony, the preludes to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony.

The Boston Symphony will give four concerts for the tercentenary celebration of Harvard University in Symphony Hall, Boston, on September 16 and 18, and in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on September 17. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will sing with the orchestra in one of the concerts. The orchestra's regular season, its fifty-sixth and the thirteenth under Dr. Koussevitzky's leadership, will begin in Symphony Hall on Friday, October 9.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAY 10 1936

A Seasonal Review

By B. H. Haggin

Considerations of Music, Musicians and Concerts of the Winter and Spring

A LINE was omitted and sense destroyed last Sunday in the passage in which Schnabel told of his attempts to get a copy of the correct edition of Beethoven's cello sonatas. The passage should have read: "We wired Breitkopf in Leipzig; and the answer came: 'Not available.' It is not possible to buy the correct text of Beethoven's cello sonatas! And even the symphonies: Breitkopf published the scores, and they are correct; but the parts it gave out to be printed by others, and they are full of nuances that are not Beethoven's." Etc.

• • •

I HAVE had occasion to remark that ordinarily the occasions which impress themselves on a reviewer in the course of a season and remain in his memory as great artistic events are extremely few (though enough to make him aware of the inadequacy of most of the things he is called on to appraise—to the great indignation of impresarios, sponsoring committees and others whose lack of judgment or of disinterestedness does not prevent them from accusing the reviewer of incompetence or unfairness). The season just past proved in the end to be extraordinary in this respect but its first two or three month were only normally eventful. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra played the music of Beethoven and other masters; and if Mr. Henderson is right the concerts conducted by Otto Klemperer should have been memorable occasions. I doubt that they were, even to Mr. Henderson; they certainly were not to me. The concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski provided demonstrations of phenomenal technical virtuosity in orchestral performance, and also of the fact that Stokowski has reached a point where his phenomenal technical virtuosity is of use to very few of the composers it is supposed to serve. Sergei Koussevitzky's performances of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, at the Boston Symphony's first concerts of its 50th season in New York, gave the impression that he was stimulated and excited too much by the occasion; they sounded forced and driven, and produced an effect of vehemence rather than of power.

In this

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 20 1936

KOUSSEVITZKY OFF TODAY

Will Return From Europe for Berkshire Festival.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the last twelve years, will sail today for France on the Manhattan for a vacation. During the last season, he has directed the Boston orchestra in 110 concerts. He will return to the United States at the end of July to conduct the music festival which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give at Stockbridge, in the Berkshire Hills, on Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will also have a rôle in the tercentenary activities of Harvard University in September. The calendar of the tercentenary will include two concerts by the orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Sept. 16 and 18, and another in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Sept. 17, as part of the celebration. The fifty-sixth season of the orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on Oct. 9, under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

OVIDENCE, R. I.
-TRIBUNE

AY 11 1936

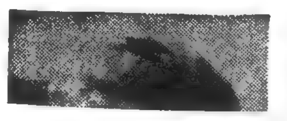
d Mrs. John Nicholas ave returned from a visit at re, with Mrs. Brown's par- the Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Kinsolving. Mrs. Brown also ed at Stratford, Va.

Wednesday evening the first of series of concerts by the Musical Quartet of New York will be n at the Brown residence. Dr. e Koussevitzky, conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, and e. Koussevitzky will arrive from on that day to be guests of Mr. Mrs. Brown who will give a din- in their honor before the concert.

American
Hebrew & Jewish Tribune
N.Y.

APR 10 1936

MUSIC



THE PAST week has had several musical events of un-

JEWISH GENIUS predominates in this month's releases of the Victor Phonograph Company. First and foremost, there is a new recording of Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Nazi government may banish Mendelssohn into permanent exile, and the Vienna Philharmonic may refuse to perform his symphonies when Wilhelm Furtwängler conducts; but Mendelssohn remains one of the most inspired composers in musical history. Listen to the enchantment and magic of the Italian Symphony—a work composed in one lyric flight of pure poetry—and you will feel your heart warm at the angelic beauty of this music. Kousevitzky's performance, on these Victor records, is particularly effective, and the recording is superb.

One of Mendelssohn's most famous overtures, Fingal's Cave, likewise makes its appearance on the Victor lists. The conductor is Adrian Boult, and the orchestra is the B. B. C. Symphony.

The prince of all violinists, Jascha Heifetz, appears this month on Victor records with the Vieuxtemps D-minor Concerto. This music may appeal as little to you as it does to me, but you cannot remain indifferent to the work as it is performed by Mr. Heifetz. His phenomenal technique, his beautiful singing tone, his fine sense for style, his incomparable instinct for effective phrasing, his sensitivity for the correct nuance—qualities which have made him one of the greatest violinists of our day—succeed in converting a very routined violin concerto into one of compelling interest. This is not great music, but it is a great performance, and as such the Victor recording of the Vieuxtemps Concerto demands your attention.

—DAVID EWEN.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAY 17 1936

Mr. and Mrs. John Nicholas Brown opened their home on Benefit street Wednesday evening for the first in a series of concerts by the Musical Art Quartet of New York. Preceding the concert, Mr. and Mrs. Brown entertained at dinner in honor of Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky of Boston, who were their guests for the concert.

The following evening Mr. and Mrs. Samuel M. Nicholson gave a dinner at their George street home before the second concert presented at Mr. and Mrs. Brown's residence.

Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson have had with them for a few days their daughter, Mrs. Richard F. Hoyt of New York.

TOLEDO, OHIO
NEWS BEE

MAY 9 - 1936

Radio From the Bro

An Old Custom

FOUR years after the Boston Symphony was founded by the late Major Lee Higginson in 1881, it was decided that the orchestra give a post-season of nightly concerts for several weeks featuring those semi-classics and lighter masterworks seldom programmed for the regular subscription season. These were originated in the old Boston Music Hall until the present Symphony Hall was completed. Then, as now, the regular auditorium seats were replaced by tables and chairs around which listeners enjoy light refreshments while listening to a Strauss waltz, a Sousa march, or a Beethoven scherzo or a Mozart minuet.

As customary, the entire Boston Symphony will present the "Pops" under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. This will be Fiedler's seventh consecutive season as leader of this annual spring series. Franz Kneisel, Timothee Adamowski, Andre Maquarre, Gustav Strube, Agide Jacchia and Alfredo Casella are among his distinguished precessors. The concerts will continue to June 27.

THE MICROPHONE
BOSTON, MASS.
MAY 22 1936

21

Confident George Gershwin

By Morris Hastings

GEORGE GERSHWIN is a vigorous, mentally alert chap, and a pleasant one. You might guess that from the swing and vitality of his music—the "Rhapsody in Blue," the tunes from "Lady Be Good," from "Of Thee I Sing" or any number of compositions of his that are broadcast so frequently on the radio.

When he has a half hour or so of leisure time, he'll sit down and talk with you about music or sports or painting or himself—anything but politics, he says.

But on his recent visit to Boston—he appeared as guest conductor, composer and pianist with the Boston Symphony "Pops" Orchestra—I confronted him during a lull in the rehearsal with the orchestra and he really didn't have time for "many words," as he put it.

He'd just jumped down from the stage where he had been rehearsing his Piano Concerto with the orchestra, under Arthur Fiedler's direction, and he was rather excited.

GEORGE GERSHWIN, composer and pianist, refuses to fall into the rut of writing only serious music or only popular music. His compositions frequently are heard on the radio.

"That music wears well, doesn't it?" George Gershwin enquired enthusiastically. "That's the first piece of mine that I ever orchestrated myself. I wrote it 10 years ago and played it that same year with Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony."

The composer turned to Dr. Isaac Goldberg, his biographer, who had been listening to the rehearsal.

"Don't you think it still sounds well?" he demanded.

"Yes," was the reply. "Why don't you make a recording of it?"

Mr. Gershwin snorted. "A recording? Hmph. I'm told that recording companies only have money enough to make records of old masterpieces. Still," he thought a moment, "the concerto is 10 years old, isn't it?"

George Gershwin's most recent composition is "Porgy and Bess," the American folk-opera that the Theatre Guild produced last Fall and which is considered his most important music to date. Excerpts from the score are occasionally played and sung on the radio by orchestras and Lawrence Tibbett and Rudy Vallee.

"I'm not working on anything so serious at the moment," Mr. Gershwin told me. "Just writing light songs. I might use them in a musical show later.

"It's just as difficult to write popular music as it is to write serious music. Well, let me put it this way: I use up as much energy in writing popular music as I do in writing the other kind. I work hard to find a good theme for a popular song. I try to get one that doesn't sound like all the others, and then I like to put a little twist into the song that will make it 'different.'

"I hope to write another opera some day, though. I'm looking around for material now. I'll take my time about it because I want to be sure that I get something that's suited to my style and then I want to take plenty of time to digest it.

"I never want to fall into the rut of writing only serious music or only popular music. I do want to be sure, though, that if I'm writing serious music it is serious music, and the other way around."

Our conversation was interrupted for at least the fifth time by someone congratulating him.

Another person called to him from the first balcony. Gershwin looked up and saw a banner flung over the balcony railing. On the banner was written "Welcome." Gershwin grinned.

Suddenly he turned back to me.

"How did the piano sound?" he asked. "I couldn't tell." Then he called to one of the orchestra players standing by the piano on the stage. "Play a few notes, will you?"

The man obliged and obviously the composer was pleased.

George Gershwin admitted that he was pleased at what he had accomplished in "Porgy and Bess."

"I think it is a big step forward for me," he said.

Mr. Gershwin can make statements like this without appearing conceited. He gives the impression, rather, of knowing better than anyone else his own capabilities and limitations. He is confident where a less able musician in his position might lose his head.

No American composer has been so widely feted in concert halls, on the radio and on the musical comedy stage. When the New York Philharmonic presented an all-Gershwin program at one of its Stadium concerts several Summers ago it drew the second largest audience in the history of the concerts.

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

The followiing program of Italian music will be presented at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall tonight by Arthur Fiedler:

Marcia Reale Italiana	Gabetti
Ballet Suite from "Aida."	Verdi
Serenade	Toselli
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"	Leoncavallo
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Aria, "Che gelida manina," from "La Boheme" Soloist: Francesco Albanese, tenor.	Puccini
Rhapsody, "Italia"	Casella
Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
Waltz, "Il Bacio"	Arditi
Dance of the Cammorisas from "The Jewels of the Madonna"	Wolf-Ferrari

---

utes.

[illegible]

Arthur Fiedler—Dancing Master

Hans Wiener, who will appear at the Pops, Symphony Hall, with his concert dance group on next Wednesday, Friday and Monday nights, revealed in a recent interview yet one more talent of the accomplished orchestra leader, Mr. Fiedler. It seems that Mr. Wiener had been using a phonograph recording of the Enesco Roumanian Rhapsody when working out his choreography for that number. Due to some faulty placement of instruments for the recording, certain musical passages failed to be given their proper value. But, before this was realized, Mr. Fiedler came to witness one of Mr. Wiener's rehearsals. It all went very well until they came to a certain phrase in the music which was accompanied in the dance with a soft, flowing movement.

"But," cried Mr. Fiedler, "Crescendo! Crescendo! This should build, build. This is the climax!" And before he was aware of what he was doing, he was in the middle of the floor making various gestures and saying, "It should go something like this, or this—or this."

"And as a matter of fact," commented Mr. Wiener after he had heard Mr. Fiedler's orchestra play the number, "he was right. It should have gone like that, and that, and that. And so I incorporated those very movements which Mr. Fiedler suggested into the dance composition."

"It is always a great pleasure," Mr. Wiener went on to say, "to work with Mr. Fiedler on those Pop concert dance numbers. He has a remarkable feeling for dance movement and his ability to unify both the music and dance composition into a harmonic whole which extenuates both arts is truly remarkable."

22

Betty Alden on 'Beacon Hill'

FIRST FASHION SHOW IN SYMPHONY HALL FEATURES SOCIAL CELEBRITIES

Eleonora Sears Leads Models at Pops Style Show

By BETTY ALDEN

MRS. N. PEARCE HALLOWELL, JR. MISS ELEONOR SEARS

FORMAL RIDING OUTFITS were modelled by Miss Eleanora Sears and Mrs. N. Pearce Hallowell, Jr., of Andover, in the style show which was a feature of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation benefit at the Pops in Symphony Hall last night. Both are accomplished equestriennes.

MISS LESLIE BLAKE

(Pictures from International News Photograph Service)

MISS LESLIE BLAKE, of Dedham, photographed as she wore beach pajamas and sat beneath a beach umbrella at last night's style show in Symphony Hall.

Guild Plans

Will Attend

"ELEO" SEARS went walking again last evening, and once again she set some sort of record . . . For she walked up the runway as a mannequin in the first fashion show ever held in Symphony Hall . . .

Eleo makes more or less of a habit of being the first at things . . . she has been the first of her sex to champion a number of formerly purely masculine pursuits . . . like flying, playing squash, and wearing shorts for comfort and practicability on the tennis courts . . .

Last evening she modelled formal riding clothes, and we are willing to wager it was the first time she came walking back in riding togs without her horse . . .

But in starting with Eleo we are getting a little bit ahead in our story of the fashion show, for it took in costumes for Milady all the way 'round the clock, and the riding episode in which she appeared with Mrs. N. Penrose Hallowell, Jr., came in the afternoon's events . . .

LORRAINE YOUNG

The idea of making a little pantomime of the show was very novel and much to the delight of the audience . . . starting with Barbara Young Hamlen and Elise Russell, who began the imaginary day by climbing out of bed, stretching and yawning in luxurious satin pajamas, the various models showed the correct attire for all sorts of activities of a socialite's summer day and evening . . . Joanna Palfrey and Cornelia Pentecost were the most active and lithesome tennis players, while Les Blake and Catherine Pentecost played volley ball on the stage of Symphony in the last word in colorful bathing suits . . .

Mrs. Powell Cabot and Betsy Jaques went through the imaginary antics or digging and raking weeds in a garden in the most vivid of scarlet and blue overalls with enormous shade hats . . . and then came a succession of lovely mannequins in summery chiffons and organdies, ending with [illegible] Nelson Aldrich and Mrs. Joe Woods relaxing at the end of a busy day in glamorous satin negligees with orange and yellow chiffon capes . . .

The fashion show, plus the first appearance of the original and amusing Boston Blast, a parody on all newspapers, and the Burroughs Newsboys' Harmonica Band [illegible] several hot songs, gave last evening's Pops a refreshing note.

* * *

There will be a "Rhode Island" night at Pops on June 17, as a friendly gesture to the current tercentenary celebration of our neighboring State to the south. Wassili Leps, conductor of the Providence Symphony Orchestra, has been invited to conduct one group of the program. His choice has alighted on two works by Providence composers—"Arabs" by Hugh McColl and "Chamounix" Suite by Mrs. Clarence Barbour—as well as items from the standard repertory. Arthur Fiedler will open the program with the new "Tercentenary" March by Williams.

May 25/36

Trans

AY, MAY 27, 1936

Blast of Pops

Two innovations in the program for Pop concerts pleased the large audience last evening at Symphony Hall, until it veritably resounded with their applause. The Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation not only benefited royally from the affair but will always be thought of by those who knew little about the organization, as a talented group with a genius for "putting over" both the performance of what they have worked up for so long in the hours not given to selling papers, as well as the spirit of the institution itself. Their harmonica band was the hit of the evening, with its additional features of the boy with rhythm who tapped so beautifully, and a new interpretation of "Nola."

The fashion show, put on by ten smart Boston shops, also came in for a good deal of applause, as clothes for occasions from morning till night were modelled by a group of well-known post-debutantes and young matrons.

Scattered around at the small tables: Mr. and Mrs. Louis Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel L. Batchelder, the latter wearing silver lame sitting with Mr. and Mrs. John S. Blyth, Mrs. Blyth's pleated and printed gown partially covered by a fur cape; later they were joined by James Parker and Miss Marion Lawrence, who had changed back into her newsprint ushering dress after modelling a lovely negligee; Mrs. John A. Tuckerman in Dubonnet chiffon which had finely pleated, waist-length cape, with her daughter, Miss Anne Tuckerman, whose black crepe was splashed with finely stencilled flowers, both a little worried as to the whereabouts of the several models, and wondering whether they would arrive on time for the fashion show; in a party with Mr. and Mrs. Amor Hollingsworth—their son Amor, Jr., and his fiancee, Miss Eleanor Gibson in midnight blue, Miss Evelyn Hollingsworth, also in blue under a fur cape; Mr. and Mrs. A. Lithgow Devens, Jr., Mrs. Devens very smart in white lace and a mink cape. At another table, Mr. and Mrs. Moses Williams, Jr., the latter wearing printed chiffon of black and red and white with a band of black velvet at the waist, with several friends, later joined by Mr. Williams' sister, Miss Eleanor Williams, in black taffeta; Mrs. Wiliam A Gaston, her silver pompadour set off by smart black chiffon and pearls; Miss Faith Donaldson, escorted and very smart in white crepe lightly printed in green, just returned from her trip that has taken her since early in the winter and to almost every country, in the interests of world peace; Mrs. Christian A. Herter, able chairman of the committee, very spring-like in green and white printed chiffon, listening with amusement to the speeches made by her husband and Henry Parkman, Jr.; Mrs. William Brace Pratt in soft, gray-blue net, ruffled at the throat and sleeves and girdled with a sash of wine red; Mrs. Edward A. Taft, who also chose a green and white print, hers of crepe, all sitting or standing near the door to make sure that everything went off as they planned; Mr. and Mrs. Forrester A. Clark, the latter wearing black chiffon when she came back from behind the scenes after modelling a jacketed, ivory taffeta evening dress that was most becoming. Mr. Clark having joined several other husbands whose wives were acting as mannequins, among them Nelson W. Aldrich, N. Penrose Hallowell, Jr., Robert Leeson, Jr., and Joseph W. Woods.

Others observed: Miss Isabel Lawrence with a scarlet velvet evening coat over her white lace dress; Miss Harriet Moseley, her dark red velvet cape matching her printed crepe dress; Mrs. C. Tracy Barnes in green moire; Miss Alice Burrage in a dress of white crepe splashed with big red and green flowers, under a deep blue coat; Mrs. Robert Leeson, Jr., an orange jacket over her well-cut black chiffon; Mrs. George P. Denny; Mrs. Philip Stockton in silver cloth; Mrs. Robert F. Herrick, Jr., in black and white; Mrs. Timothee Adamowski in black; Mrs. Gelston T. King with a fascinating long blue marabou cape over printed dress; marabou, by the way, having become popular in Boston suddenly, several of them worn last evening, another being the purple one Mrs. James Dean had on over her printed crepe; Mr. and Mrs. I. Tucker Burr, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison G. Reynolds, Mrs. Reynolds wearing midnight blue under a red coat; Miss Phyllis Forbes in black; Mrs Augustus F. Doty in dark blue; Thomas S. Blumer; George von L. Meyer; Miss Constance Babcock in svelte white crepe and an orchid corsage, with her fiance, Warren Richards, being congratulated after their recent announcement; Mrs. Roger W. Cutler with a sable cape over a pale print; Mr. and Mrs. Edmund S. Kelley, Jr.; Mr. and Mrs. Channing M. Wells Mrs. Wells wearing silver lame over her black chiffon, Mr. and Mrs. George Draper, the latter in printed dress under her blue taffeta coat; Mrs. George Peabody Gardner, Jr., with a Chinese coat over black dress, and her daughter, Miss Isabella Gardner in navy blue sheer with a fuschia sash, her broad-brimmed navy hat having a band of the same bright color; Devens Hamlen wandering about chatting with friends, and Miss Elizabeth Stackpole, her brown dress printed with big orange flowers.

Koussevitzky Flies to N. J.

American

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown at the East Boston airport just before taking off for Camden, N. J. After a visit to the Victor Talking Machine Company there, he will proceed to New York, from which point he and Mrs. Koussevitzky will sail for Europe.

(Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, flew from Boston airport today to New Jersey, where they will be guests of the Victor Talking Machine Company at Camden.

The noted conductor and Manager Judd will hear 31 recordings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra made two weeks ago by Victor company experts.

They will spend a night at Philadelphia, then proceed to New York. At New York Mr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky are sailing for Europe at noon Wednesday on the U. S. Liner Manhattan.

The Koussevitzkys will spend some time at Paris, then proceed to Vittel, France, and Bad-Gastein, Austria. They will return to Boston early in August.

Trans M, 28

ews of the Screen

Hans Wiener Dancers at the Pops

With a Waltz from Ravel and A Roumanian Rhapsody to Round Out a Program

By Edwin F. Melvin

Hans Wiener and his dancers were the excuse last night for a visit to the Pops. Other explanations might have served, but that was sufficient. Two group dances were the Wiener contribution, making up the final third of the program. Following precedent, enough tables had been removed to provide room for the orchestra on the floor for this part of the entertainment; green draperies on the stage concealed the summery trellis-work that is one of the hallmarks of a Pops season; spot-lights above he galleries were added to the floodights on the stage to illumine the ancers.

The first of the dance-numbers, set o Ravel's "La Valse," was a pretty but argely conventional arrangement, with he feminine members of the group in swirling draperies and the gentlemen in ightly-fitted breeches of gray or black as the case might be. On and off the stage hey came and went, now in pairs, again n fours or fives and finally a score or more, all woven into traditional patterns of motion. Such a dance has no great significance, but it serves well enough for variety to a spring evening of light diversion.

Much better was the second and concluding dance to Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody." Here there was simple but sufficient setting, with a brightly colored Roumanian village dwelling occupying the center of the background. Out of the door, rubbing her eyes, as though it were morning, wandered a Roumanian maiden. Behind her came a pair who might have been her parents, the gentleman's age and dignity hinted by a flowing black moustache. Village girls hurrying in, each with an article of feminine attire in her hands, suggested that this was a bridal morning. That it w to be a playful and festive one was apparent when they all concealed themselves within the house awaiting the arrival of the bridegroom and his attendants. And so it was; for the poor fellow was put upon by first one and then another flirtatious damsel, until at last his destined bride came forth to greet him. General jollity prevailed — in the usual ballet fashion—to mark conclusion of the episode.

It was a cheerful and attractive ballet, gayly costumed in peasant style with vivid colors and unostentatious but pretty designs, more to be enjoyed for its general carefree effect than for virtuoso qualities in the dancing. It furnished a novelty for another program of the Pops and that in itself should be enough.

For the rest, the evening was of the kind that has made the Pops and spring synonymous terms in Boston. A banner hung from the lower balcony proclaimed the fact that representatives of Oberlin were in the hall. A selection played on the organ during one of the intermissions confirmed the impression. But the dean of the college who has recently been elected president of Wellesley was not present. No one really expected that she would.

The music was out of the familiar Pops repertory. There was the well remembered but still welcome wedding march from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Le Coq d'Or." There were the overture to Glinka's "Russlan and Ludmilla," variations on the Austrian national anthem, Tchaikovsky's "Briar Rose" waltz, an Orgy of the Spirits from the Oriental suite "Noure and Anitra," by Ilynsky; Wagner's "Dreams," with Mr. Theodorowicz of course as violin soloist, and Tchaikovsky's stirring "March Slave," thrice familiar to every movie-goer. Mr. Fiedler conducted with vehemence or suavity as the music in hand required. The audience applauded loudly and indiscriminately—if anything with increasing enthusiasm as the evening progressed. Waitresses hurried back and forth with refreshments. There was an unmistakable air of spring relaxation. In short, it was the Pops.

MUSIC

Her May 28

THE POPS

Hans Wiener and his dance group, with Brilhart, were the soloists at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall last evening, for the first time this season. They presented two creations, La Valse, to the music of Ravel and with choreography by Brilhart, and Roumanian Rhapsody, a ballet based on eastern European wedding customs by Mr. Wiener, to the music of Enesco. During these two selections the orchestra of symphony players, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, were on the floor of the hall in the place usually occupied by the first few rows of tables. The musical portion of the program was arranged in characteristic fashion and was completely performed. Notable was the violin solo by Julius Theodorowicz, the concert master, in Wagner's "Dreams."

Mr. Wiener and his dancers were a pleasant addition to this Pop concert. For they were mort interested in entertaining the capacity audience than they were in producing a ballet of great significance. There were no sudden turns or great strides forward along the road of the modern dance. And that was all to the good. The purpose of these agreeable series of evenings has ever been to present light and pretty music, only occasionally of a more serious nature, and this requirement the pieces certainly met. Of the two the Roumanian Rhapsody was by far the more enjoyable. The front of a cottage formed the single set and the costumes were bright, with whites and greens and reds predominating.

In pantomime and dance figures, swift movement of lines and bodies, it told of a Roumanian marriage. Here and there was satire or humor as the case might be, while a chorus of wedding guests formed a background for solo work. There were moments not altogether unlike portions of "Prince Igor," for example, an other times suggestions of this or that ballet. Mr. Wiener, Kay Pope and Brilhart danced well and received adequate support from the many others. The fact that neither this ballet nor La Valse indicated any impressive progress on the part of Mr. Wiener and did not contain any strikingly original choreography did not detract from the suitableness of the dances for this type of program. Brilhart designed La Valse and it was generally less effective. Individuals and groups were not handled as skillfully as they might have been, and there were times when the dancers seemed to get in each other's way. The audience was most appreciative, however Both dances will be repeated Friday night and again Monday evening.

W. T. C., Jr.

MUSIC

Gl M 28

SYMPHONY HALL

Wiener Dancers at Pops

Last evening Hans Wiener and Dance Group, with Brilhart, made their first appearance this season at the Pops in Symphony Hall with two dances.

"La Valse" (Ravel) was a phantasmagoria of swaying and swirling youths and maidens. It was rythmic, lithe and graceful, but the dancers lacked full control of balance, and there was not enough variety in the choreography.

"Rumanian Rhapsody" (Enesco) was an ethnological study, in lively ballet mood, of Rumanian wedding customs. The flavor of the Balkans was prominent in Mr Wiener's choreography. Exuberance, buffoonery and lilting spirits had the upper hand. It was a colorful theme, well developed, and accompanied by miming.

For both dances the costumes and lighting, and, in "Rumanian Rhapsody," the mise en scene, were effective. Mr Wiener will present his dancers again Friday and Monday.

Needless to add, the orchestra was all that could be desired in the sensitivity of its interpretation.

"SHOW BOAT" HELD OVER

DAY, MAY 27, 1936

Blast of Pops

Two innovations in the program for Pop concerts pleased the large audience last evening at Symphony Hall, until it veritably resounded with their applause. The Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation not only benefited royally from the affair but will always be thought of by those who knew little about the organization, as a talented group with a genius for "putting over" both the performance of what they have worked up for so long in the hours not given to selling papers, as well as the spirit of the institution itself. Their harmonica band was the hit of the evening, with its additional features of the boy with rhythm who tapped so beautifully, and a new interpretation of "Nola."

The fashion show, put on by ten smart Boston shops, also came in for a good deal of applause, as clothes for occasions from morning till night were modelled by a group of well-known post-debutantes and young matrons.

Scattered around at the small tables: Mr. and Mrs. Louis Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel L. Batchelder, the latter wearing silver lame, sitting with Mr. and Mrs. John S. Blyth, Mrs. Blyth's pleated and printed gown partially covered by a fur cape; later they were joined by James Parker and Miss Marion Lawrence, who had changed back into her newsprint ushering dress after modelling a lovely negligee; Mrs. John A. Tuckerman in Dubonnet chiffon which had finely pleated, waist-length cape, with her daughter, Miss Anne Tuckerman, whose black crepe was splashed with finely stencilled flowers, both a little worried as to the whereabouts of the several models, and wondering whether they would arrive on time for the fashion show; in a party with Mr. and Mrs. Amor Hollingsworth—their son Amor, Jr., and his fiancee, Miss Eleanor Gibson in midnight blue, Miss Evelyn Hollingsworth, also in blue under a fur cape; Mr. and Mrs. A. Lithgow Devens, Jr., Mrs. Devens very smart in white lace and a mink cape. At another table, Mr. and Mrs. Moses Williams, Jr., the latter wearing printed chiffon of black and red and white with a band of black velvet at the waist, with several friends, later joined by Mr. Wiliams' sister, Miss Eleanor Williams, in black taffeta; Mrs. Wiliam A Gaston, her silver pompadour set off by smart black chiffon and pearls; Miss Faith Donaldson, escorted and very smart in white crepe lightly printed in green, just returned from her trip that has taken her since early in the winter and to almost every country, in the interests of world peace; Mrs. Christian A. Herter, able chairman of the committee, very spring-like in green and white printed chiffon, listening with amusement to the speeches made by her husband and Henry Parkman, Jr.; Mrs. William Brace Pratt in soft, gray-blue net, ruffled at the throat and sleeves and girdled with a sash of wine red; Mrs. Edward A. Taft, who also chose a green and white print, hers of crepe, all sitting or standing near the door to make sure that everything went off as they planned; Mr. and Mrs. Forrester A. Clark, the latter wearing black chiffon when she came back from behind the scenes after modelling a jacketed, ivory taffeta evening dress that was most becoming. Mr. Clark having joined several other husbands whose wives were acting as mannequins, among them Nelson W. Aldrich, N. Penrose Hallowell, Jr., Robert Leeson, Jr., and Joseph W Woods.

Others observed: Miss Isabel Lawrence with a scarlet velvet evening coat over her white lace dress; Miss Harriet Moseley, her dark red velvet cape matching her printed crepe dress; Mrs. C. Tracy Barnes in green moire; Miss Alice Burrage in a dress of white crepe splashed with big red and green flowers, under a deep blue coat; Mrs. Robert Leeson, Jr., an orange jacket over her well-cut black chiffon; Mrs. George P. Denny; Mrs. Philip Stockton in silver cloth; Mrs. Robert F. Herrick, Jr., in black and white; Mrs. Timothee Adamowski in black; Mrs. Gelston T. King with a fascinating long blue marabou cape over printed dress; marabou, by the way, having become popular in Boston suddenly, several of them worn last evening, another being the purple one Mrs. James Dean had on over her printed crepe; Mr. and Mrs. I. Tucker Burr, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison G. Reynolds, Mrs. Reynolds wearing midnight blue under a red coat; Miss Phyllis Forbes in black; Mrs Augustus F. Doty in dark blue; Thomas S. Blumer; George von L. Meyer; Miss Constance Babcock in svelte white crepe and an orchid corsage, with her fiance, Warren Richards, being congratulated after their recent announcement; Mrs. Roger W. Cutler with a sable cape over a pale print; Mr. and Mrs. Edmund S. Kelley, Jr.; Mr. and Mrs. Channing M. Wells Mrs. Wells wearing silver lame over her black chiffon, Mr. and Mrs. George Draper, the latter in printed dress under her blue taffeta coat; Mrs. George Peabody Gardner, Jr., with a Chinese coat over black dress, and her daughter, Miss Isabella Gardner in navy blue sheer with a fuschia sash, her broad-brimmed navy hat having a band of the same bright color; Devens Hamlen wandering about chatting with friends, and Miss Elizabeth Stackpole, her brown dress printed with big orange flowers.

ANNIVERSARY GIFTS

Koussevitzky Flies to N. J.

American

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown at the East Boston airport just before taking off for Camden, N. J. After a visit to the Victor Talking Machine Company there, he will proceed to New York, from which point he and Mrs. Koussevitzky will sail for Europe.

(Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, flew from Boston airport today to New Jersey, where they will be guests of the Victor Talking Machine Company at Camden.

The noted conductor and Manager Judd will hear 31 recordings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra made two weeks ago by Victor company experts.

They will spend a night at Philadelphia, then proceed to New York. At New York Mr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky are sailing for Europe at noon Wednesday on the U. S. Liner Manhattan.

The Koussevitzkys will spend some time at Paris, then proceed to Vittel, France, and Bad-Gastein, Austria. They will return to Boston early in August.

Tr. 27

ews of the Screen

Hans Wiener Dancers at the Pops

With a Waltz from Ravel and A Roumanian Rhapsody to Round Out a Program

By Edwin F. Melvin

Hans Wiener and his dancers were the excuse last night for a visit to the Pops. Other explanations might have served, but that was sufficient. Two group dances were the Wiener contribution, making up the final third of the program. Following precedent, enough tables had been removed to provide room for the orchestra on the ffoor for this part of the entertainment; green draperies on the stage concealed the summery trellis-work that is one of the hallmarks of a Pops season; spot-lights above the galleries were added to the flood-lights on the stage to illumine the dancers.

The first of the dance-numbers, set to Ravel's "La Valse," was a pretty but largely conventional arrangement, with the feminine members of the group in swirling draperies and the gentlemen in tightly-fitted breeches of gray or black as the case might be. On and off the stage they came and went, now in pairs, again in fours or fives and finally a score or more, all woven into traditional patterns of motion. Such a dance has no great significance, but it serves well enough for variety to a spring evening of light diversion.

Much better was the second and concluding dance to Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody." Here there was simple but sufficient setting, with a brightly colored Roumanian village dwelling occupying the center of the background. Out of the door, rubbing her eyes, as though it were morning, wandered a Roumanian maiden. Behind her came a pair who might have been her parents, the gentleman's age and dignity hinted by a flowing black moustache. Village girls hurrying in, each with an article of feminine attire in her hands, suggested that this was a bridal morning. That it was to be a playful and festive one was apparent when they all concealed themselves within the house awaiting the arrival of the bridegroom and his attendants. And so it was; for the poor fellow was put upon by first one and then another flirtatious damsel, until at last his destined bride came forth to greet him. General jollity prevailed — in the usual ballet fashion—to mark conclusion of the episode.

It was a cheerful and attractive ballet, gayly costumed in peasant style with vivid colors and unostentatious but pretty designs, more to be enjoyed for its general carefree effect than for virtuoso qualities in the dancing. It furnished a novelty for another program of the Pops and that in itself should be enough.

For the rest, the evening was of the kind that has made the Pops and spring synonymous terms in Boston. A banner hung from the lower balcony proclaimed the fact that representatives of Oberlin were in the hall. A selection played on the organ during one of the intermissions confirmed the impression. But the dean of the college who has recently been elected president of Wellesley was not present. No one really expected that she would.

The music was out of the familiar Pops repertory. There was the well remembered but still welcome wedding march from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Le Coq d'Or." There were the overture to Glinka's "Russlan and Ludmilla," variations on the Austrian national anthem, Tchaikovsky's "Briar Rose" waltz, an Orgy of the Spirits from the Oriental suite "Noure and Anitra," by Ilynsky; Wagner's "Dreams," with Mr. Theodorowicz of course as violin soloist, and Tchaikovsky's stirring "March Slave," thrice familiar to every movie-goer. Mr. Fiedler conducted with vehemence or suavity as the music in hand required. The audience applauded loudly and indiscriminately—if anything with increasing enthusiasm as the evening progressed. Waitresses hurried back and forth with refreshments. There was an unmistakable air of spring relaxation. In short, it was the Pops.

MUSIC

Am May 28

THE POPS

Hans Wiener and his dance group, with Brilhart, were the soloists at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall last evening, for the first time this season. They presented two creations, La Valse, to the music of Ravel and with choreography by Brilhart, and Roumanian Rhapsody, a ballet based on eastern European wedding customs by Mr. Wiener, to the music of Enesco. During these two selections the orchestra of symphony players, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, were on the floor of the hall in the place usually occupied by the first few rows of tables. The musical portion of the program was arranged in characteristic fashion and was completely performed. Notable was the violin solo by Julius Theodorowicz, the concert master, in Wagner's "Dreams."

Mr. Wiener and his dancers were a pleasant addition to this Pop concert. For they were mort interested in entertaining the capacity audience than they were in producing a ballet of great significance. There were no sudden turns or great strides forward along the road of the modern dance. And that was all to the good. The purpose of these agreeable series of evenings has ever been to present light and pretty music, only occasionally of a more serious nature, and this requirement the pieces certainly met. Of the two the Roumanian Rhapsody was by far the more enjoyable. The front of a cottage formed the single set and the costumes were bright, with whites and greens and reds predominating.

In pantomime and dance figures, swift movement of lines and bodies, it told of a Roumanian marriage. Here and there was satire or humor as the case might be, while a chorus of wedding guests formed a background for solo work. There were moments not altogether unlike portions of "Prince Igor," for example, and other times suggestions of this or that ballet. Mr. Wiener, Kay Pope and Brilhart danced well and received adequate support from the many others. The fact that neither this ballet nor La Valse indicated any impressive progress on the part of Mr. Wiener and did not contain any strikingly original choreography did not detract from the suitableness of the dances for this type of program. Brilhart designed La Valse and it was generally less effective. Individuals and groups were not handled as skillfully as they might have been, and there were times when the dancers seemed to get in each other's way. The audience was most appreciative, however Both dances will be repeated Friday night and again Monday evening.

W. T. C., Jr.

MUSIC

Gl. M. 28

SYMPHONY HALL

Wiener Dancers at Pops

Last evening Hans Wiener and Dance Group, with Brilhart, made their first appearance this season at the Pops in Symphony Hall with two dances.

"La Valse" (Ravel) was a phantasmagoria of swaying and swirling youths and maidens. It was rythmic, lithe and graceful, but the dancers lacked full control of balance, and there was not enough variety in the choreography.

"Rumanian Rhapsody" (Enesco) was an ethnological study, in lively ballet mood, of Rumanian wedding customs. The flavor of the Balkans was prominent in Mr Wiener's choreography. Exuberance, buffoonery and lilting spirits had the upper hand. It was a colorful theme, well developed, and accompanied by miming.

For both dances the costumes and lighting, and, in "Rumanian Rhapsody," the mise en scene, were effective. Mr Wiener will present his dancers again Friday and Monday.

Needless to add, the orchestra was all that could be desired in the sensitivity of its interpretation.

"SHOW BOAT" HELD OVER

THE BOSTON HERALD, SUNDAY, MAY 31, 1936

Pops in Fifth Week; Student Ar

Ruth Posselt, who will play the Goldmark violin concerto, opus 28, at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall this evening. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the orchestra of Symphony players.

Fifth Week of Pops; Tonight's Soloist Is Ruth Posselt

The Pop concerts at Symphony Hall will begin their fifth week tonight with the last regular Sunday concert of the season—Ruth Posselt, the celebrated violinist, appearing as soloist. Next Sunday evening, June 7, a special concert will be given for the benefit of the Boston Symphony orchestra's pension fund, with the annual request program, by its nature the most popular of the year, to grace the occasion. Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" obtained a high number of votes, although this piece, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist, will then occur for the first time in the present Pop season.

Arthur Fiedler announces for Monday's program the third and final appearance of Hans Wiener and his dance group in conjunction with the orchestra. Tuesday will bring old timers' night, in which favorite songs and instrumental pieces of days past will be revived, and participation of the audience in the song favorites invited. Thursday will be the annual New England Conservatory night, with Aniceta Shea appearing as soloist. On Saturday, June 6, students and graduates of M. I. T. will make special celebration. The program of the week follows:

Sunday Evening, May 31

Overture to "The Magic Flute".....Mozart
Symphony No. 5 in C minor, Op. 67
Beethoven
Concerto for Violin, Op. 28.....Goldmark
Soloist—Ruth Posselt.
Selection, "Porgy and Bess".....Gershwin
Voices of Spring waltzes..........Straus
Introduction to act III, "Lohengrin"
Wagner

Monday Evening, June 1

Coronation March from "The Prophet"
Meyerbeer
The Roman Carnival, overture.....Berlioz
Silver Shadows, tango............Repper
Soviet Iron Works................Mossolov
Fantasia, "La Boheme"............Puccini
Largo from "Xerxes"..............Handel
riccio Espagnol......Rimsky-Korsakov
Hans Wiener and dancers, with orchestra
Roumanian Rhapsody...............Enesco
La Valse, choreographic poem.......Ravel

Tuesday Evening, June
OLD TIMERS' NIG

"Our Director," march...
Overture to "Poet and P
"Arkansas Traveler," breakdown.........
"The Gondoliers," sel
"The Hunt in the Bla
"The Lost Chord"...
Trumpet solo, cel
Songs of the Old Days.
"Jolly Fellows," waltzes.....
Prayer of Thanksgiving, old Dutch hymn
Valerius
Old-time favorites.

Wednesday Evening, June 3

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"
Mozart
"Unfinished Symphony," in B minor
Schubert
Marche Miniature............Tchiakovsky
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"
Wagner
"La Nuit Revecue" (The Night Relieved)..................Bainbridge Cri
Second Hungarian Rhapsody.........Li
Chorus (State Teachers College of Framingham).
"Merry Widow," waltzes...........Le
"Deep River," Negro spiritual arranged by Jacchi
Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia"
Delibe

Thursday Evening, June 4

March, Pomp and Circumstance......Elga
Overture to "Jeanne d'Arc".......Convers
Boreas and Mt. Wildcat..........Hovane
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg".............................Wag
Les Eolides, symphonic poem.......Fra
Aria, Pace, Pace, from "La Forza d Destino"
Soloist, Aniceta Shea, soprano
Bolero
"Emperor" waltzes
Liebestraum ....Liszt-He
Introduction to act 3, "Lohengrin"..W

Friday Evening, June 5

Entrance of the Boyards.........Halvorse
Overture to "Fra Diavolo"..........Aube
Scherzo, A Midsummer Night's Dream..
Mendelssoh
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube" waltzes
Strau
The Animals' Carnival, Grand Zoological Fantasia ....Saint-Saen
Pianos, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Leo Litwi
Prize song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" ....Wagn
"Pathetic" symphony No. 6 (third movement) ....Tchaikovsk
Selection, The Fortune Teller......Herbe
Song of the Volga Bargemen
Arranged by Glazounov
American Patrol ....Meacham

Saturday Evening, June 6

Polonaise in A major....Chopin-Glazounov
"Finlandia," Symphonic poem.....Sibel
"The Sorcerer's Apprentice".......Dukas
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen".......Bizet
Overture to "Tannhauser"........Wagner
"Danse Macabre"............Saint-Saens
"Kammanoi Ostrow"............Rubinstein
"Tales from the Vienna Woods"....Strauss
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango...........Gade
"Of Thee I sing," selection.....Gershwin

Sunday Evening, June 7, at 8:30
REQUEST PROGAM

Prelude to "Carmen"..................Bizet
Overture to "William Tell"........Rossin
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango............Gad
"Peer Gynt," suite..................Grie
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes
Strauss
Largo from "Xerxes"...............Handel
Bolero ....Ravel
Rhapsody in Blue.............Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
Prayer of Thanksgiving...........Valerius
Pomp and Circumstance............Elgar

6—D May 31 Ar

'Parnell' Begins

Music Events For the Week

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

INTEREST in things musical continues to center, for the most part, around the Pops, now entering upon the fifth week of nightly occurrence in Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

This evening's concert will be the last in the regular Sunday evening series.

Ruth Posselt, distinguished young violinist, will appear as soloist with the orchestra in the performance of Goldmark's Concert for Violin, Op. 28. The program also includes Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," the introduction to the third act of Wagner's "Lohengrin," selections from Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" and Strauss waltzes—an assortment unusual enough.

* * *

ON MONDAY evening Hans Wiener and his group will make their third and final appearance of the season with the orchestra in the danced presentation of Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody" and Ravel's "La Valse."

The program contains for the rest, such Pops favorites as Meyerbeer's "Coronation March" from "The Prophet," Mossolov's "Soviet Iron Works," a Fantasia from Puccini's "La Boheme," Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espagnol" and Handel's Largo from "Xerxes."

Tuesday evening is Old Timers' Night—the program being from the opening march, "Our Director," by Bigelow, precisely what one might expect. By way of innovation, the audience will be invited to participate in the revival of old song favorites.

Wednesday evening's program, if still composed of "favorite works," promises to afford somewhat larger musical enjoyment.

Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, which has not been performed at the Pops for several years, will be heard on this occasion, as will Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," Wagner's Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody, "Tchaikovsky's "Marche Miniature," Lehar's "Merry Widow" waltzes, and an arrangement of the Negro spirituel, "Deep River," by Jacchia.

The chorus of the State Teachers College of Framingham will appear with the orchestra in selections to be announced later in the week.

Thursday evening will be the annual New England Conservatory Night.

As soloist with the orchestra, Aniceta Shea, soprano, will sing the aria, "Pace, pace," from Verdi's "La Forza del Destino."

* * *

ON FRIDAY evening, Pianists Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin will appear with the orchestra in the performance of Saint-Saens' Animals' Carnival, "Grand Zoological Fantasia."

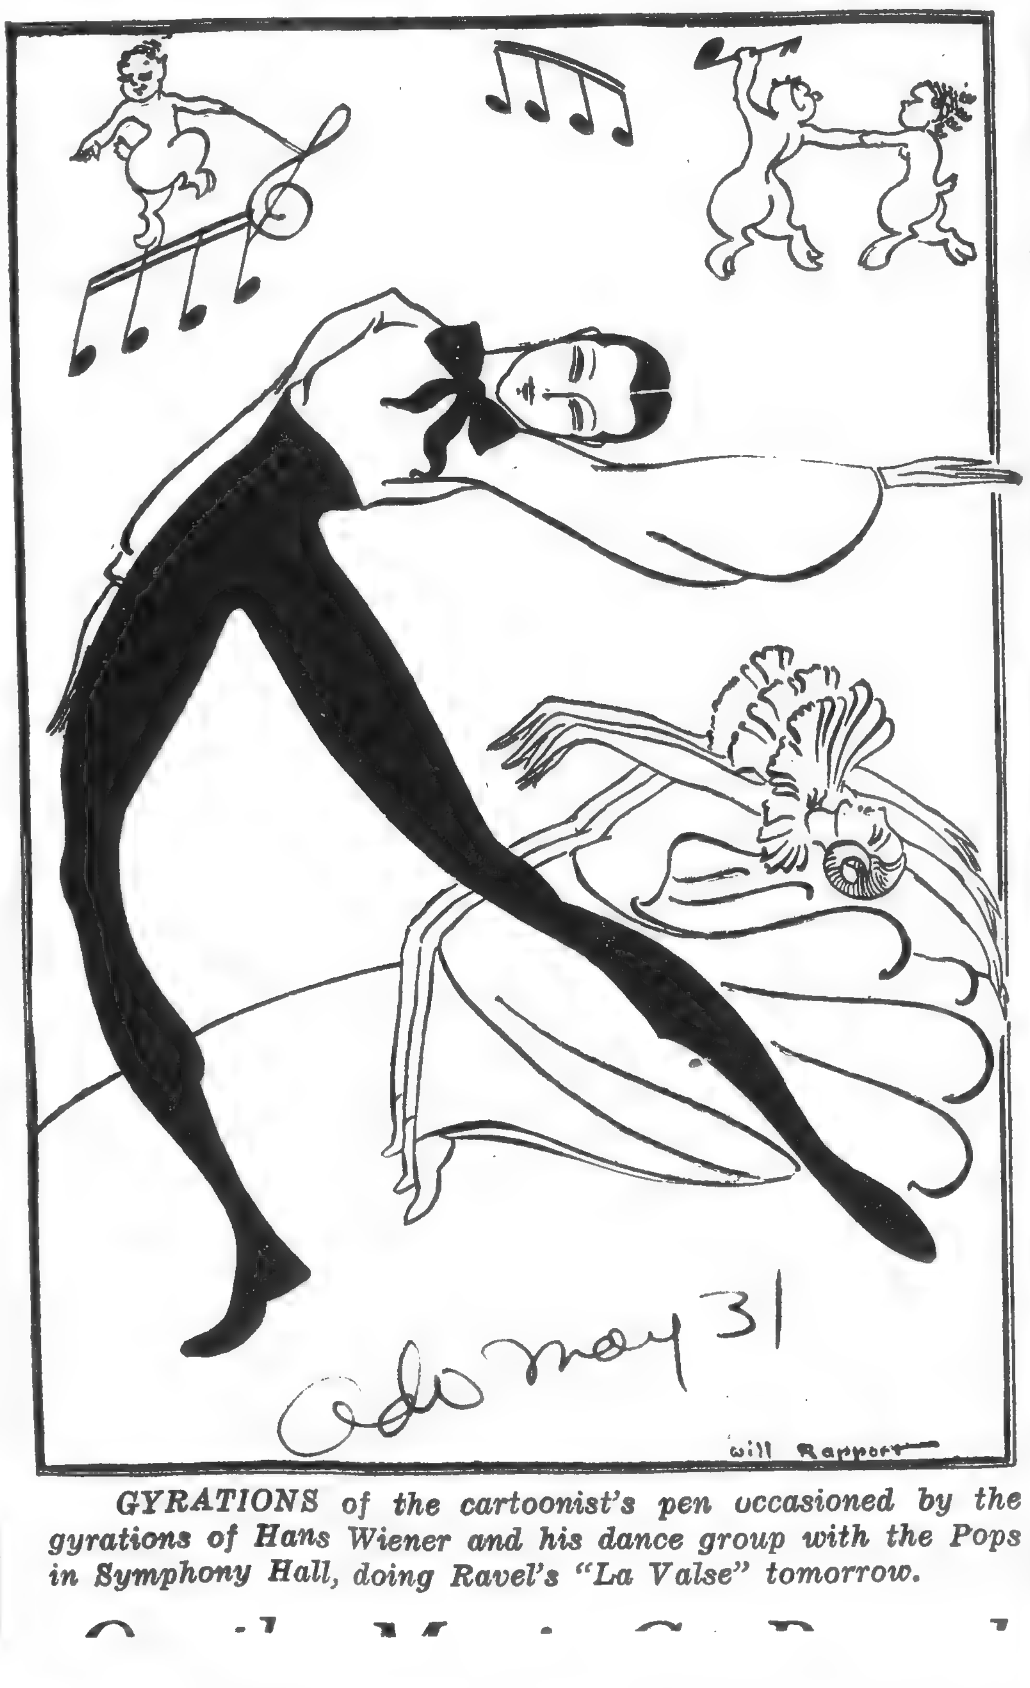
The program also includes the third movement from Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony ("Pathetic"), Scherzo from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," Strauss waltzes, Glazounov's arrangement of the "Song of the Volga Bargemen," etc.

Saturday's concert is designated as Massachusetts Institute of Technology Night.

Next Sunday evening, June 7, a special concert will be given for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund.

* * *

ORCHESTRAL concerts to



Adv May 31

GYRATIONS of the cartoonist's pen occasioned by the gyrations of Hans Wiener and his dance group with the Pops in Symphony Hall, doing Ravel's "La Valse" tomorrow.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Globe May 31

Symphony Hall Pops Will Begin Fifth Week Tonight

The Pop Concerts at Symphony Hall will begin their fifth week tonight with the last regular Sunday concert of the season—Ruth Posselt, the celebrated violinist, appearing as soloist.

Next Sunday evening, June 7, a special concert will be given for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund, with the annual request program—by its nature the most popular of the year—to grace the occasion. Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" obtained a high number of votes. Jesus Maria Sanroma will again be soloist.

Arthur Fiedler announces for Monday's program the third and final appearance of Hans Wiener and his dance group, in conjunction with the orchestra. Tuesday will bring Old Timers' Night, in which favorite songs and instrumental pieces of days past will be revived and the participation of the audience in the song favorites invited.

Thursday will be the annual New England Conservatory Night, with Aniceta Shea as soloist. On Saturday, June 6, students and graduates of M. I. T. will make special celebration.

The programs of the week follow:

Tonight. Overture to "The Magic Flute," Mozart; Symphony No. 5 in C minor, Op 67, Beethoven; Concerto for Violin, Op 28, Goldmark; soloist, Ruth Posselt; Selection, "Porgy and Bess," Gershwin; "Voices of Spring," Waltzes, Strauss; Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner.

Monday. Coronation March from "The Prophet," Meyerbeer; "The Roman Carnival," Overture, Berlioz; "Silver Shadows," Tango, Repper; Soviet Iron Works, Mossolov; Fantasia, "La Boheme," Puccini; Largo from "Xerxes," Handel; riccio Espagnol, Rimsky-Korsakov; Hans Wiener and dancers, with orchestra; Roumanian Rhapsody, Enesco; "La Valse," Choreographic Poem, Ravel.

Tuesday. Old timers night, "Our Director," March, Bigelow; Overture to "Poet and Peasant," Suppe; "Arkansas Traveler," Old Fiddler's Breakdown, Guion; "The Gondoliers," Selection, Sullivan; "The Hunt in the Black Forest," Voelker; "The Lost Cord," Sullivan; Trumpet solo, Marcel Lafosse; Song of the Old Days, "Jolly Fellows," Waltzes, Vostedt; Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn, Valerius, Old Time Favorites.

Wednesday. Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," Mozart; "Unfinished" Symphony, in B minor, Schubert; Marche Miniature, Tchaikovsky; Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; "La Nuit Revecue" ("The Night Relived"), Bainbridge Crist; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Chorus (State Teachers' College of Framingham); "Merry Widow" Waltzes," Lehar; "Deep River," Negro Spiritual, arranged by Jacchia; Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia," Delibes.

Thursday. March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; Overture to "Jeanne d'Arc," Converse; Boreas and Mount Wildcat, Hovaness; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurmberg," Wagner; "Les Eolides," Symphonic Poem, Franck; Aria, "Pace, pace," from "La Forza del Destino," Verdi; soloist, Aniceta Shea, soprano; Bolero, Ravel; "Emperor," waltzes, Strauss; Liebestraum, Liszt-Herbert; Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner.

Friday. Entrance of the Boyards," Halvorsen; Overture to "Fra Diavolo," Auber; Scherzo, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes, Strauss; The Animals' Carnival, "Grand Zoological Fantasia," Saint-Saens; pianos, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Leo Litwin; Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner; "Pathetic" Symphony, No. 6 (Third movement), Tchaikovsky; Selection, "The Fortune Teller," Herbert; Song of the Volga Bargemen, arranged by Glazounov; American Patrol, Meacham.

Saturday. Polonaise in A major, Chopin-Glazounov; "Finlandia," symphonic poem, Sibelius; "The Sorceror's Apprentice," Dukas; Gypsy dance from "Carmen," Bizet; overture to "Tannhauser," Wagner; "Danse Macabre," Saint-Saens; "Kammenoi Ostrow," Rubinstein; "Tales from the Vienna Woods," Strauss; "Jealousy," Gypsy tango, Gade; "Of Thee I Sing," selection, Gershwin.

Sunday. Request program. Prelude to "Carmen," Bizet; overture to "William Tell," Rossini; "Jealousy," Gypsy tango, Gade; "Peer Gynt" suite, Grieg; "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes, Strauss; largo from "Xerxes," Handel; Bolero, Ravel; Rhapsody in Blue Gershwin; soloist, Jesus Maria, Sanroma; Prayer of 25

MAY 29, 1936

Concert Calendar

At the Pops—Nightly as well as on Sunday at Symphony Hall, programs of music light and occasionally serious, furnished by at least eighty-five members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Arthur Fiedler conducting. Refreshments, alcoholic and otherwise, may be enjoyed during the concert by those seated at the tables on the floor, and by all and sundry at the refreshment bar in the rear of the first balcony. Smoking and discreet conversation may be indulged in.

At the concert for Sunday evening Ruth Posselt, talented Boston violinist, will be the soloist in the Goldmark Concerto, now rarely played hereabouts. Most of the rest of the program is of a symphonic nature. On Monday evening Hans Wiener and his Dancers will reappear. "Old Timers' Night" comes on Tuesday with a goodly representation of old favorites. The program for Wednesday contains, among other items, Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and "La Nuit Revécue" by Bainbridge Crist, composer of these parts. Thursday will bring "New England Conservatory Night," when Aniceta Shea, soprano, will be soloist. On Friday the amusing "Animals' Carnival" of Saint-Saëns will be played, with Jesus Maria Sanromá and Leo Litwin as pianists. A "popular" program will be presented on Saturday. On Sunday evening, June 7, a "Request" program will be given for the benefit of the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Most of the favorites of recent seasons are on the list.

The complete programs for the week, as well as the "Request" program, follow:

Sunday Evening

Overture to "The Magic Flute"........Mozart
Symphony No. 5 in C minor..........Beethoven
Concerto for Violin ....Goldmark
Soloist: Ruth Posselt
Selection, "Porgy and Bess"..........Gershwin
"Voices of Spring," Waltzes..........Strauss
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"..Wagner

Monday Evening

Coronation March from "The Prophet"
Meyerbeer
"The Roman Carnival," Overture......Berlioz
"...s," Tango..................Repper
...orks..................Mossolov
...me"..................Puccini
..."..........Handel
..........Rimsky-Korsakov
...ancers, with Orchestra
..................Enesco
...aphic Poem........Ravel made bas which mem window boxes.

room where re served. Ribbons
prizes and the Massachu culture

Tuesday Evening

"Our Director," March..............Bigelow
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"..........Suppé
"Arkansas Traveler," Old Fiddler's
Breakdown ....Guion
"The Gondoliers," Selection...........Sullivan
The Hunt in the Black Forest........Voelker
The Lost Chord......................Sullivan
Trumpet Solo: Marcel Lafosse
Songs of the Old Days
"Jolly Fellows," Waltzes..............Volstedt
Prayer of Thanksgiving. Old Dutch Hymn
Valerius
Old-Time Favorites

Wednesday Evening

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"..Mozart
"Unfinished" Symphony in B minor....Schubert
Marche Minature .... Tchaikovsky
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"....Wagner
"La Nuit Revécue" ("The Night Relived")
Bainbridge Crist
Second Hungarian Rhapsody..............Liszt
Chorus (State Teachers College of Framingham)
"Merry Widow," Waltzes...............Lehar
"Deep River," Negro Spiritual..Arr. by Jacchia
Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia"....Delibes

Thursday Evening

March, "Pomp and Circumstance"......Elgar
Overture to "Jeanne d'Arc"...........Converse Boreas and Mount Wildcat..........Hovaness
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg"
Wagner
"Les Eolides," Symphonic Poem........Franck
Aria, "Pace, pace," from "La Forza del
Destino" ....Verdi
Soloist: Aniceta Shea, soprano
Bolero ....Ravel
"Emperor," Waltzes ....Strauss
Liebestraum .... Liszt-Herbert
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"....Wagner

Friday Evening

Entrance of the Boyards.............Halvorsen
Overture to "Fra Diavolo"..............Auber
Scherzo, "A Midsummer Night's Dream"
Mendelssohn
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes
Strauss
The Animals' Carnival, "Grand Zoölogical
Fantasia" ....Saint-Saëns
Pianos: Jesús María Sanromá—Leo Litwin Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg" ....Wagner
"Pathetic" Symphony, No. 6 (Third movement) ....Tchaikovsky
Selection, "The Fortune Teller"........Herbert
Song of the Volga Bargemen..Arr. by Glazounov
American Patrol ....Meacham

Saturday Evening

Polonaise in A major ......Chopin-Glazounov
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem.........Sibelius
The Sorceror's Apprentice...............Dukas
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen"............Bizet
Overture to "Tanhäuser"..............Wagner
Danse Macabre ....Saint-Saëns
Kammenoi Ostrow ....Rubinstein
Tales from the Vienna Woods..........Strauss
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango..................Gade
"Of Thee I Sing," Selection..........Gershwin

Sunday Evening, June 7

Prelude to "Carmen"......................Bizet
Overture to "William Tell"............Rossini
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango..................Gade
"Peer Gynt" Suite.........................Grieg
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes
Strauss
Largo from "Xerxes"...................Handel
Bolero ....Ravel
Rhapsody in Blue.....................Gershwin
Soloist: Jesús María Sanromá
Prayer of Thanksgiving..............Valerius
Pomp and Circumstance................Elgar

Jun 7 | Herald

MUSIC

THE POPS

Ruth Posselt, talented young violinist, was the guest soloist in Goldmark's Concerto for violin in A minor, opus 28, at the Pops concert in Symphony hall last evening. Arthur Fiedler conducted the orchestra of symphony players. It was Miss Posselt's first appearance with the Pops orchestra this season. The program was as follows:

Overture to "The Magic Flute"....Mozart
Symphony No. 5 in C minor, opus 67
Beethoven
Concerto in A minor for violin and orchestra, opus 28..............Goldmark
Selection, "Porgy and Bess'......Gershwin
"Voices of Spring" waltzes........Strauss
Introduction to Act III of "Lohengrin"
Wagner

This agreeable Sunday night Pops program brought forth a brilliant performance of the Goldmark violin concerto in A minor by Miss Posselt and an interesting interpretation of the Beethoven Fifth symphony by Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra as well as selections in a more characteristic vein and the delightful overture to Mozart's "The Magic Flute." Mr Fiedler's way with the Beethoven Fifth seemed somewhat restrained compared to the tremendous things achieved by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the full orchestra, yet it was a logical and thoroughly intelligent presentation. Considering the limited number of rehearsals possible and the fact that the men needs must play a long program every night of the week, this method of Mr Fiedler's was surely the best under the circumstances. His moderation resulted in generally accurate and satisfactory playing where a degree of exaltation might have produced distortion and occasional slips. It was a credit to the ability of Mr. Fiedler and his musicians.

Much of the attention, however, centered on Miss Posselt and her playing of the Goldmark work. She has appeared in public in Boston on various occasions and has always created a favorable impression. Last night proved to be no exception. As a matter of fact there was more maturity and polish in her treatment of the concerto than was apparent in the past. Again one noted with pleasure the strength and firmness of her bowing, the accurate fingering and the rich and beautiful tone. Her admirable technique was displayed to advantage in the cadenza in the third movement, where she handled double-stopping and difficult passages, the while never sacrificing the tone or seeking merely to demonstrate mechanical skill. In the concerto itself Goldmark showed evidences of his early interest and training in the instrument. And Miss Posselt captured his moods and ideas and expressed them vividly and effectively. Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra gave her fine support on the whole, although there were moments in the first movement when they showed a slight tendency to drown out the violin. There was less of this in the succeeding portions and the allegretto was especially well done. The large audience rewarded Miss Posselt with an ovation and she returned to the platform many times to acknowledge the extremely enthusiastic applause.

W. T. C., Jr.

"POPS-O-GRAMS" SOURCE OF JOY TO CONCERTGOERS

Pop concert audiences have been taking delightedly to a new game, simpler than the cross-word in some respects, but possessing some of the same power of exciting a desire to go on and on. The game is called "Pops-o-grams." On blanks distributed at Symphony Hall, contestants fill in four-word comments on the Pops, beginning each word in turn with the letters P, O, P, S. Tickets are awarded the writers of "Pops-o-grams" adjudged most clever and apt. Following are the first 10 winners and their "Pops-o-grams":

Miss Mary Van Dyne, Boston: "'Pops Okey,' People Say."
Miss Dorothy Etz, Medford: "Programs Offer Pleasant Surprises."
Miss Elizabeth Very, Framingham: "Plenty of Popular Seats."
Miss Irma Seydel, Boston: "Peerless Orchestra Plays Superbly."
Mr W. H. Felmeth, Cambridge: "Popular Offerings Performed Splendidly."
Mrs Montague P. Ford, Newton: "Paradise of Pleasure Seekers."
Miss Virginia Lichtner, Brookline: "Perfect Opportunity Presented Students."
Mrs T. Seydel, Boston: "Popularity of Pops Swells."
Miss Ruth Atwell, New York: "Pops Offer Praiseworthy Scores."
Miss Rachel-Anne Kontoff, Newton: "Pops Occasion Perennial Satisfaction."

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

Arthur Fiedler has chosen the following program for the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," Mozart; "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, Schubert; Marche Miniature, Tchaikovsky; Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; "La Nuit Revecue" ("The Night Relived"), after the poem, "Senlin," by Conrad Aiken), Bainbridge Crist; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Chorus (State Teachers College of Framingham); "Merry Widow," waltzes, Lehar; "Deep River," Negro Spiritual, arranged by Jacchia; Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia," Delibes.

JUNE 1, 1936

Players --- N

Ruth Posselt Soloist at the Pops Concert

Violinist Acclaimed by Large Audience for Playing of Goldmark Concerto

By Moses Smith

Two-thirds of the fourth Sunday evening Pops concert in Symphony Hall bore a fairly close resemblance to a mid-season symphony concert, except in the matter of the order of the numbers. The program began with Mozart's "Magic Flute" Overture and proceeded through Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and Goldmark's Violin Concerto, for which Ruth Posselt was the soloist. The final third of the program consisted of a pot-pourri from Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess," a Strauss waltz, "Voices of Spring," and the Introduction ao the third act of Wagner's "Lohengrin."

* * *

The most stimulating event of the concert was Miss Posselt's playing of the Concerto. It was evident, from her beautiful playing, that she has come a long way since that time, perhaps a dozen years ago, when she played on the same platform as a girl wonder. It seemed almost as evident, to this chronicler, that she has made great strides since her appearance as soloist in the Tchaikovsky Concerto with the Boston Symphony a little more than a year ago.

The principal change since the more recent appearance has been in refinement of tone, with which is inevitably connected a more polished phrasing. The Goldmark Concerto, frequently sentimental in character, provides many a temptation for exaggerated emphasis on the part of the soloist. Almost from beginning to end, Miss Posselt resisted this temptation; played with a fine sense for the line as well as for the harmonic color; yet was not guilty, in any way, of a merely perfunctory delivery.

It was the sort of balance between substance and manner that we expect—but do not always get—from artists of much greater reputation than Miss Posselt's. On the mechanical side the performance of last night wanted little. The intonation was usually exact; the passage-work clear and, when occasion demanded, brilliant. The quality of tone was eminently satisfactory. If it had not quite the brilliance it attained when Miss Posselt played the Tchaikovsky Concerto, it had, for more than compensation, no rough edges and a less saccharine taste.

* * *

Deservedly Miss Posselt was accorded, after the performance, a great demonstration of applause on the part of the audience that filled most of the seats in the hall. This audience, somewhat smaller (because of late-comers) and more apathetic, had previously listened to workmanlike performances of the Mozart Overture and the Beethoven Symphony. The use of "workmanlike" is intended with no disrespect for the players or Arthur Fiedler, because the straightforward presentation of the Symphony had virtues that are frequently missing from more pretentious, "inspired" performances. One can say, for example, that Mr. Fiedler's beat is metronomic and monotonous; or, more sympathetically (as the present writer prefers in this instance), that he sustains the tempo admirably.

I could not find so much to commend in the rendering of the excerpts from "Porgy and Bess." The difficulty came not so much in the playing of the orchestra, which was acceptable enough for the circumstances, as in Mr. Fiedler's tempos and general conceptions of many of the selections. There is a good deal more in the music than was released last night; to this, anyone who heard the performances under Alexander Smallens, conducting a far inferior orchestra, can testify.

* * *

In the music from "Porgy and Bess" Mr. Fiedler was not handicapped (that is the word), as he was in the extra number that followed it, 'Strike up the Band," by a symphony orchestra attempting to imitate a jazz band. The instrumentation of these excerpts from "Porgy and Bess" has presumably been blown up; but not, so far as I could gather, enough to hurt the score in any essential way.

The last two numbers on the program were played by Mr. Fiedler and his men in characteristic fashion. The concert as a whole was one of the most enjoyable, and certainly one of the most interesting, in a long time.

Trans June 2

missed.

Other Recordings

Apropos the March from "Aida," likewise played by the Pops Orchestra and mentioned in these columns last week, Victor has included it also in a new album, containing excerpts from that opera (Set M-303). The set makes no pretence to being either complete or continuous; but in four twelve-inch and two ten-inch records quite a good deal of that operatic masterpiece has been encompassed. There are some remarkable performers on these records, culled from the Victor catalogue. Caruso himself sings Rhadames on one of them (new orchestration having been "grafted" on the original pressing). Martinelli also tries his hand—or rather his voice—at the part. There are no less than three Aidas, each magnificent—Rosa Ponselle, Dusolina Giannini and Elisabeth Rethberg. The recording and some of the performing is of varying quality, but the set as a whole is very much worth while for those who go in for collections of this sort.

Today's item from the Pops repertory, newly released on Victor records (11919-11920): Mendelssohn's Overture, "A Midsummer Night's Dream" with (on the fourth side) the Wedding March. Both are well played by the Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, and well recorded by Victor. The second side of the Overture recording sounds with especial clarity and brilliance.

M. S.

As a souvenir of the second annual meeting of the friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, these subscribers to the orchestra's deficit have been presented with a brochure containing, in somewhat condensed form, the remarks made on that occasion by Olin Downes, critic of the New York Times. As a record of Mr. Downes' youthful enthusiasms over the orchestra plus a mature reflection on its excellences, and as an eloquent tribute to the abilities of Philip Hale as editor of the orchestra's programme books and as critic, Mr. Downes' address was worth preserving.

Post May 27

Concert Champetre

The Lady in White

To her all things are beautiful and right:
Lanterns, music, fountains and the trees;
The conductor's coat, the flute, the harp, the night,
"Tristan," "Petroushka," and the Russian bumble-bees,
But more than all, the new wave in her hair—
The golden locks replacing silver there.

L'Apres-Midi D'Un Faune

Throughout one afternoon he wooed a private dream
Of limpid water lapping languid flesh and grass.
On the ebb and flow of the music's fluent stream,
From one profoundly in a stein, as antiphon
That fell across the warp like breaking glass,
Rang the sardonic laughter of another faun.

Entr'acte

The musicians smoke insouciant cigarettes,
Eyes squinted with defense and rarefied ennui.
Believing all in feminine attire coquettes,
They leer with adipose cupidity,
As connoisseurs of cameo and jade
Longing to possess a miracle displayed.

Young Werther and the Liebestod

He crushes in his hands the pallid flower
Of his face, and dreams of passion and of death,
And yearns to fall on reverential knees, and cower
Beneath compassionate and sweetly fragrant breath—
Yet needs, above all Iseults and lone tears,
One skilled Delilah armed with common sense and shears.

The Conservative

To the pedigreed marrow of her brittle bones,
She loathes her music peppered with modern spices—
The vulgar noise of drums and xylophones.
For her rococo elegance suffices,
And she would gladly find herself at home again,
Save for the nearby table of cakes and tempting ices,
And James who will not call for her till ten.

The Exquisites

They suffer through the overture
In fretful contemplation of trim nails,
Then sink in ecstasy when pure
And limpid Mozart patters on the night.
The gathering tide of Wagner's passion fails
To hold them. For Stravinsky's carnival they stay, Then loudly fold their program books,
and loudly steal away.

TRISTRAM LIVINGSTONE

Trans June 1 36

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 26 1936

7/p

CRITIC TO LECTURE AT BERKSHIRE FETE

Olin Downes to Take Part With Koussevitzky And Orchestra

Stockbridge, Mass.—Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire Hills, Aug. 13, 15, and 16.

Mr. Downes will give a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to b played at the Festival by the Bost Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitsky's baton at the Berksh Playhouse. The public is invited.

Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, forme ly of Hartford, Conn., will assist wit illustrations at the piano.

The subscription campaign for Berkshire's outstanding musical event, a non-profit-making venture, opens the first of next month. Already there has been a tremendous response. The Festival has nearly 1000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons.

Among the outstanding supporters

CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 26 1936

Other Adams News On Next Page

Plans Advanced for Symphonic Festival

Mrs. James E. Cashin, a member of the Adams committee for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, attended a meeting of the festival committee held yesterday afternoon at the Riggs Foundation Shop in Stockbridge.

During the session plans were announced for the third annual festival which will be held on August 13th, 15th, and 16th at Stockbridge with the Boston Symphony orchestra of Boston under the conductorship of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as the featured musical unit.

One of the features of this year's festival program will be the appearance of Olin Downes, musical critic of the New York Times, who will explain each of the numbers which will be presented during the concert series.

Tickets for the festival may be secured in Adams from Mrs. Cashin and Mrs. Theodore R. Plunkett who is also a member of the festival committee.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 25 1936

Olin Downes, New York Times Music Critic, To Lecture In Stockbridge During Festival

Olin Downes, well-known music critic of the New York Times will be with his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 13, 15 and 16. Mr. Downes will give a series of three lectures on the principal symphonies to be played at the Festival.

This announcement was made today at a meeting of sub-chairmen held at the Riggs Foundation. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, a trustee of the Festival, will assist with illustrations.

"The coming of Mr. Downes will mean much to every music lover in this region and those who come from afar to enjoy our Festival," said Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, of New York and Lenox, who is acting president in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

Lectures for Public

There will be a minimum fee and the public will be invited to attend the lectures which will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

It was also announced this afternoon that an intensive campaign will be made the first two or three weeks next month for subscriptions so that the financial success of the event will be assured. Already nearly 1000 persons have become sustaining members while 71 have become patrons (boxholders). If the concerts were held tomorrow, there would be an assured audience of nearly 2000. Interest has become widespread through publicity sent out by the Festival. Inquiries have come from a score of States and many memberships have been taken by residents of New York and Boston.

Now in Europe

Dr. Koussevitzky is now in Europe to enjoy a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July.

George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, will be in the Berkshires to discuss arrangements for housing the orchestra and other details.

Persons wishing subscriptions may contact their local chairmen or communicate with the office in Stockbridge.

Reserved seats are available this year for the first time and a slight additional cost.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 26 1936

MUSIC CRITIC TO GIVE LECTURES

At Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August

AT STOCKBRIDGE

Olin Downes of the New York Times Listed for Three Talks on Symphonies.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Stockbridge, Aug. 13, 15, and 16.

Mr. Downes will give a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to be played at the Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse. The public is invited.

This was the announcement made to the community chairman from three states assembled in Stockbridge yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Bruce Crane, of Dalton, formerly of Hartford, Ct., will assist with illustrations at the piano.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now in Europe enjoying a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July.

"We are delighted to be able to bring such an outstanding attraction as the great Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra to the Berkshires," said Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, acting President of the Festival in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. "We are sure that Mr. Downes' coming will add immeasurably to the attraction."

The subscription campaign for Berkshire's outstanding musical event, a non-profit-making venture, opens the first of next month. Already there has been a tremendous response. The festival has nearly 1,000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons, according to the Treasurer, John C. Lynch, former vice president of the New York Telephone company.

The chairman for North Adams and vicinity is Mrs. Thomas E. Dooley.

Among the outstanding supporters of the plan to make the Berkshires the summer musical center of America are: Albert Spalding, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthrop and Mrs. W. Murray Crane.

The symphonies on the program are: Beethoven's 7th, Sibelius' 2nd, Brahms' 2nd, Mendelssohn's "Ital-

---

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Independent Telegram

MAY 26 1936

Olin Downes, famous music critic, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic festival between Lenox and Stockbridge August 13, 15 and 16. He will give a series of three lectures devoted to five symphonies to be played at th festival by the Boston orchestra.

The orchestra's programs are: firs Chorale of Bach, Beethoven's "Ove ture to Egmont," Beethoven's Sev enth Symphony and the Secon Symphony of Sibelius; second, Rimsky-Korsakov's overture, "The Russian Easter," the prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina," Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," the second suite from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe," and the second symphony of Brahms; third, Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony; Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony and the preludes to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger."

The subscription campaign for the festival, a non-profit making venture, opens June. The musical event has nearly 1000 members from a score of states and 71 patrons. Among its outstanding supporters are: Albert Spalding, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. Murray Crane and a host of others.

The chairman of the subscription campaign for this vicinity is Miss Dorothy Bement of Northampton.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now enjoying a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July to prepare for another full music season, beginning with the Berkshire festival.

The Boston Symphony will figure prominently in the tercentenary activities of Harvard university in September, giving two concerts in Symphony hall, Boston, on September 16 and 17, and another in Sanders theater, Cambridge, on September 17, as part of the celebration. The Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral society will join the orchestra in the third concert. The 56th season of the orchestra will open in Symphony hall on October 9, under Dr. Koussevitzky's conductorship.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

MAY 26 1936

WNES TO SPEAK AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

c Critic Will Join His Old Friend, Dr. Koussevitzky, at Stockbridge

Stockbridge, May 26 — Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic festival between Leno and Stockbridge in the Berkshire Hills Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

Mr. Downes will gives a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to be played at the festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire playhouse. The public is invited.

This was the announcement made to community chairmen from three states assembled in Stockbridge this afternoon. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, formerly of Hartford, Conn., will assist with illustrations at the piano.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now in Europe enjoying a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July.

"We are delighted to be able to bring such an outstanding attraction as the great Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra to the Berkshires," said Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, acting president of the festival in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. "We are sure that Mr. Downes' coming will add immeasurably to the attraction."

The subscription campaign for Berkshire's outstanding musical event, a non-profit making venture opens the first of next month. Already there has been a tremendous response. The festival has nearly 1000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons, according to the treasurer, John C. Lynch, former vice president of the New York Telephone company.

The chairman for Northampton and vicinity is Miss Dorothy Bement. Among the outstanding supporters of the plan to make the Berkshires the summer musical center of America are: Albert

Sidney Howard, Miss. Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. W. Murray Crane and a host of others.

The Symphonies on the program are: Beethoven's 7th, Sibelius' 2nd, Brahms' 2nd, Mendelssohn's "Ietlian" and Tschaikowsky's 5th.

Detailed information may be obtained by addressing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMERICAN

MAY 26 1936

The Loudspeaker

Boston Band Gives Lesson to Radio's Musicians in How to Play "Blue Danube"

By Louis Reid

Armchair Impressions: I trust radio's busy bandmen, who all too carelessly find a regular place on their music racks for "The Blue Danube," were listening to the Boston Symphony's "pop" concert. If so, they received a lesson in how the daddy of all waltzes should be played.

Rep. Virginia E. Jenckes.

Here was the waltz for the first time this year in all its zestful spirit, its ingratiating melodic charm, its hauntingly insistent suggestion that youth and time are fleeting and you'd better seize the day ...There was no slurring over of various phrases. Respect was given the composer's finely measured accents. Old Johann is resting easier in his grave today. He had been having quite a turbulent time of it of late.

* * *

It was the kind of playing that halts conversation, bridge-bidding, newspaper-rattling...For beneath the infectious lilt of "The Blue Danube" there's an inescapable wistful sadness, evoking the faded picture of a gay and glamorous civilization. Not only is the old Vienna gone, but those who, like its music, were once young and charming and full of the joy of living.

* * *

The Boston band also focussed its attention upon old America. It dusted off one of the best of the hoedowns, gave new and uncommonly rich and hearty expression to "The Arkansas Traveler"...For those despairing of our growing effeteness, of our standardization, of the pasing of the oldtime ruggedness of soil and personality, here's a musical dish made to order.

As played by Arthur Fiedler and his Boston [illegible]men, it is guaranteed to restore something of the old [illegible] in youthful, pioneering America before we had pulled ourselves up by the bootstraps to the troublesome position of a world power.

* * *

The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have preserved in an attractive pamphlet the interesting speech made by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times and formerly of Boston, about the late Philip Hale, editor for a generation of the Symphony program notes. Mr Downes delivered his address at the second annual meeting of the Friends, in Symphony Hall, April 8.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 26 1936 7/4

CRITIC TO LECTURE AT BERKSHIRE FETE

Olin Downes to Take Part With Koussevitzky And Orchestra

Stockbridge, Mass.—Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire Hills, Aug. 13, 15, and 16.

Mr. Downes will give a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to b played at the Festival by the Bost Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitsky's baton at the Berksh Playhouse. The public is invited.

Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, forme ly of Hartford, Conn., will assist wit illustrations at the piano.

The subscription campaign for Berkshire's outstanding musical event, a non-profit-making venture, opens the first of next month. Already there has been a tremendous response. The Festival has nearly 1000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons.

Among the outstanding supporters

LIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 26 1936

Other Adams News On Next Page

Plans Advanced for Symphonic Festival

Mrs. James E. Cashin, a member of the Adams committee for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, attended a meeting of the festival committee held yesterday afternoon at the Riggs Foundation Shop in Stockbridge.

During the session plans were announced for the third annual festival which will be held on August 13th, 15th, and 16th at Stockbridge with the Boston Symphony orchestra of Boston under the conductorship of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as the featured musical unit.

One of the features of this year's festival program will be the appearance of Olin Downes, musical critic of the New York Times, who will explain each of the numbers which will be presented during the concert series.

Tickets for the festival may be secured in Adams from Mrs. Cashin and Mrs. Theodore R. Plunkett who is also a member of the festival committee.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 25 1936

Olin Downes, New York Times Music Critic, To Lecture In Stockbridge During Festival

Olin Downes, well-known music critic of the New York Times will be with his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 13, 15 and 16. Mr. Downes will give a series of three lectures on the principal symphonies to be played at the Festival.

This announcement was made today at a meeting of sub-chairmen held at the Riggs Foundation. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, a trustee of the Festival, will assist with illustrations.

"The coming of Mr. Downes will mean much to every music lover in this region and those who come from afar to enjoy our Festival," said Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, of New York and Lenox, who is acting president in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

Lectures for Public

There will be a minimum fee and the public will be invited to attend the lectures which will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

It was also announced this afternoon that an intensive campaign will be made the first two or three weeks next month for subscriptions so that the financial success of the event will be assured. Already nearly 1000 persons have become sustaining members while 71 have become patrons (boxholders). If the concerts were held tomorrow, there would be an assured audience of nearly 2000. Interest has become widespread through publicity sent out by the Festival. Inquiries have come from a score of States and many memberships have been taken by residents of New York and Boston.

Now in Europe

Dr. Koussevitzky is now in Europe to enjoy a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July.

George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, will be in the Berkshires to discuss arrangements for housing the orchestra and other details.

Persons wishing subscriptions may contact their local chairmen or communicate with the office in Stockbridge.

Reserved seats are available this year for the first time and a slight additional cost.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 26 1936

MUSIC CRITIC TO GIVE LECTURES

At Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August

AT STOCKBRIDGE

Olin Downes of the New York Times Listed for Three Talks on Symphonies.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitszky, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Stockbridge, Aug. 13, 15, and 16.

Mr. Downes will give a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to be played at the Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse. The public is invited.

This was the announcement made to the community chairman from three states assembled in Stockbridge yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Bruce Crane, of Dalton, formerly of Hartford, Ct., will assist with illustrations at the piano.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now in Europe enjoying a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July.

"We are delighted to be able to bring such an outstanding attraction as the great Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra to the Berkshires," said Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, acting President of the Festival in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. "We are sure that Mr. Downes' coming will add immeasurably to the attraction."

The subscription campaign for Berkshire's outstanding musical event, a non-profit-making venture, opens the first of next month. Already there has been a tremendous response. The festival has nearly 1,000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons, according to the Treasurer, John C. Lynch, former vice president of the New York Telephone company.

The chairman for North Adams and vicinity is Mrs. Thomas E. Dooley.

Among the outstanding supporters of the plan to make the Berkshires the summer musical center of America are: Albert Spalding, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthrop and Mrs. W. Murray Crane.

The symphonies on the program are: Beethoven's 7th, Sibelius' 2nd, Brahms' 2nd, Mendelssohn's "Ital-

---

HOLYOKE, M
Independent Te

MA 26 19

Olin Downes, famous mus will join his old friend, Di Koussevitzky, conductor of t ton Symphony orchestra, Berkshire Symphonic festiv tween Lenox and Stockbridg ust 13, 15 and 16. He will series of three lectures devo five symphonies to be played at th festival by the Boston orchestra.

The orchestra's programs are: firs Chorale of Bach, Beethoven's "Ovei ture to Egmont," Beethoven's Sev enth Symphony and the Secon Symphony of Sibelius; second, Rim sky-Korsakov's overture, "The Rus sian Easter," the prelude to Mous sorgsky's "Khovanstchina," Debus sy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," the second suite from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe," and the second symphony of Brahms; third, Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony; Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony and the preludes to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger."

The subscription campaign for the festival, a non-profit making venture, opens June. The musical event has nearly 1000 members from a score of states and 71 patrons. Among its outstanding supporters are: Albert Spalding, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. Murray Crane and a host of others.

The chairman of the subscription campaign for this vicinity is Miss Dorothy Bement of Northampton.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now enjoying a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July to prepare for another full music season, beginning with the Berkshire festival.

The Boston Symphony will figure prominently in the tercentenary activities of Harvard university in September, giving two concerts in Symphony hall, Boston, on September 16 and 17, and another in Sanders theater, Cambridge, on September 17, as part of the celebration. The Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral society will join the orchestra in the third concert. The 56th season of the orchestra will open in Symphony hall on October 9, under Dr. Koussevitzky's conductorship.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

MAY 26 1936

DOWNES TO SPEAK AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Music Critic Will Join His Old Friend, Dr. Koussevitzky, at Stockbridge

Stockbridge, May 26 — Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic festival between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire Hills Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

Mr. Downes will gives a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to be played at the festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire playhouse. The public is invited.

This was the announcement made to community chairmen from three states assembled in Stockbridge this afternoon. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, formerly of Hartford, Conn., will assist with illustrations at the piano.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now in Europe enjoying a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July.

"We are delighted to be able to bring such an outstanding attraction as the great Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra to the Berkshires," said Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, acting president of the festival in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. "We are sure that Mr. Downes' coming will add immeasurably to the attraction."

The subscription campaign for Berkshire's outstanding musical event, a non-profit making venture opens the first of next month. Already there has been a tremendous response. The festival has nearly 1000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons, according to the treasurer, John C. Lynch, former vice president of the New York Telephone company.

The chairman for Northampton and vicinity is Miss Dorothy Bement. Among the outstanding supporters of the plan to make the Berkshires the summer musical center of America are: Albert

Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. W. Murray Crane and a host of others.

The Symphonies on the program are: Beethoven's 7th, Sibelius' 2nd, Brahms' 2nd, Mendelssohn's "Ietlian" and Tschaikowsky's 5th.

Detailed information may be obtained by addressing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc.,

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMERICAN

AY 25 193

The Loudspeaker

Boston Band Gives Lesson to Radio's Musicians in How to Play "Blue Danube"

By Louis Reid

Armchair Impressions: I trust radio's busy bandmen, who all too carelessly find a regular place on their music racks for "The Blue Danube," were listening to the Boston Symphony's "pop" concert. If so, they received a lesson in how the daddy of all waltzes should be played.

Rep. Virginia E. Jenckes.

Here was the waltz for the first time this year in all its zestful spirit, its ingratiating melodic charm, its hauntingly insistent suggestion that youth and time are fleeting and you'd better seize the day ...There was no slurring over of various phrases. Respect was given the composer's finely measured accents. Old Johann is resting easier in his grave today. He had been having quite a turbulent time of it of late.

* * *

It was the kind of playing that halts conversation, bridge-bidding, newspaper-rattling...For beneath the infectious lilt of "The Blue Danube" there's an inescapable wistful sadness, evoking the faded picture of a gay and glamorous civilization. Not only is the old Vienna gone, but those who, like its music, were once young and charming and full of the joy of living.

* * *

The Boston band also focussed its attention upon old America. It dusted off one of the best of the hoedowns, gave new and uncommonly rich and hearty expression to "The Arkansas Traveler"...For those despairing of our growing effeteness, of our standardization, of the pasing of the oldtime ruggedness of soil and personality, here's a musical dish made to order.

As played by Arthur Fiedler and his Boston [illegible], it is guaranteed to restore something of the old [illegible] in youthful, pioneering America before we had pulled ourselves up by the bootstraps to the troublesome position of a world power.

* * *

The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have preserved in an attractive pamphlet the interesting speech made by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times and formerly of Boston, about the late Philip Hale, editor for a generation of the Symphony program notes. Mr Downes delivered his address at the second annual meeting of the Friends, in Symphony Hall, April 8.

BOSTON ART CLUB JURY FOR POPS DISPLAY

"Revere Beach," by Donald Gordon Squier, accepted by well-known local painters for inclusion in the exhibition at Symphony Hall to be inaugurated Monday at the Boston Art Club night at the Pops. Left to right (seated) F. John Hilliard, Margaret Fitzhugh Browne, Gertrude Tonsberg; (standing) Carroll Bill, Arthur F. Musgrave, Dorothea Helt, curator of the club galleries, and Lester G. Hornby.

Post May 30

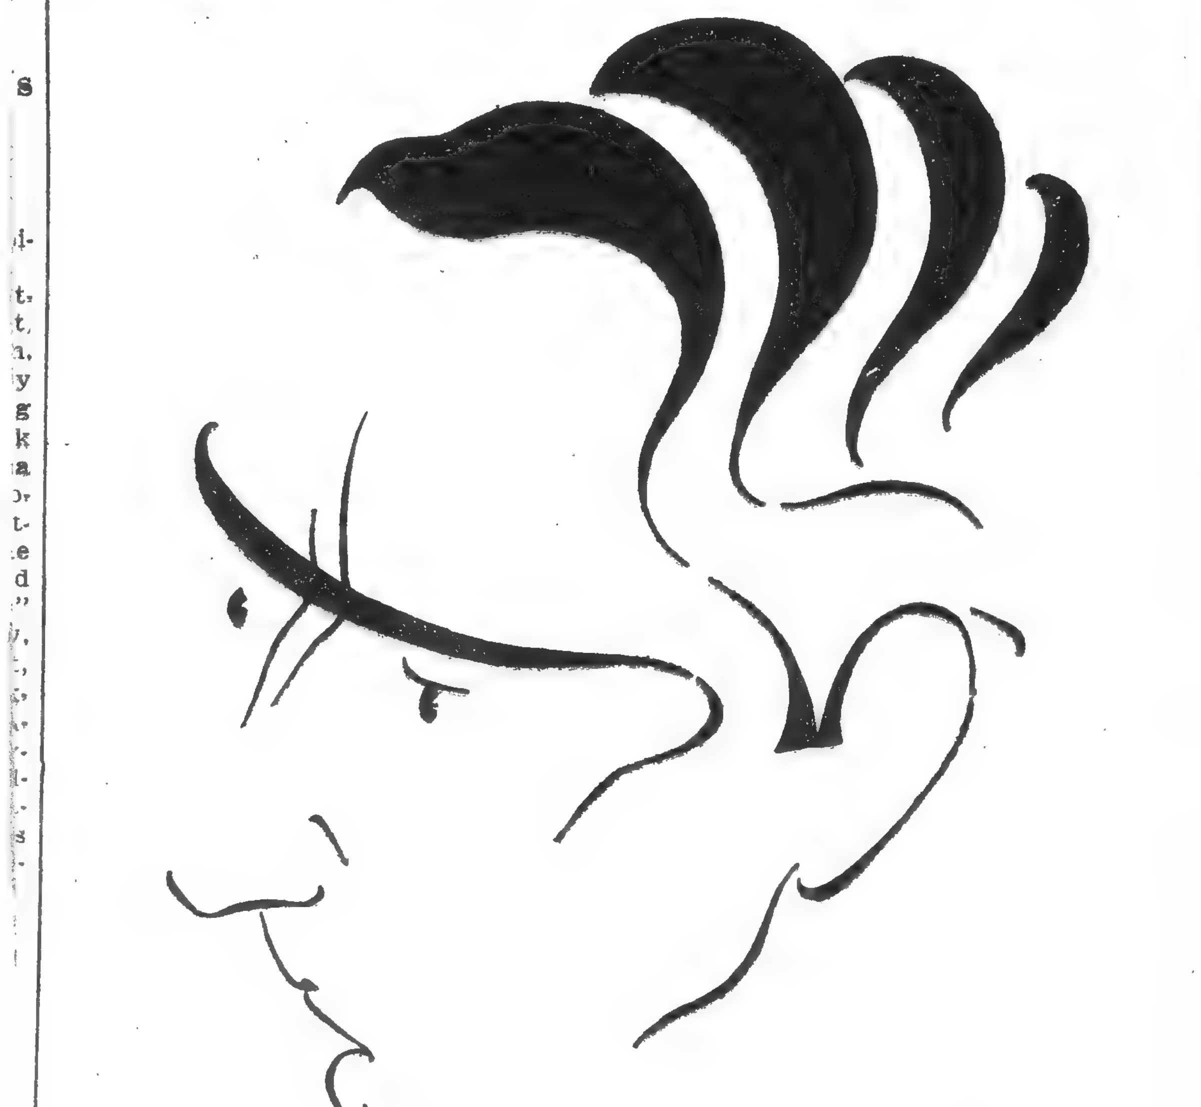
---

9 6 36

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURD

ans --- Plays and Pl

Caprice Espagnole



Jesus Maria Sanroma

Soloist at the Pops Tomorrow Evening in "Rhapsody in Blue," and Again on Tuesday in MacDowell's Second Piano Concerto.

R

---

the fact remaii

Concerts of the Week

SIXTH WEEK OF POPS

SUNDAY EVENING, JUNE 7 (REQUEST NIGHT)

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango	Gade
"Peer Gynt," Suite	Grieg
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes	Strauss
Largo from "Xerxes"	Handel
Bolero	Ravel
Rhapsody in Blue (Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma)	Gershwin
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn	Valerius
Pomp and Circumstance	Elgar
Encores:
"The Flight of the Bumble Bee,"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Mosquito Dance	White
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana,"	Mascagni
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin,"	Wagner

TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 9

March, "High School Cadets"	Sousa
Overture to "Martha"	Flotow
Intermezzo from "Goyescas"	Granados
Capriccio Espagnol	Rimsky-Korsakov
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"	Wagner
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor	MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Selection, "Roberta"	Kern
"Dubinushka," Russian Song	Arranged by Jacchia
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saens

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 10

"Procession of the Sardar," from the "Caucasian Sketches"	Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn
Rachem	Manna-Zucca-Jacchia
Fantasia, "Aida"	Verdi
"Unfinished" Symphony, First Movement	Schubert
Meditation from "Thais"	Massenet
Violin solo: Julius Thedorowicz
Bolero	Ravel
Victor Herbert Favorites	Arranged by Sanford
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite	Grofe
First Hungarion Dance	Brahms

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 11

Marche Militaire	Schubert
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Ride of the Valkyrie	Wagner
Tufts Songs (with Orchestra)
Soviet Iron Works	Mossolov
Bolero	Ravel
Tufts Songs (with Orchestra)
"Du und Du," Waltzes from "Die Fledermaus"	Strauss
"Night and Day"	Porter
"We Saw the Sea," from "Follow the Fleet"	Berlin

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 12

Triumphal March from "Aida"	Verdi
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman,"	Wagner
Serenade for Strings	Volkman
Selection, "Iolanthe"	Sullivan
Suite from "The Cid"	Massenet
Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra (Soloist: Ruth Culbertson)	Franck
"Tales From the Vienna Woods," Waltzes	Strauss
"Play, Gypsies; Dance, Gypsies," from "Countess Maritza"	Kalman
Farandole from "L'Arlesienne"	Bizet

SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 13

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or,"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Variations on the Austrian National Anthem	Haydn
Third Slavonic Dance	Dvorak
Fourth Symphony in F minor—Finale	Tchaikovsky
New England Federated Men's Glee Clubs
Bacchanale from "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Evening Song (for string orchestra)	Schumann

MUSIC AND

Request Program Tonight at Symphony Hall Pops

With the annual Request Night tonight (the last Sunday concert of the season), the Pops at Symphony Hall will begin their sixth week. Tomorrow by exception will not be open to the public, the concert having been taken over by the Alumni of M. I. T.

On Tuesday Jesus Maria Sanroma will repeat the Second Piano Concerto of MacDowell which, revived earlier in the season, met with such great success. Friday there will be another soloist of reputation, the pianist Ruth Culbertson, who will appear with the Pops Orchestra in Cesar Franck's Symphonic Variations.

The programs of the week follow:

TONIGHT, REQUEST PROGRAM. Prelude to "Carmen," Bizet; overture to "William Tell," Rossini; "Jealousy," Gypsy Tango, Gade; "Peer Gynt," suite, Grieg; "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes, Strauss; Largo from "Xerxes," Handel; Bolero, Ravel; Rhapsody in Blue, Gershwin; soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma; Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch hymn, Valerius; Pomp and Circumstance, Elgar; encores, "The Flight of the Bumble Bee," Rimsky-Korsakov; Mosquito Dance, White; Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner.

TUESDAY, March, "High School Cadets," Sousa; overture to "Martha," Flotow; intermezzo from "Goyescas," Granados; Capriccio Espagnol, Rimsky-Korsakov; prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner; Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor, MacDowell; soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma; selection, "Roberta," Kern; "Dubinushka," Russian song, arranged by Jacchia; Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens.

WEDNESDAY. "Procession of the Sardar," from the "Caucasian Sketches," Ippolitov-Ivanov; Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; Rachem, Manna-Zucca-Jacchia; Fantasia, "Aida," Verdi; "Unfinished" Symphony, First Movement, Schubert; Meditation from "Thais," Massenet; violin solo: Julius Theodorowicz; Bolero, Ravel; Victor Herbert favorites arranged by Sanford; "On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite, Grofe; First Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

THURSDAY. Marche Militaire, Schubert; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Ride of the Valkyrie, Wagner; Tufts Songs with Orchestra; Soviet Iron Works, Mossolov; Bolero, Ravel: Tufts Songs with Orchestra; "Du und Du," waltzes from "Die Fledermaus," Strauss; "Night and Day," Porter; "We Saw the Sea," from "Follow the Fleet," Berlin.

FRIDAY. Triumphal March from "Aida", Verdi; Overture to "The Flying Dutchman", Wagner; Serenade for Strings, Volkmann; Selection, "Iolanthe", Sullivan; Suite from "The Cid", Massenet; Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra, Franck, Soloist: Ruth Culbertson; "Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes, Strauss; "Play Gypsies, Dance Gypsies", from "Countess Maritza", Kalman; Farandole from "L'Arlesienne", Bizet.

SATURDAY. Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or", Rimsky-Korsakov; Overture to "Mignon", Thomas; Variations on the Austrian National Anthem, Haydn; Third Slavonic Dance, Dvorak; Fourth Symphony in F Minor—Finale, Tschaikovsky; New England Federated Men's Glee Clubs; Bacchanale from "Tannhauser", Wagner; Evening Song (for String Orchestra), Schumann.

Concert Calendar

Trans

At the Pops—Nightly as well as on Sunday at Symphony Hall, programs of music light and occasionally serious, furnished by at least eighty-five members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Arthur Fiedler conducting. Refreshments, alcoholic and otherwise, may be enjoyed during the concert by those seated at the tables on the floor, and by all and sundry at the refreshment bar in the rear of the first balcony. Smoking and discreet conversation may be indulged in.

At tomorrow evening's concert the annual request program will be played, with Jesus Maria Sanroma, of course, as soloist in George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." The concert of Monday evening has been taken over by M. I. T. Alumni and will not be open to the public. On Tuesday Mr. Sanroma will again be soloist, repeating the MacDowell Second Piano Concerto, which he played a few weeks ago. On Friday Ruth Culbertson, local pianist, will be the soloist in Franck's Symphonic Variations.

The programs for tonight and tomorrow night appear elsewhere in these columns. The programs for the rest of the week follow:

Tuesday Evening, June 9

March, "High School Cadets"	Sousa
Overture to "Martha"	Flotow
Intermezzo from "Goyescas"	Granados
Capriccio Espagnol	Rimsky-Korsakov
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg"	Wagner
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor	MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Selection, "Roberta"	Kern
"Dubinushka," Russian Song	Arr. by Jacchia
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saëns

Wednesday Evening

Procession of the Sardar, from the "Caucasian Sketches	Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn
Rachem	Manna-Zucca-Jacchia
Fantasia, "Aida"	Verdi
"Unfinished" Symphony, First Movement	Schubert
Meditation from "Thais"	Massenet
Violin Solo: Julius Theodorowicz
Bolero	Ravel
Victor Herbert Favorites	Arranged by Sanford
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite	Grofe
First Hungarian Dance	Brahms

Thursday Evening

Marche Militaire	Schubert
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Tufts Songs with Orchestra
Soviet Iron Works	Mossolov
Bolero	Ravel
Tufts Songs with Orchetsra
"Du und Du," Waltzes from "Die Fledermaus"	Strauss
"Night and Day"	Porter
"We Saw the Sea," from "Follow the Fleet"	Berlin

Friday Evening

Triumphal March from "Aida"	Verdi
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
Serenade for Strings	Volkmann
Selection, "Iolanthe"	Sullivan
Suite from "The Cid"	Massenet
Symphonic Variations for piano and orchestra	Franck
Soloist: Ruth Culbertson
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes	Strauss
"Play Gypsies, Dance Gypsies," from "Countess Maritza"	Kalman
Farandole from "L'Arlesienne"	Bizet

Saturday Evening

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Variations on the Austrian National Anthem	Haydn
Third Slavonic Dance	Dvorak
Fourth Symphony in F minor—Finale	Tchaikovsky
New England Federated Men's Glee Clubs
Bacchanale from "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Evening Song (for String Orchestra)	Schumann

Trans June 6

Art Club Show at Pops Features Local Talent

In addition to the work being shown at the Boston Art Club, previously reviewed in these pages, members of that organization are represented in an exhibition of oils and water colors in the foyer of Symphony Hall during the Pops concerts. There are extreme contrasts in quality, in techniques, in subject matter, assembled here, demonstrating a wide variety of talent in the organization, as well as indicating that a broad-minded jury is responsible for the limited selection.

Margaret Fitzhugh Browne has contributed an originally composed portrait of a boy against a background of headlands and deep blue sea, which she calls "The Horizon." Donald Gordon Squier's "Revere Beach" portrays crowded activity on the sand with deft, realistic strokes.

The inevitable flower subject receives refreshing modern treatment in Bessy Leighton's "Lotus" and V. Helen Anderson's "Sunflowers and Leaves." Lester Hornby's "The Watering Place" has an elusive atmospheric appeal, as does "Moment Musical" by Frank C. Kirk in an entirely different subject.

In the portrait group, John Hilliard's "Mrs. Clarence Brier" shows excellent academic treatment. Of interest to symphony-goers are Martha Powell Setchell's "Impression of Ludwig Juht," a caricature study in blue and brown; J. G. Rosenberg's stark portrait of Irving Frankel; and Robert Horrigan's smoothly wrought concept of Leslie Rogers, orchestra librarian. Frances Kerr Bosworth is represented with the Modigliani-like head of "Sybil."

A water color by Margaret R. Grimes, "Brahms Third Hungarian Dance," is full of grace and gayety achieved with economy of drawing. The exhibition will continue through June 13.

Pops' Public Likes Very Loud or Very Soft Music

Post Jun 7

Informal snapshot of Conductor Arthur Fiedler making up a Pops programme.

(Continued from Page A-1)

While Mr. Fiedler excused himself for a programme-making conference with Librarian Rogers, the reporter chewed over the data on "what it takes" to make a piece an enduring favorite with Pops-goers. He also noted with great interest the care with which the conductor arranged each programme so as to provide something for various tastes in each audience; so as to give consideration to requests; and so as to bring to the fore various qualities of the Boston Symphony players. When there was a pause in the conference, the reporter asked:

"On the whole, do the request numbers indicate that the public at large hasn't very much musical discrimination?"

"Oh, no!" Mr. Fiedler said incisively. "From the spontaneous reactions of my audiences to numbers that I know are unfamiliar or unknown to many listeners, it is plain that they have a high average of general musical appreciation. Only, every so often they do enjoy an orgy of listening to compositions very familiar to them. It's the same case as with a man who can enjoy a wide variety of table delicacies, but every so often likes nothing better than corned beef and cabbage.

"Although the most popular request numbers may be sniffed at snobbishly by musical sophisticates, all in all they possess various high artistic merits. An interesting fact is that despite the general marks of similarity which I have pointed out, the favorites have certain individual qualities. These probably impress many listeners, without their being able to offer an explanation.

What Underlies Appeal

"In the 'Morning Mood' section of the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, what makes a special impression on the ear is the tones of oboe, flute, clarinet and bassoon. In the Introduction to the third act of 'Lohengrin,' it is French horns playing in unison with the trombones. In the Prelude to 'Carmen,' there are sparkling tone colors and sprightly modulations, for which Bizet was famous. The brass bass, or bass tuba, is what helps Tchaikovsky to register that tremendously impressive effect in the '1812' Overture, when the Czar's Hymn comes thundering out.

"In Handel's 'Largo' and the 'Prayer of Thanksgiving' of Valerius, you have examples of melody lines that have the perfect balance and proportion of a noble piece of architecture.

"'By the Beautiful Danube' isn't merely a catchy waltz. It's a beautiful job of orchestral writing. In it, Johann Strauss, Jr., makes the various instruments fairly dance and sing. Anyone admiring that composition is in very good company—along with Brahms, for example. Here's a story to prove it.

"In Brahms' time, there was a fad for writing sentiments on ladies' fans. On the fan of the wife of Johann Strauss, Jr., Brahms wrote the musical notation of the principal theme of 'By the Beautiful Blue Danube.' Then underneath he wrote: 'Alas, not by Brahms.'

"When it comes to the final analysis as to why certain compositions are perennial Pops favorites, the real reason often is this: What is remembered most strongly is the brilliant playing of the Boston Symphony musicians— collectively, individually, or in the separate sections of instruments. That factor should be added to the others, as to why audiences never tire of certain music. Possibly the composition itself might become tiresome—but the listeners always hear a performance which holds their interest. One indelibly remembers violin, 'cello, horn, flute, oboe, clarinet, trumpet, trombone, harp or piano solo, perhaps, and that recollection becomes attached to the love of a certain composition."

"I Am Still Lafayette"

In the course of [illegible] revolution the Jacobins dismissed [illegible] from the army, declared him an [illegible], and offered a reward for his capture. While attempting to escape to America, he was taken at Liege and was then imprisoned in Germany. When he fell ill in prison, he was offered freedom on condition that he would join in a plot against France. His heroic reply, which brought him long confinement in an Austrian prison, was, "Never! I am still Lafayette."

Pops Public's Choices Very Loud or Very Soft

Conductor Fiedler Has Hard Time Squeezing in All Demanded by Audiences

BY LANING HUMPHREY

The typical rabid baseball fan is no more rabid in his likes and dislikes than the typical Pop Concert listener.

The Pops public want what they want, and leave no doubts about it. By letter, postal card, and even telegram and telephone message, they aim a continuous bombardment of request numbers at Arthur Fiedler, brilliant young conductor of the Pops, in his office, Room A, at Symphony Hall.

And if it is humanly—or orchestrally—possible, Fiedler will see to it that sooner or later just about everybody is able to hear his favorite music, either as a regular listed number on a Pops programme, or as an encore.

For seven summers now, Fiedler has shown an extraordinary ability to satisfy Pops-goers' wishes.

"What are the orchestral numbers the public never tires of—and why? an interviewer asked the conductor. He happened to be opening his request mail.

Almost Fight to Get In!

"What they are is easily answered—and here's the answer," he said, "tearing off the end of a long flier, handing it to the reporter in the same characteristically swift gesture. It was the programme for 'Request Night,' tonight.

"Those 10 numbers and four encores are in such demand," Mr. Fiedler said, "that people will almost fight to get in after all the tickets are sold—and sold they are bound to be, with those selections offered. That's why we are dedicating the programme to the Pension Fund. As to why people insist on those compositions, I can tell you one definite fact:

Either Loud or Soft

"The leading favorites are noisy."

"——And the second-best choices are soft," Leslie Rogers, the Boston Symphony's librarian of music threw in. "If the favorites aren't very loud, they're very soft, and there's nothing in between—eh Arthur?"

"That's right, generally speaking," Fiedler declared. "Now, here are the overtures to 'William Tell,' and to 'Carmen,' the introduction to Act III of 'Lohengrin,' the march, 'Pomp and Circumstances,' and Ravel's 'Bolero.' All are big favorites—and full of sound. Handel's 'Largo,' a hardy perennial among the requests, is mostly soft. So are 'By the Beautiful Blue Danube,' the Intermezzo from 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' the 'Flight of the Bumble Bee,' and a much more recent favorite, the Gypsy Tango, 'Jealousy.'

"The old Dutch hymn, 'Prayer of Thanksgiving,' is constantly being requested. That brings up another point. Pieces that last the longest, I should say as a general rule, contain a slow tune. The Dutch hymn has one, and it's three or four hundred years old. My dad, who is 76, tells me that Handel's 'Largo' created a furore at one of the regular winter concerts of the Boston Symphony, around 52 years ago, just before he joined. Well, that slow tune is about 200 years old and still going strong. There's a dreamy pastoral melody in the 'William Tell' Overture, and that was composed about a century ago. The favorite theme in the 'Blue Danube' is certainly not very fast. Apparently that has helped to keep it as popular today as when it became a hit just after the Civil war. Another slow tune is in Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March, which goes back to the beginning of this century.

More Favorites

"In arranging a request programme, I have to think of artistic considerations as well as popularity of compositions voted for. Otherwise, the programme would run so much in the same direction as to spoil the pleasure of the audience as a whole. It would be like a dinner with a menu consisting of roast beef, roast beef and roast beef; and chocolate eclairs, chocolate eclairs and choclate eclairs. And I insist on arranging even my request programmes with a decent regard for artistic balance and variety.

"On considerations of variety, I've left off of this programme some compositions that are just as big favorites as some of the numbers included. For example, there are Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture, and the Overture to 'Tannhauser.' Both contain any amount of sound, and in both the dominating themes are slow—an adaptation of the Imperial Russian Hymn in the '1812,' and the 'Pilgrim Chorus' in 'Tannhauser.' Other great favorites, but with a soft and slow tendency, are the 'Unfinished' Symphony and the 'Ave Maria' of Schubert, Liszt's 'Liebestraum,' and the Prize Song from 'The Mastersingers of Nuremberg.'

"In the matter of the popularity of music by contemporary composers, interesting things happen. Gershwin's 'Rhapsody in Blue,' which is a more serious work from an artistic point of view than a good many other American hits, has outlasted the others. The 'Wedding of the Painted Doll,' and even the more recent 'Carioca' are not heard from very much in the request ballots."

(Continued on Page A-6

Herald Jun 7

News of the Pops; A

Ruth Culbertson, who will act as soloist at the Pop Concert at Symphony Hall on Friday evening. She will play Cesar Franck's Symphonic Variations with the orchestra.

Last Sunday Pops; Piano Soloists for 6th Week

With the annual Request Night tonight (the last Sunday concert of the season), the Pops at Symphony Hall will begin their sixth week. Arthur Fiedler has made programs of fresh interest for the coming nights. Tomorrow night by exception will not be open to the public, the concert having been taken over by the alumni of M. I. T. On Tuesday, June 9, Jesus Maria Sanroma will repeat the Second Pianoforte Concerto of MacDowell which, revived earlier in the season, met with such great success. On Friday there will be another soloist of outstanding reputation, the pianist, Ruth Culbertson, who will appear with the Pops orchestra in Cesar Franck's Symphonic Variations. The programs of the week follow:

TONIGHT
Request Night

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Jealousy, Gypsy tango	Gade
"Peer Gynt" suite	Grieg
By the Beautiful Blue Danube, waltzes	Strauss
Largo from "Xerxes"	Handel
Bolero	Ravel
Rhapsody in Blue	Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
Prayer of Tranksgiving, old Dutch hymn	Valerius
Pomp and Circumstance	Elgar
Encores:
The Flight of the Bumble Bee	Rimsky-Korsakov
Mosquito Dance	White
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
Introduction act 3, "Lohengrin"	Wagner

Tuesday, June 9

March, High School Cadets	Sousa
Overture to "Martha"	Flotow
Intermezzo from "Goyescas"	Granados
Capriccio Espagnol	Rimsky-Korsakov
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"	Wagner
Pianoforte concerto No. 2 in D [illegible]	[illegible]Dowell
[illegible]	[illegible]roma
Select[illegible]
Dubi[illegible]	Kern
Baccha[illegible] [illegible]song	Arr. by Jacchia
[illegible] "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saens

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 10

"Procession of the Sardar," from the "Caucasian Sketches"	Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn
Rachem	Manna-Zucca-Jacchia
Fantasia, "Aida"	Verdi
"Unfinished" Symphony, First Movement	Schubert
Meditation from "Thais"	Massenet
Violin solo, Julius Theodorowicz
Bolero	Ravel
Victor Herbert Favorites	Arranged by Sanford
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite	Grofe
First Hungarian Dance	Brahms

THURSDAY, JUNE 11

Marche Militaire	Schubert
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Ride of the Valkyrie	Wagner
Tufts Songs with orchestra
Soviet Iron Works	Mossolov
Bolero	Ravel
Tufts Songs with Orchestra
"Du und Du," Waltzes from "Die Fledermaus"	Strauss
"Night and Day"	Porter
"We Saw the Sea," from "Follow the Fleet"	Berlin

Friday, June 12

Triumphal march from "Aida"	Verdi
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
Serenade for Strings	Volkmann
Selection, "Iolanthe"	Sullivan
Suite from "The Cid"	Massenet
Symphonic variations for piano and orchestra	Franck
Soloist—Ruth Culbertson
Tales from the Vienna Woods, waltzes	Strauss
Play Gypsies, Dance Gypsies, from "Countess Maritza"	Kalman
Farandole from "L'Arlesienne"	Bizet

Saturday, June 13

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Variations on the Austrian National Anthem	Haydn
Third Slavonic Dance	Dvorak
Fourth Symphony in F minor—Finale	Tchaikovsky
New England Federated Men's Glee Clubs
Bacchanale from "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Evening Song (for string orchestra)	Schumann

BUNKER HILL COUNCIL CHORAL CLUB AT POPS

Sun. Post 7/36

"Men love to sing," asserted Arthur Fiedler, versatile conductor of the Pops, whose programmes have met with such cordial response by Pops patrons, numbering men in the majority.

In line with Old Timers' night, and the "invitation to sing" accorded the Pops patrons, Bunker Hill Council, among the first of the councils in point of years, responded with many members escorting fair guests.

The council set a precedent in Knights of Columbus social annals by taking over a portion of the floor of Symphony Hall, under the leadership of Grand Knight William J. Monahan, whose able assistant and chairman for Pops was Mr. Cornelius O'Leary.

Under the direction of Mr. William Daley, formerly organist of St. Ann's, Somerville, now at St. Catherine's, the double quartet of the council assisted in pleasing numbers.

At Grand Knight Monahan's table were Mrs. Monahan and his paternal aunt and cousins, Mrs. George Monahan, Eleanor Monahan Shea and Katherine Monahan.

District Deputy James Holland of Charlestown, with Mrs. Holland, Mr. and Mrs. William Daley, Mr. Joseph Duffy, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Donovan, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Donovan.

At a well-placed table for the "Knights Night" at the Pops, were Mr. John A. Winn, with the Misses Anna Maguire and Mary Harrigan, Alfred Maguire of Lowell, Miss Lucy Winn, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen O'Connor, Mr. and Mrs. William Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Chenery, Miss Katherine Dowd.

29

6-D America F

Final Week of 'P

Music Events For the Week

By Ruth Marsters

Music Editor

And still the Pops!

As te season progresses and program succeeds program, the remarkable thing about it all is that while each is necessarily similar to the other—the purpose beng always to entertain—each is nevertheless constructed in such manner as to create fresh enthusiasms.

Which is, of course, not the least of the reasons for Arthur Fiedler's popularity as Pops conductor.

This evening's concert is given for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund.

It is to be Request Night, an annual occurrence, and one that bears testimony to a staunch fidelity on the part of the public towards its favorites which considerably undermines the theory of its alleged fickleness.

* * *

IT IS INDEED hardly necessary to announce again this year that Jesus Maria Sanroma will appear as soloist in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," or that Ravel's "Bolero," Handel's Largo from "Xerxes," Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite, Rossini's Overture to "William Tell," Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" and Strauss' "By the Beautiful Danube" Waltzes are among the chosen selections.

Monday evening's concert will not be open to the public, having been completely taken over by the Alumni of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

On Tuesday evening Jesus Maria Sanroma will again appear as soloist in the Second Pianoforte Concerto of MacDowell which, revived earlier in the season, met with such enthusiastic response.

Ruth Culbertson, another pianist known to Pops audiences, will be the soloist with the orchestra [illegible] a performance of Cesar Franck's [illegible] Variations.

Pops in Seventh Week; Soloists Announced

The Pop concerts in Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, are entering upon the seventh week of their 51st season. Tomorrow will be Boston University Night, and on Tuesday the concert has been taken over entirely by the Harvard Class of 1911. Features of the further programs include the appearance of Dr. Wassili Leps, the conductor of Providence, as guest on the program of Wednesday, which makes a special acknowledgement to the Rhode Island tercentenary. On Thursday, there will be an all-Russian program, with the first performance hereabouts of the ballet suite "The Golden Age," by Shostakovitch. On Friday, Louis Speyer, the celebrated wood-wind virtuoso of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear in a Concertino for Oboe. On Saturday, Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in MacDowell's Second Pianoforte Concerto. The second Old Timers' Night of the season is announced for Monday, June 22.

The programs of the week follow:

MONDAY EVENING, JUNE 15
Boston University Night
TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 16
Harvard class of 1911
WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 17
Rhode Island Forward March .... Raymond Williams
Overture to "Euryanthe" .... Weber
Rondino .... Beethoven-Kreisler
La Valse .... Ravel
Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla" .... Glinka
Arabs .... Hugh F. MacColl
Chamounix Suite .... Florence Barbour
Finale, Fifth Symphony ...... Tchaikovsky
Wassili Leps, Guest Conductor
Selection, "The Fortune Teller" .... Herbert
Malaguena .... Lecuona-Grofe
Indian War Dance .... Skilton
THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 18
Procession of the Sardar..Impolitov-Ivanov
"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia .... Tchaikovsky
"The Music Box" .... Liadov
Soviet Iron Works .... Mossolov
"The Golden Age," Ballet Suite .... Shostakovitch
Dubinushka, Russian Song .... Arranged by Jacchia
Marche Slave .... Tchaikovsky
Waltz of the Flowers, from the ballet, "Nutcracker" .... Tchaikovsky
Prelude in C sharp minor ... Rachmaninoff
"Orgy of the Spirits" from the Oriental Suite, "Noure and Anitra" ... Ilynsky
FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 19
Triumphal march from "Aida" ...... Verdi
Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Kammenoi Ostrow .... Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore" .... Verdi
Concertino No. 2 for oboe and orchestra .... Guilhaud
Soloist: Louis Speyer
Tambourin Chinois .... Kreisler
First Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes .... Strauss
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" suite .... Grofe
"Only One Vienna," march .... Schrammel
SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 20
French Military March .... Saint-Saens
Roumanian Rhapsody .... Enesco
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy" .. Gliere
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor .... MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Polish Dance .... Scharwenka
Andante from the Second Violin Concerto .... Wieniawski
Soloist: Robert Gundersen
Minuet .... Paderewski
"Waves of the Danube," waltzes..Ivanovici
Polonaise in A major.... Chopin-Glazounov

Sanroma Plays the MacDowell Concerto

Jesus Maria Sanroma played the MacDowell Second Piano Concerto with the Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler at last night's concert. He had already played the same work at a Pops concert earlier in the season; and one who was hearing Sanroma freshly in the MacDowell music last night perceived sufficient reason for the enthusiastic reception accorded his performance on the earlier occasion.

It was to be expected that the fleet, facile, brilliant technique of Sanroma would make small work of the engaging—but tricky-to-play-middle movement, a lively scherzo; or the third movement, which has many passages of a similar nature. But the first movement requires much greater warmth and, if the term may be permitted, poetry. It was gratifying to find that Sanroma lacked neither quality last night. The notion that he is not at home in Romantic music of the grand manner had, at least for this occasion, to go by the board.

Mr. Sanroma's finely tempered performance received excellent support from the orchestra under Mr. Fiedler, and made a deep impression on the large audience, which applauded subsequently with considerable vehemence and persistence. The first part of the program consisted of a march by Sousa, Flotow's Overture to "Martha," the Intermezzo from Granados's "Goyescas" and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Spanish" Caprice. Then followed the Wagner "Meistersinger" Prelude and the Concerto. The final group consisted of a selection from "Roberta," "Dubinushka" and the Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" by Saint-Saens. Of course there were numerous extra numbers. The performances were directed by Mr. Fiedler in his familiar vein.

In Prospect

Shostakovitch's Ballet Suite, "The Golden Age," will receive its first performance in Boston at the Pops concert of Thursday evening, June 18, when the program will consist entirely of music by Russians. The following evening Louis Speyer will play the Second Oboe Concerto of Guilhaud, a composer of whom this department professes total ignorance.

Next Monday night will be given over mostly to Boston University; but tickets for the public will be on sale. Tuesday night has been taken over entirely by the Harvard twenty-five year class (1911) and the general public will not be admitted. On Wednesday Wassili Leps, Providence conductor, will direct part of the program as guest. The program will begin with Raymond Williams's "Rhode Island Forward" March and will include, among other items, Hugh F. MacColl's "Arabs" and Florence Barbour's "Chamounix" Suite. The evening will be largely in the nature of a gesture toward the current tercentenary rites of the neighboring State. On Saturday Mr. Sanromá will again essay the MacDowell Second Piano Concerto and Robert Gundersen, violinist in the orchestra, will play the slow movement of Wieniawski's Second Concerto.

News of Music: Special 'Nights' at Boston Pops

By Ruth Marsters

Music Editor

NEWS of music is necessarily largely concerned at this season with news of the Pops—now entering the seventh week of nightly occurence in Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Tomorrow evening will be Boston University Night. The program for this concert, as for Tuesday evening's, which has been entirely taken over by the Harvard Class of 1911, has not been released.

Wednesday evening's concert makes special acknowledgment of the Rhode Island tercentenary.

Dr. Wassili Leps, conductor of the Providence Symphony Orchestra, will appear as guest with the Pops Orchestra conducting a performance of the Finale of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

The remainder of the program, to be conducted by Arthur Fiedler, includes the usual Pops assortment of tried favorites and amusing novelties, while it pays special respect to composers of Rhode Island.

Thus in addition to Weber's Overture to "Euryanthe," Ravel's "La Valse," Glinka's Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla", and Kreisler's arrangement of a Beethoven "Rondino", selections by Florence Barbour, Raymond Williams, and Hugh F. MacColl (of Rhode Island all) will be heard.

* * *

A HIGHLIGHT of Thursday evening's all-Russian program is Shostakovitch's ballet suite, "The Golden Age", which has not been performed previously in this vicinity.

On Friday evening Louis Speyer, the distinguished wood-wind virtuoso of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear as soloist in a performance of Guilhaud's Second Concertino for Oboe and Orchestra.

On Saturday evening Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist in the performance of MacDowell's Second Piano Concerto—a work which, in its previous performances this season with Mr. Sanroma as soloist, has proved one of the most highly favored in the Pops repertoire.

There will be no Pops concert on either this or the following Sunday.

The second Old Timers' Night of the season is announced for Monday, June 22.

* * *

THE FEDERAL Music Project, under the general direction of Nicolai Sokoloff, honors American composers by declaring an All-American Music Week.

Beginning today, in this as in other cities, bands, choruses, and orchestras will join in celebrating the achievements of American composers.

The most important of these concerts in Boston will be that given in the Boston Opera House on Friday evening by the Commonwealth Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Alexander Thiede.

Among the works to be heard on this occasion are Frederick Converse's Concertino for Piano with Lucille Monaghan as soloist; Howard Hanson's Second Symphony; the Finale from Edward Burlingame Hill's Sinfonietta for Strings; Sandor Harmati's "Prelude to a Melodrama;" William Grant Still's "Darker America;" and Laurence Powell's "Country Fair Suite."

Last Two Weeks Of Pop Concerts

21

The Pop concerts in Symphony hall enter on Monday the last week but one of the season. Arthur Fiedler announcing the programs to be presented by the Pops orchestra under his direction, lists numerous features of interest. Monday will be the second old timers' night, at which the audience will be invited to lift their voices and take part in the revival of songs from the past. On Tuesday there will be given the first performance hereabouts of the concerto for two pianofortes by Poulenc, the modern French composer, the soloists being Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin. Wednesday will have a middle group of Tchaikovsky, and Thursday will bring a repetition of the request program. On next Saturday the soloist will be Ethel Hutchinson, the noted pianist who is then to make her Pops debut in Grieg's concerto.

The program for tonight follows:

French Military March .... Saint-Saens
Roumanian Rhapsody............ Enesco
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy" ..Gliere
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor .... MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Polish Dance.................. Scharwenka
Romance from the Second Violin Concerto .... Wieniawski
Soloist: Robert Gundersen
Minuet .... Paderewski
"Waves of the Danube," waltzes. Ivanovici
Polonaise in A major....Chopin-Glazounov

M.. 5:04. 8:09.

MUSIC

Louis Speyer, oboeist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was the great soloist in Georges Guilhaud's Concertino No. 2 for obo e and orchestra at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall last evening. The Pops orchestra was couducted by Arthur Fiedler and the program was as follows:

Tdiumphal March from "Aida" ..... Verdi
Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Kammenoi Ostrow .... Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore" .... Verdi
Concertino No. 2 for oboe and orchestra .... Guilhaud
Tambourin chinois .... Kreisler
Frist Hungarian rhapsody .... Liszt
Bl the Beautiful Blue Danube, waltzes .... Strauss
On the Trail, from the "Grand Canyon" suite .... Grofe
Only One Vienna, march ...... Schramme

Anyone not aware of the high standard of performance at these Pops concerts in Symphony Hall might well be surprised at capacity, or nearly capacity, audiences night after night, week after week. Considering the fact that there has been this sort of attendance ever since the season began on May 6, it does indeed seem as if the public is even more appreciative than in the past. And from all outward appearances the Pops could go on indefinitely, instead of ending July 4. Incidentally, that date should serve as a warning to procrastinators. But to get to the matter of the program last evening, it was, as always, carefully chosen to meet the varied tastes and featured Mr. Speyer as the oboe soloist in Guilhaud's Concertino No 2 for that instrument and orchestra.

Georges Guilhaud proved to be a relatively unfamiliar French composer. Grove, for example, does not contain his name and a search, a brief and casual one it must be admitted, failed to reveal anything about him. Mr. Speyer, however, explained that Guilhaud was a French teacher of music with an especial fondness for the oboe. He wrote several other works for it as well as the one heard last night. The second concertino was awarded first prize in a competition in Paris in 1883 and the score was dedicated to Georges Gellet.

And while on the subject, Mr. Speyer said that he played this very same conertino in Boston when he came here with a German band back in 1918. He had planned to remain three weeks, but his interpretation led to a contract and he stayed on. Today Mr. Speyer's excellent work is so well known that to state that he performed the Guilhaud beautifully is about as trite as that over-used word itself. The Concertino turned out to be ideally suited for a Pops concert. It was light and melodious, making certain technical demands on the soloist to be sure, and yet not requiring the concentration of a deeply serious compostion. The audience that filled nearly every seat was most appreciative, calling Mr. Speyer to the platform again and again. Such was the enthusiasm that he gave an encore, Godard's sprightly "March of the Highlanders." Throughout the Concertino Mr. Fiedler maintained a fine proportion between the solo instrument and the orchestra. (The night before this reviewer stated that the French horns rose to play a portion of the "Soviet Iron Works." To correct any ideå that this was Mr. Fiedler's doings, it seems only fair to state that this move was suggested on the score and not by the conductor. The method is still reminiscent of a band, however.)

W. T. C., Jr.

Grant the cast will include

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

MAY 22 1936

Diversified Programs of Fine Music Presented at the "Pops."

When a body of 85 skilled musicians plays some of the so-called lighter forms of music it warms the hearts of the most exacting of listeners. The "Pop" concerts, now being given nightly at Symphony hall, Boston, are doing this, under the astute leadership of Arthur Fiedler.

A few historical items concerning the Pops might not be out of place here. They date back to the summer of 1885 when the Boston Symphony orchestra was only four years old. There was then started the project of a supplementary series of concerts of popular character to suit the warmer season. They were modelled after the Bilse concerts of Berlin, the formal rows of seats were removed and tables were installed so that one might sip wine or beer, munch a sandwich or smoke, while listening to a waltz of Strauss or a march of Sousa. The experiment was an immediate success. The "Promenade concerts" soon came to be called "Pops" in the vernacular, whether on account of their popularity or the popping of corks has never been established. In any case, the name itself became so popular that it was officially adopted.

The Pops have flourished from that day to this and have grown in favor with every season. In 1900 the Boston Symphony orchestra left the old Music hall, its original home on Hamilton place, and moved into Symphony hall, its present habitation, which was built especially for the great orchestra in that year. When prohibition came into effect, many thought that the Pops would suffer thereby, but the effect was quite the contrary. The "cafe" end of the Pops has grown instead of diminishing.

At the same time there has come to be considerably more emphasis upon the musical end. Conductor Fiedler's orchestra now numbers about 85 players, which doubles the size of the original Pops orchestra. These, of course, are of full symphonic proportions, and adequate for an elaborate modern score. The music is now taken somewhat more seriously and quietly, yet the atmosphere of gaiety still prevail-

---

ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
No Connection with any other ROMEIKE
NEW YORK

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

MAY 29 1936

BOSTON SYMPHONY NOT AS IDLE AS SOME OTHER LEADING ORCHESTRAS

A commentator in the New York Times says that the Boston Symphony orchestra has found work while other ensembles rest. Besides appearing at the Berkshire festival in August, the Bostonians and Mr. Koussevitzky will give several concerts in connection with Harvard's tercentenary observance in September.

The commentator might also have mentioned the 80-odd Boston Symphony players who are kept busy each year during May and June at the Symphony hall Pop concerts.

"POP" CONCERT DIRECTOR THANKS GOVERNOR GREEN

"Rhode Island Night" Planned by Boston Orchestra.

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston, called on Governor Theodore Francis Green at the State House yesterday afternoon to thank the Governor for his acceptance of an invitation to attend the Rhode Island night in Boston next Wednesday.

On the program will be compositions by three Providence composers, Raymond Williams, Florence Newell Barbour and Hugh MacColl. Dr. Wassili Leps, conductor of the Providence Symphony, will be guest conductor.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Final Week of 'P

Music Events For the Week

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

And still the Pops!

As te season progresses and program succeeds program, the remarkable thing about it all is that while each is necessarily similar to the other—the purpose beng always to entertain—each is nevertheless constructed in such manner as to create fresh enthusiasms.

Which is, of course, not the least of the reasons for Arthur Fiedler's popularity as Pops conductor.

This evening's concert is given for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund.

It is to be Request Night, an annual occurrence, and one that bears testimony to a staunch fidelity on the part of the public towards its favorites which considerably undermines the theory of its alleged fickleness.

* * *

IT IS INDEED hardly necessary to announce again this year that Jesus Maria Sanroma will appear as soloist in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," or that Ravel's "Bolero," Handel's Largo from "Xerxes," Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite, Rossini's Overture to "William Tell," Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" and Strauss' "By the Beautiful Danube" Waltzes are among the chosen selections.

Monday evening's concert will not be open to the public, having been completely taken over by the Alumni of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

On Tuesday evening Jesus Maria Sanroma will again appear as soloist in the Second Pianoforte Concerto of MacDowell which, revived earlier in the season, met with such enthusiastic response.

Ruth Culbertson, another pianist known to Pops audiences, will be the soloist with the orchestra [illegible] a performance of Cesar Franc[illegible] ... ations,

---

Pops in Seventh Week; Soloists Announced

The Pop concerts in Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, are entering upon the seventh week of their 51st season. Tomorrow will be Boston University Night, and on Tuesday the concert has been taken over entirely by the Harvard Class of 1911. Features of the further programs include the appearance of Dr. Wassili Leps, the conductor of Providence, as guest on the program of Wednesday, which makes a special acknowledgement to the Rhode Island tercentenary. On Thursday, there will be an all-Russian program, with the first performance hereabouts of the ballet suite "The Golden Age," by Shostakovitch. On Friday, Louis Speyer, the celebrated wood-wind virtuoso of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear in a Concertino for Oboe. On Saturday, Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in MacDowell's Second Pianoforte Concerto. The second Old Timers' Night of the season is announced for Monday, June 22.

The programs of the week follow:

MONDAY EVENING, JUNE 15
Boston University Night
TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 16
Harvard class of 1911
WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 17

Rhode Island Forward March ... Raymond Williams
Overture to "Euryanthe" ... Weber
Rondino ... Beethoven-Kreisler
La Valse ... Ravel
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla" ... Glinka
Arabs ... Hugh F. MacColl
Chamounix Suite ... Florence Barbour
Finale Fifth Symphony ... Tchaikovsky
Wassili Leps, Guest Conductor
Selection, "The Fortune Teller" ... Herbert
Malaguena ... Lecuona-Grofe
Indian War Dance ... Skilton

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 18

Procession of the Sardar ... Impolitov-Ivanov
"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia ... Tchaikovsky
"The Music Box" ... Liadov
Soviet Iron Works ... Mossolov
"The Golden Age," Ballet Suite ... Shostakovitch
Dubinushka, Russian Song ... Arranged by Jacchia
Marche Slave ... Tchaikovsky
Waltz of the Flowers, from the ballet, "Nutcracker" ... Tchaikovsky
Prelude in C sharp minor ... Rachmaninoff
"Orgy of the Spirits" from the Oriental Suite, "Noure and Anitra" ... Ilynsky

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 19

Triumphal march from "Aida" ... Verdi
Overture to "Egmont" ... Beethoven
Kammenoi Ostrow ... Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore" ... Verdi
Concertino No. 2 for oboe and orchestra ... Guilhaud
Soloist: Louis Speyer
Tambourin Chinois ... Kreisler
First Hungarian Rhapsody ... Liszt
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes ... Strauss
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" suite ... Grofe
"Only One Vienna," march ... Schrammel

SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 20

French Military March ... Saint-Saens
Roumanian Rhapsody ... Enesco
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy" ... Gliere
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor ... MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Polish Dance ... Scharwenka
Andante from the Second Violin Concerto ... Wieniawski
Soloist: Robert Gundersen
Minuet ... Paderewski
"Waves of the Danube," waltzes ... Ivanovici
Polonaise in A major ... Chopin-Glazounov

NEWPORT CA

Sanroma Plays the MacDowell Concerto

Jesus Maria Sanroma played the MacDowell Second Piano Concerto with the Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler at last night's concert. He had already played the same work at a Pops concert earlier in the season; and one who was hearing Sanroma freshly in the MacDowell music last night perceived sufficient reason for the enthusiastic reception accorded his performance on the earlier occasion.

It was to be expected that the fleet, facile, brilliant technique of Sanroma would make small work of the engaging—but tricky-to-play-middle movement, a lively scherzo; or the third movement, which has many passages of a similar nature. But the first movement requires much greater warmth and, if the term may be permitted, poetry. It was gratifying to find that Sanroma lacked neither quality last night. The notion that he is not at home in Romantic music of the grand manner had, at least for this occasion, to go by the board.

Mr. Sanroma's finely tempered performance received excellent support from the orchestra under Mr. Fiedler, and made a deep impression on the large audience, which applauded subsequently with considerable vehemence and persistence. The first part of the program consisted of a march by Sousa, Flotow's Overture to "Martha," the Intermezzo from Granados's "Goyescas" and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Spanish" Caprice. Then followed the Wagner "Meistersinger" Prelude and the Concerto. The final group consisted of a selection from "Roberta," "Dubinushka" and the Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" by Saint-Saens. Of course there were numerous extra numbers. The performances were directed by Mr. Fiedler in his familiar vein.

In Prospect

Shostakovitch's Ballet Suite, "The Golden Age," will receive its first performance in Boston at the Pops concert of Thursday evening, June 18, when the program will consist entirely of music by Russians. The following evening Louis Speyer will play the Second Oboe Concerto of Guilhaud, a composer of whom this department professes total ignorance.

Next Monday night will be given over mostly to Boston University; but tickets for the public will be on sale. Tuesday night has been taken over entirely by the Harvard twenty-five year class (1911) and the general public will not be admitted. On Wednesday Wassili Leps, Providence conductor, will direct part of the program as guest. The program will begin with Raymond Williams's "Rhode Island Forward" March and will include, among other items, Hugh F. MacColl's "Arabs" and Florence Barbour's "Chamounix" Suite. The evening will be largely in the nature of a gesture toward the current tercentenary rites of the neighboring State. On Saturday Mr. Sanromá will again essay the MacDowell Second Piano Concerto and Robert Gundersen, violinist in the orchestra, will play the slow movement of Wieniawski's Second Concerto.

News of Music: Special 'Nights' at Boston Pops

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

NEWS of music is necessarily largely concerned at this season with news of the Pops—now entering the seventh week of nightly occurence in Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Tomorrow evening will be Boston University Night. The program for this concert, as for Tuesday evening's, which has been entirely taken over by the Harvard Class of 1911, has not been released.

Wednesday evening's concert makes special acknowledgment of the Rhode Island tercentenary.

Dr. Wassili Leps, conductor of the Providence Symphony Orchestra, will appear as guest with the Pops Orchestra conducting a performance of the Finale of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

The remainder of the program, to be conducted by Arthur Fiedler, includes the usual Pops assortment of tried favorites and amusing novelties, while it pays special respect to composers of Rhode Island.

Thus in addition to Weber's Overture to "Euryanthe," Ravel's "La Valse," Glinka's Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla", and Kreisler's arrangement of a Beethoven "Rondino", selections by Florence Barbour, Raymond Williams, and Hugh F. MacColl (of Rhode Island all) will be heard.

* * *

A HIGHLIGHT of Thursday evening's all-Russian program is Shostakovitch's ballet suite, "The Golden Age", which has not been performed previously in this vicinity.

On Friday evening Louis Speyer, the distinguished wood-wind virtuoso of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear as soloist in a performance of Guilhaud's Second Concertino for Oboe and Orchestra.

On Saturday evening Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist in the performance of MacDowell's Second Piano Concerto—a work which, in its previous performances this season with Mr. Sanroma as soloist, has proved one of the most highly favored in the Pops repertoire.

There will be no Pops concert on either this or the following Sunday.

The second Old Timers' Night of the season is announced for Monday, June 22.

* * *

THE FEDERAL Music Project, under the general direction of Nicolai Sokoloff, honors American composers by declaring an All-American Music Week.

Beginning today, in this as in other cities, bands, choruses, and orchestras will join in celebrating the achievements of American composers.

The most important of these concerts in Boston will be that given in the Boston Opera House on Friday evening by the Commonwealth Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Alexander Thiede.

Among the works to be heard on this occasion are Frederick Converse's Concertino for Piano with Lucille Monaghan as soloist; Howard Hanson's Second Symphony; the Finale from Edward Burlingame Hill's Sinfonietta for Strings; Sandor Harmati's "Prelude to a Melodrama;" William Grant Still's "Darker America;" and Laurence Powell's "Country Fair Suite."

Last Two Weeks Of Pop Concerts

The Pop concerts in Symphony hall enter on Monday the last week but one of the season. Arthur Fiedler announcing the programs to be presented by the Pops orchestra under his direction, lists numerous features of interest. Monday will be the second old timers' night, at which the audience will be invited to lift their voices and take part in the revival of songs from the past. On Tuesday there will be given the first performance hereabouts of the concerto for two pianofortes by Poulenc, the modern French composer, the soloists being Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin. Wednesday will have a middle group of Tchaikovsky, and Thursday will bring a repetition of the request program. On next Saturday the soloist will be Ethel Hutchinson, the noted pianist who is then to make her Pops debut in Grieg's concerto.

The program for tonight follows:

French Military March ... Saint-Saens
Roumanian Rhapsody ... Enesco
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy" ... Gliere
Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in D minor ... MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Polish Dance ... Scharwenka
Romance from the Second Violin Concerto ... Wieniawski
Soloist: Robert Gundersen
Minuet ... Paderewski
"Waves of the Danube," waltzes ... Ivanovici
Polonaise in A major ... Chopin-Glazounov

MUSIC

Louis Speyer, oboeist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was the great soloist in Georges Guilhaud's Concertino No. 2 for obo e and orchestra at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall last evening. The Pops orchestra was couducted by Arthur Fiedler and the program was as follows:

Tdiumphal March from "Aida" ... Verdi
Overture to "Egmont" ... Beethoven
Kammenoi Ostrow ... Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore" ... Verdi
Concertino No. 2 for oboe and orchestra ... Guilhaud
Tambourin chinois ... Kreisler
First Hungarian rhapsody ... Liszt
... the Beautiful Blue Danube, waltzes ... Strauss
... Trail, from the "Grand Canyon" ... Grofe
... Vienna, march ... Schrammel

[illegible] not aware of the high [illegible] performance at th[illegible] in Sympho[illegible] surprised [illegible] capacity, a[illegible] week aft[illegible]

sidering the fact that there has been this sort of attendance ever since the season began on May 6, it does indeed seem as if the public is even more appreciative than in the past. And from all outward appearances the Pops could go on indefinitely, instead of ending July 4. Incidentally, that date should serve as a warning to procrastinators. But to get to the matter of the program last evening, it was, as always, carefully chosen to meet the varied tastes and featured Mr. Speyer as the oboe soloist in Guilhaud's Concertino No 2 for that instrument and orchestra.

Georges Guilhaud proved to be a relatively unfamiliar French composer. Grove, for example, does not contain his name and a search, a brief and casual one it must be admitted, failed to reveal anything about him. Mr. Speyer, however, explained that Guilhaud was a French teacher of music with an especial fondness for the oboe. He wrote several other works for it as well as the one heard last night. The second concertino was awarded first prize in a competition in Paris in 1883 and the score was dedicated to Georges Gellet.

And while on the subject, Mr. Speyer said that he played this very same conertino in Boston when he came here with a German band back in 1918. He had planned to remain three weeks, but his interpretation led to a contract and he stayed on. Today Mr. Speyer's excellent work is so well known that to state that he performed the Guilhaud beautifully is about as trite as that over-used word itself. The Concertino turned out to be ideally suited for a Pops concert. It was light and melodious, making certain technical demands on the soloist to be sure, and yet not requiring the concentration of a deeply serious compostion. The audience that filled nearly every seat was most appreciative, calling Mr. Speyer to the platform again and again. Such was the enthusiasm that he gave an encore, Godard's sprightly "March of the Highlanders." Throughout the Concertino Mr. Fiedler maintained a fine proportion between the solo instrument and the orchestra.

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

MAY 22 1936

Diversified Programs of Fine Music Presented at the "Pops."

When a body of 85 skilled musicians plays some of the so-called lighter forms of music it warms the hearts of the most exacting of listeners. The "Pop" concerts, now being given nightly at Symphony hall, Boston, are doing this, under the astute leadership of Arthur Fiedler.

A few historical items concerning the Pops might not be out of place here. They date back to the summer of 1885 when the Boston Symphony orchestra was only four years old. There was then started the project of a supplementary series of concerts of popular character to suit the warmer season. They were modelled after the Bilse concerts of Berlin, the formal rows of seats were removed and tables were installed so that one might sip wine or beer, munch a sandwich or smoke, while listening to a waltz of Strauss or a march of Sousa. The experiment was an immediate success. The "Promenade concerts" soon came to be called "Pops" in the vernacular, whether on account of their popularity or the popping of corks has never been established. In any case, the name itself became so popular that it was officially adopted.

The Pops have flourished from that day to this and have grown in favor with every season. In 1900 the Boston Symphony orchestra left the old Music hall, its original home on Hamilton place, and moved into Symphony hall, its present habitation, which was built especially for the great orchestra in that year. When prohibition came into effect, many thought that the Pops would suffer thereby, but the effect was quite the contrary. The "cafe" end of the Pops has grown instead of diminishing.

At the same time there has come to be considerably more emphasis upon the musical end. Conductor Fiedler's orchestra now numbers about 85 players, which doubles the size of the original Pops orchestra. These, of course, are of full symphonic proportions, and adequate for an elaborate modern score. The music is now taken somewhat more seriously and quietly, yet the atmosphere of gaiety still prevail

---

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
No Connection with any other ROMEIKE
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

MAY 29 1936

BOSTON SYMPHONY NOT AS IDLE AS SOME OTHER LEADING ORCHESTRAS

A commentator in the New York Times says that the Boston Symphony orchestra has found work while other ensembles rest. Besides appearing at the Berkshire festival in August, the Bostonians and Mr. Koussevitzky will give several concerts in connection with Harvard's tercentenary observance in September.

The commentator might also have mentioned the 80-odd Boston Symphony players who are kept busy each year during May and June at the Symphony hall Pop concerts.

"POP" CONCERT DIRECTOR THANKS GOVERNOR GREEN

"Rhode Island Night" Planned by Boston Orchestra.

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston, called on Governor Theodore Francis Green at the State House yesterday afternoon to thank the Governor for his acceptance of an invitation to attend the Rhode Island night in Boston next Wednesday.

On the program will be compositions by three Providence composers, Raymond Williams, Florence Newell Barbour and Hugh MacColl. Dr. Wassili Leps, conductor of the Providence Symphony, will be guest conductor.

29

Appeal of Boston Symphony Pops Is Same Today As It Was Half Century in Past

Providence Evening Bulletin, June 15/36

Conductor Finds No Change in Musical Tastes. Unsung Commuter to Be Recognized With "Rhode Island Night".

By Gladys Van Egmond

The 51st summer edition of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—nicknamed The Pops, now a synonym for sparkling music, wines and beers, served to an audience lounging at table—pulses along at Symphony Hall in the heart of Back Bay.

Programs have been captioned Request Night, Old Timers Night, Gay Nineties Night. There may yet be a Bicycle Night. But this week, in recognition of the unsung commuter who has drifted into Boston each spring, Arthur Fiedler will devote the Wednesday program to Rhode Island Night.

The Governor has promised to be there. Rhode Island composers will be represented in the musical fare. Dr. Wassili Leps will conduct one group of selections. And the citizenry will be stimulated by the convivial atmosphere.

No Real Mystery

At the beginning of the season, a Boston critic pondered aloud the mystery of The Pops's popularity. But to nine out of 10 of us, the mystery never was. It seems the ideal way, along with chamber music, to receive a program in comfort and with the addition of food, drink and gentle conversation.

Symphony Hall even changes its physical appearance when Mr. Fiedler takes over the baton from Mr. Koussevitzky in the summer. A cool shade of green is painted on the walls that become a dignified red for the winter programs of heavier music. Green and gold chairs seat the audience. Trellis work is added to the platform.

The symphony artists, however, do not don ice cream pants. Mr. Fiedler, who works himself so hard with the reed-like baton that he calluses his fingers, has invented a cooling system under his platform. An electric fan disperses some of the heat generated as he waves his musicians from one mood to another.

Tastes Unchanged

I attended the Saturday concert, interviewed Mr. Fiedler and examined Symphony Hall when it was full of people and empty.

Mr. Fiedler compared the Pops of tonight and 50 years ago. He found that the cherub-faced girl, eager with youth and modernly dressed in a cream alpaca suit, likes the same music that the old lady in high stock and furs favors as she sips lemonade.

Through the years, with The Pops becoming an institution for New England, people have demanded extremes in music. They ask for the slow, or the very fast, or the din of the very loud. Some of the numbers are favorites now as they were half a century back.

Long with Orchestra

So said the man who has gauged the summer tastes for seven years as conductor—Mr. Fiedler. For many more years than that, he has played with the orchestra, and his father before him.

Just then, there came into Room A and into the conversation, a gentleman with old-world charm, snowy white hair and moustache, and a cane hung over his arm. He pronounced a musician's and a father's commendation on the program of Tchaikovsky and Wagner, sandwiched between Viennese waltzes.

Mr. Fiedler, whose thick hair and moustache were as pitch-colored as his father's were white, rose from his glass of ale and cheese-on-rye to greet Emanuel Fiedler.

Played 25 Seasons

The latter came recently from retirement in Berlin to make his home with his older daughter in Boston and to frequent again the corridors of Symphony Hall. The senior Fiedler was pensioned years ago after playing the violin for 25 seasons with the Boston Symphony.

Julius Theodorovich, first violinist, directed tonight by the younger Fiedler, played with the orchestra with Emanuel Fiedler when the Pops were young.

The 77-year-old Fiedler continues his practice of two or three hours a day as if he were going into the concert again.

Audiences tonight are twice the size of those of the earlier time, both the Fiedlers said. People listen more attentively, said the younger man; formerly, the orchestra had difficulty being heard above the conversation.

Self-Supporting

Mr. Fiedler believes The Pops to be self-supporting, whereas the winter series has a yearly deficit made up by the Friends of the Symphony.

Occasionally, a new number like "Bolero" or "Rhapsody in Blue" gets under the skin of the music-listener, but generally mother and daughter request the same type of music—that which will reach the emotions, according to the conductor.

Mr. Fiedler said he was not a showman in his conducting, that he was unconscious of his movements on the stand, but he showed the calluses on his fingers from making circles with a baton as light as a feather quill.

"It takes an awful lot out of you," he said. "The conductor has to make the orchestra succumb to his will. That's taxing. And then, the constant changing of the moods of the music."

He said he was wearied from 40 consecutive nights of conducting. Last night he was to have his first post-sunset freedom since The Pops season began.

"Busman's Holiday"

And what would he do with his leisure, I asked. "Take a busman's holiday" was his laughing answer. Invite some of the orchestra to his

Commonwealth a feed them phonog menu prepared b man housekeepe
Mr. Fiedler is and unmarri looks after h travels for everywhere and he has

He plays , but prefers the piano. He first played the second violin, then the viola and the celesta. He also likes the organ.

"One achievement I am a little bit proud of," he says in reference to the Esplanade concerts which he conducts after The Pops season.

Other Activities

He spends his winters conducting choruses and chamber orchestras, coming occasionally to Providence. His Boston Sinfonietta also travels South in September. He serves on the Boston University faculty. In July, he will make recordings with his orchestra. His vacation will take him travelling next to Mexico.

Was it a coincidence that much of Saturday's program was Viennese? Of course, his father was born in Vienna and still speaks with a thick accent. The younger Fiedler was born in Boston and had the usual American boy's bringing-up, even trying to run away to the circus.

"It just happens that I like the waltzes and am said to have a flair for Viennese music," Mr. Fiedler answered.

Must Be Felt

His father agreed that the rhythm of these songs is not all written, that traditionally it has to be felt to be interpreted successfully.

Swing music and jazz come and go, but Haydn and Bach and the Russians continue to delight Pops-goers. So says their conductor who three times a week rehearses his orchestra of 85 pieces.

Outside in the unpeopled auditorium, soft music was being played on the piano with only Demosthenes and the other classic statues above the gallery to hear.

It was Mr. Fiedler's sister, Elsa, a professional pianist who came from New York for the concert. Another sister became a violinist, and a third, 'cellist; one cousin, a pianist, and another, Boston Symphony 'cellist. His greatgrandfather and grandfather likewise were musicians, and two uncles joined the symphony orchestra as violinists.

Opposes Specialization.

The piano-playing sister wants to specialize in Mozart, Mr. Fiedler commented, but he advises her against it. "I don't believe a musician should become too centralized in a type of music. Besides, it is more interesting to do many types."

There's too much snobbism about the lighter music, he thought. Strauss waltzes are little masterpieces, he said. He plans sometime to conduct orchestras in Europe. He has studied in Vienna.

Elsa played on. Mr. Fiedler had finished his beer and victuals and was free until tonight.

Brahms and Mendelssohn, Ital-

T, JUNE 17, 1936 BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT. WEDNES Page Five

Rhode Island Governor at Pops Tonight, When Composers of His State Are Honored

Governor Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island and a group of musicians of that State will attend the special holiday Pop Concert this evening at Symphony Hall, when works of Providence composers will be played by conductor Arthur Fiedler as a friendly gesture to Rhode Island's tercentenary celebration.

Wassili Leps, conductor of the Providence Symphony, will conduct the Rhode Island portion of the program. This includes works by Raymond G. Williams, Hugh F. McColl and Mrs. Florence Newell Barbour, wife of the president of Brown University.

Williams wrote the famous football piece, "Harvardiana," as a member of the Harvard class of 1911. His latest composition, "Rhode Island Forward March," will open tonight's program.

MacColl, a Providence business man, who has won considerable distinction as a composer of serious works, studied music at Harvard. His symphonic poem, "Arabs," will be heard this evening. Mrs. Barbour has published a number of piano solos, songs and pieces for organ and for string instruments. She will be represented by two selections from her piano suite, "Chamonix," orchestrated by Wassili Leps.

Governor Green is a lover of fine orchestral music. He secured the enactment by the Rhode Island legislature of a law placing a series of symphony concerts under the State department of education, with the support of State funds.

RHODE ISLAND NIGHT AT POPS

June 17
Traveler

Gov. Green and Notables to Attend Tonight

Gov. Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island, four composers and two conductors will lend their presence to tonight's special holiday Pop concert program at Symphony hall.

As a friendly gesture to Rhode Island's Tercentenary celebration, Conductor Arthur Fiedler has added to established orchestral favorites some works of the Providence composers, Raymond G. Williams, Hugh F. MacColl, Wassili Leps and Mrs. Florence Newell Barbour. Williams wrote the famous football band piece, "Harvardiana," as a member of the class of 1911.

Tonight his new march, "Rhode Island, Forward March!" will open the Pop concert. MacColl, a Providence business man, enjoys considerable distinction as a composer of serious works. His symphonic poem, "Arabs," will be heard tonight.

Mrs. Barbour, wife of President Clarence Barbour of Brown University, will be represented by two selections from her piano suite, "Chamonix," orchestrated by Wassili Leps. The latter composer is also conductor of the Providence Symphony, and has accepted Mr. Fiedler's invitation to be guest conductor in one group of selections.

"RHODE ISLAND NIGHT" OBSERVED AT "POPS"

June 18
Globe Am.

"Rhode Island Night" was observed last evening at the Pops in Symphony Hall, in recognition of the tercentenary of the state. Gov Green of Rhode Island made a brief address of appreciation, stating that he thought it was a very graceful tribute to the centenary and to the Rhode Island composers whose works were featured on the program. Accompanying Gov Green were Col Peter L. Cannon, Prof Arlan R. Coolidge of the department of music at Brown University, and Prof William Adams Brown of the department of economics at Brown.

The program, which was turned over by Conductor Arthur Fiedler to the guest conductor, Dr Wassill Leps, opened with "Rhode Island Forward March," composed by Raymond G. Williams, Harvard, '11, who wrote the famous football march, "Harvardiana." Mr Williams is in Boston attending the 25th reunion of his class at Harvard. Another son of Rhode Island, Hugh F. MacColl, Harvard, '07, heard his composition, "Arabs," played last evening. He studied music at Harvard, his harmony and counterpoint under Prof Walter R. Spalding and free composition under Frederick S. Converse.

Accompanying composer MacColl were Mr and Mrs Harry G. Fraser, Alden MacIntyre and Miss Margaret MacColl, all of Providence.

The Chamonix suite composed by Florence Newell Barbour, wife of Pres Barbour of Brown University, a descriptive suite, "Sunrise on Mont Blanc," and "Moonlight's Haunting Spell" followed the MacColl composition. The suite was orchestrated by the guest conductor, Dr Leps.

Mrs Barbour was accompanied by Col Joseph O. Daly, U. S. A.; Mr and Mrs David Daly and Miss Susan Duncan Daly.

Other selections included Victor Herbert's "The Fortune Teller," Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony, Weber's overture to "Euryanthe," Skilton's "Indian War Dance" and Beethoven-Kreisler orchestrations.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAY 24 1936

As Music Goes

BY DR. W. LOUIS CHAPMAN

Past Season Crowded with Concerts and Individual Performances Well Calculated to Enrich Artistic Experience of Music Lovers

NO music brought to us from afar seems to command more interest than the superb concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the distinguished conductorship of Dr. Serge Koussevitzki. In point of richness of program and performances we concede the supreme qualities of this organization.

Interesting variety was furnished by the appearance of Dimitri Mitropoulos noted Greek musician who aroused interest by the striking individuality and originality of his baton technique.

We received lasting memories from the tonal richnesses of Strauss' Symphonia Domestica, Brahms' Symphony No. 1, and a magnificent production of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with a fine quartet and chorus. Rarely in a musical lifetime does one hear the like and we must consider this presentation as a token of marked regard on the part of Dr. Koussevitzki for our public.

R. I. Honored By Pop Concert

Monitor
June 17

Gov. Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island, four composers, and two conductors will lend their presence to tonight's special holiday Pop concert program at Symphony Hall.

As a friendly gesture to Rhode Island's Tercentenary celebration, Conductor Arthur Fiedler has added to established orchestral favorites some works of the Providence composers, Raymond G. Williams, Hugh F. MacColl, Wassili Leps, and Mrs. Florence Newell Barbour. Mr. Williams wrote the famous football band piece, "Harvardiana," as a member of the Class of 1911, which of late has been celebrating its quarter century. Tonight his new march, "Rhode Island, Forward March!" will open the Pop concert.

Mr. MacColl, a Providence business man, as well as enjoying considerable distinction as a composer of serious works, studied music at Harvard. His symphonic poem, "Arabs," will be heard tonight. Mrs. Barbour, wife of Dr. Clarence Barbour, president of Brown University, has published a long list of piano solos, songs, and pieces for organ and for string instruments. Tonight she will be represented by two selections from her piano suite, "Charmonix," orchestrated by Wassili Leps. The latter composer is also conductor of the Providence Symphony, and has accepted Mr. Fiedler's invitation to be guest conductor in one group of selections tonight.

Governor Green is a great lover of fine orchestral music. He believes so much in its potent influence that he secured the enactment by the Rhode Island Legislature of a law placing a series of symphony concerts under the State Department of Education, with the support of state funds.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

JUN 18 1936

Rhode Islanders Hear Own Tunes Played in Boston

Rhode Island composers sat among the audience and heard the Boston Symphony Pope Orchestra interpret their scores last night at Symphony Hall, Boston. The program was devoted to Rhode Island Night.

Mrs. Clarence A. Barbour, whose "Chamonix Suite" was included in the selections, attended with Mr. and Mrs. David Daly of Pawtucket. Their party had dinner at the University Club before the concert.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh F. MacColl had as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Harry G. Fraser. Mr. MacColl's composition on the program was "Arabs."

Governor Green had as his guests Prof. and Mrs. Arlan R. Coolidge and Prof. and Mrs. William Adams Brown, Jr., and Lieut. Col. Peter Leo Cannon as aide. Raymond G. Williams's "Rhode Island Forward March" also was played, and Dr. Wassili Leps served as guest conductor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

18 1936

GOV. GREEN AND R. I. RESIDENTS ATTEND CONCERT IN BOSTON

Gov. Green and many prominent Rhode Island men and women went to Boston last evening to attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra pop concert. Theorchestra was under the direction of Dr. Wassili Leps, conductor of the Providence Symphony Orchestra, and the occasion was "Rhode Island" night.

Dr. Leps conducted the orchestra in the compositions of Hugh F. MacColl and Mrs. Clarence A. Barbour and in addition to the regular program offered Raymond G. Williams' "Rhode Island Forward March." MacColl's tone poem, "Arabs," and Mrs. Barbour's "Chamonix Suite," arranged for the orchestra by Dr. Leps, were played in honor of the Rhode Island Tercentenary.

In Gov. Green's party at the concert were Prof. and Mrs. Arlen B. Coolidge and Prof. and Mrs. William Adams of Brown University and Lieut. Peter Leo Cannon of the governor's staff.

Appeal of Boston Symphony Pops Is Same Today As It Was Half Century in Past

Providence Evng Bulletin, June 15/36

Conductor Finds No Change in Musical Tastes. Unsung Commuter to Be Recognized With "Rhode Island Night".

By Gladys Van Egmond

The 51st summer edition of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—nicknamed The Pops, now a synonym for sparkling music, wines and beers, served to an audience lounging at table—pulses along at Symphony Hall in the heart of Back Bay.

Programs have been captioned Request Night, Old Timers Night, Gay Nineties Night. There may yet be a Bicycle Night. But this week, in recognition of the unsung commuter who has drifted into Boston each spring, Arthur Fiedler will devote the Wednesday program to Rhode Island Night.

The Governor has promised to be there. Rhode Island composers will be represented in the musical fare. Dr. Wassili Leps will conduct one group of selections. And the citizenry will be stimulated by the convivial atmosphere.

No Real Mystery

At the beginning of the season, a Boston critic pondered aloud the mystery of The Pops's popularity. But to nine out of 10 of us, the mystery never was. It seems the ideal way along with chamber music, to receive a program in comfort and with the addition of food, drink and gentle conversation.

Symphony Hall even changes its physical appearance when Mr. Fiedler takes over the baton from Mr. Koussevitzky in the summer. A cool shade of green is painted on the walls that become a dignified red for the winter programs of heavier music. Green and gold chairs seat the audience. Trellis work is added to the platform.

The symphony artists, however, do not don ice cream pants. Mr. Fiedler, who works himself so hard with the reed-like baton that he calluses his fingers, has invented a cooling system under his platform. An electric fan disperses some of the heat generated as he waves his musicians from one mood to another.

Tastes Unchanged

I attended the Saturday concert, interviewed Mr. Fiedler and examined Symphony Hall when it was full of people and empty.

Mr. Fiedler compared the Pops of tonight and 50 years ago. He found that the cherub-faced girl, eager with youth and modernly dressed in a cream alpaca suit, likes the same music that the old lady in high stock and furs favors as she sips lemonade.

Through the years, with The Pops becoming an institution for New England, people have demanded extremes in music. They ask for the slow, or the very fast, or the din of the very loud. Some of the numbers are favorites now as they were half a century back.

Long with Orchestra

So said the man who has gauged the summer tastes for seven years as conductor—Mr. Fiedler. For many more years than that, he has played with the orchestra, and his father before him.

Just then, there came into Room A and into the conversation, a gentleman with old-world charm, snowy white hair and moustache, and a cane hung over his arm. He pronounced a musician's and a father's commendation on the program of Tchaikovsky and Wagner, sandwiched between Viennese waltzes.

Mr. Fiedler, whose thick hair and moustache were as pitch-colored as his father's were white, rose from his glass of ale and cheese-on-rye to greet Emanuel Fiedler.

Played 25 Seasons

The latter came recently from retirement in Berlin to make his home der daughter in Boston uent again the corridors y Hall. The senior Fiednsioned years ago after violin for 25 seasons with Symphony.

heodorovich, first violinist, tonight by the younger ayed with the orchestra nuel Fiedler when the young.

year-old Fiedler continues ce of two or three hours a he were going into the con-ces tonight are twice the ose of the earlier time, both ers said. People listen more ly, said the younger man; y, the orchestra had difficulty eard above the conversation.

Self-Supporting

Fiedler believes The Pops to supporting, whereas the winies has a yearly deficit made the Friends of the Symphony. sionally, a new number like o" or "Rhapsody in Blue" gets the skin of the music-listener, nerally mother and daughter st the same type of music—which will reach the emotions, ding to the conductor.

Fiedler said he was not a man in his conducting, that he unconscious of his movements he stand, but he showed the cales on his fingers from making circles with a baton as light as a feather quill.

"It takes an awful lot out of you," he said. "The conductor has to make the orchestra succumb to his will. That's taxing. And then, the constant changing of the moods of the music."

He said he was wearied from 40 consecutive nights of conducting. Last night he was to have his first post-sunset freedom since The Pops season began.

"Busman's Holiday"

And what would he do with his leisure, I asked. "Take a busman's holiday" was his laughing answer. Invite some of the orchestra to his

Commonwealth a feed them phonog menu prepared b man housekeepe

Mr. Fiedler is and unmarri looks after h travels for everywhere and he has v

He plays , but prefers the piano. He first played the second violin, then the viola and the celesta. He also likes the organ.

"One achievement I am a little bit proud of," he says in reference to the Esplanade concerts which he conducts after The Pops season.

Other Activities

He spends his winters conducting choruses and chamber orchestras, coming occasionally to Providence. His Boston Sinfonietta also travels South in September. He serves on the Boston University faculty. In July, he will make recordings with his orchestra. His vacation will take him travelling next to Mexico.

Was it a coincidence that much of Saturday's program was Viennese? Of course, his father was born in Vienna and still speaks with a thick accent. The younger Fiedler was born in Boston and had the usual American boy's bringing-up, even trying to run away to the circus.

"It just happens that I like the waltzes and am said to have a flair for Viennese music," Mr. Fiedler answered.

Must Be Felt

His father agreed that the rhythm of these songs is not all written, that traditionally it has to be felt to be interpreted successfully.

Swing music and jazz come and go, but Haydn and Bach and the Russians continue to delight Pops-goers. So says their conductor who three times a week rehearses his orchestra of 85 pieces.

Outside in the unpeopled auditorium, soft music was being played on the piano with only Demosthenes and the other classic statues above the gallery to hear.

It was Mr. Fiedler's sister, Elsa, a professional pianist who came from New York for the concert. Another sister became a violinist, and a third, 'cellist; one cousin, a pianist, and another, Boston Symphony 'cellist. His greatgrandfather and grandfather likewise were musicians, and two uncles joined the symphony orchestra as violinists.

Opposes Specialization.

The piano-playing sister wants to specialize in Mozart, Mr. Fiedler commented, but he advises her against it. "I don't believe a musician should become too centralized in a type of music. Besides, it is more interesting to do many types."

There's too much snobbism about the lighter music, he thought. Strauss waltzes are little masterpieces, he said. He plans sometime to conduct orchestras in Europe. He has studied in Vienna.

Elsa played on. Mr. Fiedler had finished his beer and victuals and was free until tonight.

T, JUNE 17, 1936 BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT. WEDNES Page Five

Rhode Island Governor at Pops Tonight, When Composers of His State Are Honored

Governor Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island and a group of musicians of that State will attend the special holiday Pop Concert this evening at Symphony Hall, when works of Providence composers will be played by conductor Arthur Fiedler as a friendly gesture to Rhode Island's tercentenary celebration.

Wassili Leps, conductor of the Providence Symphony, will conduct the Rhode Island portion of the program. This includes works by Raymond G. Williams, Hugh F. McColl and Mrs. Florence Newell Barbour, wife of the president of Brown University.

Williams wrote the famous football piece, "Harvardiana," as a member of the Harvard class of 1911. His latest composition, "Rhode Island Forward March," will open tonight's program.

MacColl, a Providence business man, who has won considerable distinction as a composer of serious works, studied music at Harvard. His symphonic poem, "Arabs," will be heard this evening. Mrs. Barbour has published a number of piano solos, songs and pieces for organ and for string instruments. She will be represented by two selections from her piano suite, "Chamonix," orchestrated by Wassili Leps.

Governor Green is a lover of fine orchestral music. He secured the enactment by the Rhode Island legislature of a law placing a series of symphony concerts under the State department of education, with the support of State funds.

RHODE ISLAND NIGHT AT POPS

June 17 Traveler

Gov. Green and Notables to Attend Tonight

Gov. Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island, four composers and two conductors will lend their presence to tonight's special holiday Pop concert program at Symphony hall.

As a friendly gesture to Rhode Island's Tercentenary celebration, Conductor Arthur Fiedler has added to established orchestral favorites some works of the Providence composers, Raymond G. Williams, Hugh F. MacColl, Wassili Leps and Mrs. Florence Newell Barbour. Williams wrote the famous football band piece, "Harvardiana," as a member of the class of 1911.

Tonight his new march, "Rhode Island, Forward March!" will open the Pop concert. MacColl, a Providence business man, enjoys considerable distinction as a composer of serious works. His symphonic poem, "Arabs," will be heard tonight.

Mrs. Barbour, wife of President Clarence Barbour of Brown University, will be represented by two selections from her piano suite, "Chamonix," orchestrated by Wassili Leps. The latter composer is also conductor of the Providence Symphony, and has accepted Mr. Fiedler's invitation to be guest conductor in one group of selections.

"RHODE ISLAND NIGHT" OBSERVED AT "POPS"

June 18 Globe

"Rhode Island Night" was observed last evening at the Pops in Symphony Hall, in recognition of the tercentenary of the state. Gov Green of Rhode Island made a brief address of appreciation, stating that he thought it was a very graceful tribute to the centenary and to the Rhode Island composers whose works were featured on the program. Accompanying Gov Green were Col Peter L. Cannon, Prof Arlan R. Coolidge of the department of music at Brown University, and Prof William Adams Brown of the department of economics at Brown.

The program, which was turned over by Conductor Arthur Fiedler to the guest conductor, Dr Wassill Leps, opened with "Rhode Island Forward March," composed by Raymond G. Williams, Harvard, '11, who wrote the famous football march, "Harvardiana." Mr Williams is in Boston attending the 25th reunion of his class at Harvard. Another son of Rhode Island, Hugh F. MacColl, Harvard, '07, heard his composition, "Arabs," played last evening. He studied music at Harvard, his harmony and counterpoint under Prof Walter R. Spalding and free composition under Frederick S. Converse.

Accompanying composer MacColl were Mr and Mrs Harry G. Fraser, Alden MacIntyre and Miss Margaret MacColl, all of Providence.

The Chamonix suite composed by Florence Newell Barbour, wife of Pres Barbour of Brown University, a descriptive suite, "Sunrise on Mont Blanc," and "Moonlight's Haunting Spell" followed the MacColl composition. The suite was orchestrated by the guest conductor, Dr Leps.

Mrs Barbour was accompanied by Col Joseph O. Daly, U. S. A.; Mr and Mrs David Daly and Miss Susan Duncan Daly.

Other selections included Victor Herbert's "The Fortune Teller," Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony, Weber's overture to "Euryanthe," Skilton's "Indian War Dance" and Beethoven-Kreisler orchestrations.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAY 24 1936

As Music Goes

BY DR. W. LOUIS CHAPMAN

Past Season Crowded with Concerts and Individual Performances Well Calculated to Enrich Artistic Experience of Music Lovers

No music brought to us from afar seems to command more interest than the superb concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the distinguished conductorship of Dr. Serge Koussevitzki. In point of richness of program and performances we concede the supreme qualities of this organization.

Interesting variety was furnished by the appearance of Dimitri Mitropoulos noted Greek musician who aroused interest by the striking individuality and originality of his baton technique.

We received lasting memories from the tonal richnesses of Strauss' Symphonia Domestica, Brahms' Symphony No. 1, and a magnificent production of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with a fine quartet and chorus. Rarely in a musical lifetime does one hear the like and we must consider this presentation as a token of marked regard on the part of Dr. Koussevitzki for our public.

R. I. Honored By Pop Concert

Monitor June 17

Gov. Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island, four composers, and two conductors will lend their presence to tonight's special holiday Pop concert program at Symphony Hall.

As a friendly gesture to Rhode Island's Tercentenary celebration, Conductor Arthur Fiedler has added to established orchestral favorites some works of the Providence composers, Raymond G. Williams, Hugh F. MacColl, Wassili Leps, and Mrs. Florence Newell Barbour. Mr. Williams wrote the famous football band piece, "Harvardiana," as a member of the Class of 1911, which of late has been celebrating its quarter century. Tonight his new march, "Rhode Island, Forward March!" will open the Pop concert.

Mr. MacColl, a Providence business man, as well as enjoying considerable distinction as a composer of serious works, studied music at Harvard. His symphonic poem, "Arabs," will be heard tonight. Mrs. Barbour, wife of Dr. Clarence Barbour, president of Brown University, has published a long list of piano solos, songs, and pieces for organ and for string instruments. Tonight she will be represented by two selections from her piano suite, "Charmonix," orchestrated by Wassili Leps. The latter composer is also conductor of the Providence Symphony, and has accepted Mr. Fiedler's invitation to be guest conductor in one group of selections tonight.

Governor Green is a great lover of fine orchestral music. He believes so much in its potent influence that he secured the enactment by the Rhode Island Legislature of a law placing a series of symphony concerts under the State Department of Education, with the support of state funds.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

JUN 18 1936

Rhode Islanders Hear Own Tunes Played in Boston

Rhode Island composers sat among the audience and heard the Boston Symphony Pope Orchestra interpret their scores last night at Symphony Hall, Boston. The program was devoted to Rhode Island Night.

Mrs. Clarence A. Barbour, whose "Chamonix Suite" was included in the selections, attended with Mr. and Mrs. David Daly of Pawtucket. Their party had dinner at the University Club before the concert.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh F. MacColl had as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Harry G. Fraser. Mr. MacColl's composition on the program was "Arabs."

Governor Green had as his guests Prof. and Mrs. Arlan R. Coolidge and Prof. and Mrs. William Adams Brown, Jr., and Lieut. Col. Peter Leo Cannon as aide. Raymond G. Williams's "Rhode Island Forward March" also was played, and Dr. Wassili Leps served as guest conductor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

18 1936

GOV. GREEN AND R. I. RESIDENTS ATTEND CONCERT IN BOSTON

Gov. Green and many prominent Rhode Island men and women went to Boston last evening to attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra pop concert. Theorchestra was under the direction of Dr. Wassili Leps, conductor of the Providence Symphony Orchestra, and the occasion was "Rhode Island" night.

Dr. Leps conducted the orchestra in the compositions of Hugh F. MacColl and Mrs. Clarence A. Barbour and in addition to the regular program offered Raymond G. Williams' "Rhode Island Forward March." MacColl's tone poem, "Arabs," and Mrs. Barbour's "Chamonix Suite," arranged for the orchestra by Dr. Leps, were played in honor of the Rhode Island Tercentenary.

In Gov. Green's party at the concert were Prof. and Mrs. Arlen B. Coolidge and Prof. and Mrs. William Adams of Brown University and Lieut. Peter Leo Cannon of the governor's staff.

OSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—JUNE 21, 1936

—Eighth Week of Pop Concerts

Concert Calen

AT THE POPS

At the Pops—Nightly ex at Symphony Hall, program light and occasionally seriou by at least eighty-five meml Boston Symphony Orchestr, Fielder conducting. Refreshments, alcoholic and otherwise, may be enjoyed during the concert by those seated at the tables on the floor, and by all and sundry at the refreshment bar in the rear of the first balcony. Smoking and discreet conversation may be indulged in.

Next week will be the last but one of the fifty-first season of The Pops. Monday will be the occasion for the second "Old Timers' Night." On Tuesday the Messrs. J. M. Sanroma and Leo Litwin will be the soloists in the first Boston performance of the Poulenc Concerto in D minor for two pianos and orchestra. Ibert's Divertissement will be on the same program, as will also an arrangement of Tchaikovsky's "Meditation" by Professor Walter Raymond Spalding. On Thursday there will be a repetition of the "Request" program. Ethel Hutchinson will be the soloist in Grieg's Piano Concerto on Saturday, when the program will include a selection from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Snowmaiden" and Walter Piston's arrangement of Debussy's "Clair de Lune."

The complete programs for the week follow:

Monday Evening

"Up the Street," March	Morse
Overture to "Martha"	Flotow
"The Alpine Storm," A Summer Idyl	Kunkel
Gems from Gilbert and Sullivan	Arr. by Seredy
"A Hunt in the Black Forest," Descriptive Episode	Voelker
"Prayer of Thanksgiving," Old Dutch Hymn	Valerius
Songs of the Old Days,
"Wine, Women and Song," Waltzes	Strauss
"Sweet Adeline"	Armstrong
Campus Memories.

Tuesday Evening

"Cruiser Harvard"	Strube
"Doctrinen," Waltzes	Eduard Strauss
Meditation (Arranged by Walter R. Spalding)	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Poet and Peasant	Suppé
Divertissement	Ibert
Concerto in D minor for two pianos	Poulenc
Soloists: J. M. Sanromá- Leo Litwin
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"	Herbert
"Deep River"	Arranged by Jacchia
"We Saw the Sea," from "Follow the Fleet"	Berlin

Wednesday Evening

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Ballet Music from "Aida"	Verdi
Dagger Dance from "Natoma"	Herbert
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld"	Offenbach
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"	Tchaikovsky
Song Without Words	Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
"Artists' Life," Waltzes	Strauss
"At Dawning"	Gadman
First Slavonic Dance	Dvorák

Thursday Evening

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Jealousy, Gypsy Tango	Gadé
Peer Gynt, Suite	Grieg
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes	Strauss
Bolero	Ravel
Largo from "Xerxes"	Handel
Pomp and Circumstance	Elgar
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn,	Valerius
Rhapsody in Blue	Gershwin
Soloist: Jesús María Sanromá

Friday Evening

Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
"Love's Dream After the Ball"	Czibulka
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saëns
Kammenoi Ostrow ("Rôve Angelique")	Rubinstein
Old Dutch Hymn, Prayer of Thanksgiving,	Valerius
Overture to "Rienzi"	Wagner
"Estudiantina," Waltzes	Waldteufel
University Songs
Carioca	Youmans

Saturday Evening

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy"	Berlioz
Overture to "Der Freischütz"	Weber
"España," Rhapsody	Chabrier
Dance of the Buffoons from "Snowmaiden",	Rimsky-Korsakov
Clair de Lune (Arranged by W. Piston)	Debussy
Concerto for Pianoforte in A minor	Grieg
Soloist: Ethel Hutchinson
"The Skaters," Waltzes	Waldteufel
"Angelus" from the "Scènes Pittoresques"	Massenet
American Patrol	Meacham

MUSIC AND

Last Week of Pops; Second Old Timers' Night Tomorrow

The Pop concerts in Symphony Hall enter tomorrow the last week but one of the season. Tomorrow will be the second Old Timers' Night, at which the audience will be invited to lift their voices and take part in the revival of songs from the past.

On Tuesday there will be given the first performances hereabouts of the concerto for two pianofortes by Poulenc, the modern French composer, the soloists being Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin.

Wednesday will have a middle group of Tchaikovsky, and Thursday will bring a repetition of the request program. On Saturday the soloist will be Ethel Hutchinson, noted pianist, who is then to make her Pops debut in Grieg's concerto.

The programs of the week follow:

Tomorrow—"Up the Etreet," March, Morse; Overture to "Martha," Flotow; "The Alpine Storm," a Summer idyl, Kunkel; Gems from Gilbert and Sullivan, arranged by Seredy; 'A Hunt in the Black Forest," descriptive episode, Voelker; "Prayer of Thanksgiving," old Dutch hymn, Valerius; songs of the old days, "Wine, Woman and Song," waltzes, Strauss; "Sweet Adeline," Armstrong; Campus Memories.

Tuesday—"Cruiser Harvard," Strube; "Doctrinen," waltzes, Eduard Strauss; Meditation, Tchaikovsky (arranged by Walter R. Spalding); overture to "Poet and Peasant," Suppe; Divertissement, Ibert; concerto in D minor for two pianos (first performance in Boston), Foulenc; soloists: J. M. Sanroma, Leo Litwin; selection, "Mlle Modiste," Herbert; "Deep River," arranged by Jacchia; "We Saw the Sea," from "Follow the Fleet,' Berlin.

Wednesday—Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner; ballet music from "Aida," Verdi; dagger dance from "Natoma," Herbert; overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld," Offenbach; ballet suite, "Nutcracker," Song Without Words, overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; "Artists' Life," waltzes, Strauss; "At Dawning," Cadman; first Slavonic dance, Dvorak.

Thursday—Request program repeated. Prelude to "Carmen," Bizet; overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Jealousy, Gypsy tango, Gade; Peer Gynt, suite, Grieg; "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes, Strauss; largo from "Xerxes," Handel; Bolero, Ravel; Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; Prayer of Thanksgiving, old Dutch hymn, Valerius; Rhapsody in Blue, Gershwin; soloist Jesus Maria Sanroma.

Friday—Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa; overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Love's Dream After the Ball," Czibulka; Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Kammenoi Ostrow ("Reve Angelique"), Rubinstein; old Dutch hymn, Prayer of Thanksgiving, Valerius; overture to "Rienzi," Wagner; "Estudiantina," waltzes, Waldteufel; University Songs; Carioca, Youmans.

Saturday—Hungarian march, "Rakoczy," Berlioz; overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; "Espana," rhapsody, Chabrier; Dance of the Buffoons from "Snowmaiden," Rimsky-Korsakov; Claire de Lune, arranged by W. Piston, Debussy; concerto for pianoforte in A minor, Grieg; soloist Ethel Hutchinson, "The Skaters," waltzes, Waldteufel; "Angelus," from the "Scenes Pittoresques," Massenet; American Patrol, Meacham.

Ethel Hutchinson, pianist, who will make her first appearance with the Pop Concerts at Symphony Hall on Saturday evening when she will play Grieg's concerto for pianoforte in A minor.

Pops Enter Last 2 Weeks; Soloists Announced

The Pop concerts in Symphony Hall enter tomorrow the last week but one of the season. Arthur Fiedler, announcing the programs to be presented by the Pops Orchestra under his direction, lists numerous features of interest. Tomorrow will be the second Old Timers' Night, at which the audience will be invited to lift their voices and take part in the revival of songs from the past. On Tuesday, there will be given the first performance hereabouts of the Concerto for Two Pianofortes by Poulenc, the modern French composer, the soloists being Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin. Wednesday will have a middle group of Tchaikovsky, and Thursday will bring a repetition of the request program. On Saturday, the soloist will be Ethel Hutchinson, the noted pianist who is then to make her Pops debut in Grieg's Concerto.

The programs for the week follow:

TOMORROW
Old Timers' Night

"Up the Street," march	Morse
Overture to "Martha"	Flotow
"The Alpine Storm," a summer idyl	Kunkel
Gems from Gilbert and Sullivan	Arranged by Seredy
"A Hunt in the Black Forest," descriptive episode	Voelker
"Prayer of Thanksgiving," old Dutch hymn	Valerius
Songs of the Old Days
"Wine, Women and Song," waltzes	Strauss
"Sweet Adeline"	Armstrong
Campus Memories

TUESDAY, JUNE 23

"Cruiser Harvard"	Strube
"Doctrinen," waltzes	Edward Strauss
Meditation (Arranged by Walter R. Spalding)	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"
Divertissement	Ibert
Concerto in D minor for two pianos (First performance in Boston)	Poulenc
Soloists: J. M. Sanroma-Leo Litwin
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"	Herbert
"Deep River"	Arranged by Jacchia
"We Saw the Sea," from "Follow the Fleet"	Berlin

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 24

Introduction to act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Ballet music from "Aida"	Verdi
Dagger dance from "Natoma"	Herbert
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld"	Offenbach
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"	Tchaikovsky
Song Without Words	Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
"Artists' Life," waltzes	Strauss
"At Dawning"	Cadman
First Slavonic Dance	Dvorak

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 25
(Request program (repeated)

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Jealousy, gypsy tango	Gade
Peer Gynt, suite	Grieg
By the Beautiful Blue Danube, waltzes	Strauss
Largo from "Xerxes"	Handel
Bolero	Ravel
Pomp and Circumstance	Elgar
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch hymn	Valerius
Rhapsody in Blue	Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 26

Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Love's Dream After the Ball	Czibulka
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saens
Kammenoi Ostrow (Reve Angelique)	Rubinstein
Old Dutch hymn, Prayer of Thanksgiving	Valerius
Overture to "Rienzi"	Wagner
Estudiantina, waltzes	Waldteufel
University songs
Carioca	Youmans

SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 27

Hungarian March, Rakoczy	Berlioz
Overture to "Der Freischutz"	Weber
Espana, rhapsody	Chabrier
Dance of the Buffoons from "Snowmaiden"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Clair de Lune (Arranged by W. Piston)	Debussy
Concerto for Pianoforte in A minor	Grieg
Soloist—Ethel Hutchinson
The Skaters, waltzes	Waldteufel
Angelus from the Scenes Pittoresques	Massenet

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 14 1936

Johnston Fire
Richard E. Lake
Sr., and David N
Hope and Jacks
Hope: Edwin H. M
Narragansett Stea
Co., No. 1: John Cas
B. Potter and James Sy
Jamestown Fire De
Chief William L. Arno
Newport Fire Dep.
A. Tanner, Dan

Boston Symphony "Pops" Plans Rhode Island Night Wednesday

Wassili Leps to Appear as Guest Conductor in Hub Concert

PLAYING compositions by Rhode Islanders and with Dr. Wassili Leps as guest conductor, the Boston Symphony "Pops" will hold "Rhode Island Night" Wednesday evening in Symphony Hall, Boston. The occasion is a musical bow on the part of Arthur Fiedler and his 85 Boston Symphony artists to their tercentenarian neighbor. Governor Green has promised to attend and many other Rhode Islanders are planning to sit around the tables and listen to the program of works by their home-town and other composers.

Mr. Fiedler has arranged the program in three groups, the second of which will be conducted by Dr. Leps, who is to preside over the presentation of numbers by Hugh F. MacColl, Mrs. Clarence A. Barbour, Glinka and Tschaikowski. Mr. MacColl's tone poem, "Arabs," and Mrs. Barbour's "Chamonix Suite," with orchestral arrangement by Dr. Leps, are the selections chosen. Another Rhode Island composition, Raymond G. William's "Rhode Island Forward March," will open the festivities.

As concertgoers know, the "Pops" are "popular" summer programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose personnel is slightly reduced for the warm season. The music as a rule embraces the less "forbidding" compositions among the better orchestral classics and works of modern times. The atmosphere is informal and often jovial, tables being set around the hall to accommodate parties of various sizes. Yes, there are beverages which one may sip to dulcet strains. For years the "Pops" have been a pleasant and tuneful tradition in Boston's musical history.

The program for the coming Plantations Night is announced to begin at 8:30 when Conductor Fiedler will lead off the following musical array:

"Rhode Island Forward March"	Raymond G. Williams
Overture to "Euranthe"	Weber
"Rondino"	Beethoven-Kreisler
"La Valse"	Ravel
Conducted by Arthur Fiedler.
Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla"	Glinka
"Arabs"	Hugh Mac Coll
"Chamounix Suite"	Barbour-Leps
"Moonlight's Magic Spell"
"Sunrise on Mt. Blanc"
Finale of Fifth Symphony	Tschaikowski
Conducted by Dr. Wassili Leps.
"Fortune Teller" (Selection)	Herbert
"Lalaguena"	Lecuona-Grofe
"Indian War Dance"	Skilton
Conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

◇ ◇ ◇

Garden Party Musicale

At the benefit garden party and musicale at "Wyndstowe," the Bristol residence of Mr. and Mrs. Wallis E. Howe, Wednesday from 4 to 7 o'clock, the program will be given by John Davenport, baritone; Marianne Channon, harpist; Fred Lees, pianist, and Florence Ruyffelaere, dancer. The affair is for the benefit of the Church Employment and Advisory Bureau.

Mr. Davenport, former winner in the voice contest of the National Federation of Music Clubs, church, radio and recital soloist, will sing two groups including "Plaisir d'Amour," Martini; "Mattinata," Leoncavallo; the Prologue from Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci";; "Come to the Fair," Easthope Martin; "Ma Little Banjo," Dichmont, and Albert Hay Malette's setting of "The Lord's Prayer."

He will be accompanied by Mr. Lees who, as soloist, will play "Ricordanzi," Franz Liszt, and Chopin's Etude in C-major. Mr. Lees has studied with the late George Slocum, Avis Bliven Charbonnel and Felix Fox. For three years he toured with "Rose Marie" and has concertized extensively. He has lately been with a Providence theatre orchestra.

Miss Channon's selections will be "Chanson de guillet matin," Perilhou; "Clair de Lune," Debussy; "Le bon petit roi," Grandjanny; "Fantasie," Thomas; "Fraicheur," Salzedo, and "The Music Box," Ponitz. A Providence girl, Miss Channon won a French Government award which enabled her to study with Marcel Grandjanny, the noted harpist, at the Fontainbleau School of Music, from which she was graduated in 1932. Since then she has appeared extensively in New York City and throughout New England.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Five

ss man, ction as died mu-
c poem,
ng, Mrs.
of piano and for be repreer piano
by-Was-fine or-enactment of a law concerts education,

Concert Calendar

AT THE POPS

At the Pops—Nightly excet at Symphony Hall, programs light and occasionally serious, by at least eighty-five meml Boston Symphony Orchestra, Fielder conducting. Refreshments, alcoholic and otherwise, may be enjoyed during the concert by those seated at the tables on the floor, and by all and sundry at the refreshment bar in the rear of the first balcony. Smoking and discreet conversation may be indulged in.

Next week will be the last but one of the fifty-first season of The Pops. Monday will be the occasion for the second "Old Timers' Night." On Tuesday the Messrs. J. M. Sanroma and Leo Litwin will be the soloists in the first Boston performance of the Poulenc Concerto in D minor for two pianos and orchestra. Ibert's Divertissement will be on the same program, as will also an arrangement of Tchaikovsky's "Meditation" by Professor Walter Raymond Spalding. On Thursday there will be a repetition of the "Request" program. Ethel Hutchinson will be the soloist in Grieg's Piano Concerto on Saturday, when the program will include a selection from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Snowmaiden" and Walter Piston's arrangement of Debussy's "Clair de Lune."

The complete programs for the week follow:

Monday Evening

"Up the Street," March .... Morse
Overture to "Martha" .... Flotow
"The Alpine Storm," A Summer Idyl.... Kunkel
Gems from Gilbert and Sullivan. Arr. by Seredy
"A Hunt in the Black Forest," Descriptive Episode .... Voelker
"Prayer of Thanksgiving," Old Dutch Hymn ... Valerius
Songs of the Old Days,
"Wine, Women and Song," Waltzes.... Strauss
"Sweet Adeline" .... Armstrong
Campus Memories.

Tuesday Evening

"Cruiser Harvard" .... Strube
"Doctrinen," Waltzes .... Eduard Strauss
Meditation .... Tchaikovsky
(Arranged by Walter R. Spalding)
Overture to "Poet and Peasant .... Suppé
Divertissement .... Ibert
Concerto in D minor for two pianos.... Poulenc
Soloists: J. M. Sanromá- Leo Litwin
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste" .... Herbert
"Deep River" .... Arranged by Jacchia
"We Saw the Sea," from "Follow the Fleet" .... Berlin

Wednesday Evening

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin".. Wagner
Ballet Music from "Aida" .... Verdi
Dagger Dance from "Natoma" .... Herbert
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld" ... Offenbach
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" .... Tchaikovsky
Song Without Words .... Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" ..... Tchaikovsky
"Artists' Life," Waltzes .... Strauss
"At Dawning" .... Gadman
First Slavonic Dance .... Dvorák

Thursday Evening

Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
Jealousy, Gypsy Tango .... Gadé
Peer Gynt, Suite .... Grieg
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes ... Strauss
Bolero .... Ravel
Largo from "Xerxes" .... Handel
Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn, ... Valerius
Rhapsody in Blue .... Gershwin
Soloist: Jesús Maria Sanromá

Friday Evening

Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ... Nicolai
"Love's Dream After the Ball" .... Czibulka
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" ... Saint-Saëns
Kammenoi Ostrow ("Rôve Angelique") ... Rubinstein
Old Dutch Hymn, Prayer of Thanksgiving, ... Valerius
Overture to "Rienzi" .... Wagner
"Estudiantina," Waltzes .... Waldteufel
University Songs
Carioca .... Youmans

Saturday Evening

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy" .... Berlioz
Overture to "Der Freischütz" .... Weber
"España," Rhapsody .... Chabrier
Dance of the Buffoons from "Snowmaiden", ... Rimsky-Korsakov
Clair de Lune .... Debussy
(Arranged by W. Piston)
Concerto for Pianoforte in A minor .... Grieg
Soloist: Ethel Hutchinson
"The Skaters," Waltzes .... Waldteufel
"Angelus" from the "Scènes Pittoresques" ... Massenet
American Patrol .... Meacham

NDAY GLOBE—JUNE 21, 1936

-Eighth Week of Pop Concerts

MUSIC AND

Last Week of Pops; Second Old Timers' Night Tomorrow

The Pop concerts in Symphony Hall enter tomorrow the last week but one of the season. Tomorrow will be the second Old Timers' Night, at which the audience will be invited to lift their voices and take part in the revival of songs from the past.

On Tuesday there will be given the first performances hereabouts of the concerto for two pianofortes by Poulenc, the modern French composer, the soloists being Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin.

Wednesday will have a middle group of Tchaikovsky, and Thursday will bring a repetition of the request program. On Saturday the soloist will be Ethel Hutchinson, noted pianist, who is then to make her Pops debut in Grieg's concerto.

The programs of the week follow:

Tomorrow—"Up the Etreet," March, Morse; Overture to "Martha," Flotow; "The Alpine Storm," a Summer idyl, Kunkel; Gems from Gilbert and Sullivan, arranged by Seredy; 'A Hunt in the Black Forest," descriptive episode, Voelker; "Prayer of Thanksgiving," old Dutch hymn, Valerius; songs of the old days, "Wine, Woman and Song," waltzes, Strauss; "Sweet Adeline," Armstrong; Campus Memories.

Tuesday—"Cruiser Harvard," Strube; "Doctrinen," waltzes, Eduard Strauss; Meditation, Tchaikovsky (arranged by Walter R. Spalding); overture to "Poet and Peasant," Suppe; Divertissement, Ibert; concerto in D minor for two pianos (first performance in Boston), Foulenc; soloists: J. M. Sanroma, Leo Litwin; selection, "Mlle Modiste," Herbert; "Deep River," arranged by Jacchia; "We Saw the Sea," from "Follow the Fleet,' Berlin.

Wednesday—Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner; ballet music from "Aida," Verdi; dagger dance from "Natoma," Herbert; overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld," Offenbach; ballet suite, "Nutcracker," Song Without Words, overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; "Artists' Life," waltzes, Strauss; "At Dawning," Cadman; first Slavonic dance, Dvorak.

Thursday—Request program repeated. Prelude to "Carmen," Bizet; overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Jealousy, Gypsy tango, Gade; Peer Gynt, suite, Grieg; "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes, Strauss; largo from "Xerxes," Handel; Bolero, Ravel; Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; Prayer of Thanksgiving, old Dutch hymn, Valerius; Rhapsody in Blue, Gershwin; soloist Jesus Maria Sanroma.

Friday—Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa; overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Love's Dream After the Ball," Czibulka; Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Kammenoi Ostrow ("Reve Angelique"), Rubinstein; old Dutch hymn, Prayer of Thanksgiving, Valerius; overture to "Rienzi," Wagner; "Estudiantina," waltzes, Waldteufel; University Songs; Carioca, Youmans.

Saturday—Hungarian march, "Rakoczy," Berlioz; overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; "Espana," rhapsody, Chabrier; Dance of the Buffoons from "Snowmaiden," Rimsky-Korsakov; Claire de Lune, arranged by W. Piston, Debussy; concerto for pianoforte in A minor, Grieg; soloist Ethel Hutchinson, "The Skaters," waltzes, Waldteufel; "Angelus," from the "Scenes Pittoresques," Massenet; American Patrol, Meacham.

Ethel Hutchinson, pianist, who will make her first appearance with the Pop Concerts at Symphony Hall on Saturday evening when she will play Grieg's concerto for pianoforte in A minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 14 1936

Johnston Fire
Richard E. Lake
Sr., and David N
Hope and Jacks
Hope: Edwin H. M
Narragansett Ste
Co., No. 1: John Cas
B. Potter and James Sy
Jamestown Fire De
Chief William L. Arno
Newport Fire Dep
Tanner, Dan

Boston Symphony "Pops" Plans Rhode Island Night Wednesday

Wassili Leps to Appear as Guest Conductor in Hub Concert

PLAYING compositions by Rhode Islanders and with Dr. Wassili Leps as guest conductor, the Boston Symphony "Pops" will hold "Rhode Island Night" Wednesday evening in Symphony Hall, Boston. The occasion is a musical bow on the part of Arthur Fiedler and his 85 Boston Symphony artists to their tercentenarian neighbor. Governor Green has promised to attend and many other Rhode Islanders are planning to sit around the tables and listen to the program of works by their home-town and other composers.

Mr. Fiedler has arranged the program in three groups, the second of which will be conducted by Dr. Leps, who is to preside over the presentation of numbers by Hugh F. MacColl, Mrs. Clarence A. Barbour, Glinka and Tschaikowski. Mr. MacColl's tone poem, "Arabs," and Mrs. Barbour's "Chamonix Suite," with orchestral arrangement by Dr. Leps, are the selections chosen. Another Rhode Island composition, Raymond G. William's "Rhode Island Forward March," will open the festivities.

As concertgoers know, the "Pops" are "popular" summer programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose personnel is slightly reduced for the warm season. The music as a rule embraces the less "forbidding" compositions among the better orchestral classics and works of modern times. The atmosphere is informal and often jovial, tables being set around the hall to accommodate parties of various sizes. Yes, there are beverages which one may sip to dulcet strains. For years the "Pops" have been a pleasant and tuneful tradition in Boston's musical history.

The program for the coming Plantations Night is announced to begin at 8:30 when Conductor Fiedler will lead off the following musical array:

"Rhode Island Forward March" ...... Raymond G. Williams
Overture to "Euranthe" .... Weber
"Rondino" .... Beethoven-Kreisler
"La Valse" .... Ravel
Conducted by Arthur Fiedler.
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla" .... Glinka
"Arabs" .... Hugh Mac Coll
"Chamounix Suite" .... Barbour-Leps

"Moonlight's Magic Spell"
"Sunrise on Mt. Blanc"
Finale of Fifth Symphony ... Tschaikowski
Conducted by Dr. Wassili Leps.
"Fortune Teller" (Selection) ..... Herbert
"Lalaguena" .... Lecuona-Grofe
"Indian War Dance" .... Skilton
Conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

◆ ◆ ◆

Garden Party Musicale

At the benefit garden party and musicale at "Wyndstowe," the Bristol residence of Mr. and Mrs. Wallis E. Howe, Wednesday from 4 to 7 o'clock, the program will be given by John Davenport, baritone; Marianne Channon, harpist; Fred Lees, pianist, and Florence Ruyffelaere, dancer. The affair is for the benefit of the Church Employment and Advisory Bureau.

Mr. Davenport, former winner in the voice contest of the National Federation of Music Clubs, church, radio and recital soloist, will sing two groups including "Plaisir d'Amour," Martini; "Mattinata," Leoncavallo; the Prologue from Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci";; "Come to the Fair," Easthope Martin; "Ma Little Banjo," Dichmont, and Albert Hay Malette's setting of "The Lord's Prayer."

He will be accompanied by Mr. Lees who, as soloist, will play "Ricordanzi," Franz Liszt, and Chopin's Etude in C-major. Mr. Lees has studied with the late George Slocum, Avis Bliven Charbonnel and Felix Fox. For three years he toured with "Rose Marie" and has concertized extensively. He has lately been with a Providence theatre orchestra.

Miss Channon's selections will be "Chanson de guillet matin," Perilhou; "Clair de Lune," Debussy; "Le bon petit roi," Grandjanny; "Fantasie," Thomas; "Fraicheur," Salzedo, and "The Music Box," Ponitz. A Providence girl, Miss Channon won a French Government award which enabled her to study with Marcel Grandjanny, the noted harpist, at the Fontainbleau School of Music, from which she was graduated in 1932. Since then she has appeared extensively in New York City and throughout New England.

Pops Enter Last 2 Weeks; Soloists Announced

The Pop concerts in Symphony Hall enter tomorrow the last week but one of the season. Arthur Fiedler, announcing the programs to be presented by the Pops Orchestra under his direction, lists numerous features of interest. Tomorrow will be the second Old Timers' Night, at which the audience will be invited to lift their voices and take part in the revival of songs from the past. On Tuesday, there will be given the first performance hereabouts of the Concerto for Two Pianofortes by Poulenc, the modern French composer, the soloists being Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin. Wednesday will have a middle group of Tchaikovsky, and Thursday will bring a repetition of the request program. On Saturday, the soloist will be Ethel Hutchinson, the noted pianist who is then to make her Pops debut in Grieg's Concerto.

The programs for the week follow:

TOMORROW
Old Timers' Night

"Up the Street," march .... Morse
Overture to "Martha" .... Flotow
"The Alpine Storm," a summer idyl ... Kunkel
Gems from Gilbert and Sullivan ... Arranged by Seredy
"A Hunt in the Black Forest," descriptive episode .... Voelker
"Prayer of Thanksgiving," old Dutch hymn .... Valerius
Songs of the Old Days
"Wine, Women and Song," waltzes. Strauss
"Sweet Adeline" .... Armstrong
Campus Memories

TUESDAY, JUNE 23

"Cruiser Harvard" .... Strube
"Doctrinen," waltzes ...... Edward Strauss
Meditation .... Tchaikovsky
(Arranged by Walter R. Spalding)
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" ...
Divertissement .... Ibert
Concerto in D minor for two pianos ... Poulenc
(First performance in Boston)
Soloists: J. M. Sanroma-Leo Litwin
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste" .... Herbert
"Deep River" .... Arranged by Jacchia
"We Saw the Sea," from "Follow the Fleet" .... Berlin

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 24

Introduction to act III, "Lohengrin" ... Wagner
Ballet music from "Aida" .... Verdi
Dagger dance from "Natoma" .... Herbert
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld" ... Offenbach
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" .. Tchaikovsky
Song Without Words .... Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" .. Tchaikovsky
"Artists' Life," waltzes .... Strauss
"At Dawning" .... Cadman
First Slavonic Dance .... Dvorak

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 25
(Request program (repeated)

Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
Jealousy, gypsy tango .... Gade
Peer Gynt, suite .... Grieg
By the Beautiful Blue Danube, waltzes ... Strauss
Largo from "Xerxes" .... Handel
Bolero .... Ravel
Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch hymn ... Valerius
Rhapsody in Blue .... Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 26

Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" .... Nicolai
Love's Dream After the Ball ...... Czibulka
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" ... Saint-Saens
Kammenoi Ostrow (Reve Angelique) ... Rubinstein
Old Dutch hymn, Prayer of Thanksgiving ... Valerius
Overture to "Rienzi" .... Wagner
Estudiantina, waltzes .... Waldteufel
University songs
Carioca .... Youmans

SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 27

Hungarian March, Rakoczy .... Berlioz
Overture to "Der Freischutz" .... Weber
Espana, rhapsody .... Chabrier
Dance of the Buffoons from "Snowmaiden" .... Rimsky-Korsakov
Clair de Lune .... Debussy
(Arranged by W. Piston)
Concerto for Pianoforte in A minor ... Grieg
Soloist—Ethel Hutchinson
The Skaters, waltzes .... Waldteufel
Angelus from the Scenes Pittoresques ... Massenet

BOSTON, MASS.

MAY 22 1936

Serge Koussevitzky Seeking A Genius of Modern Music

32

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Goes Abroad

Symphony Conductor Welcomes Vacation

By MORRIS HASTINGS

I stood in the wings of Symphony Hall in Boston listening to the Boston Symphony Orchestra proclaim the heaven-storming finale of BRAHMS' First Symphony.

The occasion was the orchestra's final rehearsal for the season's final concert, of which the radio audience heard a portion.

While the last triumphant theme still was echoing through the hall, Dr. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, the orchestra's incomparable conductor, dashed off the stage and past me, a grey sweater over his shoulders, his eyes shining and his cheeks flushed with excitement.

Looking neither to left or right, he hurried up the stairs leading to his dressing room. At a more leisurely pace, I followed him and joined a group of people waiting outside the door of the dressing room to speak to the maestro when he should be ready to see us.

Smiling and Gracious

In five minutes or so he reappeared, smiling and gracious, dressed in his street clothes, and greeted us all with a graceful gesture. Turning to the gentleman nearest him, he addressed him in German, ushered him into the

(Continued on Page 13)

5-6 x

He's Tired, and Glad of A Vacation

(Continued from Page 1)

room and with a smile to us again closed the door.

Catching sight of me as the first visitor took his departure he came towards me, saying:

"Do you mind waiting until after I see these others? We'll have a longer time to talk."

And so, one by one, he visited with the others, talking now in French, now in English and now in Russian.

No sooner had it come my turn and I had entered the room, than Dr. KOUSSEVITZKY said:

"But I haven't seen you all year. How are you? Why haven't you been in to see me?"

Sitting beside me on a large sofa in a corner of the room, underneath a large and striking painting of him conducting the orchestra, Dr. KOUSSEVITZKY told me of his plans for the Summer.

"I'll be glad of a vacation," he said. "I'm tired. It has been a taxing season. Very soon after the last concert I'm sailing for Europe.

"That rests me. And then I feel that I must go over to talk with my friends, with composers, and to find out what is being done musically abroad.

"My wife and I will spend several weeks at our home just outside of Paris, several more in Aix-les-Bains and then we come back to the United States in plenty of time for the three concerts the Boston Symphony is giving in Stockbridge in August."

Talks With Animation

The conversation turned to the splendor of the Symphony season now concluded.

When a subject interests Dr. KOUSSEVITZKY, he—and his listener—forget the conductor's admitted fatigue. He talks with animation and with warmth, his eyes glow, his hands make gestures that gracefully emphasize his statements.

Also, Dr. KOUSSEVITZKY's cordiality and charm of manner make the interviewer forget whatever feeling of awe he may have had at first in talking with one of the great musicians of our time. He feels, rather, that Dr. KOUSSEVITZKY is a friend with whom one may speak frankly and with whom one may share enthusiasms.

Dr. KOUSSEVITZKY is widely known as a champion of modern music; but this year his programs have been fashioned largely out of the so-called "standard repertoire" — BEETHOVEN, BRAHMS, BACH.

"When we have found a modern composition worthy of performance this year we have played it," he said. "For example, we played the EDWARD BURLINGAME HILL Sinfonietta and the ROY HARRIS Symphony.

"But the 'modern composer' is neith[illegible] prolific

Devoted to His Orchestra

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who tells MORRIS HASTINGS in the accompanying interview that he "wouldn't think of leaving it."

Many of the young composers who then sounded so promising had after all only a few things to say.

Looking For A Genius

"Don't be discouraged, though, because there isn't a genius of the calibre of BEETHOVEN or BRAHMS or BACH among the young modern composers.

"Music has been going through a period of experimentation for the past 12 or 15 years. Before long a genius will appear who will be able to sum up magnificently all the best that has gone before.

"All we can do is wait."

As I took my leave, I thanked Dr. KOUSSEVITZKY for not having accepted the invitation to succeed ARTURO TOSCANINI as conductor of the New York Philharmonic.

"Oh," he exlaimed, "I am so devoted to the great Boston orchestra that I wouldn't think of leaving it."

5-6

Boston and the orchestra should be grateful for that feeling.

Boston Symphony "Pops" Off To A Good Start

Even though the Boston Symphony "Pops" season is only a few weeks old, it already has furnished a number of novelties and gala nights.

Unquestionably ARTHUR FIEDLER, the "Pops" orchestra's capable and popular conductor, will place many of the best novelties on the Saturday evening concerts, portions of which are broadcast over the NBC-WJZ network from 8.30 to 9.30.

Probably the most entertaining of the novelties Mr. FIEDLER has offered to date this season is "Di-

To Talk With Composers

vertissements" by the contemporary French composer, JACQUES IBERT.

The composition is a delightfully constructed, tongue-in-cheek affair in which the composer has sport with MENDELSSOHN's Wedding March, with STRAUSS' "Blue Danube" Waltz and with the Soldier's Chorus from "FAUST."

The most festive of the concerts during the opening week was on May 7 when GEORGE GERSHWIN appeared as guest pianist-composer-conductor with the orchestra.

With the orchestra, which gave him an excellent accompaniment under the baton of ARTHUR FIEDLER, Mr. GERSHWIN played his concerto and his famous "Rhapsody in Blue."

As pianist GERSHWIN displayed those amazing gifts for playing his own intricate jazz rhythms with a clarity and virtuosity that have to be heard to be believed.

He conducted the "Pops" orchestra in selections from his folk-opera, "PORGY and BESS."

While GERSHWIN has brilliance and dash as pianist, as a conductor he is overly deliberate and monotonous—all of which makes one eager to hear Mr. FIEDLER direct the same excellent score, possibly during the Saturday evening broadcasts.

That portion of the "Pops" program to be broadcast on May 16 includes TSCHAIKOWSKY's popular "1812" Overture and Sir EDWARD ELGAR's "Pomp and Circumstance" March. The orchestra has made records of both these compositions.

M.H.

5-6 x

Conductor

ARTHUR FIEDLER is conductor of the Boston Symphony "Pops" Orchestra which is heard over the NBC-WJZ network Saturdays from 8.30 to 9.30 P. M.

5-6

KANSAS CITY, MO.
JOURNAL POST

MAY 31 1936

HERE AND THERE

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic festival in the Berkshire hills August 13, 15 and 16.

Mr. Downes will give a series of three lectures devoted to the symphonies to be played at the festival by the Bostonians under the baton of Kousseviztky.

The festival, which is nonprofit making venture, opens Monday night of this week. It has sustaining members and patrons from a score of states.

* * *

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 24 1936

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has found work while other ensembles rest. Besides appearing at the Berkshire festival in August, the Bostonians and Mr. Koussevitzky will give several concerts in connection with Harvard's tercentenary observance in September.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

MAY 20 1936

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY SAILS FOR EUROPE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, sailed today from New York for a vacation in Europe, on the S. S. Manhattan. He returns to this country in July to conduct the festival the orchestra is to give in Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

33

Y, JUNE 11, 1936

ayers --- News of the

More on the Mystery of Muck; Music Activities from WPA

Editorial in Jacob's Orchestra Monthly Revives Discussion of Dr. Muck's Arrest

Allusion was made in this place yesterday to the mystery that still largely surrounds the arrest of Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, during the war. By coincidence the Music Editor has just received a copy of an editorial in the current issue of Jacob's Orchestra Monthly. The burden of the editorial has to do with a rather scurrilous reference, some time ago, to the Muck incident by a book reviewer for one of the music magazines. The portion of the editorial that gives some details about the Muck arrest that will be new to many readers follows:

"A goodly number of years ago we had been informed by Carl E. Gardner, during the period under discussion a member of the Boston Symphony who had been requested by the Department of Justice to keep an eye on alien players in the orchestra, that not only was it untrue that Dr. Muck had refused to play the "Star-Spangled Banner," but that in addition this much-maligned director had raised his voice with others, after the matter was brought to his attention, to persuade Major Higginson to authorize its playing; and in addition that it was the well-considered opinion of those acting in a semi-official capacity on the case that his arrest was because of a desire to protect him from the consequences of popular hysteria superinduced by the rabble-rousing activities of witch-hunting newspapers, in order that the American public might not at a later date be seriously regretful of some overt act of violence directed against a truly eminent visitor within our gates.

"In extension of proof that the psychology involved in this matter of not playing the national anthem in Boston Symphony concerts was not the psychology of Dr. Muck, we quote direct from Mr. Gardner's letter in response to our request that he check us for fact on the matters set forth in our immediately preceding paragraph, and wherein is disclosed an interesting incident that occurred after Dr. Muck was interned, and which so far as we know has never before been accorded publication:

" 'Dr. Muck was arrested on Thursday of the week on which we were scheduled to play Bach's "Passion Music." Ernst Schmidt, the assistant conductor, was called upon to direct the Friday afternoon concert. Before going on the stage, orders were sent down to omit the "Star-Spangled Banner" (theretofore we had been playing it regularly). Everybody yelled, "Why?," and we were told that Major Higginson did not consider the national anthem appropriate for a concert of this type. I think it was unanimous, and I know Mr. Schmidt was included in the affirmative, to play the national anthem against orders, which we did. In so far as I know, nobody was blamed for it. And again on Saturday night, we repeated it.' "

WPA Activities

At the concert by the State Symphony Orchestra, Harry Ellis Dickson conductor, in the Boston Opera House tomorrow evening the program will consist of the "Roman Carnival" Overture by Berlioz, Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, Grieg's Piano Concerto and "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" by Dukas. Hazel Hallett will be the piano soloist. Admission to the concert, which begins at 8.15, will be free as usual.

For the week beginning June 14 and ending June 21 the WPA bands hereabouts will devote themselves entirely to American music. In addition, the concert of the Commonwealth Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Alexander Thiede, at the Opera House on Friday evening, June 19, will have an American program. Lucille Monaghan, pianist, will be the soloist in F. S. Converse's Concertino for piano and orchestra; and the other numbers will be the Finale from Edward Burlingame Hill's Sinfonietta, Sandor Harmati's "Prelude to a Melodrama," William Grant Still's "Darker America" and Laurence Powell's "Country Fair" Suite. The last three works are said to be new to Boston.

TULSA, OKLA
TRIBUNE

MAY 24 1936

FALLIN[illegible] in line with the movement [illegible] make the finest literature of America available to the nation's blind, Braille Institute of America announces plans for publications in the Braille language, of Lloyd C. Douglas' GREEN LIGHT; Philip Hale's BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA NOTES, edited by John N. Burk, and THE SMART ALEC, by Irvin S. Cobb.

MUSICAL DIGEST
E. STROUDSBURG, PA.

MAY — 1936

PHILIP HALE'S BOSTON SYMPHONY PROGRAMME NOTES, edited by John Burk. A legacy of brilliant writings, compiled from the critic's Boston Symphony program notes and his Boston Herald writings, which bring together both the critic and historian. Of inestimable value to the music lover and the musician alike. (Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York.)

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

MAY 24 1936

Berkshire Festival Programs

Serge Koussevitzky sailed last Wednesday for a vacation in France before returning late in July to begin rehearsals with the Boston Symphony for its three concerts in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be held in a large tent on the Hanna Farm between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, August 13, 15 and 16. The programs will be:

August 13: Bach, Chorale; Beethoven, "Egmont" overture, Symphony No. 7; Sibelius, Symphony No. 2.

August 13: Rimsky-Korsakoff, The Russian Easter; Moussorgsky, Prelude to "Khovantchina," Debussy, "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel, "Daphnis et Chloe" suite No. 2; Brahms, Symphony No. 2.

August 16: Mendelssohn, Italian Symphony; Wagner, Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger"; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5.

In connection with the tercentenary celebration of Harvard University, the Boston Symphony will give two concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, on September 16 and 18, and one in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on September 17. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will sing with the orchestra in one of the concerts. The orchestra will begin its fifty-sixth regular season and the thirteenth under Dr. Koussevitzky's leadership on October 9 in Symphony Hall.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM

MAY 31 1936

The Braille Institute of America has recently published "The Green Light," by Lloyd C. Douglas, and "The Hurricane," by Nordhoff and Hall. Permission has been granted by the publishers to transcribe into Braille, Booth Tarkington's "The Gentleman From Indiana," and "Philip Hale's Boston Symphony Orchestra." The Matilda Ziegler magazine for the Blind will publish in moon type, William Heylinger's "Dark Conquest." Dealing with a blind man and his dog, this book presents a typical case of work for the blind, such as is frequently dealt with by the Seeing Eye Foundation.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

MAY 1936

Music and The Drama

PRAISE FROM RUSSIA FOR TCHAIKOVSKY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA RECORDS

Word just received from Klin, Russia, where Tchaikovsky lived, and where his house is now a museum, writes Moses Smith in the Transcript, emphasizes how large an audience an organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra has outside of the hall where it happens to be playing.

The allusion here, is not, as might be suspected, to the radio, but to phonograph. Hearing the Victor recording of the Tchaikovsky "Pathetique" Symphony by the Boston Orchestra under Koussevitzky, the director of the Tchaikovsky Museum wrote to another Tchaikovsky scholar, Nicholas Slonimsky:

"Yesterday we received the records of the Sixth Symphony. We played it over on a good gramaphone. A magnificent, sonorous recording! The interpretation of the Symphony is in the tradition of the concert on Oct. 16, 1893, under Tchaikovsky's direction. Many conductors have now departed from this tradition and it was all the more gratifying to hear the Symphony interpreted so intimately close to the true spirit of Tchaikovsky."

At the phonograph recording sessions in Symphony Hall last week, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Symphony Orchestra played, for probable eventual release by Victor, Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, "Pohjola's Daughter" by Sibelius, Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, the Vivaldi Concerto in D minor arranged by Siloti, Liadov's "Enchanted Lake," Liszt's "Mephisto" Waltz, and one or two shorter items.

TROPOLITAN

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

MAY 31 1936

Olin Downes to Speak At Symphonic Festival

Stockbridge, May 30—Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire symphonic festival between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire hills, August 13, 15 and 16.

Mr Downes will give a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to be played at the festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr Koussevitzky's baton. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire playhouse. The public is invited.

This was the announcement made to community chairmen from three states assembled in Stockbridge last week. Mrs Bruce Crane, of Dalton, formerly of Hartford, Ct., will assist with illustrations at the piano.

"We are delighted to be able to bring such an outstanding attraction as Dr Koussevitzky and his orchestra to the Berkshire," said Mrs Carlos de Heredia, acting president of the festival in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. "We are sure that Mr Downes's coming will add immeasurably to the attraction."

The subscription campaign for Berkshire's musical event, a nonprofit-making vetnure opens the first of next month. Already there has been a large response. The festival has nearly 1000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons, according to the treasurer, John C. Lynch, former vice president of the New York Telephone company.

Among the outstanding supporters of the plan to make the Berkshires the summer musical center of Amerca are: Albert Spalding, Mrs Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia, Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthrop and Mrs W. Murray Crane.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 20 1936

Dr. Koussevitzky Announces Festival Program Before Sailing for Europe

Complete Programs Announced for Berkshire Event, Aug. 13, 15 and 16—Boston Symphony Orchestra To Play at Harvard Tercentenary in September

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra sailed for France today on the S.S. Manhattan and will enjoy a much needed rest in Paris and the Bavarian Alps before returning to America to conduct his orchestra for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug 13, 15 and 16. He plans to return in July.

Before sailing, Dr. Koussevitzky expressed keen interest in the Festival and announced his complete programs for the three days. Readers of The Eagle are asked to save the programs for future reference.

Complete Programs

The first will consist of a Chorale of Bach, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," the same composer's Seventh Symphony, and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. The second program will include Rimsky-Korsakov's Overture, "The Russian Easter"; the Prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"; the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis and Chloe", and the Second Symphony of Brahms: The third program will consist of Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; two Wagnerian excerpts—the preludes to "Lohengrin" and to "Die Meistersinger"; and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

To Play At Harvard

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will figure prominently in the tercentenary activities of Harvard University in September. The orchestra will be heard by the many delegates and guests of the occasion who will then be in Cambridge. The calendar of the Tercentenary will include two concerst by the orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston, on September 16 and 18, and another in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on September 17, as part of the celebration. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will join the orchestra in the third concert. The 56th season of th orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on October 9, under Dr. Koussevitzky's conductorship.

Accompanying Dr. Koussevitzky on his trip are Madame Koussevitzky and his niece, Miss Olga Maumoff.

THIS CLIPPING ...
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

MAY 22 1936

* * *

Dr. Koussevitzky to Return in July

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, sailed from New York on the S.S. Manhattan this week, for France, after a Boston Symphony season of 110 concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky plans to return to America at the end of July to conduct the music festival which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give Aug. 13, 15 and 16 at Stockbridge, in the Berkshires.

While in France, Dr. Koussevitzky will spend most of his time in his Paris house and at a mountain resort.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

MAY 26 1936

Downes to Give 3 Talks On Berkshire Programs

August Festival Subscriptions to Open on Monday

Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction at the Hanna Farm between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on August 13, 15 and 16. The lectures will be held on the festival days at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, with Mrs. Bruce Crane, of Dalton, Mass., as the assistant pianist. The public was invited.

The subscription campaign for the festival, it was also announced yesterday, will begin on Monday. Seventy-one patrons and 1,000 sustaining members have already been enrolled, according to John C. Lynch, treasurer, a former vice-president of the New York Telephone Company. Among prominent supporters of this plan to make the Berkshires one of America's principal summer music centers are Albert Spalding, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival committee; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, acting president; Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle jr., Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Greenville L. Winthrop and Mrs. W. Murray Crane.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 31 1936

MUSIC

Olin Downes Will Give Lectures At Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Mass., May 30 — Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire Hills, Aug. 13, 15, and 16.

Mr. Downes will give a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to be played at the Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse. The public is invited.

This announcement was made to community chairmen from three states assembled in Stockbridge. Mrs. Bruce Crane, of Dalton, formerly of Hartford, Conn., will assist with illustrations at the piano.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now in Europe enjoying a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July.

"We are delighted to be able to bring such an outstanding attraction as the great Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra to the Berkshires," said Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, acting president of the Festival in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. "We are sure that Mr. Downes' coming will add immeasurably to the attraction."

The subscription campaign for Berkshire's outstanding musical event, a non-profit-making venture opens the first of next month. The Festival has nearly 1000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons, according to the treasurer, John C. Lynch, former vice president of the New York Telephone Company.

Among the outstanding supporters of the plan to make the Berkshires the summer musical center of America are: Albert Spalding, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. W. Murray Crane and a host of others.

The Symphonies on the program are: Beethoven's 7th, Sibelius' 2d, Brahms' 2d, Mendelssohn's "Italian" and Tschaikowsky's 5th.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

JUNE 11, 1936

yers --- News of the

More on the Mystery of Muck; Music Activities from WPA

Editorial in Jacob's Orchestra Monthly Revives Discussion of Dr. Muck's Arrest

Allusion was made in this place yesterday to the mystery that still largely surrounds the arrest of Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, during the war. By coincidence the Music Editor has just received a copy of an editorial in the current issue of Jacob's Orchestra Monthly. The burden of the editorial has to do with a rather scurrilous reference, some time ago, to the Muck incident by a book reviewer for one of the music magazines. The portion of the editorial that gives some details about the Muck arrest that will be new to many readers follows:

"A goodly number of years ago we had been informed by Carl E. Gardner, during the period under discussion a member of the Boston Symphony who had been requested by the Department of Justice to keep an eye on alien players in the orchestra, that not only was it untrue that Dr. Muck had refused to play the "Star-Spangled Banner," but that in addition this much-maligned director had raised his voice with others, after the matter was brought to his attention, to persuade Major Higginson to authorize its playing; and in addition that it was the well-considered opinion of those acting in a semi-official capacity on the case that his arrest was because of a desire to protect him from the consequences of popular hysteria superinduced by the rabble-rousing activities of witch-hunting newspapers, in order that the American public might not at a later date be seriously regretful of some overt act of violence directed against a truly eminent visitor within our gates.

"In extension of proof that the psychology involved in this matter of not playing the national anthem in Boston Symphony concerts was not the psychology of Dr. Muck, we quote direct from Mr. Gardner's letter in response to our request that he check us for fact on the matters set forth in our immediately preceding paragraph, and wherein is disclosed an interesting incident that occurred after Dr. Muck was interned, and which so far as we know has never before been accorded publication:

" 'Dr. Muck was arrested on Thursday of the week on which we were scheduled to play Bach's "Passion Music." Ernst Schmidt, the assistant conductor, was called upon to direct the Friday afternoon concert. Before going on the stage, orders were sent down to omit the "Star-Spangled Banner" (theretofore we had been playing it regularly). Everybody yelled, "Why?," and we were told that Major Higginson did not consider the national anthem appropriate for a concert of this type. I think it was unanimous, and I know Mr. Schmidt was included in the affirmative, to play the national anthem against orders, which we did. In so far as I know, nobody was blamed for it. And again on Saturday night, we repeated it.' "

WPA Activities

At the concert by the State Symphony Orchestra, Harry Ellis Dickson conductor, in the Boston Opera House tomorrow evening the program will consist of the "Roman Carnival" Overture by Berlioz, Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, Grieg's Piano Concerto and "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" by Dukas. Hazel Hallett will be the piano soloist. Admission to the concert, which begins at 8.15, will be free as usual.

For the week beginning June 14 and ending June 21 the WPA bands hereabouts will devote themselves entirely to American music. In addition, the concert of the Commonwealth Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Alexander Thiede, at the Opera House on Friday evening, June 19, will have an American program. Lucille Monaghan, pianist, will be the soloist in F. S. Converse's Concertino for piano and orchestra; and the other numbers will be the Finale from Edward Burlingame Hill's Sinfonietta, Sandor Harmati's "Prelude to a Melodrama," William Grant Still's "Darker America" and Laurence Powell's "Country Fair" Suite. The last three works are said to be new to Boston.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM

MAY 31 1936

The Braille Institute of America has recently published "The Green Light," by Lloyd C. Douglas, and "The Hurricane," by Nordhoff and Hall, Permission has been granted by the publishers to transcribe into Braille, Booth Tarkington's "The Gentleman From Indiana," and "Philip Hale's Boston Symphony Orchestra." The Matilda Ziegler magazine for the Blind will publish in moon type, William Heylinger's "Dark Conquest." Dealing with a blind man and his dog, this book presents a typical case of work for the blind, such as is frequently dealt with by the Seeing Eye Foundation.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

MAY 20 1936

Music and The Drama

PRAISE FROM RUSSIA FOR TCHAIKOVSKY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA RECORDS

Word just received from Klin, Russia, where Tchaikovsky lived, and where his house is now a museum, writes Moses Smith in the Transcript, emphasizes how large an audience an organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra has outside of the hall where it happens to be playing.

The allusion here, is not, as might be suspected, to the radio, but to phonograph. Hearing the Victor recording of the Tchaikovsky "Pathetique" Symphony by the Boston Orchestra under Koussevitzky, the director of the Tchaikovsky Museum wrote to another Tchaikovsky scholar, Nicholas Slonimsky:

"Yesterday we received the records of the Sixth Symphony. We played it over on a good gramaphone. A magnificent, sonorous recording! The interpretation of the Symphony is in the tradition of the concert on Oct. 16, 1893, under Tchaikovsky's direction. Many conductors have now departed from this tradition and it was all the more gratifying to hear the Symphony interpreted so intimately close to the true spirit of Tchaikovsky."

At the phonograph recording sessions in Symphony Hall last week, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Symphony Orchestra played, for probable eventual release by Victor, Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, "Pohjola's Daughter" by Sibelius, Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, the Vivaldi Concerto in D minor arranged by Siloti, Liadov's "Enchanted Lake," Liszt's "Mephisto" Waltz, and one or two shorter items.

TROPOLITAN

TULSA, OKLA
TRIBUNE

MAY 24 1936

FALLIN[illegible] in line with the movement [illegible] make the finest literature of America available to the nation's blind, Braille Institute of America announces plans for publications in the Braille language, of Lloyd C. Douglas' GREEN LIGHT; Philip Hale's BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA NOTES, edited by John N. Burk, and THE SMART ALEC, by Irvin S. Cobb.

* * *

MUSICAL DIGEST
E. STROUDSBURG, PA.

MAY — 1936

PHILIP HALE'S BOSTON SYMPHONY PROGRAMME NOTES, edited by John Burk. A legacy of brilliant writings, compiled from the critic's Boston Symphony program notes and his Boston Herald writings, which bring together both the critic and historian. Of inestimable value to the music lover and the musician alike. (Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York.)

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

MAY 24 1936

Berkshire Festival Programs

Serge Koussevitzky sailed last Wednesday for a vacation in France before returning late in July to begin rehearsals with the Boston Symphony for its three concerts in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be held in a large tent on the Hanna Farm between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, August 13, 15 and 16. The programs will be:

August 13: Bach, Chorale; Beethoven, "Egmont" overture, Symphony No. 7; Sibelius, Symphony No. 2.

August 13: Rimsky-Korsakoff, The Russian Easter; Moussorgsky, Prelude to "Khovantchina," Debussy, "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel, "Daphnis et Chloe" suite No. 2; Brahms, Symphony No. 2.

August 16: Mendelssohn, Italian Symphony; Wagner, Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger"; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5.

In connection with the tercentenary celebration of Harvard University, the Boston Symphony will give two concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, on September 16 and 18, and one in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on September 17. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will sing with the orchestra in one of the concerts. The orchestra will begin its fifty-sixth regular season and the thirteenth under Dr. Koussevitzky's leadership on October 9 in Symphony Hall.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

MAY 31 1936

Olin Downes to Speak At Symphonic Festival

Stockbridge, May 30—Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire symphonic festival between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire hills, August 13, 15 and 16.

Mr Downes will give a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to be played at the festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr Koussevitzky's baton. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire playhouse. The public is invited.

This was the announcement made to community chairmen from three states assembled in Stockbridge last week. Mrs Bruce Crane, of Dalton, formerly of Hartford, Ct., will assist with illustrations at the piano.

"We are delighted to be able to bring such an outstanding attraction as Dr Koussevitzky and his orchestra to the Berkshire," said Mrs Carlos de Heredia, acting president of the festival in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. "We are sure that Mr Downes's coming will add immeasurably to the attraction."

The subscription campaign for Berkshire's musical event, a non-profit-making vetnure opens the first of next month. Already there has been a large response. The festival has nearly 1000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons, according to the treasurer, John C. Lynch, former vice president of the New York Telephone company.

Among the outstanding supporters of the plan to make the Berkshires the summer musical center of America are: Albert Spalding, Mrs Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia, Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthrop and Mrs W. Murray Crane.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 20 1936

Dr. Koussevitzky Announces Festival Program Before Sailing for Europe

Complete Programs Announced for Berkshire Event, Aug. 13, 15 and 16—Boston Symphony Orchestra To Play at Harvard Tercentenary in September

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra sailed for France today on the S. S. Manhattan and will enjoy a much needed rest in Paris and the Bavarian Alps before returning to America to conduct his orchestra for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug 13, 15 and 16. He plans to return in July.

Before sailing, Dr. Koussevitzky expressed keen interest in the Festival and announced his complete programs for the three days. Readers of The Eagle are asked to save the programs for future reference.

Complete Programs

The first will consist of a Chorale of Bach, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," the same composer's Seventh Symphony, and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. The second program will include Rimsky-Korsakov's Overture, "The Russian Easter"; the Prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina"; Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun"; the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis and Chloe"; and the Second Symphony of Brahms: The third program will consist of Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; two Wagnerian excerpts—the preludes to "Lohengrin" and to "Die Meistersinger"; and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

To Play At Harvard

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will figure prominently in the tercentenary activities of Harvard University in September. The orchestra will be heard by the many delegates and guests of the occasion who will then be in Cambridge. The calendar of the Tercentenary will include two concert by the orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston, on September 16 and 18, and another in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on September 17, as part of the celebration. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will join the orchestra in the third concert. The 56th season of the orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on October 9, under Dr. Koussevitzky's conductorship.

Accompanying Dr. Koussevitzky on his trip are Madame Koussevitzky and his niece, Miss Olga Maumoff.

THIS CLIPPING
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

MAY 22 1936

* * *

Dr. Koussevitzky to Return in July

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, sailed from New York on the S.S. Manhattan this week, for France, after a Boston Symphony season of 110 concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky plans to return to America at the end of July to conduct the music festival which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give Aug. 13, 15 and 16 at Stockbridge, in the Berkshires.

While in France, Dr. Koussevitzky will spend most of his time in his Paris house and at a mountain resort.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

MAY 26 1936

Downes to Give 3 Talks On Berkshire Programs

August Festival Subscriptions to Open on Monday

Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction at the Hanna Farm between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on August 13, 15 and 16. The lectures will be held on the festival days at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, with Mrs. Bruce Crane, of Dalton, Mass., as the assistant pianist. The public was invited.

The subscription campaign for the festival, it was also announced yesterday, will begin on Monday. Seventy-one patrons and 1,000 sustaining members have already been enrolled, according to John C. Lynch, treasurer, a former vice-president of the New York Telephone Company. Among prominent supporters of this plan to make the Berkshires one of America's principal summer music centers are Albert Spalding, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival committee; Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, acting president; Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle jr., Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Greenville L. Winthrop and Mrs. W. Murray Crane.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 31 1936

MUSIC

Olin Downes Will Give Lectures At Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Mass., May 30 — Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire Hills, Aug. 13, 15, and 16.

Mr. Downes will give a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to be played at the Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse. The public is invited.

This announcement was made to community chairmen from three states assembled in Stockbridge. Mrs. Bruce Crane, of Dalton, formerly of Hartford, Conn., will assist with illustrations at the piano.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now in Europe enjoying a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July.

"We are delighted to be able to bring such an outstanding attraction as the great Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra to the Berkshires," said Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, acting president of the Festival in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. "We are sure that Mr. Downes' coming will add immeasurably to the attraction."

The subscription campaign for Berkshire's outstanding musical event, a non-profit-making venture opens the first of next month. The Festival has nearly 1000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons, according to the treasurer, John C. Lynch, former vice president of the New York Telephone Company.

Among the outstanding supporters of the plan to make the Berkshires the summer musical center of America are: Albert Spalding, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. W. Murray Crane and a host of others.

The Symphonies on the program are: Beethoven's 7th, Sibelius' 2d, Brahms' 2d, Mendelssohn's "Italian" and Tschaikowsky's 5th.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

34 MAY 31 1936

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has sailed for France after a season of over 100 concerts. After a quiet sojourn in his Paris home and at a mountain resort, he will return to America at the end of July to conduct the music festival that the orchestra will give at Stockbridge, in the Berkshires, on Aug. 13, 15 and 16. The Boston Orchestra will figure prominently in the tercentenary activities at Harvard University in September. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will join the orchestra in one of the concerts. The 56th regular orchestral season will open in Symphony Hall, Oct. 9.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

MAY 31 1936

Symphonic Festival In Berkshires Set

Boston Orchestra to Play Under Koussevitzky.

Arrangements have been completed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held August 13, 15 and 16 in the Berkshire Hills, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Sergei Koussevitzky, will present the programs, and the symphonies to be performed are Beethoven's seventh, Sibelius' second, Brahms' second, Mendelssohn's "Italian," and Chaikovski's fifth.

Olin Downes will give three lectures on the symphonies in the Berkshire Playhouse, assisted by Mrs. Bruce Crane at the piano.

The festival association, a noncommercial organization, has nearly 1,000 sustaining members from a score of States, and 71 patrons. Detailed information may be obtained by addressing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 7 - 1936

O'CONNELL TO DIRECT SUMMER CONCERTS

Former Springfield-Chicopee Musician to Conduct Boston Famous 'Pops'

Charles O'Connell, former Springfield-Chicopee musician, one time music critic of The Daily News, associated with the Philadelphia Orchestra and who conducted several concerts during the trans-continental tour which that famous organization made recently, including a brilliant appearance in Springfield, has been engaged as guest conductor for the current series of Boston "Pops" concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr O'Connell will make his initial bow to the "Pops" audiences on July 2nd. Better known to most musicelovers as the author of the best-selling "Victor Book of the Symphony," Mr O'Connell is rapidly gaining recognition as a syphonic conductor of genuine ability.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

MAY 20 1936

R. KOUSSEVITZKY SAILS FOR EUROPE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past 12 years, will sail today for France from New York on the S. S. Manhattan. After a Boston Symphony season of 110 concerts, one of the most outstanding the famous orchestra has had, its conductor will have a quiet sojourn in Europe, staying in his Paris house, and at a mountain resort.

Dr. Koussevitzky will return to America at the end of July to conduct the music festival which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give at Stockbridge, in the Berkshire mountains, on Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will figure [illegible] ntly in the tercentenary acti[illegible]s of Harvard University in Sep[illegible]mber. The orchestra will be heard by the many delegates and guests of the occasion who will then be in Cambridge. The calendar of the tercentenary will include two concerts by the orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Sept. 16 and 18, and another in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Sept. 17, as part of the celebration. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliff Choral Society will join the orchestra in the third concert. The 56th season of the orchestra will open in Symp[illegible]ny Hall on Oct. 9, under Dr. Koussevitzky's conductorship.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUN 7 - 1936

MUSIC

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Downes to Join Serge Koussevitzky At Berkshire Symphonic Festvial

OLIN DOWNES, music critic of the New York Times, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire Hills, August 13, 15, and 16. Mr. Downes will give a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to be played at the festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse. Mrs. Bruce Crane, of Dalton, formerly of Hartford, Conn., will assist with illustrations at the piano. The public is invited.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now in Europe enjoying a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July. "We are delighted to be able to bring such an outstanding attraction as the great Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra to the Berkshires," said Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, acting President of the Festival in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. "We are sure that Mr. Downes' coming will add immeasurably to the attraction." The subscription campaign for Berkshire's outstanding musical event, a non-profit-making venture, opened the first of June. Already there has been a tremendous response. The Festival has nearly 1000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons, according to the Treasurer, John C. Lynch, former vice-president of the New York Telephone Company. Among the outstanding supporters of the plan to make the Berkshires the summer musical center of America are: Albert Spalding, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprangue Coolidge, Miss Certrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthorp, Mrs. W. Murray Crane and a host of others.

The Symphonies on the program are: Beethoven's 7th, Sibelius' 2nd, Brahms' 2nd, Mendelsshn's "Italian" and Tschaikowsky's 5th.

* * *

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

JUN 9 - 1936

TO ATTEND CONCERT

Twenty members of the Treble Clef Club instrumental ensemble will attend the "Pops" concert Thursday, June 11, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall. Mrs. Inga G. Palmer, accompanist for the ensemble has made arrangements for ticket reservations for the party which will leav New Bedford by automobile at p. m. and will meet Miss Margare Virgin, ensemble director, at th hall.

Concerts of the Local Week

EIGHTH WEEK OF POPS

MONDAY EVENING, JUNE 22
(Old Timers' Night)

"Up the Street," March	Morse
Overture to "Martha"	Flotow
"The Alpine Storm," a summer idyl	Kunkel
Gems from Gilbert and Sullivan.	Arranged by Seredy
"A Hunt in the Black Forest," descriptive episode	Voelker
"Prayer of Thanksgiving," old Dutch hymn	Valerius
Songs of the Old Days
"Wine, Woman and Song," Waltzes	Strauss
"Sweet Adeline"	Armstrong
Campus Memories

TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 23

"Cruiser Harvard"	Strube
"Doctrinen," Waltzes	Edward Strauss
Meditation	Tchaikovsky
(Arranged by Walter R. Spalding)
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Divertissement	Ibert
Concerto in D minor for two pianos	Poulenc
(First performance in Boston) Soloists: J. M. Sanroma; Leo Litwin
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"	Herbert
"Deep River"	Arranged by Jacchia
"We Saw the Sea," from "Follow the Fleet"	Berlin

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 24

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin,"	Wagner
Ballet Music from "Aida"	Verdi
Dagger Dance from "Natoma"	Herbert
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld"	Offenbach
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"	Tchaikovsky
Song Without Words	Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
"Artist's Life," Waltzes	Strauss
"At Dawning"	Cadman
First Slavonic Dance	Dvorak

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 25
(Request Programme, Repeated)

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Jealousy, Gypsy Tango	Gade
Peer Gynt, Suite	Grieg
Waltzes, "By the Beautiful Blue Danube"	Strauss
Largo from "Xerxes"	Handel
Bolero	Ravel
Pomp and Cirsumstance	Elgar
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn	Valerius
Rhapsody in Blue	Gershwin
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 26

Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
"Love's Dream After the Ball"	Czibulka
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saens
Kammenoi Ostrow ("Reve Angelique")	Rubinstein
Old Dutch Hymn, Prayer of Thanksgiving	Valerius
Overture to "Rienzi"	Wagner
"Estudiantina," Waltzes	Waldteufel
University Songs	Selected
Carioca	Youmans

SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 27

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy"	Berlioz
Overture to "Der Freischutz"	Weber
"Espana," Rhapsody	Chabrier
Dance of the Buffoons from "Snowmaiden"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Claire de Lune	(Arranged) W. Piston
Concerto for Pianoforte in A minor	Grieg
Soloist: Ethel Hutchinson
"The Skaters," Waltzes	Waldteufel
"Angelus" from the "Scenes Pittoresques"	Massenet
American Patrol	Meacham

John Bianchi.

CHARLES O'CONNELL TO CONDUCT BOSTON SYMPHONY 'POPS'

Further Honor for Gifted Guest Conductor of Philadelphia Orchestra

Charles O'Connell, former Springfield-Chicopee musician, one time music critic of The Daily News, associated with the Philadelphia Orchestra and who conducted several concerts during the trans-continental tour which that famous organization made recently, including a brilliant appearance in Springfield, has been engaged as guest conductor for the current series of Boston "Pops" concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr O'Connell will make his initial bow to the "Pops" audiences on July 2nd. Better known to most musicelovers as the author of the best-selling "Victor Book of the Symphony," Mr O'Connell is rapidly gaining recognition as a syphonic conductor of genuine ability.

6—D Ame

'Hearts Divided

Reunion in Stockbridge

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

PLANS move on apace for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three programs on August 13, 15, and 16.

It has been announced that the Festival will take place this year at "Holmwood," the extensive estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge instead of at the Hanna Farm where it was previously held.

"Holmwood" with its lovely gardens, rolling lawns, and artificial lakes, is ideally situated for the Festival both in its easy accessibility and the scenic beauty of the surrounding country.

The shell and the huge tent for the concerts will be placed on a gentle slope within a natural horseshoe formed by great cathedral pines. Through the trees to the northeast may be seen Laurel Lake with the Hoosac Range forming the back-drop.

* * *

AN INTERESTING feature of the Festival this year is the three program lectures to be given by Olin Downes. The distinguished critic may be heard at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge on August 12 and 14 at 11 a. m. and on August 16 at 12:15 noon.

Additional attractions during Festival Week are being arranged by William Miles, director of the Berkshire Playhouse, and Ted Shawn, who will give special performances at his summer studio in West Becket.

Chamber music concerts will be given on Sunday afternoon, August 16, at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Music Temple in Pittsfield; Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain, in Falls Village, Conn.; and Miss Katherine Frazier's Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington, Mass.

* * *

AND for the present we have the Pops concerts in Symphony Hall which begin tomorrow night the last week but one of the season. The programs which Arthur Fiedler has arranged for the coming week contain, as is usual, much that is old and something that is new.

Tomorrow, the second Old Timers' Night of the season will take place. The audience will be invited to contribute vocally in the performance of certain numbers, one of which is (believe it or not) "Sweet Adeline."

On Tuesday evening Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin will be the soloists in the firs performance hereabouts of Poulenc's Concerto fo Two Pianos.

Wednesday evening's program includes a group of Tchaikovsky, together with selections from Wagner, Verdi, Herbert, Strauss, Cadman, and Dvorak.

Thursday evening brings a repetition of the Request Program.

On Saturday evening Ethel Hutchinson will make her first appearance with the Pops Orchestra as soloist in the performance of the Grieg Piano Concerto in A minor.

* * *

News of the World of Music

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE locale of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, hitherto announced as Hanna Farm, Stockbridge, has now been changed to Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson of New York, situated between Lenox and Stockbridge. It is here, rather than at Hanna Farm, the site of previous festivals, that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be heard on August 13, 15 and 16. As already announced, the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge will be the scene of the lectures to be given by Olin Downes, in connection with these concerts, on the mornings of August 12, 14 and 16.

* * * *

Holmwood, it seems, is the former summer home of George Westinghouse, and on this estate the boundaries of Lenox, Stockbridge and Lee converge. To quote the bulletin: "The huge tent for the concerts and the shell will be placed on a gentle slope within a horseshoe formed by great cathedral pines. Through the trees to the northeast may be seen Laurel Lake, and in the background the Hoosac range." Apparently if the ear wearies of music, there will be plenty upon which the eye may feast.

* * * *

It will be recalled that Carlos Chavez, outstanding composer of Mexico, conducted last season at a pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra his own "Sinfonia de Antigona" and "Sinfornia India." This department is now in receipt of a folder describing eight concerts of the Orquesta Sinfonica de Mexico, of which Mr. Chavez is the conductor, to be given during July, August and September in Mexico City. Since Mr. Chavez is a modernist of the modernists, it is interesting to note the music that he has chosen for these eight concerts. Like any conductor, he must to a certain extent consult the tastes of his public; yet again, like any other conductor, he will also respect his own preferences and prejudices. For example, Wagner and Strauss, so plentifully represented on Dr. Koussevitzky's programmes during the season just past, are here conspicuous by their absence. To composers of Mr. Chavez's type the luxuriance of a Wagner or a Strauss is naturally antipathetic. Their omission here, however, may be mere coincidence.

* * * *

Mr. Chavez finds room for Bach and Beethoven, for Haydn and Mozart, for Monteverdi, Scarlatti, Vivaldi and Cherubini. He is partial to Debussy, and recognizes also the Sibelius of the Fourth Symphony who, in his conciseness and economy, exhibits a strong kinship with the energetic Mexican himself. Mr. Chavez manages to include four of his own pieces in eight concerts, a respectable average, as well as music by the Spanish or Mexican composers Halffter, Pittaluga, Campa and Huizar, and for the Americans Copland and McPhee.

* * * *

Speaking of modern composers, at the Pop Concert of Tuesday evening Mr. Fiedler will bring to performance for the first time in Boston a Concerto in D minor for two pianos by Francois Poulenc, the soloists to be Messrs. Sanroma and Leo Litwin. The so-called Group of Six, of which Poulenc is, or rather was, a member, is hardly known as such to present-day concert-goers. Of the five young men and one young woman who comprised it, only two, Arthur Honegger and Darius Milhaud, have made any real impression on the world of music. One of the others, Louis Durey, is only a name to music-lovers on this side of the Atlantic. The other three, Georges Auric, Germaine Tailleferre, who once graced Symphony Hall with her genuinely charming presence, and M. Poulenc, occupy the middle ground. The last-named is thus far best known here by a diverting "Perpetual Motion" for the piano, one of the most palatable examples of bi-tonality, and a set of songs, "La Bestiaire," celebrating denizens of the animal kingdom, of which one, "The Carp," is haunting in its simple dignity.

* * * *

The Pianoforte Concerto of Greig, which the eulogistic Henry T. Finck once described as the most felicitous union of orchestra and pianoforte, has been falling into neglect of late years. Last spring, however, Mr. Sanroma played it at a Tuesday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and on Saturday it will be played at the Pops by Ethel Hutchinson, then making her debut at these concerts. Miss Hutchinson, if memory serves, was once soloist with th Peoples Symphony Orchestra.

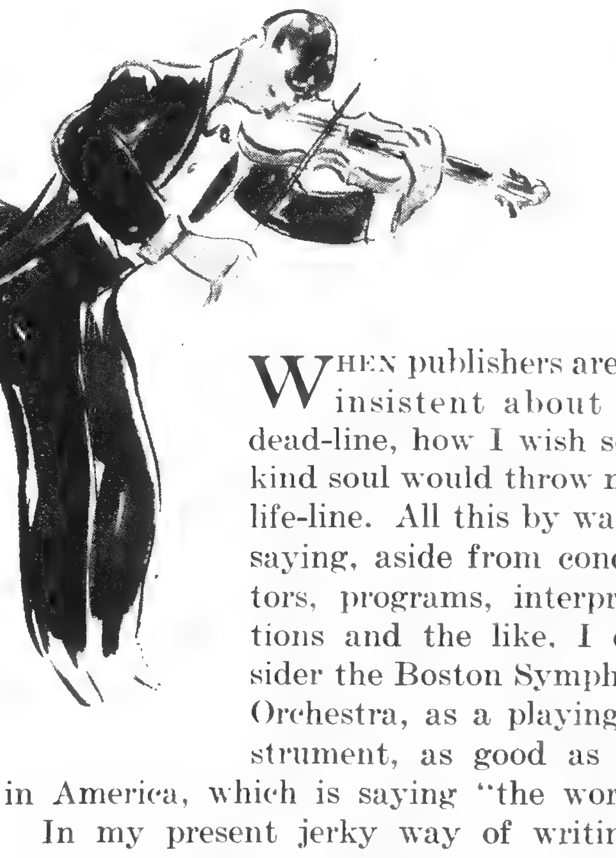
THIS CLIPPING FROM
ESQUIRE
CHICAGO, ILL.

MAY - - 1936

35

The Music-Box Reviaised Portr

Thank you, Philadelphia, thanks, Boston, thanks to Strawinsky, Mendelssohn, and Irving Berlin



by FRANK BLACK

▪ RECORDS ▪

WHEN publishers are too insistent about the dead-line, how I wish some kind soul would throw me a life-line. All this by way of saying, aside from conductors, programs, interpretations and the like, I consider the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as a playing instrument, as good as any in America, which is saying "the world."

In my present jerky way of writing I jump to a certain Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, composer. I suppose that today Germany would pooh-pooh him as a writer of music, and call him a second-rater, and even go so far as to suggest his going to America, if he were alive today. Very, very little of his music is played in his Fatherland but, of course, that is their artistic loss. Perhaps he wouldn't even be allowed to conduct the Gewandhaus Orchestra in Leipsic and make it as great an organization as it was during his incumbency. But he did that during the early part of the past century, and one thing he did in addition which should earn him the gratitude of the musical universe and the curses of many perspiring music students, he rediscovered Bach. Also, little Felix wrote a symphony called The Italian, Opus 90, if you must be opusy. Sure it's full of sparkle and sunshine and all the other Pollyanna ap-creigh. But why must we continually pat Mendelssohn on the head and act as though he were as delicate as an incubator baby? He wasn't a giant when compared to Wagner, but he was a very tall man, indeed. He had the secret of the long melodic line, and, above all, his music exudes good taste and good form. Any golfer will tell you what I'm getting at.

The first movement is alive and brilliant. Mendelssohn seldom wastes time in getting into a movement, and here he simply suggests the basic rhythmic background for two measures and he's off. Play him on the nose because it's swell. The second movement is simplicity itself and a lesson to other composers in economy of means. The melodies are beautifully handled. The Scherzo is grace in a top-hat. Only Mendelssohn could make a mule bray gracefully, and he proved it in A Midsummer Night's Dream. In the Finale, which is a Roman Dance called the Saltarello, he shows tremendous skill in blending rhythms with one another and still keeping everything lucid, even at a terrific pace. Yes, he was quite a tall man.

The Bostonians, Serge Koussevitzky, head man, play this symphony with as beautiful a tone as anything you've ever heard. The string quality is simply gorgeous. The first movement seems a trifle hectic rather than bustling. There are some points of balance that could be looked after. But it is a fine symphony, beautifully played, and, interpretively, not mishandled. You'll realize, upon hearing it, that Mendelssohn was indeed a tall man, unless you are one of the sneerers called "modern."

Mendelssohn Symphony No. 4 in A Major (Opus 90). (The Italian Symphony.) Performed by The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Kousseritzky

MUSICAL MASTERPIECE SERIES—ALBUM M-294.

* * *

E str
Ther
frat
tel
m

"OLD TIMERS" NIGHT AT POPS ENJOYABLE

It was "Old Timers' Night" at the Pops last night. With decided enthusiasm the large audience joined in singing such old favorites as "The Bowery," "Sidewalks of New York," "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "A Bicycle Built for Two," and others.

An unscheduled event on the programme was the arrival of four of the audience on two tandem bicycles. They were Chester Beane and Dorothy Reitmayer and George Beane and Ruth Frankel, all of Cambridge. Post 7/23

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
R.K. JOURNAL

JUN 7 - 1936

New March at "Pops"

A new military march, "Rhode Island Forward March," composed and dedicated to the Tercentenary by Raymond G. Williams of this city, will be the opening number at the Boston Symphony "Pops" "Rhode Island ~~Night~~," in Boston, June 27. The march, composed last April, has been accepted as the official Tercentenary march by the State Tercentenary Commission, the Rhode Island and Providence Plantations Tercentenary Committee and is being considered by the Providence committee. It was first played publicly at the formal opening of the celebration at the State House, May 4, by Gray's Festival Band. Band arrangements are now in the hands of most of the bands in the State and orchestral arrangements will be ready in a few weeks. Mr. Williams is the composer of the well known football march, "Harvardiana," for many years heard at all Harvard football games.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL
The Pops

A Concerto for two pianos by the contemporary French composer, Francis Poulenc, turned up for the first time in Boston at the Pop concert last night. The soloists were J. M. Sanroma and Leo Litwin. Arthur Fiedler, of course, conducted.

As one expects from any Parisian nowadays, the Concerto proved to be light and occasionally gay. The piano parts are extremely prominent, and except for the last of the conventional three movements, the orchestration is bare. The lively first movement, with a leisurely middle section, seemed to be a succession of orthodox broken chords and scale passages, seasoned with irrelevant dissonance. The slow movement, though it does not openly poke fun, might be a polite travesty upon early Beethoven. Only the finale is really modern so far as thought is concerned, and it dashes off with gusto. Poulenc's piece reminded one again of the esthetic fog which has hovered over the Seine and Montparnasse these several years. But it is pleasant to hear.

Quite different was Ibert's Divertissement, introduced to the Pops this season, which followed the Concerto. Here is a modern Frenchman writing genuine modern music, with not a sober moment in it. While a large audience applauded Poulenc warmly, there was more enthusiasm for Ibert. And rightly, for his Divertissement seems better at each hearing.

For the rest, the program consisted of familiar Pops items—except for a competent arrangement by Prof Walter Spalding of Harvard, of a "Meditation" of Tchaikovsky. Prof Spalding's instrumental dress cleverly follows Tchaikovsky's orchestral style. The trills for strings at the end, however, suggest another hand; otherwise, had one heard the performance without first looking at the program, it would have been easy to credit the whole thing to Tchaikovsky. C. W. D.

'IN, P

He June 24 TH

MUSIC

POULENC CONCERTO

A concerto in D minor for two pianos and orchestra by Francis Poulenc was performed for the first time in Boston at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall last evening. The piano soloists were Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin. Arthur Fiedler conducted the orchestra of symphony players and the program was as follows:

"Cruiser Harvard"	Strube
"Doctrinen," waltzes	Eduard Strauss
Meditation (Arranged by W. R. Spalding)	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Concerto in D minor for two pianos and orchestra	Poulenc
Divertissement	Ibert
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"	Herbert
"Deep River"	Arranged by Jacchia
"We Saw the Sea" from "Follow the Fleet"	Berlin

Perhaps the most distinctive portion of this Pops concert last night was the second group which was entirely devoted to the selections of Poulenc and Ibert. The delightful Ibert "Divertissement" has become a familiar piece on these programs and justly so, but the Poulenc had not been heard before in this city. Originally Mr. Fiedler planned to perform the Ibert first, at least that was the way it appeared on the announcements, yet the concerto for two pianos preceded it yesterday in Symphony Hall. This change was wisely made, else the new work by one of the French "Group of Six" might have seemed nothing more than a lukewarm anti-climax. As it was Mr. Fiedler should be thanked both for his taste in arranging matters as they were and for bringing the concerto to Boston.

Francis Poulenc at one time was influenced by Jean Cocteau and Erik Satie and showed a tendency to draw his inspiration from such everyday subjects as a jazz band, a music hall or a circus. His concerto in D minor for two pianos and orchestra was given at Venice in September of 1932 and had its first performance in England early in 1933 by the London Philharmonic Orchestra under Sir Thomas Beecham. In Queen's Hall, under such circumstances, it might indeed have sounded a bit out of place, in spite of the presence of the composer and M. Jacques Fevrier at the pianos. So Ernest Newman considered it, anyhow, and concluded a brief and sarcastic notice with the following sentences: "Time was when the Group of The Six, of which Poulence was a shining member, was at any rate a digit. Now it is only a decimal. The pleasure of the composer in his naive little work was a joy to see."

Such was not the result at the Pops, however. The composition was suited to the occasion, for it was, above all else, entertaining and fresuently amusing. Divided into the customary three movemens, the principal themes were given out by the pianos and then reinforced or emphasized by the other instruments. There were many abrupt passages, with occasionally clever, though brief measures for solo piano or two pianos. The material itself was reminiscent of half a dozen different composers but the modern and, for the most part, effective instrumentations gave life to portions that might have been commonplace. The second movement, it must be admitted, had its dull moments and once again one would have welcomed the sprightliness of Ibert's hand. A certain aspect of innocent fun was not the least charming side of the work. The playing of Mr. Sanroma and Mr. Litwin was excellent and Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra supported them admirably. The concerto was enthusiastically received by the large audience. Earlier in the evening W. R. Spalding rose from a seat on the floor and acknowledged the applause for his arrangement of Tchaikovsky's "Meditation." W. T. C., JR.

News of the World of Music

P H 6/21

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE locale of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, hitherto announced as Hanna Farm, Stockbridge, has now been changed to Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson of New York, situated between Lenox and Stockbridge. It is here, rather than at Hanna Farm, the site of previous festivals, that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be heard on August 13, 15 and 16. As already announced, the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge will be the scene of the lectures to be given by Olin Downes, in connection with these concerts, on the mornings of August 12, 14 and 16.

* * * *

Holmwood, it seems, is the former summer home of George Westinghouse, and on this estate the boundaries of Lenox, Stockbridge and Lee converge. To quote the bulletin: "The huge tent for the concerts and the shell will be placed on a gentle slope within a horseshoe formed by great cathedral pines. Through the trees to the northeast may be seen Laurel Lake, and in the background the Hoosac range." Apparently if the ear wearies of music, there will be plenty upon which the eye may feast.

* * * *

It will be recalled that Carlos Chavez, outstanding composer of Mexico, conducted last season at a pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra his own "Sinfonia de Antigona" and "Sinfornia India." This department is now in receipt of a folder describing eight concerts of the Orquesta Sinfonica de Mexico, of which Mr. Chavez is the conductor, to be given during July, August and September in Mexico City. Since Mr. Chavez is a modernist of the modernists, it is interesting to note the music that he has chosen for these eight concerts. Like any conductor, he must to a certain extent consult the tastes of his public; yet again, like any other conductor, he will also respect his own preferences and prejudices. For example, Wagner and Strauss, so plentifully represented on Dr. Koussevitzky's programmes during the season just past, are here conspicuous by their absence. To composers of Mr. Chavez's type the luxuriance of a Wagner or a Strauss is naturally antipathetic. Their omission here, however, may be mere coincidence.

* * * *

Mr. Chavez finds room for Bach and Beethoven, for Haydn and Mozart, for Monteverdi, Scarlatti, Vivaldi and Cherubini. He is partial to Debussy, and recognizes also the Sibelius of the Fourth Symphony who, in his conciseness and economy, exhibits a strong kinship with the energetic Mexican himself. Mr. Chavez manages to include four of his own pieces in eight concerts, a respectable average, as well as music by the Spanish or Mexican composers Halffter, Pittaluga, Campa and Huizar, and for the Americans Copland and McPhee.

* * * *

Speaking of modern composers, at the Pop Concert of Tuesday evening Mr. Fiedler will bring to performance for the first time in Boston a Concerto in D minor for two pianos by Francois Poulenc, the soloists to be Messrs. Sanroma and Leo Litwin. The so-called Group of Six, of which Poulenc is, or rather was, a member, is hardly known as such to present-day concert-goers. Of the five young men and one young woman who comprised it, only two, Arthur Honegger and Darius Milhaud, have made any real impression on the world of music. One of the others, Louis Durey, is only a name to music-lovers on this side of the Atlantic. The other three, Georges Auric, Germaine Tailleferre, who once graced Symphony Hall with her genuinely charming presence, and M. Poulenc, occupy the middle ground. The last-named is thus far best known here by a diverting "Perpetual Motion" for the piano, one of the most palatable examples of bi-tonality, and a set of songs, "La Bestiaire," celebrating denizens of the animal kingdom, of which one, "The Carp," is haunting in its simple dignity.

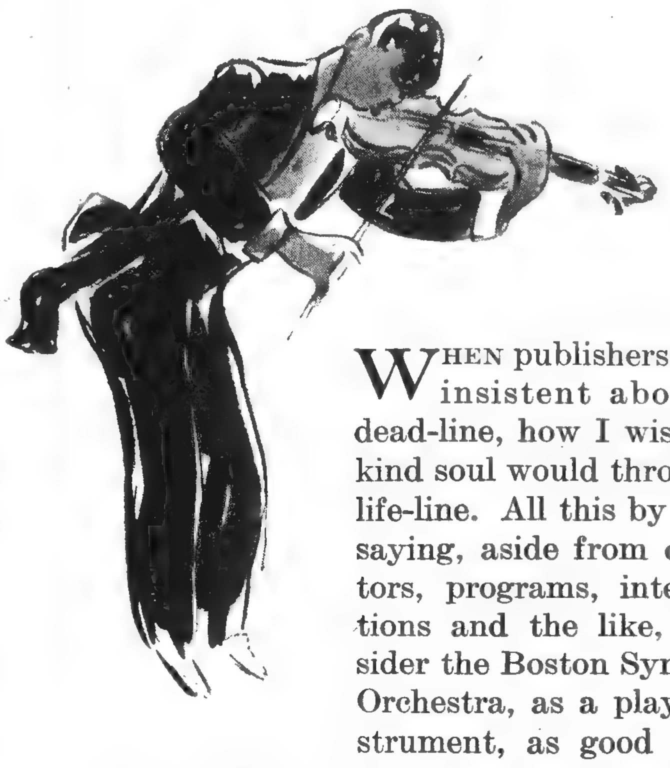
* * * *

The Pianoforte Concerto of Greig, which the eulogistic Henry T. Finck once described as the most felicitous union of orchestra and pianoforte, has been falling into neglect of late years. Last spring, however, Mr. Sanroma played it at a Tuesday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and on Saturday it will be played at the Pops by Ethel Hutchinson, then making her debut at these concerts. Miss Hutchinson, if memory serves, was once soloist with th Peoples Symphony Orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ESQUIRE
CHICAGO, ILL.

MAY - - 1936

The Music-Box Revi



Thank you, Philadelphia, thanks, Boston, thanks to Strawinsky, Mendelssohn, and Irving Berlin

by FRANK BLACK

▪ RECORDS ▪

WHEN publishers are too insistent about the dead-line, how I wish some kind soul would throw me a life-line. All this by way of saying, aside from conductors, programs, interpretations and the like, I consider the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as a playing instrument, as good as any in America, which is saying "the world."

In my present jerky way of writing I jump to a certain Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, composer. I suppose that today Germany would pooh-pooh him as a writer of music, and call him a second-rater, and even go so far as to suggest his going to America, if he were alive today. Very, very little of his music is played in his Fatherland but, of course, that is their artistic loss. Perhaps he wouldn't even be allowed to conduct the Gewandhaus Orchestra in Leipsic and make it as great an organization as it was during his incumbency. But he did that during the early part of the past century, and one thing he did in addition which should earn him the gratitude of the musical universe and the curses of many perspiring music students, he rediscovered Bach. Also, little Felix wrote a symphony called The Italian, Opus 90, if you must be opusy. Sure it's full of sparkle and sunshine and all the other Pollyanna ap-creigh. But why must we continually pat Mendelssohn on the head and act as though he were as delicate as an incubator baby? He wasn't a giant when compared to Wagner, but he was a very tall man, indeed. He had the secret of the long melodic line, and, above all, his music exudes good taste and good form. Any golfer will tell you what I'm getting at.

The first movement is alive and brilliant. Mendelssohn seldom wastes time in getting into a movement, and here he simply suggests the basic rhythmic background for two measures and he's off. Play him on the nose because it's swell. The second movement is simplicity itself and a lesson to other composers in economy of means. The melodies are beautifully handled. The Scherzo is grace in a top-hat. Only Mendelssohn could make a mule bray gracefully, and he proved it in A Midsummer Night's Dream. In the Finale, which is a Roman Dance called the Saltarello, he shows tremendous skill in blending rhythms with one another and still keeping everything lucid, even at a terrific pace. Yes, he was quite a tall man.

The Bostonians, Serge Koussevitzky, head man, play this symphony with as beautiful a tone as anything you've ever heard. The string quality is simply gorgeous. The first movement seems a trifle hectic rather than bustling. There are some points of balance that could be looked after. But it is a fine symphony, beautifully played, and, interpretively, not mishandled. You'll realize, upon hearing it, that Mendelssohn was indeed a tall man, unless you are one of the sneerers called "modern."

Mendelssohn Symphony No. 4 in A Major (Opus 90). (The Italian Symphony.) Performed by The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky

MUSICAL MASTERPIECE SERIES—ALBUM M-294.

* * *

E stri
Ther
frat
tel
m
c

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
R.R. JOURNAL

JUN 7 - 1936

New March at "Pops"

A new military march, "Rhode Island Forward March," composed and dedicated to the Tercentenary by Raymond G. Williams of this city, will be the opening number at the Boston Symphony "Pops" "Rhode Island Night," in Boston, June 27. The march, composed last April, has been accepted as the official Tercentenary march by the State Tercentenary Commission, the Rhode Island and Providence Plantations Tercentenary Committee and is being considered by the Providence committee. It was first played publicly at the formal opening of the celebration at the State House, May 4, by Gray's Festival Band. Band arrangements are now in the hands of most of the bands in the State and orchestral arrangements will be ready in a few weeks. Mr. Williams is the composer of the well known football march, "Harvardiana," for many years heard at all Harvard football games.

"OLD TIMERS" NIGHT AT POPS ENJOYABLE

It was "Old Timers' Night" at the Pops last night. With decided enthusiasm the large audience joined in singing such old favorites as "The Bowery," "Sidewalks of New York," "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "A Bicycle Built for Two," and others.

An unscheduled event on the programme was the arrival of four of the audience on two tandem bicycles. They were Chester Beane and Dorothy Reitmayer and George Beane and Ruth Frankel, all of Cambridge. Post 7/23

MUSIC

Globe 24

SYMPHONY HALL
The Pops

A Concerto for two pianos by the contemporary French composer, Francis Poulenc, turned up for the first time in Boston at the Pop concert last night. The soloists were J. M. Sanroma and Leo Litwin. Arthur Fiedler, of course, conducted.

As one expects from any Parisian nowadays, the Concerto proved to be light and occasionally gay. The piano parts are extremely prominent, and except for the last of the conventional three movements, the orchestration is bare. The lively first movement, with a leisurely middle section, seemed to be a succession of orthodox broken chords and scale passages, seasoned with irrelevant dissonance. The slow movement, though it does not openly poke fun, might be a polite travesty upon early Beethoven. Only the finale is really modern so far as thought is concerned, and it dashes off with gusto. Poulenc's piece reminded one again of the esthetic fog which has hovered over the Seine and Montparnasse these several years. But it is pleasant to hear.

Quite different was Ibert's Divertissement, introduced to the Pops this season, which followed the Concerto. Here is a modern Frenchman writing genuine modern music, with not a sober moment in it. While a large audience applauded Poulenc warmly, there was more enthusiasm for Ibert. And rightly, for his Divertissement seems better at each hearing.

For the rest, the program consisted of familiar Pops items—except for a competent arrangement by Prof Walter Spalding of Harvard, of a "Meditation" of Tchaikovsky. Prof Spalding's instrumental dress cleverly follows Tchaikovsky's orchestral style. The trills for strings at the end, however, suggest another hand; otherwise, had one heard the performance without first looking at the program, it would have been easy to credit the whole thing to Tchaikovsky. C. W. D.

He June 24 TH

aised Portr

MUSIC

POULENC CONCERTO

A concerto in D minor for two pianos and orchestra by Francis Poulenc was performed for the first time in Boston at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall last evening. The piano soloists were Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin. Arthur Fiedler conducted the orchestra of symphony players and the program was as follows:

"Cruiser Harvard"	Strube
"Doctrinen," waltzes	Eduard Strauss
Meditation (Arranged by W. R. Spalding)	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Concerto in D minor for two pianos and orchestra	Poulenc
Divertissement	Ibert
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"	Herbert
"Deep River"	Arranged by Jacchia
"We Saw the Sea" from "Follow the Fleet"	Berlin

Perhaps the most distinctive portion of this Pops concert last night was the second group which was entirely devoted to the selections of Poulenc and Ibert. The delightful Ibert "Divertissement" has become a familiar piece on these programs and justly so, but the Poulenc had not been heard before in this city. Originally Mr. Fiedler planned to perform the Ibert first, at least that was the way it appeared on the announcements, yet the concerto for two pianos preceded it yesterday in Symphony Hall. This change was wisely made, else the new work by one of the French "Group of Six" might have seemed nothing more than a lukewarm anti-climax. As it was Mr. Fiedler should be thanked both for his taste in arranging matters as they were and for bringing the concerto to Boston.

Francis Poulenc at one time was influenced by Jean Cocteau and Erik Satie and showed a tendency to draw his inspiration from such everyday subjects as a jazz band, a music hall or a circus. His concerto in D minor for two pianos and orchestra was given at Venice in September of 1932 and had its first performance in England early in 1933 by the London Philharmonic Orchestra under Sir Thomas Beecham. In Queen's Hall, under such circumstances, it might indeed have sounded a bit out of place, in spite of the presence of the composer and M. Jacques Fevrier at the pianos. So Ernest Newman considered it, anyhow, and concluded a brief and sarcastic notice with the following sentences: "Time was when the Group of The Six, of which Poulence was a shining member, was at any rate a digit. Now it is only a decimal. The pleasure of the composer in his naive little work was a joy to see."

Such was not the result at the Pops, however. The composition was suited to the occasion, for it was, above all else, entertaining and fresuently amusing. Divided into the customary three movemens, the principal themes were given out by the pianos and then reinforced or emphasized by the other instruments. There were many abrupt passages, with occasionally clever, though brief measures for solo piano or two pianos. The material itself was reminiscent of half a dozen different composers but the modern and, for the most part, effective instrumentations gave life to portions that might have been commonplace. The second movement, it must be admitted, had its dull moments and once again one would have welcomed the sprightliness of Ibert's hand. A certain aspect of innocent fun was not the least charming side of the work. The playing of Mr. Sanroma and Mr. Litwin was excellent and Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra supported them admirably. The concerto was enthusiastically received by the large audience. Earlier in the evening W. R. Spalding rose from a seat on the floor and acknowledged the applause for his arrangement of Tchaikovsky's "Meditation." W. T. C., JR.

IN, PI

Gossip—"Pops" ns --- Plays and Players --- Ne

rtist.

MUSIC AND

Last Week of the Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall

Next Saturday evening, July 4, the 51st season of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall will come to a close. Arthur Fiedler, completing his seventh season as the conductor of the Pops Orchestra, announces the following programs for the final week:

Tomorrow. "Washington Post" March, Sousa; "The Barber of Seville," Overture, Rossini; Humoresque, Dvorak; "Carmen," Fantasia, Bizet; Irish Rhapsody, Herbert; "The Animals' Carnival," Grand Zoological Fantasia, Saint-Saens, Pianos: Jesus Maria Sanroma—Leo Litwin; "Rumba," from the Symphony No. 2, McDonald; "In a Persian Market," Intermezzo-Scene, Ketelby; "We Saw the Sea" from "Follow the Fleet," Berlin.

Tuesday. Coronation March from "The Prophet," Meyerbeer; "Emperor" waltzes, Strauss; "Entrance of the Little Fauns," Pierne; "Finlandia" symphonic poem, Sibelius; Overture to "The Secret of Suzanne," Wolf-Ferrari; Largo from "Xerxes," Handel; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; "Roberta," selection, Kern; "Minute" waltz, Chopin; Fifth Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

Wednesday. Entrance of the Gladiators, Fucik; Overture to "Mignon," Thomas; "The Flight of the Bumble Bee," Rimsky-Korsakov; Invitation to the Dance, Weber-Berlioz; Liebestraum, Liszt-Herbert; Ave Maria, Schubert-Wilhelmj; Fourth Symphony in F minor, finale, Tchaikovsky; "Night and Day," Porter; "Rumba," from the Symphony No. 2, McDonald; Rhapsody in Blue, Gershwin, soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma.

Thursday. Entrance of the Boyards, Halvorsen; Overture to "Sakuhtala," Goldmark; Minuet, Boccherini; Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy," Gliere; "Peer Gynt," Suite No. 1, Greig; Valse Triste, Sibelius; "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; "Tales from the Vienna Woods," waltzes, Strauss; Mosquito Dance, White; Dance of the Camorrists, from "The Jewels of the Madonna," Wolf-Ferrari.

Friday. Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, "Tannhauser," Wagner; Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld," "Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann," Offenbach; "The Ride of the Valkyries," Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," "Dreams," Wagner; solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz; Bolero, Ravel; "Anything Goes," selection, Porter; Song of the Volga Bargemen, arranged by Glazounov; American Patrol, Meacham.

Saturday, Closing Night. Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa; "Girls of Baden," waltzes, Komzak; Kommenoi Ostrow, Rubinstein; Meditation from "Thais," Massenet; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurmberg," Wagner; Marche Slave, Tchaikovsky; Prayer of Thanksgiving, old Dutch hymn, Valerius; "Jealousy," Gipsy tango, Gade; American Fantasy, Herbert.

Closing Week at Pops

The Pops concerts will come to the end of their fifty-first season next week. The programs will traverse the usual course. On Monday, the Messrs. J. M. Sanromá and Leo Litwin will be soloists in "The

In "Palm Springs," Current Film at

Animals' Carnival" by Saint Saëns; and the same program will include the Rumba movement from Harl McDonald's Second Symphony, which will also be played on Wednesday. On the later evening Mr. Sanromá will again be soloist in the "Rhapsody in Blue." Charles O'Connell will not conduct on Thursday, as he had been scheduled to do. Four Wagnerian numbers appear on Friday's program. The closing night, Saturday, will begin and end in patriotic vein, befitting the date.

Concerts in New York

The Lewisohn Stadium concerts in New York city got off to a bad start the night before last, when after José Iturbi had led the orchestra through "The Star-Spangled Banner" and the Beethoven Third "Leonore" Overture before an audience of some 7000 persons, the intermittent drizzle forced the postponement of program to last evening.

Pops Season Closes At the End of This Week

Next Saturday evening, July 4, the 51st season of the Pops concerts in Symphony hall will come to a close. Arthur Fiedler, completing his seventh season as the conductor of the Pops orchestra, announces the following programs for the final week:

Monday Evening, June 29

Washington Post March	Sousa
The Barber of Seville, overture	Rossini
Humoresque	Dvorak
"Carmen," fantasia	Bizet
Irish Rhapsody	Herbert
The Animals' Carnival, grand zoological fantasia	Saint-Saens
Pianos: Jesus Mario Sanroma—Leo Litwin
Rumba, from the Symphony No. 2	McDonald
In a Persian Market, intermezzo-scene	Ketelby
We Saw the Sea from "Follow the Fleet"	Berlin

Tuesday Evening, June 30

Coronation March from "The Prophet"	Meyerbeer
Emperor Waltzes	Strauss
Entrance of the Little Fauns	Pierne
Finlandia, symphonic poem	Sibelius
Overture to "The Secret of Suzanne"	Wolf-Ferrari
Largo from "Xerxes"	Handel
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
"Roberta," selection	Kern
Minute Waltz	Chopin
Fifth Hungarian Dance	Brahms

Wednesday Evening, July 1

Entrance of the Gladiators	Fucik
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
The Flight of the Bumble Bee	Rimsky-Korsakov
Invitation to the Dance	Weber-Berlioz
Liebestraum	Liszt-Herbert
Ave Maria	Schubert-Wilhelmj
Fourth Symphony in F minor, finale	Tchaikovsky
Night and Day	Porter
Rumba, from the Symphony No. 2	McDonald
Rhapsody in Blue	Gershwin
Soloist—Jesus Maria Sanroma.

Thursday Evening, July 2

Entrance of the Boyards	Halvorsen
Overture to "Sakuntala"	Goldmark
Minuet	Boccherini
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy"	Gliere
Peer Gynt, Suite No. 1	Grieg
Valse Triste	Sibelius
Pomp and Circumstance	Elgar
Tales from the Vienna Woods, waltzes	Straube
Mosquito Dance	Whi
Dance of the Camorrists, from "The Jewels of the Madonna"	Wolf-Ferrari

Friday Evening, July 3

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld"	Offenbach
Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann"	Offenbach
"The Ride of the Valkyries"	Wagner
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Dreams	Wagner
Solo violin—Julius Theodorowicz
Bolero	Ravel
"Anything Goes," selection	Porter
Song of the Volga Bargemen	Arranged by Glazounov
American Patrol	Meacham

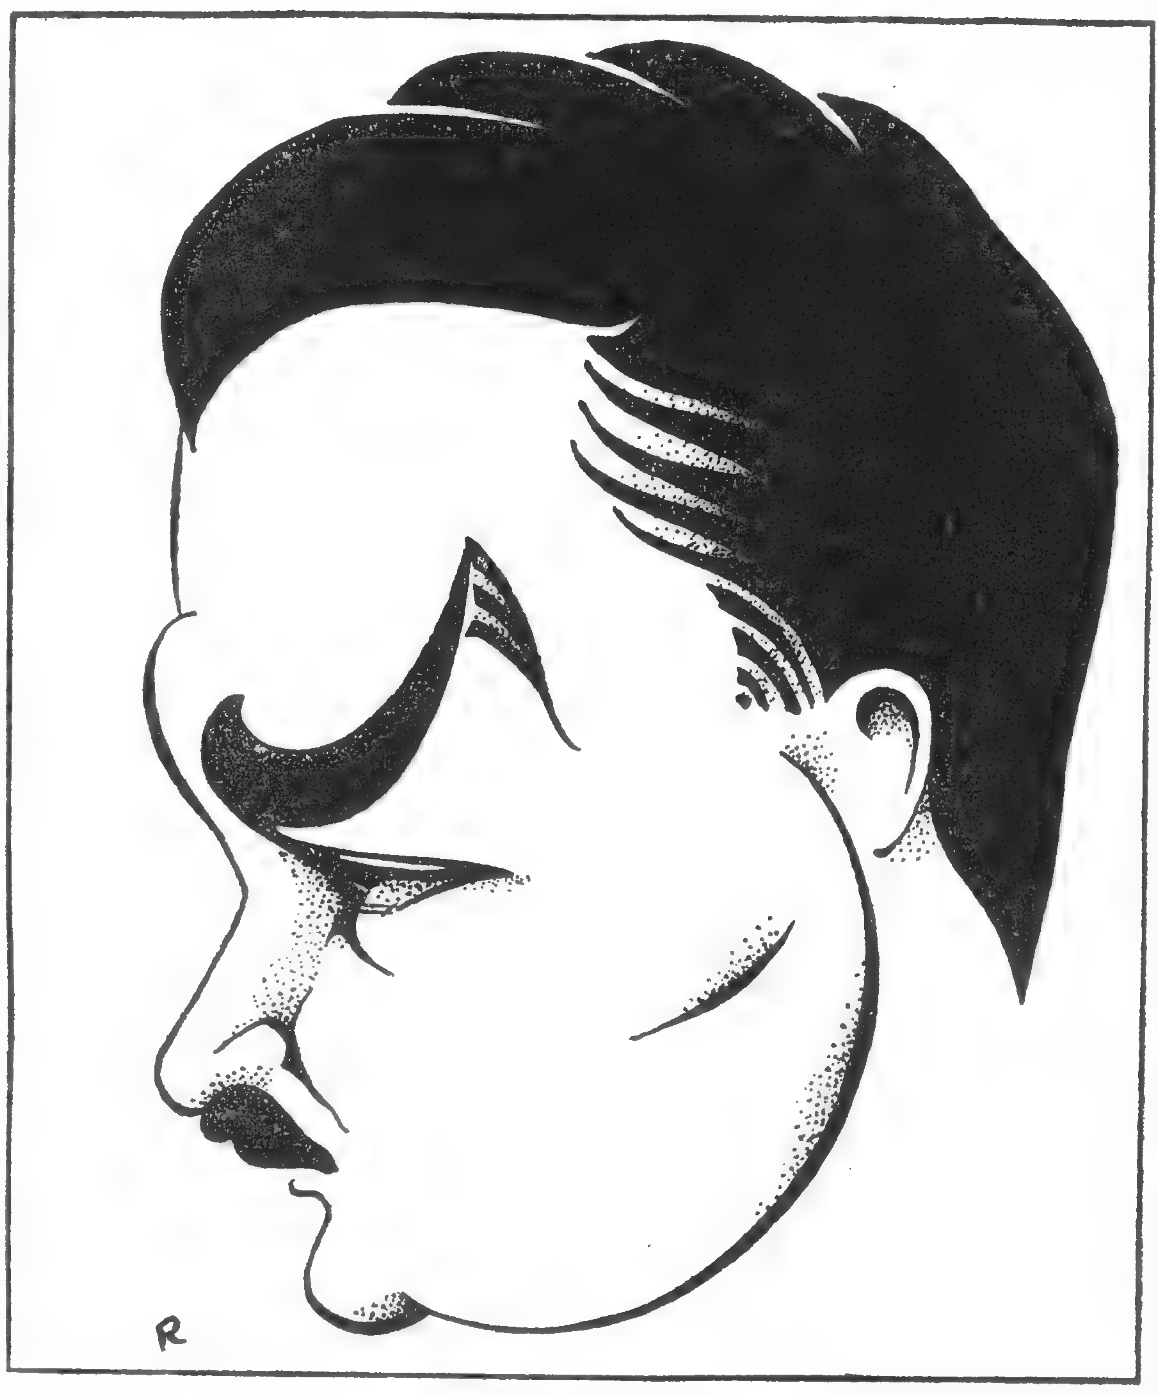
Saturday Evening, July 4

Closing Night

Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa
Girls of Baden, waltzes	Komzak
Kammenoi Ostrow	Rubinstein
Meditation from "Thais"	Massenet
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"	Wagner
Marche Slave	Tchaikovsky
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch hymn	Valerius
Jealousy, gypsy tango	Gade
American Fantasy	Herbert

NELL GWYN THEATER ANNOUNCES PLAYS

Form and Content



Arthur Fiedler

Conductor of the Symphony Hall Pops Concerts, Which Will End Their Fifty-First Season Next Saturday Night

---

Post Jun 29

THE POPS

It might seem that something that has been going on for more than 50 years would have lost its appeal by now, at least for the younger people.

But the Pop concerts are a tradition, or, rather, an institution in Boston.

Each season rolls around and the Pops just naturally happen. But what might appear surprising is that the concerts which were taking place back in the days of the horse car and the buggy, of bustles and bone collars, could be held in high favor now.

Yet the concerts are more popular than ever.

Never in the long history of the Pops have the audiences been so large as at this time. This, the 51st season, has seen all previous attendance records shattered.

Thus far this season, 98,500 persons have attended the concerts, which go into their final week of the season beginning today.

The reason for such popularity is understandable. The quality of the music has long since been established. And the mirthful, yet conventional, surroundings have no end of appeal.

It is noted this season that an especially large number of school children have been in attendance. This, too, is understandable. Nearly all schools today have their bands and orchestras and glee clubs. The pupils take a genuine interest in music.

Then, again, more people are taking up music today.

Anyone watching one of the many parades held in the course of the year must be impressed by the number of bands participating. The musicians include in no small numbers tiny cadets who seem hardly big enough to blow on trumpets or send notes pouring out of horns. The war veteran organizations have also taken a real pride in having their own bands and there is keen competition among them to win honors for playing the best in music.

All of this has an influence in spreading the liking for good music.

There are the old-timers, of course, who are the mainstays of the Pops in lean years and during the fat. They have been on hand this season—more enthused than ever.

The shattering of a 50-year attendance record at the Pops is something that cannot go unnoticed. It is a tribute to the conductorship of Arthur Fiedler and the fine musicians. But it indicates, too, that the desire for better music, rather than diminishing, is growing all the time.

Prosperity Is The Word for Current Pops

This Season Most Successful In History; Opera News At Home and Abroad

By Moses Smith

With but one more week remaining, the fifty-first season of the Pops concerts will be recorded as the most successful in the history of the institution. The average attendance has been over 2000. The majority of the concerts have been played to a full house. And there has not been a single evening when the attendance has been light.

The patronage, it has been known, has been steadily increasing in the last few years, after a considerable period of depression. But it was only during the present season when the previous "high"—reached during the Jacchia regime—was finally surpassed.

Various reasons have been assigned for the current prosperity at Symphony Hall. "Special" nights have increased steadily in number, and the "society" influence has become increasingly important. The management has assiduously cultivated organizations and groups, and evidently satisfied them, for the renewals have been general. And this year the weather has been most propitious. The hot weather came early in the season rather than late. It has had less effect on the attendance because advance reservations have always been heavier in the first part of the season than in the end.

The good fortune of the Pops has also had a beneficent effect on the winter season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An unusual number of Pops-goers have subscribed this spring to the winter concerts of next season. In addition, it should be recalled that the Pops are managed directly by Symphony Hall for the Symphony Orchestra. If, in the past, there has been a deficit from the Pops season it was charged against the desirability (and in many cases, necessity) of offering the members of the Symphony Orchestra a long playing-season. The present season of Pops, however, will actually show a profit that can be applied to the deficit from the main season.

Opera in Boston

CHRISTIAN LEADER
BOSTON, MASS.

1936

THE SILLINESS OF ADVERTISING

We often wonder if advertising affects other people as it so frequently affects ourselves. It is so silly, so brainless, so stupid! Cigarette advertising seems to us to take the cake for sheer ineptitude. All the popular brands of cigarettes are consistently presented as not doing what it is evidently so dreaded that cigarettes might do. We never really knew what awful things might, and presumably usually do, follow upon smoking, until the present lavish cigarette advertising began. These miserable weeds evidently parch and sting the throat terribly—all except this brand which is so "mild." They burn the sensitive membranes of the mouth and nose—all except this other brand which is so "cool." They cause constant coughing—all except this third brand which contains "not a cough in a carload." We wonder that anybody ever dares to touch cigarettes after reading what their manufacturers say about their evils. Then the silly exaggerations of advertising! Here is Rupert's Beer described as "the talk of the town." One would imagine, to read that phrase, that people did nothing these days but stop one another upon the streets and excitedly discuss this beer. As a matter of fact, who ever heard it mentioned outside of a bar-room? "I'd walk a mile for a Camel"—but did you ever see a smoker refuse the first cigarette offered him? We are informed, on the radio, that Bill Ballyhoo's orchestra at the Hotel Hotcha is "making musical history." Musical history, which includes names of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, the Paris Opera and the Boston Symphony Orchestra! Is anybody's attention won, or even wooed, by talk like that? Even book publishers present their products as "the greatest novel of the century," or "a poem greater than Wordsworth or Tennyson." Most advertising, as we see or hear it, we find either repellent or ridiculous. What it does to us is to teach us the articles which we must not buy under any circumstances. Give us a "phoney" full-page ad, in the newspaper, or a salvey announcer's statement on the radio, or a bill-board ruining the landscape in the country, and we are through for good and all. Advertising is an unmitigated evil. The way to stop it is to boycott it!—Unity.

* * *

36

Gossip—"Pops"

ns --- Plays and Players --- Ne

MUSIC AND

Last Week of the Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall

Next Saturday evening, July 4, the 51st season of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall will come to a close. Arthur Fiedler, completing his seventh season as the conductor of the Pops Orchestra, announces the following programs for the final week:

Tomorrow. "Washington Post" March, Sousa; "The Barber of Seville," Overture, Rossini; Humoresque, Dvorak; "Carmen," Fantasia, Bizet; Irish Rhapsody, Herbert; "The Animals' Carnival," Grand Zoological Fantasia, Saint-Saens, Pianos: Jesus Maria Sanroma—Leo Litwin; "Rumba," from the Symphony No. 2, McDonald; "In a Persian Market," Intermezzo-Scene, Ketelby; "We Saw the Sea" from "Follow the Fleet," Berlin.

Tuesday. Coronation March from "The Prophet," Meyerbeer; "Emperor" waltzes, Strauss; "Entrance of the Little Fauns," Pierne; "Finlandia" symphonic poem, Sibelius; Overture to "The Secret of Suzanne," Wolf-Ferrari; Largo from "Xerxes," Handel; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; "Roberta," selection, Kern; "Minute" waltz, Chopin; Fifth Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

Wednesday. Entrance of the Gladiators, Fucik; Overture to "Mignon," Thomas; "The Flight of the Bumble Bee," Rimsky-Korsakov; Invitation to the Dance, Weber-Berlioz; Liebestraum, Liszt-Herbert; Ave Maria, Schubert-Wilhelmj; Fourth Symphony in F minor, finale, Tchaikovsky; "Night and Day," Porter; "Rumba," from the Symphony No. 2, McDonald; Rhapsody in Blue, Gershwin, soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma.

Thursday. Entrance of the Boyards, Halvorsen; Overture to "Sakuhtala," Goldmark; Minuet, Boccherini; Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy," Gliere; "Peer Gynt," Suite No. 1, Greig; Valse Triste, Sibelius; "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; "Tales from the Vienna Woods," waltzes, Strauss; Mosquito Dance, White; Dance of the Camorrists, from "The Jewels of the Madonna," Wolf-Ferrari.

Friday. Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, "Tannhauser," Wagner; Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld," "Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann," Offenbach; "The Ride of the Valkyries," Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," "Dreams," Wagner; solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz; Bolero, Ravel; "Anything Goes," selection, Porter; Song of the Volga Bargemen, arranged by Glazounov; American Patrol, Meacham.

Saturday, Closing Night. Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa; "Girls of Baden," waltzes, Komzak; Kommenoi Ostrow, Rubinstein; Meditation from "Thais," Massenet; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurmberg," Wagner; Marche Slave, Tchaikovsky; Prayer of Thanksgiving, old Dutch hymn, Valerius; "Jealousy," Gipsy tango, Gade; American Fantasy, Herbert.

Closing Week at Pops

The Pops concerts will come to the end of their fifty-first season next week. The programs will traverse the usual course. On Monday, the Messrs. J. M. Sanromá and Leo Litwin will be soloists in "The

In "Palm Springs," Current Film at

Animals' Carnival" by Saint Saëns; and the same program will include the Rumba movement from Harl McDonald's Second Symphony, which will also be played on Wednesday. On the later evening Mr. Sanromá will again be soloist in the "Rhapsody in Blue." Charles O'Connell will not conduct on Thursday, as he had been scheduled to do. Four Wagnerian numbers appear on Friday's program. The closing night, Saturday, will begin and end in patriotic vein, befitting the date.

Concerts in New York

The Lewisohn Stadium concerts in New York city got off to a bad start the night before last, when after José Iturbi had led the orchestra through "The Star-Spangled Banner" and the Beethoven Third "Leonore" Overture before an audience of some 7000 persons, the intermittent drizzle forced the postponement of program to last evening.

---

rtist.

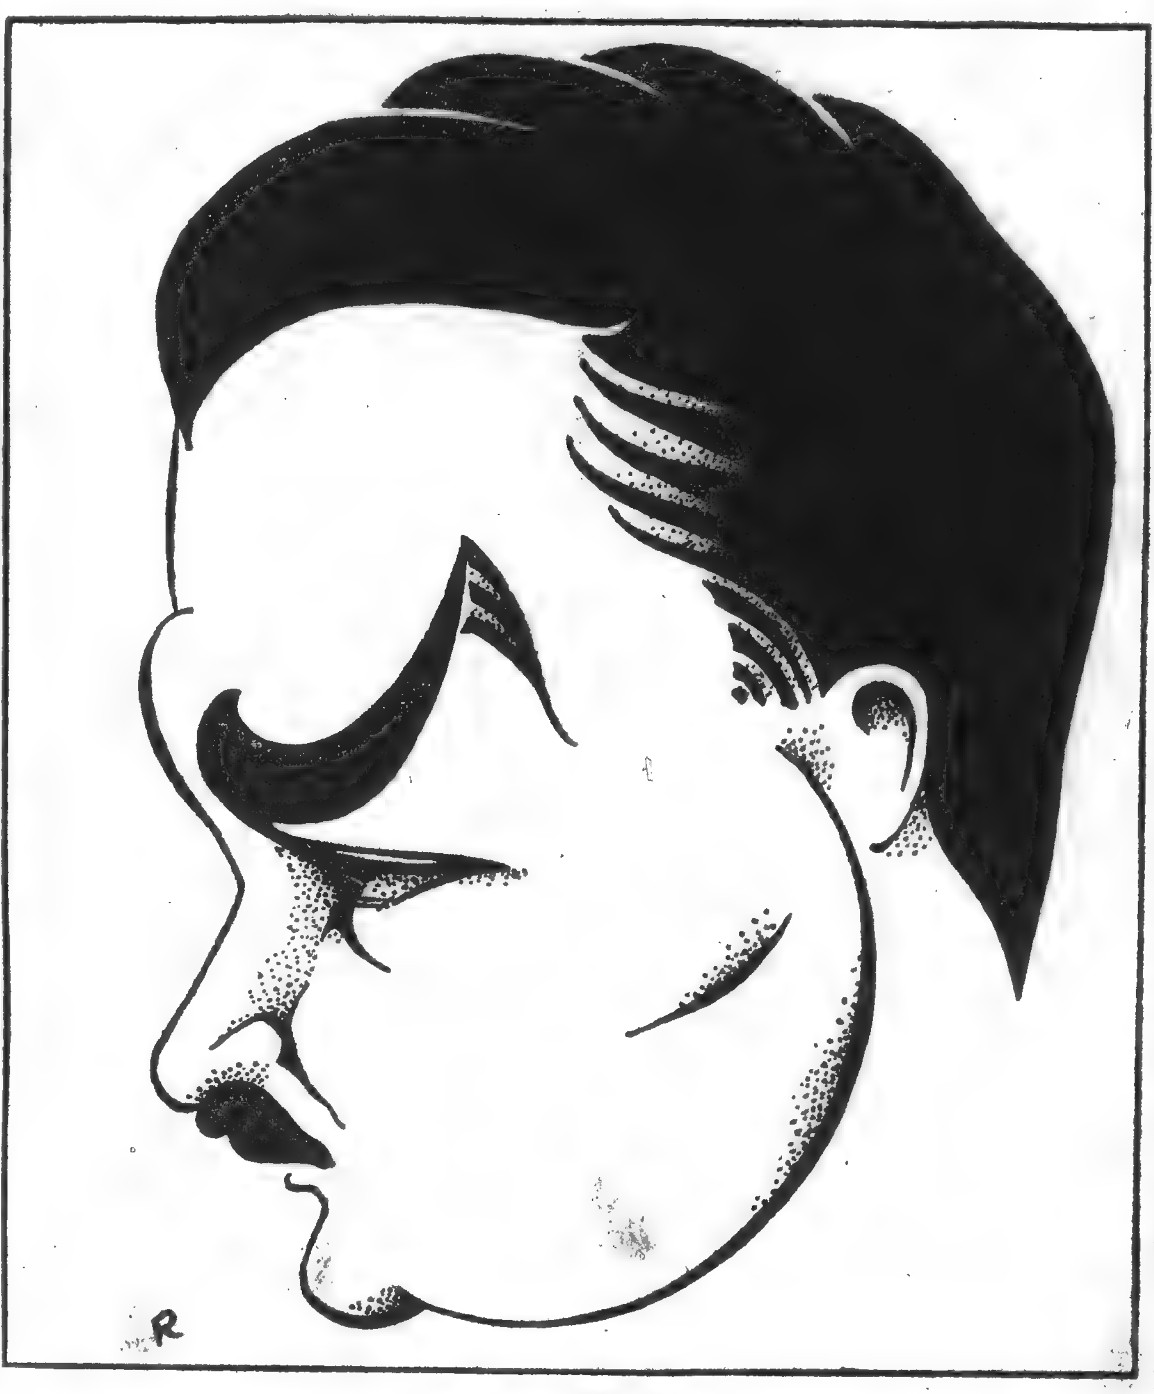
Pops Season Closes At the End of This Week

Next Saturday evening, July 4, the 51st season of the Pops concerts in Symphony hall will come to a close. Arthur Fiedler, completing his seventh season as the conductor of the Pops orchestra, announces the following programs for the final week:

Monday Evening, June 29
Washington Post March	Sousa
The Barber of Seville, overture	Rossini
Humoresque	Dvorak
"Carmen," fantasia	Bizet
Irish Rhapsody	Herbert
The Animals' Carnival, grand zoological fantasia	Saint-Saens
Pianos: Jesus Mario Sanroma—Leo Litwin
Rumba, from the Symphony No. 2	McDonald
In a Persian Market, intermezzo-scene	Ketelby
We Saw the Sea from "Follow the Fleet"	Berlin
Tuesday Evening, June 30
Coronation March from "The Prophet"	Meyerbeer
Emperor Waltzes	Strauss
Entrance of the Little Fauns	Pierne
Finlandia, symphonic poem	Sibelius
Overture to "The Secret of Suzanne"	Wolf-Ferrari
Largo from "Xerxes"	Handel
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
"Roberta," selection	Kern
Minute Waltz	Chopin
Fifth Hungarian Dance	Brahms
Wednesday Evening, July 1
Entrance of the Gladiators	Fucik
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
The Flight of the Bumble Bee	Rimsky-Korsakov
Invitation to the Dance	Weber-Berlioz
Liebestraum	Liszt-Herbert
Ave Maria	Schubert-Wilhelmj
Fourth Symphony in F minor, finale	Tchaikovsky
Night and Day	Porter
Rumba, from the Symphony No. 2	McDonald
Rhapsody in Blue	Gershwin
Soloist—Jesus Maria Sanroma.
Thursday Evening, July 2
Entrance of the Boyards	Halvorsen
Overture to "Sakuntala"	Goldmark
Minuet	Boccherini
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy"	Gliere
Peer Gynt, Suite No. 1	Grieg
Valse Triste	Sibelius
Pomp and Circumstance	Elga
Tales from the Vienna Woods, waltzes	Strau
Mosquito Dance	Whi
Dance of the Camorrists, from "The Jewels of the Madonna"	Wolf-Ferra
Friday Evening, July 3
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, "Tannhauser"	Wagne
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld"	Offenb
Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffman"	Offenbach
"The Ride of the Valkyries"	Wagner
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Dreams	Wagner
Solo violin—Julius Theodorowicz
Bolero	Ravel
"Anything Goes," selection	Porter
Song of the Volga Bargemen	Arranged by Glazounov
American Patrol	Meacham
Saturday Evening, July 4
Closing Night
Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa
Girls of Baden, waltzes	Komzak
Kammenoi Ostrow	Rubinstein
Meditation from "Thais"	Massenet
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"	Wagner
Marche Slave	Tchaikovsky
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch hymn	Valerius
Jealousy, gypsy tango	Gade
American Fantasy	Herbert

NELL GWYN THEATER ANNOUNCES PLAYS

Form and Content



Arthur Fiedler

Conductor of the Symphony Hall Pops Concerts, Which Will End Their Fifty-First Season Next Saturday Night

---

Post June 29

THE POPS

It might seem that something that has been going on for more than 50 years would have lost its appeal by now, at least for the younger people.

But the Pop concerts are a tradition, or, rather, an institution in Boston.

Each season rolls around and the Pops just naturally happen. But what might appear surprising is that the concerts which were taking place back in the days of the horse car and the buggy, of bustles and bone collars, could be held in high favor now.

Yet the concerts are more popular than ever.

Never in the long history of the Pops have the audiences been so large as at this time. This, the 51st season, has seen all previous attendance records shattered.

Thus far this season, 98,500 persons have attended the concerts, which go into their final week of the season beginning today.

The reason for such popularity is understandable. The quality of the music has long since been established. And the mirthful, yet conventional, surroundings have no end of appeal.

It is noted this season that an especially large number of school children have been in attendance. This, too, is understandable. Nearly all schools today have their bands and orchestras and glee clubs. The pupils take a genuine interest in music.

Then, again, more people are taking up music today.

Anyone watching one of the many parades held in the course of the year must be impressed by the number of bands participating. The musicians include in no small numbers tiny cadets who seem hardly big enough to blow on trumpets or send notes pouring out of horns. The war veteran organizations have also taken a real pride in having their own bands and there is keen competition among them to win honors for playing the best in music.

All of this has an influence in spreading the liking for good music.

There are the old-timers, of course, who are the mainstays of the Pops in lean years and during the fat. They have been on hand this season—more enthused than ever.

The shattering of a 50-year attendance record at the Pops is something that cannot go unnoticed. It is a tribute to the conductorship of Arthur Fiedler and the fine musicians. But it indicates, too, that the desire for better music, rather than diminishing, is growing all the time.

Prosperity Is The Word for Current Pops

This Season Most Successful In History; Opera News At Home and Abroad

By Moses Smith

With but one more week remaining, the fifty-first season of the Pops concerts will be recorded as the most successful in the history of the institution. The average attendance has been over 2000. The majority of the concerts have been played to a full house. And there has not been a single evening when the attendance has been light.

The patronage, it has been known, has been steadily increasing in the last few years, after a considerable period of depression. But it was only during the present season when the previous "high"—reached during the Jacchia regime—was finally surpassed.

Various reasons have been assigned for the current prosperity at Symphony Hall. "Special" nights have increased steadily in number, and the "society" influence has become increasingly important. The management has assiduously cultivated organizations and groups, and evidently satisfied them, for the renewals have been general. And this year the weather has been most propitious. The hot weather came early in the season rather than late. It has had less effect on the attendance because advance reservations have always been heavier in the first part of the season than in the end.

The good fortune of the Pops has also had a beneficent effect on the winter season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An unusual number of Pops-goers have subscribed this spring to the winter concerts of next season. In addition, it should be recalled that the Pops are managed directly by Symphony Hall for the Symphony Orchestra. If, in the past, there has been a deficit from the Pops season it was charged against the desirability (and in many cases, necessity) of offering the members of the Symphony Orchestra a long playing-season. The present season of Pops, however, will actually show a profit that can be applied to the deficit from the main season.

Opera in Boston

2

CHRISTIAN LEADER
BOSTON, MASS.

AY 23 1936

THE SILLINESS OF ADVERTISING

We often wonder if advertising affects other people as it so frequently affects ourselves. It is so silly, so brainless, so stupid! Cigarette advertising seems to us to take the cake for sheer ineptitude. All the popular brands of cigarettes are consistently presented as not doing what it is evidently so dreaded that cigarettes might do. We never really knew what awful things might, and presumably usually do, follow upon smoking, until the present lavish cigarette advertising began. These miserable weeds evidently parch and sting the throat terribly—all except this brand which is so "mild." They burn the sensitive membranes of the mouth and nose—all except this other brand which is so "cool." They cause constant coughing—all except this third brand which contains "not a cough in a carload." We wonder that anybody ever dares to touch cigarettes after reading what their manufacturers say about their evils. Then the silly exaggerations of advertising! Here is Rupert's Beer described as "the talk of the town." One would imagine, to read that phrase, that people did nothing these days but stop one another upon the streets and excitedly discuss this beer. As a matter of fact, who ever heard it mentioned outside of a bar-room? "I'd walk a mile for a Camel"—but did you ever see a smoker refuse the first cigarette offered him? We are informed, on the radio, that Bill Ballyhoo's orchestra at the Hotel Hotcha is "making musical history." Musical history, which includes names of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, the Paris Opera and the Boston Symphony Orchestra! Is anybody's attention won, or even wooed, by talk like that? Even book publishers present their products as "the greatest novel of the century," or "a poem greater than Wordsworth or Tennyson." Most advertising, as we see or hear it, we find either repellent or ridiculous. What it does to us is to teach us the articles which we must not buy under any circumstances. Give us a "phoney" full-page ad, in the newspaper, or a salvey announcer's statement on the radio, or a bill-board ruining the landscape in the country and we are through for good and all. Advertising is an unmitigated evil. The way to stop it is to boycott it!—Unity.

* * *

NEW YORK MIRROR

JUN 26 1936

MUSIC

By JULIAN SEAMAN.

MY COLLEAGUE of the Times, Mr. Olin Downes, has addressed a few pointed remarks concerning the present and past managements of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society, to the general public, via the current issue of the North American Review.

Those who still harbor a conviction that "the king can do no wrong" will be rudely awakened. Yet Mr. Downes is not vituperative, nor even abusive There is a quiet strength in what he says, a candor and a sincere desire for a corrective policy, before anaemia shall set in and the patient drift beyond all human or financial aid.

Mr. Downes sketches, briefly, the history of the Philharmonic, a factual record devoid of fancied glories. I think he makes a mistake in holding up the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a model for the Philharmonic management.

The problems confronting orchestral managements everywhere are peculiarly individual. Boston prefers to support its orchestra for the sake of musical perfection, without regard for the needs of various glittering personalities of the baton. But Mr. Downes comes from Boston himself, and it is natural that native customs should wear well in his esteem.

Mr. Downes inquires, in his title: "And after Toscanini—What?" It is a pertinent question. He is right in his conclusion that the logical future of the orchestra, now that its greatest era of conducting has passed, lies in a development of the orchestra and its music, under one or two conductors who will thus develop their own careers.

Like most of the critical fold, he finds the board of directors to have been incredibly stupid and arbitrary in their recent actions, notably the engagement of Furtwaengler, subsequently recanted, and the array of conductors announced for next season.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NASHVILLE, TENN.
BANNER

JUN 14 1936

We can hardly wait to attend a "Pop Concert" in Boston, for we are unable to picture Beacon Street swigging beer to the accompaniment of the proud Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. E. C. Tompkins and her son, Norman went to one of these novel events during Mrs. Tompkins' recent trip to Boston. True New Englander that she is, Mrs. Tompkins has attended many others, but her enthusiastic description of her last attendance has practically influenced us to rush down to the ticket office to buy our transportation to Boston. The amazing performance takes place in the august, dignified Symphony Hall from which the seats have been removed to accommodate small tables and chairs for the patrons.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUN 14 1936

Charles O'Connell, author of the "Victor Book of the Symphony," who conducted several of the concerts during the recent tour of the Philadelphia Orchestra, has been engaged as guest conductor for the current series of "Pop" concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Appeal of Boston Symphony Pops Is Same Today As It Was Half Century in Past

[illegible] - June 15/36

Conductor Finds No Change in Musical Tastes. Unsung Commuter to Be Recognized With "Rhode Island Night".

By Gladys Van Egmond

The 51st summer edition of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—nicknamed The Pops, now a synonym for sparkling music, wines and beers, served to an audience lounging at table—pulses along at Symphony Hall in the heart of Back Bay.

Programs have been captioned Request Night, Old Timers Night, Gay Nineties Night. There may yet be a Bicycle Night. But this week, in recognition of the unsung commuter who has drifted into Boston each spring, Arthur Fiedler will devote the Wednesday program to Rhode Island Night.

The Governor has promised to be there. Rhode Island composers will be represented in the musical fare. Dr. Wassili Leps will conduct one group of selections. And the citizenry will be stimulated by the convivial atmosphere.

No Real Mystery

At the beginning of the season, a Boston critic pondered aloud the mystery of The Pops's popularity. But to nine out of 10 of us, the mystery never was. It seems the ideal way along with chamber music, to receive a program in comfort and with the addition of food, drink and gentle conversation.

Symphony Hall even changes its physical appearance when Mr. Fiedler takes over the baton from Mr. Koussevitzky in the summer. A cool shade of green is painted on the walls that become a dignified red for the winter programs of heavier music. Green and gold chairs seat the audience. Trellis work is added to the platform.

The symphony artists, however, do not don ice cream pants. Mr. Fiedler, who works himself so hard with the reed-like baton that he calluses his fingers, has invented a cooling system under his platform. An electric fan disperses some of the heat generated as he waves his musicians from one mood to another.

Tastes Unchanged

I attended the Saturday concert, interviewed Mr. Fiedler and examined Symphony Hall when it was full of people and empty.

Mr. Fiedler compared the Pops of tonight and 50 years ago. He found that the cherub-faced girl, eager with youth and modernly dressed in a cream alpaca suit, likes the same music that the old lady in high stock and furs favors as she sips lemonade.

Through the years, with The Pops becoming an institution for New England, people have demanded extremes in music. They ask for the slow, or the very fast, or the din of the very loud. Some of the numbers are favorites now as they were half a century back.

Long with Orchestra

So said the man who has gauged the summer tastes for seven years as conductor—Mr. Fiedler. For many more years than that, he has played with the orchestra, and his father before him.

Just then, there came into Room A and into the conversation, a gentleman with old-world charm, snowy white hair and moustache, and a cane hung over his arm. He pronounced a musician's and a father's commendation on the program of Tchaikovsky and Wagner, sandwiched between Viennese waltzes.

Mr. Fiedler, whose thick hair and moustache were as pitch-colored as his father's were white, rose from his glass of ale and cheese-on-rye to greet Emanuel Fiedler.

Played 25 Seasons

The latter came recently from retirement in Berlin to make his home with his older daughter in Boston and to frequent again the corridors of Symphony Hall. The senior Fiedler was pensioned years ago after playing the violin for 25 seasons with the Boston Symphony.

Julius Theodorovich, first violinist, directed tonight by the younger Fiedler, played with the orchestra with Emanuel Fiedler when the Pops were young.

The 77-year-old Fiedler continues his practice of two or three hours a day as if he were going into the concert again.

Audiences tonight are twice the size of those of the earlier time, both the Fiedlers said. People listen more attentively, said the younger man; formerly, the orchestra had difficulty being heard above the conversation.

Self-Supporting

Mr. Fiedler believes The Pops to be self-supporting, whereas the winter series has a yearly deficit made up by the Friends of the Symphony.

Occasionally, a new number like "Bolero" or "Rhapsody in Blue" gets under the skin of the music-listener, but generally mother and daughter request the same type of music—that which will reach the emotions, according to the conductor.

Mr. Fiedler said he was not a showman in his conducting, that he was unconscious of his movements on the stand, but he showed the calluses on his fingers from making circles with a baton as light as a feather quill.

"It takes an awful lot out of you," he said. "The conductor has to make the orchestra succumb to his will. That's taxing. And then, the constant changing of the moods of the music."

He said he was wearied from 40 consecutive nights of conducting. Last night he was to have his first post-sunset freedom since The Pops season began.

"Busman's Holiday"

And what would he do with his leisure, I asked. "Take a busman's holiday" was his laughing answer. Invite some of the orchestra to his Commonwealth avenue apartment, feed them phonograph music and a menu prepared by his elderly German housekeeper.

Mr. Fiedler is around 40 years old and unmarried. His housekeeper looks after him. He plays tennis and travels for a hobby. He has been everywhere in Europe except Russia, and he has visited Africa.

He plays little now, but prefers the piano. He first played the second violin, then the viola and the celesta. He also likes the organ.

"One achievement I am a little bit proud of," he says in reference to the Esplanade concerts which he conducts after The Pops season.

Other Activities

He spends his winters conducting choruses and chamber orchestras, coming occasionally to Providence. His Boston Sinfonietta also travels South in September. He serves on the Boston University faculty. In July, he will make recordings with his orchestra. His vacation will take him travelling next to Mexico.

Was it a coincidence that much of Saturday's program was Viennese? Of course, his father was born in Vienna and still speaks with a thick accent. The younger Fiedler was born in Boston and had the usual American boy's bringing-up, even trying to run away to the circus.

"It just happens that I like the waltzes and am said to have a flair for Viennese music," Mr. Fiedler answered.

Must Be Felt

His father agreed that the rhythm of these songs is not all written, that traditionally it has to be felt to be interpreted successfully.

Swing music and jazz come and go, but Haydn and Bach and the Russians continue to delight Pops-goers. So says their conductor who three times a week rehearses his orchestra of 85 pieces.

Outside in the unpeopled auditorium, soft music was being played on the piano with only Demosthenes and the other classic statues above the gallery to hear.

It was Mr. Fiedler's sister, Elsa, a professional pianist who came from New York for the concert. Another sister became a violinist, and a third, 'cellist; one cousin, a pianist, and another, Boston Symphony 'cellist. His greatgrandfather and grandfather likewise were musicians, and two uncles joined the symphony orchestra as violinists.

Opposes Specialization.

The piano-playing sister wants to specialize in Mozart, Mr. Fiedler commented, but he advises her against it. "I don't believe a musician should become too centralized in a type of music. Besides, it is more interesting to do many types."

There's too much snobbism about the lighter music, he thought. Strauss waltzes are little masterpieces, he said. He plans sometime to conduct orchestras in Europe. He has studied in Vienna.

Elsa played on. Mr. Fiedler had finished his beer and victuals and was free until tonight.

PRINTS FOR SUMMER

Paris.(—AP)—Telegraph prints—poles with worded messages flying between them—make striking designs for summer dress fabrics. The message are the accustomed greetings of the day in all languages. Other prints are stamped with the 38

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

JUN 11 1936

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL WILL FEATURE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., June 11—Olin Downes, music critics of the New York Times, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire Hills, Aug. 13, 14, 15 and 16. Mr. Downes will give a series of three lectures devoted to symphonies to be played at the Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse. The public is invited.

This was the announcement made to community chairmen from three states assembled in Stockbridge this afternoon. Mrs. Bruce Crane, of Dalton, and formerly of Hartford, Conn., will assist with illustrations at the piano.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now in Europe enjoying a much needed rest at his Paris home and in the Bavarian Alps. He will return in July.

We are delighted to be able to bring such an outstanding attraction as the Great Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra to the Berkshires," said Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, acting President of the Festival in the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. "We are sure that Mr. Downes' coming will add immeasurably to the attraction."

The subscription campaign for Berkshire's outstanding musical event, a non-profit-making venture opens the first of next month. Already there has been a tremendous response. The Festival has nearly 1,000 sustaining members from a score of states and 71 patrons, according to the Treasurer, John C. Lynch, former vice president of the New York Telephone Company.

The chairmen for Hudson and vicinity is Mrs. O. H. Bradley and Mr. Gerald Bliss.

Among the outstanding supporters of the plan to make the Berkshires the summer musical center of America are: Albert Spalding, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Owen Johnson, Norman H. Davis, Sidney Howard, Miss Mabel Choate, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. W. Murray Crane and a host of others.

The Symphonies on the program are: Beethoven's 7th, Sibelius' 2nd, Brahms' 2nd, Mendelsshohn's "Italian" and Tschaikowsky's 5th.

Detailed information may be obtained by addressing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 15 1936

FESTIVAL TO MOVE FROM HANNA FARM; MRS. EMERSON OFFERS ESTATE, HOLMWOOD

Change in Ownership of Hanna Place Precipitates Move—New Location Between Lenox and Stockbridge on Route 7 Has Beautiful Amphitheater Within Horseshoe of Cathedral Pines — Parking Space Available for 3000 Cars—Orchestra To Be Housed at Maplewood.

Mrs. Margaret Emerson of New York, has offered her extensive estate, Holmwood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, for the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be the attraction. The dates will be August 13, 15 and 16.

This announcement was made today by George W. Edman, chairman of the co-ordinating committee in anticipation of the opening of the subscription campaign next Monday. In the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York and Glendale, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of Lenox and New York, first vice president, is acting president.

Change in ownership of the Dan Hanna Farm in Interlaken, scene of the Festival in 1934 and 1935 precipitated the change in location.

As an additional feature this year the Festival offers three lectures on the principle symphonies by Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, August 12 and 14 at 11 A. M., and August 16 at 12:15 noon.

Ideal Location

Holmwood, which is the former summer home of George Westinghouse, electrical inventor and manufacturer, is ideally located for the Festival. It has ready access from Federal Route 7, the north and south highway through the Berkshire Hills. The boundaries of the three towns of Lenox, Stockbridge and Lee come together on the estate. The huge tent for the concerts and the shell will be placed on a gentle slope within a horseshoe formed by great cathedral pines. Through the trees to the northeast my be seen Laurel Lake and in the background the Hoosac Range. A mile west, across Stockbridge Bowl is the Hanna Farm where the Festival was held in 1934 and 1935. Adjacent to the amphitheater is a parking area sufficient for 3000 cars. Another field is available near by if it is needed.

Mrs. Emerson's villa with its Colonial pillars, commands a view of much of the 500-acre estate including lovely gardens, rolling lawns, artificial lakes and winding driveways. Immediately surrounding are the estates of Giraud Foster, Helm George Wilde, son-in-law of William B. Osgood Field, the late Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Bullard (formerly Edith Wharton's place) Miss Heloise Meyer and her sister, Mrs. Samuel Frothingham.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will be guests of Miss Robinson Smith at her summer home, the Residence, Festival Week.

Orchestra in Pittsfield

The orchestra will stay at the Maplewood Hotel in Pittsfield and will have access to the old Bullfinch Church for individual practice. This church, originally the First Congregational Church of Pittsfield, and now a ball room for the hotel is the only example of Bullfinch architecture in Western New England. The Pittsfield Chamber of Commerce is arranging a tour through scenic Berkshire for the orchestra on August 14.

Hotels and rooming houses report a considerable advance demand for reservations and are urging those who plan to attend the Festival to make reservations early to avoid disappointment.

Subscriptions may be obtained with information of other Berkshire events Festival week and hotel accommodations by writing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., Stockbridge or by contacting local chairman.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 22 1936

SPECIAL MUSIC FESTIVAL DRIVE

Subscriptions Will be Sought in County

FOR TWO WEEKS

New Setting for August Attraction is Said to Offer Many Advantages.

For two weeks starting today, local committees in all sections of the county will conduct a special subscription campaign for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on August 13, 15 and 16, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, will give the Festival this year with unquestioned standing as one of the world's outstanding events of its kind.

With the coming of the Boston Symphony, the Festival likewise moves to a new location on the east side of Stockbridge Bowl, at the Emerson Estate, almost directly across and about a mile distant from the Dan Hanna farm on the west side of the lake, where the Festival was located for two seasons. The sale of the Hanna farm necessitated a change, and the beautiful estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson was offered and accepted. The new setting is said to offer many advantages, besides affording ample free parking space for more than 3,000 cars.

All of the concerts this year will be given under a large canopy, so that the schedule will not be dependent upon the weather. This year, for the first time, individually reserved seats will be available. If reserved seats are desired, the Trustees suggests that requests be sent in immediately, as the indications are that they will be in considerable demand.

Another innovation this year will be the preliminary lectures to be given before each concert by Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times. Mr. Downes will speak at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, commenting on the program for the first concert at 11 a. m., August 12, on the second at the same hour August 14, and on the final program at 12.15 on August 16, the day of the concert. Refreshments will not be sold during the progress of the concerts, but will be available at moderate prices both before and after the programs.

The Festival is a non-profit venture. The subscription prices, for general admission to all three concerts, will be $6.00 for the front section and $3 for the rear section. Interest in the undertaking is widespread, twenty states being represented already in the list of subscribers, sustaining members and patrons who pledged their support at the time arrangements were made with the Boston Symphony.

The community chairmen for Northern Berkshire are Mrs. Theodore Plunkett of Adams, Mrs. Thomas E. Dooley of North Adams, and Mrs. Charles Safford of Williamstown.

WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN

JUN 23 1936

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS AT FESTIVAL IN SOUTH BERKSHIRE

Mrs. Allan Craig is the chairman for this section for the two weeks' campaign for subscriptions for the Berkshire Symphonic festival. The Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will play at the festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16. Twenty states are already represented on the list of subscribers, sustaining members and patrons.

The festival, a non-profit making venture sponsored by public spirited summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires, eastern New York and northern Connecticut, will be held this year at Holmwood, the lovely estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson between Stockbridge and Lenox on federal route No. 7. This location is a mile east across Stockbridge bowl from the location of 1934 and 1935 There is ample free parking space on the estate for more than 3,000 cars All the concerts will be under a huge canopy, so that rain will not interfere with the schedule. Refreshments, moderately priced, will be available before and after the concerts.

This year for the first time, individually reserved seats are available. Because of the demand for them. Trustees urge a prompt request if reserved seats are desired.

Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, will give lectures on the programs at the Berkshire playhouse, Aug. 12 and 14 at 11 a. m. and Aug. 16 at 12:15 noon.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

JUN 22 1936

Berkshire Symphony Dates Aug. 12-16

The Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by ~~Dr.~~ Serge Koussevitsky and lectures by Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, will feature this year's program of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which was outlined today.

Charles Safford is chairman for Williamstown and vicinity for the two-weeks' campaign for subscriptions which opens today.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will play at the Festival August 13, 15 and 16.

The Festival, a non-profit making venture sponsored by public spirited summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires, Eastern New York and Northern Connecticut, will be held this year at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson between Stockbridge and Lenox on Federal Route 7.

This location is a mile East across Stockbridge Bowl from the location of 1934 and 1935. There is ample free parking space on the estate for more than 3000 cars. All the concerts will be under a huge canopy, so that rain will not interfere with the schedule.

Olin Downes, will give lectures on the program at the Berkshire Playhouse Aug. 12 and 14 at 11 a. m. and Aug. 16 at 12:15 noon.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUN 23 1936

Concert Tickets Go on Sale Here

Mrs. Mulroney Is Chairman for Local Berkshire Festival Subscriptions

Mrs. Dorothy Birchard Mulroney is chairman for Springfield and vicinity for the two weeks' campaign for subscriptions to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which opened today. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will play at the Festival, Aug. 13, 15 and 16. Twenty States are already represented on the list of subscribers, sustaining members and patrons.

The festival, a non-profit making venture sponsored by public spirited summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires, Eastern New York and Northern Connecticut, will be held this year at Holmwood, the lovely estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson between Stockbridge and Lenox.

This year for the first time, individually reserved seats are available. Because of the demand for them, trustees urge a prompt request if reserved seats are desired.

Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, will give lectures on the principal symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse Aug. 12 and 14 at 11 a. m. and Aug. 16 at 12.15 noon.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

JUN 14 1936

Downes Will Lecture at Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Mass.—Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will join his old friend, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, at the Berkshire symphonic festival between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire hills, Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

Downes will give three lectures devoted to the symphonies to be played at the festival by the Boston symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire playhouse.

The symphonies on the program are Beethoven's seventh, Sibelius' second, Brahams' second, Mendelssohn's "Italian" and Tschaikovsky's fifth.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUN 22 1936

Berkshire Symphonic Sale Opens

Mrs. Long Local Chairman of Subscription Campaign in Connection With Festival

Mrs. George C. Long, Jr., is chairman for Hartford and vicinity for the two weeks' campaign for subscriptions for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which opens today. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will play at the festival. August 13, 15 and 18. Twenty states are already represented on the list of subscribers, sustaining members and patrons.

The festival, a non-profit making venture sponsored by public-spirited summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires, eastern New York and northern Connecticut, will be held this year at Holmwood, the lovely estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson between Stockbridge and Lenox on Federal Route 7. This location is a mile east across Stockbridge Bowl from the location of 1934 and 1935. There is ample free parking space on the estate for more than 3000 cars. All the concerts will be under a huge canopy, so that rain will not interfere with the schedule. Refreshments, moderately priced, will be available before and after the concerts.

Individually Reserved Seats.

This year for the first time, individually reserved seats are available. Because of the demand for them, trustees urge a prompt request if reserved seats are desired. The subscription prices for general admission are: For the front section, $6; rear section $3, admitting to all three concerts.

Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, will give lectures on the prinicpal symphonies at the Berkshire Playhouse August 12 and 14 at 11 a. m. and August 16 at 12:15 noon.

The community chairman who will answer inquiries concerning the festival are as follows: Adams, Mrs. Theodore Plunkett; Albany, Edgar S. Van Olinda; Amherst, Mrs. S. C. Goding; Chatham, Miss Annabelle Terrell; Dalton, Mrs. Bruce Crane; Great Barrington, Mrs. George L. Taylor and Mrs. Clark T. Durant; Hartford, Mrs. George C. Long Jr., Hillsdale, Mrs. Alexander Bloch; Housatonic, Mrs. Charles Giddings; Hudson, Mrs. O. R. Bradley and Gerald Bliss; Kinderhook, Mrs. Frederick Downing; Lanesboro, Miss Margery Whiting, New Lebanon, Mrs. Minnie Losty Smith; Lee, Mrs. James T. Owens; Lenox, Miss Estelle Hutchinson and Lester Roberts; Monterey, Mrs. Earle Stafford; Norfolk, Mrs. David Goodnow; North Adams, Mrs. Thomas E. Dooley; Northampton, Miss Dorothy Bement; Pittsfield, Mrs. George W. Edman; Schenectady, Joseph Derrick; Sharon, Mrs. Charles G. Kerley; Springfield, Mrs. Dorothy Birchard Mulroney; Stockbridge, Mrs. John C. Lynch; Torrington, Mrs. Allan Craig, West Stockbridge, Mrs. W. J. Johnson; Williamstown, Charles Safford; Windsor, Mass., Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD TELEGRAM

JUN 24 1936

Berkshires Turn Gayer for Summer

Bike Fans Ride the Roads Through Colonial Villages.

Special to the World-Telegram.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, June 24.—Bicycling, a sport confined for years to a limited existence in Madison Square Garden, is enjoying a promising renaissance along the byways of the Berkshires this summer.

Vacationists seem to have decided that they can enjoy the country more by cycling along the back gravel roads than by speeding over the concrete highways. Every day, young men and women in shorts are seen pedalling past the Bird Sanctuary in Lenox, and last week one couple pushed a tandem up to within a few hundred yards of the peak of Lenox Mountain. If their ascent was slow, they made up for it in the descent.

Trees on the hillsides, which a few months ago provided perfect tumbling grounds for thousands of ski-amateurs from the metropolitan areas, are covered already with the green leaves which will remain until late fall. Visitors find especially attractive the rustic camp of the Ted Shawn Dancers of Jacob's Pillow, where they will present Friday afternoon programs throughout the summer.

On the Westinghouse estate in Lenox, benches are being erected for the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which will bring Dr. Serge Koussevitszky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Berkshires for out-of-door concerts on August 13, 15 and 16. The programs include selections from Wagner, Beethoven, Sibelius, Mendelsohn, Brahms, Debussy and other composers.

A new summer playhouse will be opened early in July in Williamstown, offering competition for the first time with the popular Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge, this year under the direction of William Miles. The Williamstown players are being selected from the undergraduate actors of Williams and Bennington colleges.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge again is sponsoring her Sunday afternoon series of chamber music concerts at South Mountain, Pittsfield. Katherine Parlow, of California, will be the first violinist for her second season, and Willem Willeke, 'cellist, is returning as director of the South Mountain Quartet.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 23 1936

Festival Group Will Contact Music Lovers

Large Committee To Work for Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Pittsfield's Berkshire Symphonic Festival committee is anxious to make a thorough contact with all music lovers in Pittsfield during the next two weeks in connection with the coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

On the Pittsfield committee are Miss Elizabeth Gamwell, Mrs. Charles K. Ferry, Miss Helen Kellogg, Mrs. Peter J. Pianarosa, Willard Sistare, Miss Olga Garbarino, Miss Abby Neill, Mrs. Robert Colton, Mrs. Henry A. Francis who is also a trustee of the Festival, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Miss Catherine Manion, of the Open Book, Miss Charlotte Burns of England Brothers' book department, Mrs. Natalie Pujolas Jones of the Berkshire Hills Conference, Mrs. Michael L. Eisner, Miss Mary Quirk of the Women's Club, Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, Donald L. Coleman and Miss Helen England. Mrs. George W. Edman is chairman. The committee will meet at 83 Dawes Avenue this afternoon.

The committee has made arrangements with the Berkshire Street Railway to run a special bus to Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate, Holmwood, between Lenox and Stockbridge for the three concerts, the round trip fare to be 40 cents. From the Curtis Hotel to the Festival grounds and return the fare will be 20 cents.

Subscriptions for all three concerts are transferrable in the event that two or three persons wish to buy a single subscription for the series.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 22 1936

MRS MULRONEY ON CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE FOR BERKSHIRE MUSIC

Mrs Dorothy Birchard Mulroney is chairman for Springfield and vicinity for the two weeks' campaign for subscriptions for the Berkshire Symphonic festival which opens today. The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitzky will play at the festival, August 13, 15 and 16. Twenty states are already represented on the list of subscribers, sustaining members and patrons.

The festival, a nonprofit marking venture sponsored by public spirited summer and permanent residents of the Berkshires, Eastern New York and Northern Connecticuit, will be held this year at Holmwood, the lovely estate of Mrs Margaret Emerson between Stockbridge and Lenox on federal route 7. This location is a mile east across Stockbridge bowl from the location of 1934 and 1935.

There is ample free parking space on the estate for more than 3000 cars. All the concerts will be under a huge canopy, so that rain will not interfere with the schedule. Refreshments, moderately priced, will be available before and aftter the concerts.

This year for the first time, individually reserved seats are available. Because of the demand for them, trustees urge a prompt request if reserved seats are desired. The subscription prices for general admission are:—For the front section, $6; rear section, $3, admitting to all three concerts.

Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, will give lectures on the principal symphenies at the Berkshire playhouse, August 12 and 14, at 11 a. m., and August 16 at 12:15 noon.

The community chairmen who will be pleased to answer inquiries concerning the festival, are as follows:—Adams, Mrs Theodore Plunkett; Albany, Edgar S. Van Olinda; Amherst, Mrs S. C. Goding; Chatham, Miss Annabelle Terrell; Dalton, Mrs Bruce Crane; Great Barrington, Mrs George L. Taylor and Mrs Clark T. Durant; Hartford, Mrs George C. Long, Jr.; Hillsdale, Mrs Alexander Bloch; Housatonic, Mrs Charles Giddings; Hudson, Mrs O. H. Bradley and Gerald Bliss; Kinderhook, Mrs Frederick Downing; Lanesboro, Miss Margery Whiting; New Lebanon, Mrs Minnie Losty Smith; Lee, Mrs James T. Owens; Lenox, Miss Estelle Hutchinson and Lester Roberts; Monterey, Mrs Earle Stafford; Norfolk, Mrs David Goodnow; North Adams, Mrs Thomas E. Dooley; Northampton, Miss Dorothy Bement; Pittsfield, Mrs George W. Edman; Schenectdy, Joseph Derrick; Springfield, Mrs Dorothy Birchard Mulroney; Stockbridge, Mrs John C. Lynch; Torrington, Mrs Allan Craig; West Stockbridge, Mrs W. J. Johnson; Williamstown, Charles Safford; Windsor, Mass., Mrs Elizabeth C. T. Miller.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 21 1936

NOTES HERE AND AFIELD

THE third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at which which the Boston Symphony, under Koussevitzky will be the attraction, will be held Aug. 13, 15 and 16, at Holmwood, the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. Three lectures on the principal symphonies to be performed will be given by Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, Aug. 12 and 14, at 11 A. M., and Aug. 16 at 12:15 P. M., at the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge. These lectures will be an additional feature of this year's festival.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMERICAN

JUN 16 1936

Berkshire Festival at Emerson Estate

Mrs. Margaret Emerson, of New York, has offered her extensive estate, Holmwood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., for the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be the attraction. The dates will be Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUN 17 1936

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PROGRAM ANNOUNCED

Boston Symphony to Play There in August

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival Committee announced today that Mrs. Margaret Emerson of New York, has offered her estate, Holmwood, as the scene for the third annual festival, which will consist of three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

Holmwood, which is between Stockbridge and Lenox, is near U. S. Route 7, and a mile east of the Hanna Farm, where the 1934 and 1935 festivals were held and the 1938 festival was originally scheduled to take place. The tent for the audience and the orchestra shell will be placed on a gentle slope within a horseshoe formed by tall pines. A parking area which will accommodate 3000 cars will adjoin the amphitheater, and another nearby field also will be available for parking if needed.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky, Ernest B. Dane, treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Dane will be the guests of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival association, at her Summer home, the Residence, during the festival period.

Three lectures on the festival programs will be given by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, on the mornings of Aug. 12 and 14 at 11 o'clock, and on Aug. 16 at 12.15, at the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge. Ted Shawn will present special dance programs during this period at his Summer studio in West Becket. On Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16, there will be chamber music concerts at South Mountain, Pittsfield, Music Mountain in the Falls Village, Conn., and the Playhouse-in-the-Hills, Cummington.

Further information about festival concerts is obtainable by application to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 18 1936

THE BERKSHIRE HILLS

The third annual Berkshire Music Festival will be held on Aug. 13, 15 and 16 in a tent at Holmwood, the Lenox estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson of New York. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, will give three concerts, and Olin Downes will give three lectures at the Berkshire Playhouse during festival week. Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia is acting president of the association during the absence abroad of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

The Pittsfield Country Club will have a "cruise night" Saturday. Miss Jean Whittlesey is a general chairman.

Miss Matilda A. Brownell is at her Stockbridge Summer home for the season.

Robert Underwood Johnson is visiting his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson, at Stockbridge.

The first of a series of Summer lectures will be given tomorrow by Miss Julia A. Latimer of Mamaroneck, N. Y., at the Berkshire Garden Center, Stockbridge.

Miss Alice B. Riggs poured at the Lenox Garden Club council party which Mrs. Adolf A. Berle Jr. gave at Great Barrington.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

40 JUN 1 5 1936

FESTIVAL TO BE IN NEW LOCATION

Holmwood Estate Offered by Mrs. Margaret Emerson

AT LENOX

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and His Boston Symphony to Play Three Days in August.

Mrs, Margaret Emerson of New York has offered her extensive estate, Holmwood, between Lenox and Stockbridge for the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will be the attraction. The dates will be Aug. 13, 15 and 16.

This announcement was made today by George W. Edman, chairman of the co-ordinating committee in anticipation of the opening of the subscription campaign next Monday. In the absence of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York and Glendale, Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia of Lenox and New York, first vice president, is acting president.

Change in ownership of the Dan Hanna farm in Interlaken, scene of the festival in 1934 and 1935, precipitated the change in location.

As an additional feature this year the festival offers three lectures on the principal symphonies by Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Aug. 12 and 14 at 11 a. m. and Aug. 16 at 12.15 noon.

Holmwood, which is the former summer home of George Westinghouse, electrical inventor and manufacturer is ideally located for the festival. It has ready access from federal route 7, the north and south highway through the Berkshire Hills. The boundaries of the three towns of Lenox, Stockbridge and Lee come together on the estate. The huge tent for the concerts and the shell will be placed on a gentle slope within a horseshoe formed by the great cathedral pines. Through the trees to the northeast may be seen Laurel lake and in the background the Hoosac Range. A mile west, across Stockbridge Bowl is the Hanna farm where the festival was held in 1934 and 1935. Adjacent to the amphitheater is a parking area sufficient for 3,000 cars. Another field is available near by if it is needed.

Mrs. Emerson's villa with its colonial pillars, commands a view of much of the 500-acre estate including lovely gardens, rolling lawns, artificial lakes and winding driveways. Immediately surrounding are the estates of Giraud Foster, Helm George Wilde, son-in-law of William B. Osgood Field, the late Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Bullard (formerly Edith Wharton's place) Miss Heloise Meyer and her sister, Mrs. Samuel Frothingham.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will be guests of Miss Robinson Smith at her summer home, the Residence, festival week.

The orchestra will stay at the Maplewood hotel in Pittsfeld and will have access to the old Bullfinch church for individual practice. This church, originally the First Congregational church of Pittsfield, now a ballroom for the hotel is the only example of Bullfinch architecture in Western New England. The Pittsfield Chamber of Commerce is arranging a tour through scenic Berkshire for the orchestra on Aug. 14.

Hotels and rooming houses report a considerable advance demand for the reservations and are urging those who plan to attend the festival to make reservations early to avoid disappointment.

Subscription may be obtained with information of other Berkshire events festival week and hotel accommodations by writing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Other attractions festival week include chamber music on Sunday afternoon the 16th at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Music Temple in Pittsfield, Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain in Falls Village, Ct., and Miss Katherine Frazier's Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

BLANK PAGE

ARTHUR FIEDLER
SYMPHONY HALL
BOSTON

(Edited by R. L.
Humphrey – publicity manager –)

To My Friends of the Pops Audiences:

Pops-goers love encores, I know.

And so with great pleasure I announce: Encore after the last Pop Concert -- THE EIGHTH SEASON OF ESPLANADE CONCERTS, BY ABOUT FIFTY BOSTON SYMPHONY MUSICIANS UNDER MY CONDUCTORSHIP.

I hope to give four weeks of Esplanade Concerts, to begin Sunday, July 12, and end August 7. As before, they would be played each night except Saturday, on Embankment Road, at the foot of Mt. Vernon St., free of charge. There is space in our beautiful open air "hall" for as many as 25,000 listeners.

But, as usual at the beginning of each Summer, I cannot say that the season is anything more than a plan until the funds are on hand. Again I am asking everyone who can do so to make a contribution according to his or her ability, in order that much of the world's best orchestral music may be heard by many others who can give little or nothing.

The important thing is contributions by mail before the opening program, in order to insure the playing of the twenty-four concerts planned. Without such advance support, I should have to cut down the season from four weeks to two, or even one.

Last Summer the contributions by mail numbered 600 -- the highest total in all seven seasons. Considering that a quarter of a million persons hear the concerts each year, is it too much to hope for 1,000 contributors by mail this season? Contributors of small coins in the fund boxes on the concert grounds have been estimated at as many as 30,000. But their total in small gifts takes care of but one fourth of the concert expense. My great problem is to take care of the remaining three-quarters. MAY I COUNT ON YOU TO BE ONE PERSON IN A THOUSAND TO MAIL A CONTRIBUTION IN ADVANCE?

Very truly yours,

Arthur Fiedler

CONTRIBUTOR PLEASE TAKE NOTE.

Contribution should be made payable to Esplanade Concerts Fund. It may be mailed either to: Arthur Fiedler, Symphony Hall, Boston, or to: Esplanade Concerts Fund, Trust Dept., Merchants National Bank, 28 State St., Boston.

MR. ARTHUR FIEDLER:

I hereby contribute $ (by check Money Order) to The Arthur Fiedler Esplanade Concerts Fund.

Name____________________________________

Address____________________________________

43

PASTE OVER

---

on you on this line

The Arthur Fiedler

SECOND Fold away from you on this line

THE CONDUC
The conductor of bines in himself striking great technical knowle orchestra as on a solo
Though the orches
ficiency, much still de converting the printed stir or charm in the m
For the preparation
cellent performance, t
tion to a musical artist possess some of the
who is steady under fi

CHOIRS—WO
The orchestra's inst
sections, or "choirs"
(piccolo, flute, oboe,
4—percussion (drum
Perhaps less familiar
the other mainstays o
horn and some of the
The mouthpieces of bassoon contain two n player blows through between his lips, which
The clarinets have bamboo, broader tha
mentioned, or "double-
The French horn has it an excellent bridge b
woodwinds, and the st

THE ARTHUR FIEDLER ESPLANADE CONCERTS
ARTHUR FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR
SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON

THE ESPLANADE CONCERTS FUND
Official Depositary:
Merchants National Bank
28 State Street, Boston
Edward F. Messinger, Treasurer of the Fund

(Edited by R. L. Humphrey - Publicity Manager.)

When applause for a musical performance is so hearty that it clearly shows the public wants the music repeated, nothing is more pleasant to the musicians.

After each season of Esplanade Concerts, enjoyed without charge by an average of a quarter of a million men, women, and children, it is very plain that an encore is wanted -- the encore to be another season.

And so with great pleasure I announce: Encore -- THE EIGHTH SEASON OF ESPLANADE CONCERTS, PLAYED BY ABOUT FIFTY BOSTON SYMPHONY MUSICIANS UNDER MY CONDUCTORSHIP.

I hope to give four weeks of concerts, to begin Sunday, July 12, and end August 7. As before, they would be played each night except Saturday, on Embankment Road, at the foot of Mt. Vernon St.

But, as usual at the beginning of each Summer, I cannot say that the season is anything more than a plan until the funds are on hand. Again I am asking everyone who can do so to make a contribution according to his or her ability, in order that much of the world's best orchestral music may be heard by many others who can give little or nothing.

The important thing is contributions by mail before the opening program, in order to insure the playing of the twenty-four concerts planned. Without such advance support, I should find it necessary to cut down the season from four weeks to two, or even one.

Last Summer the contributions by mail reached 600 -- the highest number in all seven seasons. Considering that a quarter of a million persons hear the concerts each year, is it too much to hope for 1,000 contributors by mail this season? Contributors of small coins in the fund boxes on the concert grounds have been estimated at as many as 30,000. But their total in small gifts take care of but one fourth of the concert expense. My great problem is to take care of the remaining three-quarters. MAY I COUNT ON YOU TO BE ONE PERSON IN A THOUSAND TO MAIL A CONTRIBUTION IN ADVANCE?

Contributions may be mailed to: Esplanade Concerts Fund, Trust Dept., Merchants National Bank, 28 State Street, Boston, Mass.; or may be addressed to me at Symphony Hall. (Incidentally, gifts to this fund are deductible on Federal Income Tax Returns).

Deeply appreciative of your previous support, I am

Very truly yours,

Arthur Fiedler

PASTE OVER

THE ARTHUR FIEDLER ESPLANADE CONCERTS
ARTHUR FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR
SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON

THE ESPLANADE CONCERTS FUND
Official Depositary:
Merchants National Bank
28 State Street, Boston
Edward F. Messinger, Treasurer of the Fund

(Edited by R. L. Humphrey – Publicity Manager.)

When applause for a musical performance is so hearty that it clearly shows the public wants the music repeated, nothing is more pleasant to the musicians.

After each season of Esplanade Concerts, enjoyed without erage of a quarter of a million men, women, and very plain that an encore is wanted -- the other season.

h great pleasure I announce: Encore -- THE
F ESPLANADE CONCERTS, PLAYED BY ABOUT FIFTY MUSICIANS UNDER MY CONDUCTORSHIP.

give four weeks of concerts, to begin Sunday,
d August 7. As before, they would be played pt Saturday, on Embankment Road, at the foot
t.

ual at the beginning of each Summer, I cannot ason is anything more than a plan until the nd. Again I am asking everyone who can do so to tion according to his or her ability, in order e world's best orchestral music may be heard by can give little or nothing.

ant thing is contributions by mail before the
, in order to insure the playing of the twenty-lanned. Without such advance support, I should ry to cut down the season from four weeks to e.

r the contributions by mail reached 600 -- the in all seven seasons. Considering that a quarter rsons hear the concerts each year, is it too
r 1,000 contributors by mail this season?
small coins in the fund boxes on the concert en estimated at as many as 30,000. But their gifts take care of but one fourth of the concert eat problem is to take care of the remaining
MAY I COUNT ON YOU TO BE ONE PERSON IN A THOUSAND TO MAIL A CONTRIBUTION IN ADVANCE?

Contributions may be mailed to: Esplanade Concerts Fund, Trust Dept., Merchants National Bank, 28 State Street, Boston, Mass.; or may be addressed to me at Symphony Hall. (Incidentally, gifts to this fund are deductible on Federal Income Tax Returns).

Deeply appreciative of your previous support, I am

Very truly yours,

Arthur Fiedler

SECOND Fold away from you on this line

The Arthur Fiedler Esplanade Concert Book 1

THE CONDUCTOR AND HIS TASK

The conductor of a symphony orchestra combines in himself strikingly varied qualities. Possessing great technical knowledge and skill, he plays on the orchestra as on a solo instrument.

Though the orchestra be of the highest proficiency, much still depends on the conductor for converting the printed page into music which shall stir or charm in the manner the composer intended.

For the preparation and maintenance of an excellent performance, the conductor must be, in addition to a musical artist, an effective drillmaster, and possess some of the qualities of a military leader who is steady under fire, and can inspire his men.

CHOIRS—WOODWINDS—HORNS

The orchestra's instruments are grouped in four sections, or "choirs": 1—strings, 2—woodwinds (piccolo, flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon), 3—brasses, 4—percussion (drums, cymbals, etc.).

Perhaps less familiar to the general public than the other mainstays of the orchestra are the French horn and some of the woodwinds. See page 4.

The mouthpieces of the oboe, English horn and bassoon contain two narrow strips of bamboo. The player blows through these as he holds them lightly between his lips, which he draws over his teeth.

The clarinets have a single "reed," or slip of bamboo, broader than those of the previously-mentioned, or "double-reed," instruments.

The French horn has a mellow quality which makes it an excellent bridge between the other brasses, the woodwinds, and the strings.

PASTE OVER

2 The Arthur Fiedler Esplanade Concert Book

A Page from the Score of the Overture to Wagner's "Tannhauser"

Each player has before him only the music for his own instrument, except for occasional cues, or short groups of notes showing what another instrument is to play just before he is to start after a "rest," or pause. Before the conductor is the "score," or the music for all instruments printed together, as shown.

The Arthur Fiedler Esplan

THE ORCHESTRA

In reading the page of the ture score illustrated on Pag takes in the music of eighteen glance. Reading downward, th notes for the following instru German abbreviations): piccol inet, bassoon, valve horn, Fr bass tuba, kettle drum, triangl ine, 1st violin, 2d violin, viola,

Letters within circles on ill some of details conductor mu guiding busy woodwinds and h

At the letter A, the bass beats, as do the kettle drums. trills for four beats. At C, th bourine play one beat each, the the trumpet must stop after ha for ten and a half beats. At resumes. The violoncellos begi beats at F. The double-basses At H, while the trumpets rest, upward glidingly. At I the k key. At J the tambourine plays cymbals are silent. At K, th double-basses remain silent.

All instruments above L stop "attack" (start playing) with an which the trumpet joins. At M silenced after one beat. At N, of the fourth beat, every instru woodwinds and brasses resume by triangle and strings, except

---

THE ARTHUR FIEDLER ESPLANADE CONCERTS
ARTHUR FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR
SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON

E CONCERTS FUND
Depositary:
National Bank
Street, Boston
, Treasurer of the Fund

(Edited by R. L. Humphrey – Publicity Manager!)

hen applause for a musical performance is so hearty that arly shows the public wants the music repeated, nothing e pleasant to the musicians.

fter each season of Esplanade Concerts, enjoyed without by an average of a quarter of a million men, women, and en, it is very plain that an encore is wanted -- the to be another season.

nd so with great pleasure I announce: Encore -- THE SEASON OF ESPLANADE CONCERTS, PLAYED BY ABOUT FIFTY SYMPHONY MUSICIANS UNDER MY CONDUCTORSHIP.

hope to give four weeks of concerts, to begin Sunday, 2, and end August 7. As before, they would be played night except Saturday, on Embankment Road, at the foot Vernon St.

ut, as usual at the beginning of each Summer, I cannot at the season is anything more than a plan until the are on hand. Again I am asking everyone who can do so to contribution according to his or her ability, in order uch of the world's best orchestral music may be heard by thers who can give little or nothing.

he important thing is contributions by mail before the ng program, in order to insure the playing of the twenty- concerts planned. Without such advance support, I should t necessary to cut down the season from four weeks to r even one.

Last Summer the contributions by mail reached 600 -- the st number in all seven seasons. Considering that a quarter million persons hear the concerts each year, is it too to hope for 1,000 contributors by mail this season? ributors of small coins in the fund boxes on the concert ds have been estimated at as many as 30,000. But their in small gifts take care of but one fourth of the concert se. My great problem is to take care of the remaining e-quarters. MAY I COUNT ON YOU TO BE ONE PERSON IN A USAND TO MAIL A CONTRIBUTION IN ADVANCE?

Contributions may be mailed to: Esplanade Concerts d, Trust Dept., Merchants National Bank, 28 State Street, ston, Mass.; or may be addressed to me at Symphony Hall. ncidentally, gifts to this fund are deductible on Federal come Tax Returns).

Deeply appreciative of your previous support, I am

Very truly yours,

Arthur Fiedler

43

THE ARTHUR FIEDLER ESPLANADE CONCERTS
ARTHUR FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR
SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON

THE ESPLANADE CONCERTS FUND
Official Depositary:
Merchants National Bank
28 State Street, Boston
Edward F. Messinger, Treasurer of the Fund

When applause for a musical performance is so hearty that it clearly shows the public wants the music repeated, nothing is more pleasant to the musicians.

After each season of Esplanade Concerts, enjoyed without charge by an average of a quarter of a million men, women, and children, it is very plain that an encore is wanted -- the encore to be another season.

And so with great pleasure I announce: Encore after the last Pop Concert -- THE EIGHTH SEASON OF ESPLANADE CONCERTS, BY ABOUT FIFTY BOSTON SYMPHONY MUSICIANS UNDER MY CONDUCTORSHIP.

I hope to give four weeks of Esplanade Concerts, to begin Sunday, July 12, and end August 7. As before, they would be played each night except Saturday, on Embankment Road, at the foot of Mt. Vernon St., free of charge. There is space in our beautiful open air "hall" for as many as 25,000 listeners.

But, as usual at the beginning of each Summer, say that the season is anything more than a plan un funds are on hand. Again I am asking everyone who c make a contribution according to his or her ability, that much of the world's best orchestral music may many others who can give little or nothing.

The important thing is contributions by mail be opening program, in order to insure the playing of t four concerts planned. Without such advance support have to cut down the season from four weeks to two, o

Last Summer the contributions by mail numbered highest total in all seven seasons. Considering that of a million persons hear the concerts each year, is much to hope for 1,000 contributors by mail this sea Contributors of small coins in the fund boxes on the grounds have been estimated at as many as 30,000. B total in small gifts takes care of but one fourth of expense. My great problem is to take care of the re three-quarters. MAY I COUNT ON YOU TO BE ONE PERSON THOUSAND TO MAIL A CONTRIBUTION IN ADVANCE?

Contributions may be mailed to: Esplanade Conc
Fund, Trust Dept., Merchants National Bank, 28 State
Boston, Mass.; or may be addressed to me at Symphony (Incidentally, gifts to this fund are deductible on Income Tax Returns).

Very truly yours,

Arthur Fiedler

PASTE OVER

RTHUR FIEDLER ESPLANADE CONCERTS
ARTHUR FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR
SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON

ND

und

(Edited by R. L. [illegible]) plause for a musical performance is so hearty that rly shows the public wants the music repeated, nothing e pleasant to the musicians.

fter each season of Esplanade Concerts, enjoyed without e by an average of a quarter of a million men, women, and en, it is very plain that an encore is wanted -- the e to be another season.

nd so with great pleasure I announce: Encore -- THE SEASON OF ESPLANADE CONCERTS, PLAYED BY ABOUT FIFTY SYMPHONY MUSICIANS UNDER MY CONDUCTORSHIP.

hope to give four weeks of concerts, to begin Sunday, 2, and end August 7. As before, they would be played ight except Saturday, on Embankment Road, at the foot Vernon St.

ut, as usual at the beginning of each Summer, I cannot hat the season is anything more than a plan until the are on hand. Again I am asking everyone who can do so to contribution according to his or her ability, in order uch of the world's best orchestral music may be heard by thers who can give little or nothing.

he important thing is contributions by mail before the ing program, in order to insure the playing of the twenty-concerts planned. Without such advance support, I should it necessary to cut down the season from four weeks to or even one.

Last Summer the contributions by mail reached 600 -- the st number in all seven seasons. Considering that a quarter million persons hear the concerts each year, is it too to hope for 1,000 contributors by mail this season?
tributors of small coins in the fund boxes on the concert nds have been estimated at as many as 30,000. But their al in small gifts take care of but one fourth of the concert ense. My great problem is to take care of the remaining ee-quarters. MAY I COUNT ON YOU TO BE ONE PERSON IN A USAND TO MAIL A CONTRIBUTION IN ADVANCE?

Contributions may be mailed to: Esplanade Concerts
d, Trust Dept., Merchants National Bank, 28 State Street, ston, Mass.; or may be addressed to me at Symphony Hall.
cidentally, gifts to this fund are deductible on Federal ome Tax Returns).

Deeply appreciative of your previous support, I am

Very truly yours,

Arthur Fiedler

Nearly 15,000 at Opening of Eighth Season of Esplanade Concerts

A cold blanket of fog, the threat of rain and the memory of a week of severe, unexpected electrical storms failed to mar the opening of the eighth season of the Esplanade concerts under the direction of Arthur Fiedler last night.

Nearly 15,000 persons attended the concert, which was opened with Elgar's familiar "Pomp and Circumstance," heard Gov. Curley praise the work of the orchestra and lead the contributions by presenting Mr. Fiedler with two $50 bills, and listened to Mrs. Dorothy Tremble Moyer of the division of university extension of the state department of education speak on Wagner's "Tannhauser" and Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony."

It was difficult to determine who was the proudest over the success of last night's opening. The first trumpeter with the orchestra, 18-year-old Roger Voisin, was playing with the orchestra for the first time, but undoubtedly he remembers when he was 10 years old, wearing short

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

Greyhound RACING
DAILY DOUBLE CLOSES 8:05
WONDERLAND

NG TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY

and Music

News of the Concert and Opera World

Brahms Brought Closer to the People by Mr. Fiedler; Musicians' Activities

Arthur Fiedler's announced intention to present the four Brahms symphonies at the eighth season of Esplanade Concerts, beginning Sunday, July 12, is a most commendable departure. Aside from their intrinsic value and interest, the inclusion of the Brahms symphonies indicates the long road that the programs—and the audiences—have travelled since the inception of the Esplanade concerts. Mr. Fiedler, it is said, found the listeners most appreciative of the nine Beethoven symphonies last summer, and he is equally hopeful for Brahms this summer. Several entire symphonies by Haydn and Mozart will be inculded in the programs.

Since the concerts are supported entirely by the generosity of voluntary contributors, it is in order to say that such gifts will be gratefully received and acknowledged at the Merchants National Bank, 28 State street. Checks should be made to the order of the Esplanade Concerts Fund.

The concert of the Commonwealth Symphony Orchestra, Alexander Thiede conductor, in the Boston Opera House tomorrow evening, has been cancelled. A note from the W P A Federal Music Project says that the series will be presented at the Opera House monthly.

Koussevitzky to Point a Contrast

Plans for Six Conductors in New York; Comparisons With Boston

As a result of its campaign for funds to guarantee the future of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and the expression of opinions which accompanied contributions, the directors have become convinced that the largest portion of the public is interested mainly in hearing the classic masterpieces, that a considerable number particularly of the younger generation wish to hear the important works of contemporary composers and that a small but growing group wants to know what America is producing musically. All this is set forth in a recent announcement of plans for next season.

To meet the varied demands of its supporters the directors have decided to divide the season among six conductors in the following ratio: Toscanini, ten weeks; Walter, six weeks; Klemperer, four weeks; Rodzinski, two weeks; Janssen, two weeks; Lange, three weeks, with three weeks' programs "reserved for special features."

In the course of an article in the New York Times, in which he considers the characteristics of the conductors who will take part in the coming programs, Olin Downes takes occasion to draw attention to the policies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in these words:

"The problems of an orchestra in New York, aside from those created by a sophisticated and sometimes capricious public, are endless. That so many conductors in a season as the number here cited is not for the best good of an orchestra is obvious. One leading conductor for a season, with short periods of rest, when a guest conductor or the orchestra's assistant conductor takes the reins, is the solution reached by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This orchestra is extremely fortunate to have at its head a man who unites the qualities of a hard and efficient worker; a virtuoso leader and maker of programs as Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Koussevitzky has the qualities of a program maker that apparently requires six Philharmonic-Symphony conductors to equal! He is of all the conductors in the country the most progressive-minded as regards new music. This applies equally to the music of a Stravinsky or Sibelius, an Arthur Foote or an Aaron Copland.

"Mr. Koussevitzky has done more per season for the American composer than any other conductor the country has known. In him the rising generation has had a real opportunity to try its wings and test its accomplishments through performance. And if Mr. Koussevitzky has unearthed no transcendent genius of American compositions, he has certainly presented a very considerable amount of worth-while American music to his audiences. No such modernist and program maker has yet been secured by the Philharmonic-Symphony, but it is also to be remembered that there is probably no one conductor who could face the stress and the strain of an entire Philharmonic-Symphony season."

THE BOSTON GLOBE—MONDAY, JULY 13

8000 ON HAND AS ESPLANADE CONCERTS OPENED FOR 1936

FIEDLER OPENS EIGHTH SEASON

8000 Brave Rain Threat for Esplanade Concert

Despite a cloudy sky that threatened a downpour at any moment, fully 8000 music lovers gathered last night in the riverside bowl at the foot of Chestnut st to attend the opening of the eighth season of the Esplanade concerts conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

The occasion was graced by the presence of the Governor, who made a contribution and urged others also to contribute to the support of the concerts, and by Emanuel Fiedler, 76-year-old father of the conductor, who came from Europe to attend his first Esplanade concert.

The Governor arrived with his gold-braided military escort just as the orchestra, composed of 50 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was playing the overture to "Tannhauser." When it was completed, he mounted the light-filled acoustical shell and, standing near Fiedler, addressed the group.

'Boston Institution,' He Says

"We who live in Boston rarely approximate the value of this symphonic music, although it is recognized the world over," said the Governor. "It undeniably has a standing as a Boston institution as have the Cradle of Liberty, Boston Common, Faneuil Hall and Bunker Hill Monument.

"It is most interesting that these concerts have continued under the able directorship of Arthur Fiedler for the past seven years when those who attended them had little music in their hearts, their souls or in their bodies. They have been carried on during difficult times."

Turning to Mr Fiedler and presenting a folded banknote, the Governor said, "I am giving this in cash—not a rubber check. I hope it will encourage others to do likewise. It is enough for these men to give us this splendid music without having to solicit alms for the greatest musical institution ever assembled in the world—the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Emmanuel Fielder, a short, jolly man with white hair and a white, close-cropped mustache, was accompanied by his daughter, Miss Frederica.

"It is wonderful," he said. "There is nothing like this anywhere in Europe. O, yes, we have beer-gardens and music, but nothing like this—this is symphonic. I am delighted. The crowd here is so large."

The elder Fiedler played the violin in the Boston Symphony for 25 years, beginning 51 years ago.

There was really quite a gathering of the Fiedler family last night at the Esplanade. Besides the conductor, his father and his sisters, there are two uncles of the conductor, Gustav and Bernard Fiedler, both of whom play the violin in the concert. Also there is a cousin who plays the 'cello.

Conductor Fiedler, jubilant despite the threatening rain, expressed great pleasure at the resumption of the concerts.

"I am so glad that we have been able to go through the depression and still keep these concerts for the people. To me the most interesting thing is the way things have changed since the first concert. Little boys and girls who came then are still here, but now in their high school years."

Perhaps the most interesting sidelight to show the passage of time was the presence of one Roger Voisin, 18, as the orchestra's first trumpeter. Eight years ago young Roger was the boy who used to sound a trumpet at the end of intermission to apprise the listeners that the players were returning. Roger is a son of Rene Voisin, also a Boston Symphony trumpeter.

An innovation this year which proved to be a success was the installation of a free lending library at the acoustical shell. It is attended by Miss Florence Smith, who loans the books on music to early comers between the hours of 5:30 and 7:30.

The library idea was given a week's tryout last season and, because everyone returned the books, was carried over to this season.

As was the case last year, little white pennants atop posts scattered about the grounds mark the positions of the contribution boxes.

The program last night was varied, including many popular airs from Victor Herbert, much semi-classical music and classical music of Shubert and Wagner. Several encores were given because of the enthusiastic applause accorded the scheduled numbers.

AUG 7 1936

LEMAY TO LEAD FAMED BOSTON SYMPHONY UNIT

Duluth Civic Orchestra Conductor Honored Twice in East.

Paul Lemay, conductor of the Duluth Civic Symphony orchestra, will be guest conductor of the world famous Boston Symphony orchestra Wednesday night when he directs one of the summer Esplanade concerts in that city.

The honor accorded the Duluthian is evidence that he has risen to the uppermost ranks of American orchestral conductors, directors of the Duluth Civic Symphony association, who received word of the appointment yesterday, said.

The Boston Symphony summer concerts are given in a specially constructed shell on the Charles river Esplanade. This is the eighth season of the series. The average attendance at each concert is 20,000 persons.

It also was announced yesterday that at 1 p. m. Sunday, Mr. Lemay will conduct the Columbia Symphony orchestra over a nationwide network in the "Everybody's Music" program. Mr. Lemay will direct the program in the absence of Howard Barlow, noted radio conductor.

The Duluthian for the last two months has been assisting Mr. Barlow in arranging the radio programs and rehearsing the orchestra. He also is appearing as principal violist of the Essex County Symphony orchestra, New York, which is conducted by Erno Rappee.

Book Review Digest
NEW YORK CITY

AUG - - 1936

HALE, PHILIP. Boston symphony programme notes; historical, ~~critical,~~ and descriptive comment on music and composers; ed. by John N. Burk; with an introd. by Lawrence Gilman. 100p $3.50 Doubleday

780.072 Symphony. Music—Analysis, interpretation, appreciation. Orchestra and orchestral music. Concerts—Programs. Boston symphony orchestra 35-35355

For nearly fifty years Philip Hale edited the Boston Symphony programs. In this volume his notes and comments on music and composers have been assembled and edited by his successor, John N. Burk.

Booklist 32:133 Ja '36

Reviewed by Peter Bowdoin

Books p15 Mr 22 '36 130w

"Mr. Hale's analyses are skillful, but they are bound to be technical, and the library is usually a good way from the concert hall. His admirers might justly ask for a little larger proportion of his most characteristic output, which is not technical analysis, something the conservatory student or the dry-as-dust pedant can do after a fashion. But there is enough here to give much satisfaction and enjoyment, provocation to thought if not to antagonism, stimulation that radiated from Mr. Hale as he lived. Mr. Gilman's introduction is the warmly appreciative tribute of colleague." R. A.

+ N Y Times p20 Ja 26 '36 950w

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

Father Back To Play Under Baton of Son

BOSTON, July 20.—A musician famous at the turn of the century returned last night to play under the baton of his son in the Esplanade Shell on the banks of the Charles River Basin, as Emmanuel Fiedler, 76-year-old father of Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Esplanade concerts, once more took up his violin and bow.

Never before had Mr. Fiedler, who joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra 51 years ago and only to leave for concert work in Europe 25 years later, played under the direction of his son.

As a youth in his 20's the elder Fiedler joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1885 and for 25 years performed regularly with the noted group. At the end of that time he went to Germany and played in Berlin as a member of the Keneisel Quartet, as one of the most famous musical organizations in history.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 27

CONCERT AT WHITEFIELD

Lauga, Violinist, and Boardman, Pianist, Heard by Colonists.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WHITEFIELD, N. H., July 26.—Norbert Lauga, violinist and a member of the first strings division of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave a recital in the Chase Barn Playhouse here this afternoon with Reginald Boardman, the Boston pianist. Both artists motored from the Crawford House, where they have spent recent Summers in the ensemble of players from the Boston Symphony maintained for many years there by Colonel W. A. Barron.

They were heard by many from the cottage colony and near-by hotels in a distinguished program comprising Beethoven's sonata in F major, Bach's unaccompanied Chaconne, the Tartini-Kreisler variations, Faurés "Berceuse," and, as an encore, the Meditation from Massenet's "Thaïs."

Mr. Boardman also played a piano group by Gluck, Friedman, Debussy and Diszt, with Ernst Toch's "The Juggler" as encore.

The proceeds of the concert went to the local Morrison Hospital.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

July 10

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Madame Koussevitzky, who have been in Europe since the latter part of May, will sail for home Friday. They spent some time in Paris and later visited Aix-les-Baines. Dr. Koussevitzky is returning now to conduct the Boston Symphony in a three-day program, Aug. 13, 15, and 16, at the Berkshire Festival.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

'36

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky returns from Europe the latter part of this month to begin rehearsals with his Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the Berkshiire Symphonic Festival, held this year on August 13, 15 and 16 at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. Dr. Koussevitzky has cabled from France to say that the opening number at the Festival will be Bach's Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

NG TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY

and Music

News of the Concert and Opera World

Brahms Brought Closer to the People by Mr. Fiedler; Musicians' Activities

Arthur Fiedler's announced intention to present the four Brahms symphonies at the eighth season of Esplanade Concerts, beginning Sunday, July 12, is a most commendable departure. Aside from their intrinsic value and interest, the inclusion of the Brahms symphonies indicates the long road that the programs—and the audiences—have travelled since the inception of the Esplanade concerts. Mr. Fiedler, it is said, found the listeners most appreciative of the nine Beethoven symphonies last summer, and he is equally hopeful for Brahms this summer. Several entire symphonies by Haydn and Mozart will be inculded in the programs.

Since the concerts are supported entirely by the generosity of voluntary contributors, it is in order to say that such gifts will be gratefully received and acknowledged at the Merchants National Bank, 28 State street. Checks should be made to the order of the Esplanade Concerts Fund.

The concert of the Commonwealth Symphony Orchestra, Alexander Thiede conductor, in the Boston Opera House tomorrow evening, has been cancelled. A note from the W P A Federal Music Project says that the series will be presented at the Opera House monthly.

Transcript 5/10/34

Koussevitzky to Point a Contrast

Plans for Six Conductors in New York; Comparisons With Boston

As a result of its campaign for funds to guarantee the future of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and the expression of opinions which accompanied contributions, the directors have become convinced that the largest portion of the public is interested mainly in hearing the classic masterpieces, that a considerable number particularly of the younger generation wish to hear the important works of contemporary composers and that a small but growing group wants to know what America is producing musically. All this is set forth in a recent announcement of plans for next season.

To meet the varied demands of its supporters the directors have decided to divide the season among six conductors in the following ratio: Toscanini, ten weeks; Walter, six weeks; Klemperer, four weeks; Rodzinski, two weeks; Janssen, two weeks; Lange, three weeks, with three weeks' programs "reserved for special features."

In the course of an article in the New York Times, in which he considers the characteristics of the conductors who will take part in the coming programs, Olin Downes takes occasion to draw attention to the policies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in these words:

"The problems of an orchestra in New York, aside from those created by a sophisticated and sometimes capricious public, are endless. That so many conductors in a season as the number here cited is not for the best good of an orchestra is obvious. One leading conductor for a season, with short periods of rest, when a guest conductor or the orchestra's assistant conductor takes the reins, is the solution reached by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This orchestra is extremely fortunate to have at its head a man who unites the qualities of a hard and efficient worker; a virtuoso leader and maker of programs as Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Koussevitzky has the qualities of a program maker that apparently requires six Philharmonic-Symphony conductors to equal! He is of all the conductors in the country the most progressive-minded as regards new music. This applies equally to the music of a Stravinsky or Sibelius, an Arthur Foote or an Aaron Copland.

"Mr. Koussevitzky has done more per season for the American composer than any other conductor the country has known. In him the rising generation has had a real opportunity to try its wings and test its accomplishments through performance. And if Mr. Koussevitzky has unearthed no transcendent genius of American compositions, he has certainly presented a very considerable amount of worth-while American music to his audiences. No such modernist and program maker has yet been secured by the Philharmonic-Symphony, but it is also to be remembered that there is probably no one conductor who could face the stress and the strain of an entire Philharmonic-Symphony season."

THE BOSTON GLOBE—MONDAY, JULY 13

8000 ON HAND AS ESPLANADE CONCERTS OPENED FOR 1936

FIEDLER OPENS EIGHTH SEASON

8000 Brave Rain Threat for Esplanade Concert

Despite a cloudy sky that threatened a downpour at any moment, fully 8000 music lovers gathered last night in the riverside bowl at the foot of Chestnut st to attend the opening of the eighth season of the Esplanade concerts conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

The occasion was graced by the presence of the Governor, who made a contribution and urged others also to contribute to the support of the concerts, and by Emanuel Fiedler, 76-year-old father of the conductor, who came from Europe to attend his first Esplanade concert.

The Governor arrived with his gold-braided military escort just as the orchestra, composed of 50 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was playing the overture to "Tannhauser." When it was completed, he mounted the light-filled acoustical shell and, standing near Fiedler, addressed the group.

'Boston Institution,' He Says

"We who live in Boston rarely approximate the value of this symphonic music, although it is recognized the world over," said the Governor. "It undeniably has a standing as a Boston institution as have the Cradle of Liberty, Boston Common, Faneuil Hall and Bunker Hill Monument.

"It is most interesting that these concerts have continued under the able directorship of Arthur Fiedler for the past seven years when those who attended them had little music in their hearts, their souls or in their bodies. They have been carried on during difficult times."

Turning to Mr Fiedler and presenting a folded banknote, the Governor said, "I am giving this in cash—not a rubber check. I hope it will encourage others to do likewise. It is enough for these men to give us this splendid music without having to solicit alms for the greatest musical institution ever assembled in the world—the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Emmanuel Fielder, a short, jolly man with white hair and a white, close-cropped mustache, was accompanied by his daughter, Miss Frederica.

"It is wonderful," he said. "There is nothing like this anywhere in Europe. O, yes, we have beergardens and music, but nothing like this—this is symphonic. I am delighted. The crowd here is so large."

The elder Fiedler played the violin in the Boston Symphony for 25 years, beginning 51 years ago.

There was really quite a gathering of the Fiedler family last night at the Esplanade. Besides the conductor, his father and his sisters, there are two uncles of the conductor, Gustav and Bernard Fiedler, both of whom play the violin in the concert. Also there is a cousin who plays the 'cello.

Conductor Fiedler, jubilant despite the threatening rain, expressed great pleasure at the resumption of the concerts.

"I am so glad that we have been able to go through the depression and still keep these concerts for the people. To me the most interesting thing is the way things have changed since the first concert. Little boys and girls who came then are still here, but now in their high school years."

Perhaps the most interesting sidelight to show the passage of time was the presence of one Roger Voisin, 18, as the orchestra's first trumpeter. Eight years ago young Roger was the boy who used to sound a trumpet at the end of intermission to apprise the listeners that the players were returning. Roger is a son of Rene Voisin, also a Boston Symphony trumpeter.

An innovation this year which proved to be a success was the installation of a free lending library at the acoustical shell. It is attended by Miss Florence Smith, who loans the books on music to early comers between the hours of 5:30 and 7:30.

The library idea was given a week's tryout last season and, because everyone returned the books, was carried over to this season.

As was the case last year, little white pennants atop posts scattered about the grounds mark the positions of the contribution boxes.

The program last night was varied, including many popular airs from Victor Herbert, much semiclassical music and classical music of Shubert and Wagner. Several encores were given because of the enthusiastic applause accorded the scheduled numbers.

LEMAY TO LEAD FAMED BOSTON SYMPHONY UNIT

Duluth Civic Orchestra Conductor Honored Twice in East.

Paul Lemay, conductor of the Duluth Civic Symphony orchestra, will be guest conductor of the world famous Boston Symphony orchestra Wednesday night when he directs one of the summer Esplanade concerts in that city.

The honor accorded the Duluthian is evidence that he has risen to the uppermost ranks of American orchestral conductors, directors of the Duluth Civic Symphony association, who received word of the appointment yesterday, said.

The Boston Symphony summer concerts are given in a specially constructed shell on the Charles river Esplanade. This is the eighth season of the series. The average attendance at each concert is 20,000 persons.

It also was announced yesterday that at 1 p. m. Sunday, Mr. Lemay will conduct the Columbia Symphony orchestra over a nationwide network in the "Everybody's Music" program. Mr. Lemay will direct the program in the absence of Howard Barlow, noted radio conductor.

The Duluthian for the last two months has been assisting Mr. Barlow in arranging the radio programs and rehearsing the orchestra. He also is appearing as principal violist of the Essex County Symphony orchestra, New York, which is conducted by Erno Rappee.

Book Review Digest
NEW YORK CITY

AUG - - 1936

HALE, PHILIP. Boston symphony programme notes; historical, ~~critical,~~ and descriptive comment on music and composers; ed. by John N. Burk; with an introd. by Lawrence Gilman. 400p $3.50 Doubleday

780.072 Symphony. Music—Analysis, interpretation, appreciation. Orchestra and orchestral music. Concerts—Programs. Boston symphony orchestra 35-35355

For nearly fifty years Philip Hale edited the Boston Symphony programs. In this volume his notes and comments on music and composers have been assembled and edited by his successor, John N. Burk.

Booklist 32:133 Ja '36
Reviewed by Peter Bowdoin
Books p15 Mr 22 '36 130w

"Mr. Hale's analyses are skillful, but they are bound to be technical, and the library is usually a good way from the concert hall. His admirers might justly ask for a little larger proportion of his most characteristic output, which is not technical analysis, something the conservatory student or the dry-as-dust pedant can do after a fashion. But there is enough here to give much satisfaction and enjoyment, provocation to thought if not to antagonism, stimulation that radiated from Mr. Hale as he lived. Mr. Gilman's introduction is the warmly appreciative tribute of colleague." R. A.

+ N Y Times p20 Ja 26 '36 950w

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 20 1936

Father Back To Play Under Baton of Son

BOSTON, July 20.—A musician famous at the turn of the century returned last night to play under the baton of his son in the Esplanade Shell on the banks of the Charles River Basin, as Emmanuel Fiedler, 76-year-old father of Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Esplanade concerts, once more took up his violin and bow.

Never before had Mr. Fiedler, who joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra 51 years ago and only to leave for concert work in Europe 25 years later, played under the direction of his son.

As a youth in his 20's the elder Fiedler joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1885 and for 25 years performed regularly with the noted group. At the end of that time he went to Germany and played in Berlin as a member of the Keneisel Quartet, as one of the most famous musical organizations in history.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 27 1936

CONCERT AT WHITEFIELD

Lauga, Violinist, and Boardman, Pianist, Heard by Colonists.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WHITEFIELD, N. H., July 26.—Norbert Lauga, violinist and a member of the first strings division of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave a recital in the Chase Barn Playhouse here this afternoon with Reginald Boardman, the Boston pianist. Both artists motored from the Crawford House, where they have spent recent Summers in the ensemble of players from the Boston Symphony maintained for many years there by Colonel W. A. Barron.

They were heard by many from the cottage colony and near-by hotels in a distinguished program comprising Beethoven's sonata in F major, Bach's unaccompanied Chaconne, the Tartini-Kreisler variations, Faurés "Berceuse," and, as an encore, the Meditation from Massenet's "Thaïs."

Mr. Boardman also played a piano group by Gluck, Friedman, Debussy and Diszt, with Ernst Toch's "The Juggler" as encore.

The proceeds of the concert went to the local Morrison Hospital.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
July 21 UNION 1936

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Madame Koussevitzky, who have been in Europe since the latter part of May, will sail for home Friday. They spent some time in Paris and later visited Aix-les-Baines. Dr. Koussevitzky is returning now to conduct the Boston Symphony in a three-day program, Aug. 13, 15, and 16, at the Berkshire Festival.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
July 18/36

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky returns from Europe the latter part of this month to begin rehearsals with his Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the Berkshiire Symphonic Festival, held this year on August 13, 15 and 16 at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. Dr. Koussevitzky has cabled from France to say that the opening number at the Festival will be Bach's Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist."

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

JUN 28 1936

Conductors Are Nearly All Doctors

Original Significance Is Lost With General Bestowal

By LEONARD LIEBLING
Universal Service Music Editor.

NEW YORK, June 27.—Universities and colleges always have delighted to honor famous composers with the bestowal of an academic doctor's degree, the custom originating at Oxford and Cambridge in England, where such celebrities as Haydn, Dvorak, Tschaikowsky, Saint-Saens and others donned cap and gown and were made recipients of the momentous scroll.

America followed suit in due time, but of late years has gone a step further and given the diploma also to orchestral conductors.

I believe Theodore Thomas was the first of the baton-gentlemen to become a doctor of music, and his then rival, Leopold Damrosch, won the same award from Columbia in 1880. His son, Walter, has received the title from several academic institutions.

Jazz Leaders Next.

Nowadays, nearly every conductor in America either is a doctor, or is endeavoring to become one. The practice is a regular part of the prima donna affectations of the directorial fraternity. We have Doctors Stokowski, Stock, Koussevitzy, Rodzinski, Sokoloff, Hadley (he is of course also a composer) and many others. Werner Janssen has the doctorial handle but makes no public display of the fact.

It would seem that so general a bestowal of the honor deprives it of much of its original significance, and certainly robs it of impressive publicity value. I wonder how its present conductor-holders might look if some progressive institution conferred a doctorship upon Paul Whiteman, Rudy Vallee, Cab Calloway or Fred Waring? Surely those leaders are excellent craftsmen in their own field, and have added immeasurably to the edification and entertainment of the American nation.

The futility of the whole business stands forth glaringly when it is remembered that a certain interpreter of great music is content to call himself just plain Arturo Toscanini.

No More Soloists.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, so it is rumored, intends to dispense with soloists at its New York concerts next season. That is another example of conductor-egotism, for it assumes that audiences are content to hear only the leader and care nothing for soloists. That has never been the case in this town. Even the adored Toscanini featured eminent singers and players at his concerts.

The metropolis is shamed all the time by other American cities when it comes to the production of new operas. Recently we had the Cleveland orchestra introducing "Lady MacBeth of Mzensk" to New York; the Philadelphia orchestra giving us "Wozzeck," and Stravinsky's ballet, "Rites of Spring;" and now comes another Cleveland company, to do here (May 13 to 16) the local premiere of Ludovico Rocca's opera, "The Dybbuk," which has been winning continued successes in Europe. Those works could be advantageously substituted at the Metropolitan, in place of some of the "Lucias," "Traviatas" and "Trovatores." (Even though Edward Johnson not long ago referred to the last-named two as sure money-getters whenever our lyric temple puts them on.)

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 8 - 1936

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Arrives in America

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the three concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be given at the Berkshire Festival in Lenox, Mass., next week, arrived in America Friday after a sojourn in Europe.

The concerts are to be given at "Holmwood," the Emerson estate, located between Lenox and Lee, on Thursday evening, Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening, August 13, 15 and 16.

On Wednesday and Friday evenings, September 16 and 18, and Thursday afternoon, September 17, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give concerts in connection with the Harvard College Tercentenary.

The orchestra's fifty-sixth season will open at Symphony Hall on Friday, October 9.

BOSTON, MASS.
GLOBE

JUL 29 1936

ESPLANADE CONCERT CROWD HEARS GLOBE MUSIC EDITOR

Cyrus Durgin Discusses Composers, Works Before 9000; Reviews Life of Weber

The more than 9000 music-lovers who gathered at the great shell on the banks of the Charles River for the Esplanade Concert last evening enjoyed a most unusual presentation of the story of the works and also of the composers by Commentator Cyrus W. Durgin, music editor of the Boston Globe, who is also a lecturer in the University Extension Courses of the State Department of Education.

Arthur Fiedler and his orchestra of 50 Boston Symphony musicians rendered the overture to "Euryanthe" by Weber; Brahms symphony in F major, the last two movements; selections from "Faust" by Gounod, including the ballet, the "Dance of Phryne" and "Bacchanale"; a delightful Strauss waltz "Artist's Life"; "The Song of the Evening Star," from "Tannhauser" by Wagner and concluded with the "Marche Slave" by Tchaikovsky and the inspiring martial "Up the Street" by Morse. Jacob Raichman was the cornet soloist in the Wagner number.

Comments by Mr Durgin

The program in itself was inspiring, but was made more interesting and enjoyable by the introductory talk by Mr Durgin, who said in part:

"Carl Maria von Weber may truly be called the cornerstone of German romantic opera. The influence upon Teutonic composers who followed him was great. Like Bach, he came of ancestors who were themselves musical. He was well born and among the first musical creative artists who were cultivated men of the world and not humble lackeys in the service of nobility. His father was a gifted amateur, an odd stick whose liking for the violin and music in general led to his dismissal from his post as steward at a minor German court. An aunt of Carl Maria was Constance Weber, who married Mozart.

"After Weber's father had been dismissed from his post as steward, he took up a career as player of the viola, and for several years managed traveling theatrical companies.

"Carl Maria was born in December, 1786, at Eutin, in North Germany, the first child of his father's second marriage. His father, probably with an eye to exploitation, hoped that the child would prove a prodigy, but so long as he instructed the boy, no such talent appeared. It was not until Carl Maria was 9 that a teacher was found for him, who drew out the first evidence of genius.

"Young Weber traveled about with his father and literally grew up backstage in the theatre. His education was fragmentary, but his early experiences proved valuable to him in writing operas. He studied music with a numberof teachers, notable among them Michael Haydn, brother of Joseph Haydn, and Johann Kalcher.

Weber's Active Mind

"Weber possessed an active and versatile mind and progressed rapidly. The irregularity of his musical instruction had its effect to the end of his days, and this weakness was most pronounced in the matter of form. Yet fate may have known what she was about, for the erratic qualities in Weber's temperament probably were suited to the particular type of genius which was his.

"His versatility was pronounced even when the boy was in his 'teens. He tried to sell a process for lithographing music—unsuccessfully. He was interested in musical criticism, and even contemplated writing a dictionary of music and a history of music in Vienna.

"At 17, through the kindly efforts of the famous Abbe Vogler, Weber was given the post conducting at the theatre in Breslau. There he first showed his great gifts as a conductor and as a disciplinarian of the theatre. At the same time, however, the weaker side of his nature was revealed in his fondness for dissipation. This became pronounced during his three years as secretary at the royal court at Stuttgart, then a moral sink hole. When Weber got into a scrape at Stuttgart, the resultant dismissal brought a blessing in disguise, because from that time on he took his art much more seriously. That was in 1810.

"Weber is said to have been a man of personal charm, witty, good at conversation and appealing to women. He was well read, and he did know himself as is proved in what he wrote in 1811: 'My path in life was cast from my birth in different lines from that of any other human being. I have no happy childhood days to look upon, no free open boyhood; though still a youth I am an old man in experience, learning everything through my own feelings and by myself, nothing by means of others.' At that time he was 24 and a brilliant pianist.

Johannes Brahms

After reviewing the works of Weber, Mr Durgin discussed the other composers, saying:

"Johannes Brahms was a native of Hamburg in North Germany, a solid product of a solid stock. Though his father was benevolently concerned with making a commercial musician of his son, Brahms' youth was a fight with poverty. As a lad he earned money playing the piano at night in cheap waterfront saloons, for sailors and their lassies to dance by.

"The substantial, reticent North German character, together with the struggles of his youth formed a barrier in Brahms to check a streak of sentiment peculiar to the man. Yet this streak of sentiment, from early manhood to age, occasionally persisted in breaking through.

"Without making too fine a point, one can say the third and fourth movements of the Third Symphony which you are soon to hear, reflect these two different parts of Brahms. Melancholy sentiment appears at the very first measure of the third movement in a most expressive melody for the 'cellos, and pervades the entire movement. Though the finale ends in a hush suggestive of twilight in the country, the movement begins with that formidable strength also typical of Brahms. It reaches an impressive climax, and sinks to peace.

"The Third Symphony is not only a masterpiece of emotion, but of intellect, as the symphonic form is not alone concerned with melody, but with the manipulation of a definite organic plan. It demands concentration both of musicians and listeners. In the matter of combining intellect, emotion, force and individuality, Brahms may be regarded as the last great German symphonist. This Symphony, finished when Brahms was 50, is in itself sufficient proof of the heights attained by Brahms' matured genius.

Tchaikovsky

"The 'Marche Slave' of Tchaikovsky was written in 1876, when that Russian composer was in his 36th year. In that year occurred the war between Servia and Turkey. Distinctly one of the minor pieces of Tchaikovsky, the piece was more patriotic than inspired. Indeed it was first called the 'Russo-Servian' march.

"Though it first experienced success, and though it is full of Slavic color and progresses with bombastic energy, the total effect now seems to be rather empty, if displayful. Twice in this march Tchaikovsky introduced a fragment from the old Russian Imperial anthem.

"The ballet music from Gounod's fabulously popular opera 'Faust' includes 'The Dance of Phryne' and the 'Baccahanale' which Gounod wrote after 'Faust' had been produced at the Lyric Theatre in Paris. When the work was accepted for the Paris Grand Opera, in 1689, the directors wished a more extended ballet than that which Gounod had written for the kermess scene. Therefore the authors of the text went to the second part of Goethe's 'Faust' and concerned themselves with the Walpurgis night revels. Upon this Gounod constructed his additional ballet. Nowadays the scene is omitted when the opera is performed.

Wagner Selection

"The 'Song to the Evening Star' occurs in the third act of Wagner's opera 'Tannhaeuser' as an aria for baritone voice. In spite of frequent performance and the fact that composers after Wagner overdid the use of the sort of chromatic harmony in this air, the 'Song to the Evening Star' remains one of the most distinctive arias in all opera. The solo voice of Wolfram will be taken at this concert by the trombone.

"'Artists Life' is one of the gay and rippling Viennese waltzes by the younger Johann Strauss. It has been played many times at these Esplanade concerts.

"The final number is a modern march, written for band by Robert Morse, and orchestrated by Ramsdell, the publisher."

BOSTON, MASS.
ADVERTISER

AUG 2 - 1936

Parlous Days On Esplanade

Music Editor
By Ruth Marsters

ARTHUR FIEDLER, conducting the Esplanade Orchestra of fifty Boston Symphony players, opens the fourth week of Esplanade Concerts this evening.

Whether or not the concerts will be continued throughout the week, however, depends entirely on the condition of the Esplanade Concert Fund during the next few days.

Considering the immense popularity of these concerts—the average audience is estimated at ten thousand people—it is not less than deplorable that the financial plan under which they are operated should be found so precarious.

The fact that the Esplanade Concert Fund is entirely dependent upon contributions from the general public makes it imperative that each individual to whom the concerts are a source of enjoyment assume his responsibility in the matter of material support to the full extent of his capabilities.

Contributions should be mailed at once to: Esplanade Concerts Fund, Merchants National Bank, 28 State street, Boston.

* * *

THIS evening's program—to begin at 8:30—includes Berlioz' Hungarian March "Rakoczy," the Allegretto from Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi," "Song of the Volga Boatmen," arranged by Glazounov, and selections from Victor Herbert and J. Strauss.

Monday evening's program lists, among other things, Weber's Overture to "Der Freischutz," Minuet from Symphony No. 88 in G major by Haydn, Liszt's Symphonic Poem "Les Preludes," Prelude and Minuet from Bizet's "L'Arlesienne" Suite, and the Trumpet Solo "Eili Eili" arranged by Jacchia.

Although Mr. Fiedler has drawn up programs for the succeeding concerts of the week their performance is so entirely conditional that it is useless to announce them at this time.

* * *

JOSE ITURBI, distinguished Spanish pianist, who has recently proved himself a talented orchestral conductor as well, will give a piano recital at the Cape Cinema in Dennis, on Wednesday evening.

The concert is the second in the series under the direction of Raymond Moore.

Mr. Iturbi's program will include Haydn's Sonata in D major; Beethoven's Sonata in C major, Op. 53; Fantasie-Impromptu and B flat minor Scherzo of Chopin; "Trois mouvements perpetuelles" by Poulenc; Debussy's "Poisson d'Or," and "Feux d'Artifice."

* * *

AFFAIRS of the WPA Music Project in Boston appear to be gradually straightening out under the guiding hand of the recently appointed director William Haddon.

His integrity in making the necessary reassignments of conductors and personnel may have the resultant effect of bringing order out of chaos.

Thus far the most important undertaking of his regime is the week of popular priced opera to be given in the Boston Opera House beginning August 11, with Ernst Hoffmann conducting.

For the opening performance "Hansel and Gretel" has been announced. The same opera will be given on the evening of the twelfth, with three performances of "Madame Butterfly" following on August 13, 14 and 15. There will be a special children's matinee performance of "Hansel and Gretel" on Saturday.

Both operas will be given in English.

The performances are the first under the WPA to which admission has been charged. However, it has been arranged that ten per cent of the tickets be distributed free of charge at Social Service Bureaus throughout the Metropolitan district.

OAKLAND, CAL.
TRIBUNE

Aug. 16/36

VIOLIN concerto of Roger Ses- who recently completed a sojourn here as guest instructor at the University of California, will be featured by Albert Spaulding next season. The same composer's "Black Maskers" suite will be played during the regular season of the Boston Symphony.

MANSFIELD, O.
NEWS-JOURNAL

AUG 20 1936

[illegible]r Music Lovers.

A delightful book for music lovers is "Philip Hale's Boston Symphony Program Notes." Mr. Hale wrote program notes for the Boston Symphony for 32 years. The book combines both these explanatory notes and his critical opinion expressed in newspapers. One hundred and 25 of the best symphonic works are included.

SENTINEL

Summit, Miss

45 6/18/3

"THE COUNTRY EDITOR"

BY CHARLES WHITE McGEHEE

Last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra played probably the most realistic piece of music ever written. It was entitled "Mosquito" and was written by a fellow named White, who, according to the realism put into it, must have come from the South. The composition is very short. The strings made a piercing sound amazingly like that of a mosquito, and just when the insect had apparently alighted on a bald spot ready to make the bite, the concussion section of the orchestra makes a slapping sound and the mosquito is exterminated and the music comes to an abrupt end. There is a similar piece of music about a bumble-bee but he doesn't get slapepd. He keeps on buzzing.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

JUL 9 - 1936

Among the pleasant features of summer in this vicinity is the series of open air concerts given on the Esplanade in Boston by an orchestra led by Arthur Fiedler and composed mainly of players from the famous Boston Symphony. These concerts, free to the public, prolong the "Pops" through to the first week in August. The series this year will begin next Sunday night. The purpose of this paragraph is to suggest, to such as may be liberally and musically disposed, the propriety of sending in such individual contributions of money as may be feasible to assist in perpetuating this series of free public concerts. The fund supporting them is in the custody of the Merchants National bank of Boston, and comes annually from a multitude of givers in Boston and its vicinity, with such assistance as coin boxes, located on the lawn by the Charles river where the evening concerts are given, can afford—which is considerable. The experiment, first made about seven years ago by Mr. Fiedler, has proved successful far beyond his dream and it is not unusual for throngs numbering from 10,000 to 20,000 people to attend the concerts nightly, weather permitting. Curiously enough, only about one postponement per season has been required by untoward weather conditions during the whole seven years. Many a mickle makes a muckle; and the thousands who appreciate these entertainments can help amazingly by an aggregate of very modest gifts.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 8 - 1936

BOSTON SYMPHONY LEADER RETURNS FROM TRIP ABROAD

Koussevitsky Declines Comment on Forthcoming Season.

New York, Aug. 7.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned from an European tour today with an air of mystery over his forthcoming season.

"You always ask me about my future programs and about discoveries abroad when I return," the conductor said. "There are reasons why I am not going to divulge that information anymore."

He would not say what the reasons were.

Accompanied by Mrs. Koussevitsky, he left immediately for Stockbridge, Mass., by automobile, to conduct the Berkshire Music Festival which opens Aug. 13.

He conducted at the Salzburg Festival in Europe.

Dean Roscoe Pound, of Harvard University Law School, and Mrs. Pound also returned on the same ship. Dean Pound said he will take a sabbatical leave beginning next Feb. 1 and may take a round the world trip.

He declined comment on the political situation.

aug 1/36 1/3

BOSTON, MASS.
GLOBE

ESPLANADE CONCERT THRONG HEARS GLOBE MUSIC EDITOR

Durgin Discusses Music and Composers Heard On Program—Touches on Human Incidents

CYRUS W. DURGIN

The Division of University of the State Department of Education and Cyrus W. Durgin, music editor of the Boston Globe are cooperating in conducting the largest classes in music appreciation in the country. Editor Durgin and other lecturers are addressing the 10,000 or more persons who gather every evening at the Esplanade to hear the concerts presented by Arthur Fiedler and his 50 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Preceding the concert last evening Mr Durgin gave a talk in which he explained the different compositions presented on the program and also gave interesting facts concerning the lives of the composers. Great interest is being shown in the method of adding to the enjoyment of the music, and very bit of space on the Esplanade surrounding the shell was filled when the speaker began his address.

Early Failure Recalled

"The concert tonight begins with the overture from one of the most famous of comic operas" Mr Durgin said, "The Barber of Seville" by Gioacchino Antonia Rossini. This many are pleased to call Rossini's masterpiece of comic opera. The first performance was at Rome in February, 1816, and was one of the glaring failures in operatic history. The audience hissed and catcalled, but easy going Rossini took his failure philosophically and returned home for a good night's sleep.

"The point of trouble lay in the fact that Paisiello, an elder Italian composer, had some time previously written a popular opera on the same subject, and although Rossini courteously asked that musician if the new work would offend him, the partisans of Paisiello were angry that an upstart should attempt to tread on the toes of their favorite. Rossini's piece was first called "Almaviva," after a leading character in the story. Later it received its present title, and gradually made itself liked by the public. Incidentally, 'The Barber' was written in only 13 days.

"Rossini is one of the distinguished figures in Italian opera. While most of his operas have been forgotten, he retains his place by virtue of a few which have held their vogue to a certain extent. In this country 'The Barber of Seville' has probably had the greatest number of performances."

Mr Durgin then discussed at some length Rossini and his works and pointed out the composer possessed a genius for a certain type of composition which enabled him to overcome the handicap of an incomplete musical training.

Inspiration of Trip Cited

A synopsis of the story of "The Barber" was followed by a discussion of "The Flying Dutchman" and of Wagner, its composer.

"The Flying Dutchman," said Mr Durgin, "was the first of Richard Wagner's operas to reveal considerable promise of the genuis which, years later, was to be consummated in such supreme music-dramas as the 'Nibelungen Ring,' 'Tristan and Isolde,' 'The Mastersingers of Nuremberg' and 'Parsifal.' 'Rienzi,' which came before 'The Flying Dutchman,' produced a stir, but it was mostly on the line which Meyerbeer had established and the seeds of the characteristic Wagnerian style may roughly be said to have first sprouted in 'The Flying Dutchman.'

"Though Wagner wrote the music of this opera during his poverty-stricken sojourn in Paris—specifically in the Summer of 1841—the idea for an opera on the famous legend had occurred to him previously. His project was stimulated during a rough voyage he made on his way from Riga to Paris. The ship on which he and his wife were embarked was knocked about by storm and the voyage required three weeks. Finally one night the captain was obliged to put into a Norwegian port for safety.

"Let Wagner tell in his own words of that experience:

"'How relieved I was to behold that far-reaching rocky coast, toward which we were being driven at such speed! The further we sailed through this ever-changing labyrinth of projecting rocks the calmer the sea became, until at last the vessel's progress was perfectly smooth and quiet as we entered one of those long sea-roads running through a giant ravine—for such the Norwegian fjords appeared to me.

"'A feeling of indescribable content came over me when the enormous granite walls echoed the hail of the crew as they cast anchor and furled the sails. The sharp rhythm of this call clung to me like an omen of good cheer and shaped itself presently into the theme of the season's song in my "Flying Dutchman." The idea of this opera was, even at that time, ever present in my mind and it now took on a definite and poetic musical color under the influence of my recent impressions.'

Tells of Royal Command

"The music in the overture fits the savage, stormy qualities of the Flying Dutchman legend, on which Wagner made his libretto. The legend tells of a Dutch sea-captain, who swore a furious oath that he would round the Cape of Good Hope in a hurricane, even if he had to keep on sailing forever. The devil heard him and condemned the captain to roam the seas eternally in a phantom ship until he should be released by the faithfulness of a woman who would love him until death. Every seven years the Dutchman was permitted to go ashore in search of such a woman. In Wagner's opera the woman is Senta, daughter of a Norwegian captain, and her fidelity secures release of the Dutchman."

In discussing this music, Mr Durgin said, "The overture is splendidly vivid music, dramatic and pictorial, early in which you will hear the ascending succession of notes which forms the theme of the Dutchman. Other themes associated with certain characters in the opera are fitted in. This association of themes, or leading motives as Wagner called them, was afterwards developed to the utmost complexity and dramatic power in Wagner's mature work.

Turning to Mendelssohn's piece, Mr Durgin said:

"Felix Mendelssohn was in 1843 commanded by King Frederick William IV of Prussia to write music for production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Mendelssohn had 17 years before, when he was 19, been enthralled by Shakespeare's play and then composed an Overture on the subject. To this overture he added 12 numbers, including the Wedding March to be played tonight. Today this joyous fragment is no doubt as well known to all of you as the most popular jazz tune, for it is invariably played at the conclusion of wedding ceremonies.

"Mr. Fiedler tonight concludes his cycle of the four symphonies of Johannes Brahms with the third and fourth movements from the Fourth Symphony, in E minor. These excerpts, in word are of Brahms' finest writing, forceful, buoyant, displayful of both feeling and intellect.

Touches on Delizes

"Adrianus Valerius was a Dutch notary and musician of the 17th century. His 'Prayer of Thanksgiving' in its present version was arranged for modern orchestra by Edward Kremser, 19th century Austrian musician.

limit himself to writing music for the theatre—he is remembered as a popular mid-19th century French composer of operas and ballets—his 'Lakme' holds the stage today as a vehicles for colarttura soprano. . .

"Lo Source" was written when Delibes was 30. He was asked to compose it in collaboration with a Polish musician, but his music was so much better it put to shame that of his associate.

"Victor Herbert need hardly be identified, since he composed so many light operas, fragments from which are continually heard. Perhaps only a minority of younger listeners, however, know that he was a cellist and conductor, and that he wrote the operas 'Natomah' and 'Madeleine.' His 'American Fantsy' will end the concert tonight.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 8 - 1936

BOSTON SYMPHONY LEADER RETURNS FROM TRIP ABROAD

New York, Aug. 7.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned from an European tour today with an air of mystery over his forthcoming season.

"You always ask me about my future programs and about discoveries abroad when I return," the conductor said. "There are reasons why I am not going to divulge that information anymore."

He would not say what the reasons were.

Accompanied by Mrs. Koussevitsky, he left immediately for Stockbridge, Mass., by automobile, to conduct the Berkshire Music Festival which opens Aug. 13.

He conducted at the Salzburg Festival in Europe.

Dean Roscoe Pound, of Harvard University Law School, and Mrs. Pound also returned on the same ship. Dean Pound said he will take a sabbatical leave beginning next Feb. 1 and may take a round the world trip.

He declined comment on the political situation.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

FIEDLER SHOWS FATHER HE'S "BOSS"

Boston, July 20.—(AP)—A son wielded a stick over his father here last night while more than 10,000 looked on unaware.

"While slim, youthful Arthur Fiedler conducted the Esplanade Symphony Orchestra, Emanuel Fiedler, 76, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra 51 years ago, played his 200-year-old violin with the group.

"I told him I was boss," young Fiedler, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and conductor of the famous "Pops" concerts, said during the intermission. "I'm wielding the stick."

Then turning to his father he asked anxiously "are you tired?"

"No. No, indeed," the elder Fiedler replied quickly. He showed his son his violin. It was dry. "I wasn't nervous. You can see—there is no moisture on it."

Two brothers of the elder Fiedler and a nephew play with the orchestra.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

AUG 18 1936

It was for the most part familiar music that characterized the programs of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the open-air festival in the Berkshires last week. Dr. Koussevitzky, returning from Europe just in time for the festival, could hardly have been expected to put untried novelties on the list. Francis Regal, reviewing the final concert for the Springfield Republican, thinks that reliance on familiar and tested musical material was a sound policy in this case. For the festival itself is in an experimental stage. And it is hoped to create for it the widest possible appeal. One judges that the programs were none the less stimulating and inspiring because they excluded controversial music. When and if the festival is firmly established there will be a chance for experimentation. Certainly Dr. Koussevitzky cannot be classified as a musical reactionary. In due time it is to be hoped that works of American composers will be presented at the festival. If Dr. Koussevitzky continues to be active in the direction, they will undoubtedly have their place on the list. That much may be predicated on his generous recognition of American talent in his Boston programs.

SAN JOSE, CALIF.
MERCURY-HERALD

AUG 9 - 1936

Permission has been granted by Doubleday, Doran and company for transcribing into Braille, "Philip Hale's Boston Symphony Orchestra Notes," edited by John N. Burk. The story, "The Smart Aleck", from Local Color by Irvin S. Cobb, will also be transcribed for the use of the blind.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 8 - 1936

KOUSSEVITSKY BACK WITH AIR OF MYSTERY

NEW YORK, Aug. 7 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned from a European tour today with an air of mystery over his forthcoming season.

Accompanied by Mrs. Koussevitsky, he left immediately for Stockbridge, Mass., by automobile, to conduct the Berkshire Music Festival which opens Aug. 13.

He conducted at the Salzburg Festival in Europe.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

AUG 8 - 1936

Koussevitsky Returns

NEW YORK, Aug. 7 (AP) — Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, returned from an European tour today with an air of mystery over his forthcoming season.

"Yu always ask me about my future programs and about discoveries abroad when I return," the conductor said. "There are reasons why I am not going to divulge that information anymore."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 17 1936

FESTIVAL IS ENDED IN THE BERKSHIRES

Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Present Final Concert Before 5,000.

SEASON GREAT SUCCESS

Mendelssohn, Tchaikovsky and Wagner Compositions Are on Concluding Program.

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16.—Five thousand persons attended the final concert of the Berkshire Symphony Festival this evening at Holmwood in Lenox. This figure represents the average attendance at each of three concerts of this astonishingly successful festival.

This means that 15,000 attended the three symphonic concerts given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was also announced this evening that the festival had completely balanced its accounts with all expenses paid. These figures indicate the satisfaction of the public and the immense enthusiasm aroused by the program and the performances.

More than this, the concert tonight was of a quality which showed that the Berkshire Symphony Festival in artistic parlance may be said fairly to have "arrived." With each concert the acoustical effects and the tone qualities of the orchestra improved. Dr. Koussevitzky made ceaseless experiments in seating the men at every rehearsal.

It is probable that on the occasion of the opening concert the mere sight of the audience and the expanse that it covered caused the conductor and the men involuntarily to exaggerate the necessity of big effects and to force tone. The second concert, with the players better grouped from the acoustical point of view, and by this time better adjusted to the practical conditions, was a striking advance as regards finesse and tone quality over the first.

The concert tonight, particularly with the performance of Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony and the prelude to "Lohengrin," was the unmistakable accomplishment of a symphony orchestra of the most exceptional capacities performing in a well-conditioned auditorium which did complete justice to the orchestral score.

The interpretation of the work, which certainly ranks as one of Dr. Koussevitzky's highest achievements, and the vivacity and lyricism of the music itself brought applause which was a surprise and a pleasure, the greater because it had not been fully anticipated. The wonderful prelude to "Lohengrin," beautifully played, heightened this excellent impression.

In the "Meistersinger" prelude, always scored to the limit for the brasses, there were places where the strings were overpowered, but the final pages had the balance and fullness the composer intended and the contagious excitement of one of Wagner's greatest passages.

The final offering was Tchaikovsky's Fifth symphony. It was given with extraordinary latitude of rhapsodic tempo and shading, which in places threatened to degenerate into sheer theatricalism. This did not invariably ennoble the character of the symphony, though it afforded an example of superb orchestral playing and of results achieved with a broad brush and with much climactic power.

After this there was a mighty demonstration, when the audience stamped, cheered and remained long to applaud the conductor and the players. It was the end of a series of concerts extraordinary for what was achieved under conditions which imposed special and difficult problems, and a season which promises to have far-reaching results.

Dr. Koussevitzky Begins Festival In Brilliant Style

Trans. Aug. 14/36

Huge Berkshire Audience Is Stirred by Concert by Boston Symphony

By Moses Smith

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13—The third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened at Holmwood near here tonight under the most favorable auspices, which promised well not merely for the immediate success of the present festival, but equally well for the future. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, participating in this festival for the first time, were greeted with great enthusiasm by a huge audience which the present reporter would estimate at a figure from 4000 to 4500 persons.

In a program that might have been played at Symphony Hall in Boston of a Friday afternoon or Saturday evening in midwinter—a program that included Arnold Schoenberg's transcription of the Bach Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist," Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture and Seventh Symphony and Sibelius's Second Symphony—the Bostonians fairly bowled over with the brilliance and intensity of their playing an audience of summer residents as well as "natives" hereabouts and visitors from out of this section and out of this State. To Bostonian visitors—and there was many a familiar face in this audience—such playing is an old story; to most people in the audience it was astonishing. The audience applauded with great enthusiasm and remained at the end, very late, to cheer the incandescent version of the Sibelius Symphony.

It is almost unnecessary to report to Bostonians that Dr. Koussevitzky was in his fondest element and rose, as the saying goes, to the occasion. The fact that he consented to bring his orchestra to this festival at all meant that he was taking the thing quite seriously. That is equivalent to writing that there was not a dull moment in the concert. From beginning to end the conductor—and his musicians with him, of course—became totally immersed in the music at hand, and produced performances of great vitality. In the case of the Beethoven Symphony, in fact, it seemed to this writer that the performance, in the matters of integration of parts, in tempo and dynamics, was a marked improvement over the presentation in Symphony Hall last season.

But for a Boston visitor these things, which we have come to take for granted, were of secondary interest. One found numerous aspects of this music-making out of doors sufficiently challenging and provocative. To begin with, the performance took place under a huge tent, open at the sides. Presumably the principal reason for the construction of the tent was to serve as a shelter against inclement weather, which did not materialize this fair warm evening. But it was also immediately obvious (as it had been in similar circumstances at the final concert of last season's festival) that the tent tended to give resonance to a body of tone that might otherwise have been dissipated.

The reflecting shell in back of the musicians, evidently the same as that used last season, undoubtedly assists greatly in projecting and, in less degress, focusing the orchestral tone toward the auditors. Without attempting to analyze the resultant fusion of the various acoustical elements involved (which might puzzle even a scientist), one may set down the generality that the orchestral balance and individuality of tone were tonight far from what they are at Symphony Hall, yet they were eminently more satisfactory, without the use of electrical "amplification," than those attending any outdoor performance the present writer has heard.

As to defects, the strings frequently lacked resonance to make them sufficient balance to the other choirs. The brass, especially the horns (those unpredictable instruments) were too loud, especially in the two compositions by Beethoven. The wood-wind emerged fairly clearly, though the flute was too feeble now and again. The kettle-drum was altogether too noisy.

How much these defects were apparent throughout the area occupied by the auditors is difficult to say. What seemed like the best-balanced performance, that of the Sibelius Symphony, was heard by this writer from various positions at the fringe of the crowd, perhaps 250 feet away from the stage, whereas this same attestant heard the first half of the program from a box in the middle of the tent. There is also the possibility that in the case of the Schoenberg transcription, when the separate voices were the least clear, the transcriber may have been at fault. And in the case of the Beethoven music, when the orchestral balance was far from impeccable, we realize that Dr. Koussevitzky's treatment of the orchestral problems presented by this composer have not been universally acceptable even inside the concert-hall.

There is no doubt, finally, that in comparison with our winter concerts the orchestra here tonight suffered because of a somewhat reduced number of string-players. On the other hand, this did not turn out to be so serious as some may have feared. The fact remained that the great majority of Boston Symphony men were on had, including most of the "first desk" men. This Berkshire audience had little to complain about in the matter of symphonic quality and personnel.

With two symphonies on the opening program, and three more scheduled for the remaining two concerts on Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening, it is obvious that Dr. Koussevitzky has taken seriously the adjective "symphonic" in the title of the festival. This is all to the good, for nothing is easier than to have a series of summer outdoor concerts degenerate into a collection of ill-matched favorite "selections." One is happy to report that his judgment seems to be vindicated first by the size of tonight's audience and the huge advance sale for the remaining concerts, and second, by the keen attention of this audience and its spontaneous exhibitions of pleasure. Two symphonies on a program used to be a hazardous experiment at winter concerts; now they can be offered safely to a miscellaneous crowd at an outdoor concert on a warm summer's evening.

One must not neglect to mention the beauty of the setting of these concerts on the grounds of the imposing estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. This will be even more evident at the Saturday concert, which will take place in daylight, when the splendid natural architecture and scenery will be observed. The estate has one serious defect: it has only a single entrance. As a result, the Lenox - Stockbridge highway was choked with traffic before and after the concert. But an energetic committee, quite unprepared for this difficulty, has already begun to attempt to find a solution.

Since the audience was consequently slow to arrive, it was well that fanfares were played to announce the approaching commencement of the concert (which began more than a quarter of an hour late). A long, leisurely intermission was ended by similar fanfares. This is an amenity which winter concert-goers do not unfortunately share.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 9 - 1936

One hundred portraits of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the work of Gerome Brush, that are to be a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary in the fall, will be publicly displayed for the first time during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opening on August 13 at Stockbridge, Mass. Mr. Brush's works will be hung in the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1936

Portraits of about 100 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Gerome Brush will be on display at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge several days before and during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will be the attraction.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

EXHIBIT PLANNED DURING FESTIVAL

Of Portraits of Boston Symphony Members

Portraits of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Gerome Brush, that are to be a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary in the fall, will be given their first public showing in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be the attraction at the third annual festival August 13, 15 and 16 to be given at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Mr. Brush's portraits, about 100 of them, will be hung at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge and will be on display several days before and during the Festival. Admisssion will be free.

This exhibition is but one of several attractions being offered in connection with the Festival. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will return from Europe within a few days and will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the Festival. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse August 12, 14 and 16. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton will be at the piano.

Several notable estates in Lenox and Stockbridge will be opened to the public, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their summer studio in West Becket on the 14th while chamber music will be offered at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Temple in Pittsfield Jacques Gordon's Musnc Mountain in Falls Village, Ct., and at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TIMES

JUL 29 1936

The Boston Symphony orchestra is engaged upon one of the longest seasons ever played by an American orchestra. It has played every month since September, 1935, and will continue the record until August, 1937.

DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD

AUG 1936

In pre-war days Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was both conductor and financial backer of his own symphony orchestra in Russia.

RECORD

Amherst Mass

JUL 2 1936

Brush Portraits To be Exhibited at Berkshire Playhouse

Portraits of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Gerome Brush, that are to be a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary in the fall, will be given their first public showing in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be the attraction at the third annual festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16 to be given at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Mr. Brush's portraits, about 100 of them, will be hung at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge and will be on display several days before and during the Festival. Admission will be free.

This exhibition is but one of several attractions being offered in connection with the Festival. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will return from Europe within a few days and will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the Festival. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse Aug. 12, 14 and 16. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton will be at the piano.

Several notable estates in Lenox and Stockbridge will be opened to the public, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their summer studio in West Becket on the 14th, while chamber music will be offered at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Temple in Pittsfield, Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn., and at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

Gerome Brush is the son of the American painter, George DeForest Brush. He was born in New York City on March the 11th, 1888. He was taken to Paris before he was a year old. He spent half his childhood there. coming back to America every six months or so. He spoke French before he spoke English.

His father gave him his first drawing lessons when he was six years of age, and they became the only and very irksome studies of his boyhood, —very regular, very exacting, with numerous scoldings. When he was twelve years of age he was apprenticed to a foreman marble cutter in a studio in Florence, where for two years he painted up marble statues from the antique for the market alongside of the Italian apprentices. He lived in Italy for seventeen years.

At the age of twenty-five he made his debut as a portrait painter. In 1915 he took up sculpture seriously, and had been employed mainly with doing portrait busts ever since. When he has not been doing sculpture he has filled in the gaps by painting mural recorations and portraits. Next to sculpture, of which he has done the most,—his portrait drawings probably make up the bulk of his work.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION

47

AUG 2 - 1936

Gerome Brush Portraits At Symphonic Festival

Portraits of members of the Boston Symphony orchestra by Gerome Brush, that are to be a feature of the Harvard tercentenary in the fall, will be given their first public showing in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic festival. The orchestra with Dr Serge Koussevitzky will be the attraction at the third annual festival the 13th, 15th and 16th to be given at Holmwood, Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Mr Brush's portraits, about 100 of them, will be hung at the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge and will be on display several days before and during the festival. Admission will be free.

This exhibition is but one of several attractions being offered in connection with the festival. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will return from Europe within a few days and will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the festival. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire playhouse, August 12, 14 and 16. Mrs Bruce Crane of Dalton will be at the piano.

Several notable estates in Lenox and Stockbridge will be opened to the public, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their summer studio in West Becket on the 14th, while chamber music will be offered at Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Temple in Pittsfield, Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain in Falls Village, Ct., and at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

Gerome Brush is the son of the American painter, George DeForest Brush. He was born in New York city on March 11th, 1888. He was taken to Paris before he was a year old, and spent half his childhood there, coming back to America every six months or so. He spoke French before he spoke English.

His father gave him his first drawing lessons when he was six years of age, and they became the only and very irksome studies of his boyhood, —very regular, very exacting, with numerous scoldings. When he was 12 years of age he was apprenticed to a foreman marble cutter in a studio in Florence, where for two years he pointed up marble statues from the antique for the market alongside of the Italian apprentices. He lived in Italy for 17 years.

At the age of 25 he made his debut as a portrait painter. In 1915 he took up sculpture seriously, and has been employed mainly with doing portrait busts ever since. When he has not been doing sculpture he has filled in the gaps by painting mural decorations and portraits. Next to sculpture, of which he has done the most,—his portrait drawings probably make up the bulk of his work

---

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN

JUL 28 1936

Portraits Feature of 1936 Symphonic

Portraits of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Gerome Brush, that are to be a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary in the fall, will be given their first public showing in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The orchestra with Dr. Sergi Koussevitzky will be the attraction at the third annual festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16 to be given at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenor and Stockbridge, Mass.

Mr. Brush's portraits, about 100 of them. will be hung at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge and will be on display several days before and during the Festival. Admission will be free.

This exhibition is but one of several attractions being offered in connection with the Festival. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will return from Europe within a few days and will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the Festival. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse Aug. 12, 14 and 16. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton will be at the piano.

Several notable estates in Lenox and Stockbridge will be opened to the public, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their summer studio in West Becket on the 14th, while chamber music will be offered at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Temple in Pittsfield, Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn., and at the Playton.

Same dispatch as above [illegible]:
Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.,
Alhambra, Cal.,
Sherman, Texas, Salamanca, N.Y.
Paragould, Ark., Pueblo, Colo.,
Dyersburg, Tenn., Muskogee, [illegible]
Madisonville, Ky., Poughkeepsie, N.Y.
Charlotte, N.C., Chanute, Kan.;
Statesville, N.C., Paducah, Ky.
Mexico, Mo., Winona Minn. No. Platte, Neb.
Madison, Wis., Amarillo, Texas, Michigan City, Ind.
Albany, N.Y., Mt. Vernon, Ill., Eau Claire, Wis.
Etc.

Dr. Koussevitzky Begins Festival In Brilliant Style

Trans. Aug. 14/36

Huge Berkshire Audience Is Stirred by Concert by Boston Symphony

By Moses Smith

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13—The third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened at Holmwood near here tonight under the most favorable auspices, which promised well not merely for the immediate success of the present festival, but equally well for the future. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, participating in this festival for the first time, were greeted with great enthusiasm by a huge audience which the present reporter would estimate at a figure from 4000 to 4500 persons.

In a program that might have been played at Symphony Hall in Boston of a Friday afternoon or Saturday evening in midwinter—a program that included Arnold Schoenberg's transcription of the Bach Chorale Prelude, "Komm Gott, Schoepfer, Heiliger Geist," Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture and Seventh Symphony and Sibelius's Second Symphony—the Bostonians fairly bowled over with the brilliance and intensity of their playing an audience of summer residents as well as "natives" hereabouts and visitors from out of this section and out of this State. To Bostonian visitors—and there was many a familiar face in this audience—such playing is an old story; to most people in the audience it was astonishing. The audience applauded with great enthusiasm and remained at the end, very late, to cheer the incandescent version of the Sibelius Symphony.

It is almost unnecessary to report to Bostonians that Dr. Koussevitzky was in his fondest element and rose, as the saying goes, to the occasion. The fact that he consented to bring his orchestra to this festival at all meant that he was taking the thing quite seriously. That is equivalent to writing that there was not a dull moment in the concert. From beginning to end the conductor—and his musicians with him, of course—became totally immersed in the music at hand, and produced performances of great vitality. In the case of the Beethoven Symphony, in fact, it seemed to this writer that the performance, in the matters of integration of parts, in tempo and dynamics, was a marked improvement over the presentation in Symphony Hall last season.

But for a Boston visitor these things, which we have come to take for granted, were of secondary interest. One found numerous aspects of this music-making out of doors sufficiently challenging and provocative. To begin with, the performance took place under a huge tent, open at the sides. Presumably the principal reason for the construction of the tent was to serve as a shelter against inclement weather, which did not materialize this fair warm evening. But it was also immediately obvious (as it had been in similar circumstances at the final concert of last season's festival) that the tent tended to give resonance to a body of tone that might otherwise have been dissipated.

The reflecting shell in back of the musicians, evidently the same as that used last season, undoubtedly assists greatly in projecting and, in less degress, focusing the orchestral tone toward the auditors. Without attempting to analyze the resultant fusion of the various acoustical elements involved (which might puzzle even a scientist), one may set down the generality that the orchestral balance and individuality of tone were tonight far from what they are at Symphony Hall, yet they were eminently more satisfactory, without the use of electrical "amplification," than those attending any outdoor performance the present writer has heard.

As to defects, the strings frequently lacked resonance to make them sufficient balance to the other choirs. The brass, especially the horns (those unpredictable instruments) were too loud, especially in the two compositions by Beethoven. The wood-wind emerged fairly clearly, though the flute was too feeble now and again. The kettle-drum was altogether too noisy.

How much these defects were apparent throughout the area occupied by the auditors is difficult to say. What seemed like the best-balanced performance, that of the Sibelius Symphony, was heard by this writer from various positions at the fringe of the crowd, perhaps 250 feet away from the stage, whereas this same attestant heard the first half of the program from a box in the middle of the tent. There is also the possibility that in the case of the Schoenberg transcription, when the separate voices were the least clear, the transcriber may have been at fault. And in the case of the Beethoven music, when the orchestral balance was far from impeccable, we realize that Dr. Koussevitzky's treatment of the orchestral problems presented by this composer have not been universally acceptable even inside the concert-hall.

There is no doubt, finally, that in comparison with our winter concerts the orchestra here tonight suffered because of a somewhat reduced number of string-players. On the other hand, this did not turn out to be so serious as some may have feared. The fact remained that the great majority of Boston Symphony men were on had, including most of the "first desk" men. This Berkshire audience had little to complain about in the matter of symphonic quality and personnel.

With two symphonies on the opening program, and three more scheduled for the remaining two concerts on Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening, it is obvious that Dr. Koussevitzky has taken seriously the adjective "symphonic" in the title of the festival. This is all to the good, for nothing is easier than to have a series of summer outdoor concerts degenerate into a collection of ill-matched favorite "selections." One is happy to report that his judgment seems to be vindicated first by the size of tonight's audience and the huge advance sale for the remaining concerts, and second, by the keen attention of this audience and its spontaneous exhibitions of pleasure. Two symphonies on a program used to be a hazardous experiment at winter concerts; now they can be offered safely to a miscellaneous crowd at an outdoor concert on a warm summer's evening.

One must not neglect to mention the beauty of the setting of these concerts on the grounds of the imposing estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson. This will be even more evident at the Saturday concert, which will take place in daylight, when the splendid natural architecture and scenery will be observed. The estate has one serious defect: it has only a single entrance. As a result, the Lenox - Stockbridge highway was choked with traffic before and after the concert. But an energetic committee, quite unprepared for this difficulty, has already begun to attempt to find a solution.

Since the audience was consequently slow to arrive, it was well that fanfares were played to announce the approaching commencement of the concert (which began more than a quarter of an hour late). A long, leisurely intermission was ended by similar fanfares. This is an amenity which winter concertgoers do not unfortunately share.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

TIMES

Longmont, Colo.

JUL 29 1936

The Boston Symphony orchestra is engaged upon one of the longest seasons ever played by an American orchestra. It has played every month since September, 1935, and will continue the record until August, 1937.

Same dispatch as above from:
Sault St. Marie, Mich.,
Alhambra, Cal.,
Sherman, Texas, Salamanca, N.Y.
Paragould, Ark., Pueblo, Colo.,
Dyersburg, Tenn., Monrovia, Cal.,
Madisonville, Ky., Poughkeepsie, N.Y.,
Charlotte, N.C., Chanute, Kan.;
Statesville, N.C., Paducah, Ky.
Mexico, Mo., Winona, Minn., No. Platte, Neb.
Madison, Wis., Amarillo, Texas, Michigan City, Ind.
Albany, N.Y., Mt. Vernon, Ill., Eau Claire, Wis.
Etc.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 9 - 1936

One hundred portraits of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the work of Gerome Brush, that are to be a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary in the fall, will be publicly displayed for the first time during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opening on August 13 at Stockbridge, Mass. Mr. Brush's works will be hung in the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

NEW YORK, N. Y.

TIMES

AUG 2 - 1936

Portraits of about 100 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Gerome Brush will be on display at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge several days before and during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will be the attraction.

N. ADAMS, MASS.

TRANSCRIPT

July 29/36

EXHIBIT PLANNED DURING FESTIVAL

Of Portraits of Boston Symphony Members

Portraits of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Gerome Brush, that are to be a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary in the fall, will be given their first public showing in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be the attraction at the third annual festival August 13, 15 and 16 to be given at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Mr. Brush's portraits, about 100 of them, will be hung at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge and will be on display several days before and during the Festival. Admisssion will be free.

This exhibition is but one of several attractions being offered in connection with the Festival. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will return from Europe within a few days and will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the Festival. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse August 12, 14 and 16. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton will be at the piano.

Several notable estates in Lenox and Stockbridge will be opened to the public, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their summer studio in West Becket on the 14th, while chamber music will be offered at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Temple in Pittsfield Jacques Gordon's Musnc Mountain in Falls Village, Ct., and at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

DALLAS, TEX.

TIMES HERALD

AUG 24 1936

In pre-war days Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was both canductor and financial backer of his own symphony orchestra in Russia.

RECORD

Amherst Mass

JUL 29 1936

Brush Portraits To be Exhibited at Berkshire Playhouse

Portraits of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Gerome Brush, that are to be a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary in the fall, will be given their first public showing in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be the attraction at the third annual festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16 to be given at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Mr. Brush's portraits, about 100 of them, will be hung at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge and will be on display several days before and during the Festival. Admission will be free.

This exhibition is but one of several attractions being offered in connection with the Festival. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will return from Europe within a few days and will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the Festival. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse Aug. 12, 14 and 16. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton will be at the piano.

Several notable estates in Lenox and Stockbridge will be opened to the public, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their summer studio in West Becket on the 14th, while chamber music will be offered at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Temple in Pittsfield, Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn., and at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

Gerome Brush is the son of the American painter, George DeForest Brush. He was born in New York City on March the 11th, 1888. He was taken to Paris before he was a year old. He spent half his childhood there. coming back to America every six months or so. He spoke French before he spoke English.

His father gave him his first drawing lessons when he was six years of age, and they became the only and very irksome studies of his boyhood, —very regular, very exacting, with numerous scoldings. When he was twelve years of age he was apprenticed to a foreman marble cutter in a studio in Florence, where for two years he pointed up marble statues from the antique for the market alongside of the Italian apprentices. He lived in Italy for seventeen years.

At the age of twenty-five he made his debut as a portrait painter. In 1915 he took up sculpture seriously, and had been employed mainly with doing portrait busts ever since. When he has not been doing sculpture he has filled in the gaps by painting mural recorations and portraits. Next to sculpture, of which he has done the most,—his portrait drawings probably make up the bulk of his work.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

UNION

47

AUG 2 - 1936

Gerome Brush Portraits At Symphonic Festival

Portraits of members of the Boston Symphony orchestra by Gerome Brush, that are to be a feature of the Harvard tercentenary, in the fall, will be given their first public showing in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic festival. The orchestra with Dr Serge Koussevitzky will be the attraction at the third annual festival the 13th, 15th and 16th to be given at Holmwood, Mrs Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Mr Brush's portraits, about 100 of them, will be hung at the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge and will be on display several days before and during the festival. Admission will be free.

This exhibition is but one of several attractions being offered in connection with the festival. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will return from Europe within a few days and will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the festival. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire playhouse, August 12, 14 and 16. Mrs Bruce Crane of Dalton will be at the piano.

Several notable estates in Lenox and Stockbridge will be opened to the public, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their summer studio in West Becket on the 14th, while chamber music will be offered at Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Temple in Pittsfield, Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain in Falls Village, Ct., and at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

Gerome Brush is the son of the American painter, George DeForest Brush. He was born in New York city on March 11th, 1888. He was taken to Paris before he was a year old, and spent half his childhood there, coming back to America every six months or so. He spoke French before he spoke English.

His father gave him his first drawing lessons when he was six years of age, and they became the only and very irksome studies of his boyhood, —very regular, very exacting, with numerous scoldings. When he was 12 years of age he was apprenticed to a foreman marble cutter in a studio in Florence, where for two years he pointed up marble statues from the antique for the market alongside of the Italian apprentices. He lived in Italy for 17 years.

At the age of 25 he made his debut as a portrait painter. In 1915 he took up sculpture seriously, and has been employed mainly with doing portrait busts ever since. When he has not been doing sculpture he has filled in the gaps by painting mural decorations and portraits. Next to sculpture, of which he has done the most,—his portrait drawings probably make up the bulk of his work.

LOWELL, MASS.

SUN

JUL 28 1936

Portraits Feature of 1936 Symphonic

Portraits of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Gerome Brush, that are to be a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary in the fall, will be given their first public showing in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The orchestra with Dr. Sergi Koussevitzky will be the attraction at the third annual festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16 to be given at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenor and Stockbridge, Mass.

Mr. Brush's portraits, about 100 of them, will be hung at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge and will be on display several days before and during the Festival. Admission will be free.

This exhibition is but one of several attractions being offered in connection with the Festival. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times will return from Europe within a few days and will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the Festival. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse Aug. 12, 14 and 16. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton will be at the piano.

Several notable estates in Lenox and Stockbridge will be opened to the public, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their summer studio in West Becket on the 14th, while chamber music will be offered at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Temple in Pittsfield, Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn., and at the Playton.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 8 - 1936

+8

FESTIVAL TO SHOW BRUSH'S PORTRAITS

Pictures of Boston Symphony Members Will Be Displayed in Berkshire Playhouse

PORTRAITS OF MEMBERS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Gerome Brush, which are ~~to be~~ a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary in the Fall, will be given their first public showing in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be the attraction at the third annual festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16 to be given at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Mr. Brush's portraits, about 100 of them, will be hung at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge and will be on display several days before and during the Festival. Admission will be free.

This exhibition is but one of several attractions being offered in connection with the Festival. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will return from Europe within a few days, and will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the Festival. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse Aug. 12, 14 and 16. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton will be at the piano.

Several notable estates in Lenox and Stockbridge will be opened to the public, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their summer studio in West Becket Aug. 14, while chamber music will be offered at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Temple in Pittsfield, Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain Falls Village, and at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

Gerome Brush is the son of the American painter, George DeForest Brush. He was born in New York City March 11, 1888, and was taken to Paris before he was a year old. He spent half his childhood there, coming back to America every six months or so. He spoke French before he spoke English.

His father gave him his first drawing lessons when he was six years of age, and they became the only and very irksome studies of his boyhood,—very regular, very exacting, with numerous scoldings. When he was twelve years of age he was apprenticed to a foreman marble cutter in a studio in Florence, where for two years he pointed up marble statues from the antique for the market, alongside of the Italian apprentices. He lived in Italy for seventeen years.

At the age of twenty-five he made his debut as a portrait painter. In 1915 he took up sculpture seriously, and has been employed mainly with doing portrait busts ever since. When he has not been doing sculpture he has billed in the gaps by painting mural decorations and portraits. Next to sculpture, of which he has done most—his portrait drawings probably make up the bulk of his work.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 8 - 1936

FESTIVAL TO SHOW BRUSH'S PORTRAITS

Pictures of Boston Symphony Members Will Be Displayed in Berkshire Playhouse

PORTRAITS OF MEMBERS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Gerome Brush, which are to be a feature of the Harvard Tercentenary in the Fall, will be given their first public showing in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be the attraction at the third annual festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16 to be given at Holmwood, Mrs. Margaret Emerson's estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Mr. Brush's portraits, about 100 of them, will be hung at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge and will be on display several days before and during the Festival. Admission will be free.

This exhibition is but one of several attractions being offered in connection with the Festival. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will return from Europe within a few days, and will give three lectures on the symphonies to be played at the Festival. These lectures will be given at the Berkshire Playhouse Aug. 12, 14 and 16. Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton will be at the piano.

Several notable estates in Lenox and Stockbridge will be opened to the public, Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their summer studio in West Becket Aug. 14, while chamber music will be offered at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Temple in Pittsfield, Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain Falls Village, and at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

Gerome Brush is the son of the American painter, George DeForest Brush. He was born in New York City March 11, 1888, and was taken to Paris before he was a year old. He spent half his childhood there, coming back to America every six months or so. He spoke French before he spoke English.

His father gave him his first drawing lessons when he was six years of age, and they became the only and very irksome studies of his boyhood,—very regular, very exacting, with numerous scoldings. When he was twelve years of age he was apprenticed to a foreman marble cutter in a studio in Florence, where for two years he pointed up marble statues from the antique for the market, alongside of the Italian apprentices. He lived in Italy for seventeen years.

At the age of twenty-five he made his debut as a portrait painter. In 1915 he took up sculpture seriously, and has been employed mainly with doing portrait busts ever since. When he has not been doing sculpture he has billed in the gaps by painting mural decorations and portraits. Next to sculpture, of which he has done most—his portrait drawings probably make up the bulk of his work.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker Press

[illegible] 2 - 1936

SYMPHONY MEMBERS' PORTRAITS BY BRUSH TO BE ON EXHIBITION

Ted Shawn Dancers to Perform at Benefit Aug. 14; Other Events in Connection with Stockbridge Fete Will Include Chamber Music

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—The first public showing of portraits of Boston Symphony Orchestra members by Gerome Brush will be given in connection with the third annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug. 13, 15 and 16 at the Mrs. Margaret Emerson estate near here.

The portraits, about 100 or them, will be on display at the Berkshire Playhouse here for several days during and before the festival.

Ted Shawn and his men dancers will perfom at their summer studio in West Becket Aug. 14 for the benefit of the public. Other events in the vicinity will include chamber music at Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain Temple in Pittsfiled at Jacques Gordon's Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn., and at the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington.

Mr. Brush is the son of the American painter, George DeForest Brush, who gave him his first drawing lesson when he was only six years old. When he was 12 years old he was apprenticed to a foreman of marble cutters in Florence, Italy, where he lived for 17 years.

He was 25 when he made his debut as a portrait painter, and in 1915 he took up sculpture, with which he has since been mainly employed. Murals and portraits are among his accomplishments in the painting line.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

Aug 29/36

Orchestral 'Big Three' Prosperous

Boston, Philadelphia and New York Symphonies Well Financed

By JOHN SELBY

NEW YORK, July 18 (AP)—The theory that "cultural activities" are among the last to feel the benefit of a financial upturn has had a hard jolt.

The orchestral "Big Three" has administered it.

For three of the finest symphony orchestras in the east, and perhaps in the world, are booming. These are the Philadelphia orchestra, the Boston symphony and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony society.

Business improvement accounts for part of the gain, the managers of all three agree. But there are other reasons, the most unusual being Boston's.

Boston had not had a visit by a first-string symphony from out of town for many years, until last winter. Boston had grown to think Boston symphony every time it thought of an orchestra.

Then, within a short time, Bostonians gathered from Beacon Hill, the back bay and remoter regions to hear Leopold Stokowski and his Philadelphians, and Arturo Toscanini and his New York Philharmonic. Bostonians realized that superb orchestras, and conductors to match, flourished elsewhere.

After which they heard their own symphony with Serge Koussevitzky and discovered to their delight that they had not suffered by comparison. The result is better business for this fall, according to symphony attaches. A very large increase is noted, they say, among the younger people from all social strata.

According to Alfred Reginald Allen, manager of the Philadelphia orchestra, that organization's "cash position" for its two chief series of concerts is approximately 20 days ahead of last year.

Philadelphia's time payment plan, inaugurated last year, proved a boon. Last year $60,000 worth of tickets were bought on this plan. Now the orchestra finds that last year's "dollar-down-dollar-forever" patrons are buying tickets on the regular basis.

The New York Philharmonic, according to Bruno Ziarato, assistant manager, finds it difficult to guage its position justly, for its season begins a month later and patrons have a correspondingly longer period for renewals.

But the cash position to date equals that of last summer, which of course really represents an increase.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

JUL 2[illegible] 1936

Symphonies Note Times Are Good for Music

Three of Finest Orchestras In East Are Booming; Note Cash Position

By JOHN SELBY

New York, July 20 (AP).—The theory that "cultural activities" are among the last to feel the benefit of a financial upturn has had a hard jolt.

The orchestral "big three" has administered it.

For three of the finest symphony orchestras in the East, and perhaps the world, are booming. These are the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society.

Business improvement accounts for part of the gain, the managers of all three agree. But there are other reasons, the most unusual being Boston's.

Boston had not had a visit by a first string symphony from out of town for many years, until last winter. Boston had grown to think Boston Symphony every time it thought of an orchestra.

Then, within a short time, Bostonians athered from Beacon Hill, the Back Bay and remoter regions to hear Leopold Stokowski and his Philadelphians, and Arturo Toscanini and his New York Philharmonic. Bostonians realized that superb orchestras, and conductors to match, flourished elsewhere.

After which they heard their own symphony with Serge Koussevitzky and discovered to their delight that they had not suffered by comparison. The result is better business for this fall, according to symphony attaches. A very large increase is noted. they say, among the younger people from all social strata.

According to Alfred Reginald Allen, manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, that organization's "cash position" for its two chief series of concerts is approximately 20 days ahead of last year. The shorter Tuesday series is 30 days ahead. The concerts in New York are in better shape, he adds, although accurate estimate is impossible. because they have been increased in number from eight to ten.

Philadelphia's time payment plan, inaugurated last year, proved a boon. Last year $60,000 worth of tickets were bought on this plan. Now the orchestra finds that last year's "dollar-down-dollar-forever" patrons are buying tickets on the regular basis.

The New York Philharmonic, according to Bruno Zirato, assistant manager, finds it difficult to gauge its position justly, for its season begins a month later and patrons have a correspondingly longer season for renewals.

But the cash position to date equals that of last summer, which of course really represents an increase.

Last year Toscanini was to conduct. This winter he is not. The management had resigned itself to a slump, but seems likely to reap an increase, even without Toscanini.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUL 19 1936

8

Three Finest Orchestras in Best of Shape

Boston, Philadelphia and Even New York's Philharmonic Boom

BY JOHN SELBY.

NEW YORK, July 18 (AP).—The theory that "cultural activities" are among the last to feel the benefit of a financial upturn has had a hard jolt. The orchestral "big three" has administered it.

Three of the finest symphony orchestras in the East, and perhaps in the world, are booming. These are the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society.

Business improvement accounts for part of the gain the managers of all three agree. But there are other reasons, the most unusual being Boston's.

Boston had not had a visit by a first string symphony from out of town for many years until last winter. Boston had grown to think Boston Symphony every time it thought of an orchestra.

Then, within a short time, Bostonians gathered from Beacon Hill, the back bay and remoter regions to hear Leopold Stokowski and his Philadelphians, and Arturo Toscanini and his New York Philharmonic. Bostonians realized that superb orchestras, and conductors to match, flourished elsewhere.

After which they heard their own symphony with Serge Koussevitzky and discovered to their delight that they had not suffered by comparison. The result is better business for this fall, according to symphony attaches. A very large increase is noted, they say, among the younger people from all social strata.

Philadelphia Position.

According to Alfred Reginald Allen, manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, that organization's "cash position" for its two chief series of concerts is approximately twenty days ahead of last year. The shorter Tuesday series is thirty days ahead. The concerts in New York are in better shape, he adds, although accurate estimate is impossible, because they have been increased in number from eight to ten.

Philadelphia's time payment plan, inaugurated last year, proved a boon. Last year $60,000 worth of tickets were bought on this plan. Now the orchestra finds that last year's 'dollar-down-dollar-forever" patrons are buying tickets on the regular basis.

Indicated Increase.

The New York Philharmonic, according to Bruno Zirato, assistant manager, finds it difficult to gauge its position justly, for its season begins a month late and patrons have a correspondingly longer period for renewals. But the cash position to date equals that of last summer, which, of course, really represents an increase.

Last year Toscanini was to conduct. This winter he is not. The management had resigned itself to a slump but seems likely to reap an increase, even without Toscanini.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

Aug. 2/36

Cultural Pursuit Aided By Financial Upturn

By JOHN SELBY

New York, Aug. 1 (AP) — The theory that "cultural activities" are among the last to feel the benefit of a financial upturn has had a hard jolt.

The orchestral "big three" has administered it.

For three of the finest symphony orchestras in the east, and perhaps the world, are booming. These are the Philadelphia orchestra, the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony society.

Accounts for Gain

Business improvement accounts for part of the gain, the managers of all three agree. But there are other reasons, the most unusual being Boston's.

Boston had not had a visit by a first string symphony from out of town for many years, until last winter. Boston had grown to think Boston symphony every time it thought of an orchestra.

Then, within a short time, Bostonians gathered from Beacon Hill, the Back Bay and remoter regions to hear Leopold Stokowski and his Philadelphians, and Arturo Toscanini and his New York Philharmonic. Bostonians realized that superb orchestras, and conductors to match, flourished elsewhere.

After which they heard their own symphony with Serge Koussevitzky and discovered to their delight that they had not suffered by comparison. The result is better business for this fall, according to symphony attaches. A very large increase is noted, they say, among the younger people from all social strata.

'Cash Position'

According to Alfred Reginald Allen, manager of the Philadelphia orchestra, that organization's "cash position" for its two chief series of concerts is approximately 20 days ahead of last year. The shorter Tuesday series is 30 days ahead. The concerts in New York are in better shape, he adds, although accurate estimate is impossible, because they have been increased in number from eight to 10.

Philadelphia's time payment plan, inaugurated last year, proved a boon. Last year $60,000 worth of tickets were bought on this plan. Now the orchestra finds that last year's "dollar-down-dollar-forever" patrons are buying tickets on the regular basis.

Resigned to Slump

The New York Philharmonic, according to Bruno Zirato, assistant manager, finds it difficult to gauge its position justly, for its season begins a month later and patrons have a correspondingly longer period for renewals.

But the cash position to date equals that of last summer, which of course really represents an increase.

Last year Toscanini was to conduct. This winter he is not. The management had resigned itself to a slump, but seems likely to reap an increase, even without Toscanini.

A.F. N.Y. American

The Loudspeaker

Boston Band Gives Lesson to Radio's Musicians in How to Play "Blue Danube."

By Louis Reid

Armchair Impressions: I trust radio's busy bandmen, who all too carelessly find a regular place on their music racks for "The Blue Danube," were listening to the Boston Symphony's "pop" concert. If so, they received a lesson in how the daddy of all waltzes should be played.

Rep. Virginia E. Jenckes.

Here was the waltz for the first time this year in all its zestful spirit, its ingratiating melodic charm, its hauntingly insistent suggestion that youth and time are fleeting and you'd better seize the day ...There was no slurring over of various phrases. Respect was given the composer's finely measured accents. Old Johann is resting easier in his grave today. He had been having quite a turbulent time of it of late.

* * *

It was the kind of playing that halts conversation, bridge-bidding, newspaper-rattling...For beneath the infectious lilt of "The Blue Danube" there's an inescapable wistful sadness, evoking the faded picture of a gay and glamorous civilization. Not only is the old Vienna gone, but those who, like its music, were once young and charming and full of the joy of living.

* * *

The Boston band also focussed its attention upon old America. It dusted off one of the best of the hoedowns, gave new and uncommonly rich and hearty expression to "The Arkansas Traveler"...For those despairing of our growing effeteness, of our standardization, of the pasing of the oldtime ruggedness of soil and personality, here's a musical dish made to order.

